

SYNOPSIS PAPISMI,

THAT IS,
A GENERALL VIEW OF PAPISTRIE: WHEREIN THE WHOLE MYSTERIE OF INIQUITIE, AND SVMME OF ANTICHRISTIAN DOCTRINE IS SET
downe, which is maintained this day by the Synagogue of Rome, against the Church of Christ:

TOGETHER WITH AN ANTITHESIS OF THE TRVE CHRISTIAN FAITH, AND AN ANTIDOTVM OR COUNTERPOYSON OVT OF SCRIPTVRE, AGAINST the whore of Babylons filthie cuppe of

CONFVTED BY SCRIPTVRES, FATHERS, COVN-CELLS, IMPERIALL CONSTITVTIONS, PONTIFICIALE
decrees, their owne Writers, and our Martyrs.

DIVIDED INTO FIVE BOOKES OR CENTVRIES, that is, so many hundreds of Popish heresies and errors.

NOW THIS THIRD TIME PERVSSED AND published by the former Author, and augmented with a fift hundred of errors, and other necessarie additions, so be seene in the end of the Preface.

1. CORINTH. II. 9.

There must be heresies, that they which are approued amongst you, might be knowne.

TITVS. 3. 10.

A man that is an heretike, after the first and second admonition, auoyde.

AVG. DE VERA RELIG. CAP. 6.

Ecclesia Catholica videtur gentibus ad materiam operationis suae, haereticis ad probationem doctrinae suae, schismaticis ad documen-tum stabilitatis suae: alios inuitat, alios excludit, alios relinquit, omnibus tamen gratia Dei participanda et potestatem: sua illi informandi adhuc, siue reformandi, siue recolligendi sunt.

The true Catholike Church doth vie the Gentiles as matter to worke vpon, heretikes for the triall of their doctrine, schis-matickes to proue their constancie: the first she inuiteth, the second she excludeth, the third she leaueth, yet to them all she offereth the grace of God: in instructing the Gentiles, reforming of heretikes, and bringing home again schismatickes.

Most gracious and dread Soueraigne, I haue presumed now this third time, to present this generall treatise to your sacred Maiestie: wherein is contained the whole summe of that holy faith, and religion, which your Highnes maintaineth, and the Church of England professeth, which your royall Scepter vpholdeth, and this Christian Realme beleeueth. Moses built vnto the Lord a tabernacle of tents; Salomon reared a temple made with hands; God hath raised vp your Maie-stie to build him a spirituall house, to reforme religion, and to restore the ruines thereof: as the Prophet Isay saith, Vocaberis instaurator ruinae, & restitutor semitarum: You shall be called a repayer of the breaches, and a restorer of the decayed pathes: As by Moses rod, Elishas staffe, Zorobabels stone of tinne; so by your Highnes Scepter hath the Lord wrought wonders in this nation.

Psalme 45.4.

The Prophet Dauid maketh these three the supporters of Princes thrones, Veritie, Clemencie, Equitie: as he thus sweetly singeth: Prosper with thy glorie, ride on, because of the word of truth, of meekenes, of rightedousnesse. These whether as the brazen oxen, that held vp the sacred Lauer in the Temple, or the yuorie Lyons that supported Salomons Kingly seate, or as the fierie horse that drew Eliabs chariot, are the maintainers and vpholders of the Princely state: by these your royall Throne was first erected, and is still maintained, and shall for ever be preserved.

Ambros. orat. funeb. in Valentin.

One thus commendeth the chastitie of Tenta Queene of Illyricum, Tenta Illyricorum regina, vt longo tempore viris fortissimis imperaret miraculo meruit castitatis: Tenta by her miraculous chastitie obtained, that she a long time a valiant people gouerned. The same thus writeth of Moses clemencie: Omnium mansuetissimus predicatur, & ideo per 40. annos principatum obtinuit: Moses is reported to haue been a man of a most meeke spirit, and therefore his gouernment continued fortie yeeres. Another thus writeth of the singular temperance of the good Emperour Valentinian: Eriam ludo inuentus putauit abstinentum: He in his sporting youth vsed to abstaine. And againe, Capit ita frequentare ieiunium, vt plerunque ipse impransus conuiuium solenne suis comitibus exhiberet: He vsed so often to abstaine, that when he feasted his Nobles, he himselfe fasted. If these three vertues then, Chastitie, Clemencie, Abstinentie, as shining Diamonds adorne the Princely dignitie, and as most stedfast props vphold their regall authoritie, we do well see them all (I speake not with flatterie, but that God may haue the glorie) with a long and prosperous raigne by the Lordes mercie crowned in your princely Maiestie.

Lib. 2. offic. 1.7

But among all other Princely vertues, and royall ornaments, these doe shine as Starres, and glister like precious stones set in golde, Clemencie and Pietie: the one in Humane matters, the other in Diuine: that toward the inferior communitie, this toward the supream and highest Maiestie. For the first, Dauid is set forth as an example, of whom Ambrose saith, Diligi a subiectis, quam timeri maluit: He had rather be affected of his subiects, then feared: the same author also thus reporteth of the good Emperour Theodosius, Maluit sibi homines religione, quam timore astringere: He had rather binde men by true deuotion, then by a fearefull disposition: the Emperour Justinian is much commended for his saying; Nihil tam peculiare imperialis maiestatis, quam humanitas, per quam sola Dei seruetur imitatio: Nothing so well becometh the Imperiall Maiestie, as princely princely Humanitie, wherein only is seene the imitation of the Diuine. This diuine qualitie to haue reigned in your Maiestie, all your louing subjects with all thanks do acknowledge, and your Highnes whole realme to the glorie of God, and the comfort of all Christian nations hath had most ioyfull experience. We may more truly pronounce of these dayes, then he, which first spake the words, Nemo iam diuum Augustum, nec Tiberij Caesaris prima tempora loquitur. No man needs now go with for Augustus moderate raigne, or for Tiberius Caesar first gentle daies: he further saith, Conditum immo strictum apud te ferrum est, summa parsimonia tuam vilissimi sanguinis. The sword lieth by you shut vp, nay bound in his scabbard, the vilest blood is spared: he is bolde yet to say more, Difficile hoc esset si non naturalis ista bonitas fuisset; nemo posset dum personam ferro sibi am. This had been very hard, but that this goodnes is in you by nature; for no man can long faine another person. He was much deceiued that first vttered this; for he much altered from that he was, to whom he thus writeth, being soone changed from Clementie to crueltie; of a mercifull Emperor, he became eftsoues a beauly persecutor. But we may more truly say, hauing a most sweet taste of your Highnes benignitie, now more then for the yeeeres, a person assumed cannot be long continued: this must needs be not onely a naturall inclination, but a spirituall and gracious disposition. What though some contrarie spirits complaine of Crueltie, because some haue suffered in Equitie, for that, which they haue offered and attempted in treacherie. As one of them boldly steppeth forth, and as impudently saith, That the rage of the Caluulists (he meaneth Protestants) in few yeeeres haue consumed more Catholics (he should say Papists) then there haue suffered Protestants amongst them, which is a most slanderous vttruth, and vniust accusation: your Maiestie may call heauen and earth to record, against these false witnesses. All Christian nations can testifie, this whole Land is able the same to witness, that none of them by your Highnes godly lawes haue dyed for Reason, but for their Rebellion, not for their Profession, but their Practising, not for Contempt of the earth, but their Contempts against the state. God be blessed for this peaceable gouernment, and Alcyon dayes, and long may this Land enioy your princely plight, and your louing subjects the benignes of your Highnes fauour, that as in the comfortable Sun time, we may still walke and refresh our selues in the brightnes thereof, and that to whom they haue stuned, they may yett see more. And as Jehu said to Jehonadab, Is thine heart as my heart is toward thee? and Jehonadab answered, you doe as I doe, thou giue me thine hand, and when he had put him in his hand, he took him up to him into the chariot. So such faithfull Jehonadabs whose hearts are as right, God send many to your Maiestie, as he hath, and yet doth to whom your Highnes may still extend the right hand of fauour. God graunt that your faithful subjects both high and lowe, may long liue vnder the shadow of your princely fauour, and may still reioyce, as the chirping birds in the branches of a spreading tree, in the defence of your prosperous state: and as to the stone of tinne in Zerobabels hand, so to Gods Scepter vpon your princely shoulder, with shoutings may crie grace, grace vnto it: and as he saith, Ut se procedente, tanquam ad clarum & beneficium syas certatim aduolent: And at your Highnes comming forth, your louing people may still flocke vnto you, as to a benigne and comfortable aspect of Starres.

Concerning the second princely ornament of Pietie and true Religion, there can be nothing, whereby Imperiall states are more safely preserved, and the princely throne more surely established: as the Lord himselfe saith, of that thrice vertuous King Iosias: Did he not eat and drinke and prosper, when he executed iudgment? and was not this, because he knew me saith the Lord? That saying is excellent which is inserted into the lawe:

Nihil est quod lumine clarius prae-sulgeat quam recta fides in principe, nihil est, quod ita nequeat casui subiacere quam vera religio: There is nothing, that shineth more brightly in a Prince, then the right faith; nothing lesse casuall, then true religion. Among all other honors, which God hath vouchsafed to your highnes, this is the greatest, that he hath made you a nursing mother to his Church, a chiefe patronesse of the Gospell, and a defender of the true faith: How may your Maiestie reioyce in this, yea and all true Christians through the world haue cause to ioy therein, that by the Gospell (set forth by your authoritie) so many soules are conuerted to God, that should otherwise haue perished in ignorance; so many liues saved, that should haue beene lost for the defence of the trueth; so many heresies discovered, wherewith the world hath beene deluded: So that in this behalfe we may wel say of your Maiesty as the wise man in the Prouerbes, Many daughters haue done vertuously, but you surmount them all: and as Ambrose of noble Theodosius is in alijs quoque laudabilis, tamen apex tuorum operum pietas semper fuit: Although in other things you are most commendable, yet your pietie is the grace of all your workes.

Psal. 72. 10.

God hath not forgotten your faithfull seruice to his Sonne Christ, but richly rewarded the same in earth, reforming further an euerlasting crowne for the same in heauen: from hence cometh the peace and prosperitie, the length and continuance, the same and magnificencie of your happie raigne: in you is fulfilled, that which was spoken of the Prophet David, Because the King trusted in the Lord, and in the mercie of the most highest, he shall not slide: and as he prophecieth of the raigne of Salomon: The Kings of Tarshish, and of the Isles, shall bring presents, the Kings of Seba and Sheba shall bring gifts. In like manner hath God honoured your Highnes making your name famous in remote Kingdomes, so that both Sheba from the South, and Tarshish, from the Northern seas, doe present themselues before fore your Highnes: and therefore we doubt not, but that you doe most thankfullie confesse with that Christian Emperour Iulianus Per Christianum lib. 1. tit. 1.

una Imperij suscipimus &c. By Christ, we haue receiued our Empire: and again, Factus nos secundum voluntatem eius regere: God graunt I may gi- ibid. l. 1.
uerit according to his will. Inter illos illic ubi estis, dicitur existim
But yet notwithstanding this great honour abroad, there yet remaine some disloyal persons at home, whom like the synecrisie of religion, and prefer the obscuritie of superstitions, whose dazeled eyes the owle light of Rome doth better please, than the Sun-shine of the Gospell. When the Israelites went out of Egypt, there was not a dogge to moue the tongue Exod. 11. 9. against them; in the building of Salomon's temple, the noyse of a hammer was not heard: but we since we haue left the Egyptian darkenes, are continually barked against, and the building of the spirituall temple is hindered with the noyse of contrary hammers. To stop therefore the clamour of these mouthes, and to stay the beating of these hammers, I haue brought the whole body of Papistrie in this booke into euery mans view, confuting the same, by Scriptures, Councils, Decrees, our Martyrs, and their own writers. This I thought to be my part, that as vnder your Highnes peaceable raigie, I haue grown vp to this small light and knowledge of the truth, (hauing been a simple Preacher thereof now these eightene yeares) so, though not as a chiefe builder, yet as a seruer and vnderlabou-rer, I might bring somewhat toward the building of the Lords house.
And now it is high time (may it please your Maiestie) that euery man should arme himselfe to fight for, and defend the truth: seeing, as serpents, when the sunne beginneth to decline, creepe out of their holes; so, many false seed-men in this colde and declining age of the world, are dispersed in corners to corrupt Religion, and to sowe false doctrine. They imagine that Religion was but the heate of your Maiesties youth, who shall well vnderstand, that the Lord hath made you, as the Cedars of Libanus, that are tall, and stoope not; greene and flourishing, and fade not, and one of those of whom the Prophet speaketh: Adhuc abundabunt in caruie, They shall bring forth more fruite in their age. Now then it behooueth your Psalm. 92. 13.
Maiestie to be bolde in Christs cause, to proceede in your most Christian course, to confirme what is decaying, to remoue what is letting, to supplie what is wanting in Gods house: as Ambrose well saith, Non in princi- pio perfecta querimus, sed de principijs, ad ea que perfecta sunt peruenimus: In the beginning we seeke not perfection, but from the beginning we pro-ceede to perfection. And the same Father else where asking the question, why God in the creation, as soone as he had made the creatures, ornatus congruos non dedit, did not produce them with their ornaments, as the Heauen with Starres, the earth with flowers, giueth this answer: Imita- tores nos sui Deus esse voluit vt prius faciamus aliquid, postea venustemus: which especiallie may be applied to Princes: that they herein should be like vnto God, first to lay the foundation, then to adde perfection, first to produce the creature, then to giue it his sedore as in a beautifull picture, first the indications are described, then the ornaments added: If either your Maiesties earth, that is the ciuill administration want flower, or the Heauently state scarcely, and shining ornaments, your Highnes is to play Gods part in earth to supplie them: This lamp of the temple waie dim, where oyle faileth, and the Word is precious yet in many places, where the maintenance of the Ministers is short: your Princely care next vnder Gods providence, is onely able to helpe this, and your Maiesties most Christian desire hath therein well appeared, that the mouth of the Oxe be no more muffled, that treadeth out the corne, nor the Leuite any longer constrained to serue in Misabs house for meate and drinke and a suite of ap-parell. So many Foxes then would not breake into the vineyard, if the vines wanted no keepers: neither would the enemy be so bold if every watchtower had his skilfull and carefull watchman.

But I presume too far, thus to trouble your Maiesties cares: I know not whether euer I may haue the like occasion to speake vnto your Highnes, and therefore I haue been bold thus to write: from the Lord we do hope yet for a blessing, and of your Maiestie we are perswaded all good: and we nothing doubt, but that you are resolu'd both to doe and say with that Christian Emperour Iustinian: Omnia, quæ ad Dei placitum fieri properamus, legibus constituere, & operibus adimplere desideramus: What soeuer is to Gods glorie, we are readie by our lawes to will, and in our workes to fulfill.
Nothing now remaineth, but that I most humbly crauing pardon for my presumptuous boldnes, and tedious preface, doe with all Christian people commend your sacred Maiestie to Gods blessed protection: We pray as sometime the people for Augustus Caesar did: Patere illum generi hu- mano iam diu ægro & affecto mederi: sydus hoc quod præcipitato in profundum & demerso in tenebras ærbi resulsit, semper luceat: Suffer our Prince to liue to heale and repaire the sicke and weake state of the Land, let the Starre alwaies giue light that hath shined to the world drowned in darkenes:
Or as the Christians were taught to pray for their Emperour, so for your Maiestie we lift v p our voyce to Heauen: Suis temporibus in hoc seculo cum omni felicitate custodiat Deus, & in futuro cum sanctis Angelis regnare faciat: God keepe your Highnes with all felicitie, long to rule in this world, and in the next to raigne with Angels through Christ, Amen.

Your Maiesties most humble Subiect,

In hoc opere, in recensendis erroribus Papisticis Bellarminum præcipue sequutus sum, qui dedita opera controuersias omnes tractauit: *Quem cum videro omnes homines seuniuersum & ex professo omnes religionis quaestiones percurrerit, aut tam dilucide Papistica dogmata proposuerit, aut qui futurum magis artificiosum veritati obscurandae offuderit. Atque hunc ordinem mihi in toto hoc Controversiarum negotio tenere visum est, ut primo loco aduersaria doctrina poneretur; proximo succederet veritas suis innixa firmamentis: quod feci Hieronymi consilio, qui sic scribit aduersus Iovinianum, Non molestum sit lectori si nauseam eius & vomitum legere compellatur, libentius Christi antidotum bibet, cum diaboli venena praecesserint.

Iovinian.

Nunc verò (Patres) cum videam, quibus machinis Papistae rectam fidem oppugnare, quibus technis Evangelij professionem confodere, quanto molimine veram religionem euestere studeant, ut fudent, quomodo iungant dexteras, quam audaces & inuerecundi sint, quam solliciti, quam indefessi: nostrorum vel fœcordiam vituperandam, vel incuriam fuggillandam merito quis iudicet? qui fomno indulgemus, & nihil agimus dum insomnes ducunt noctes aduersarii, & nullum quod aiunt non mouent lapidē, ut papistica repullulet & reuiuifcat hæresis. Hinc iam satis apparet, quæ aduersantium Secta maxime nostræ Ecclesiæ infesta & inimica sit: Senserunt quidam, domesticos hostes, nempe Puritanos (quos vocant) eiusdemq; farinae reliquos homines, plus nobis esse formidandos. Qui quidem mihi multum errare videntur: Quid enim illi? latrabant tantum (inquiēt quis) queruli canes ad tempus, isti mordent & lacerant voraces lupi, nec adhuc quiescunt: illi ramuculos quosdam & surculos amputare, isti radicem ipsam euellere conantur: illi totum & regulas petebant, isti ipsum fundamentum concutiunt: Illi aliquandiu molesti, nunc vestra aut humanitate inuitati, aut prudentia sedati, aut sapientiori iudicio confirmati contricescunt: Reliqua turba toties Principis clementiam experta, argumentis euidentissimis conuicta, toties irritis conatibus pudenda, exemplis diuinæ vindictæ communita, implacabilis adhuc manet & irrequieta: in quos apte cadit illud propheticum: Improbi, ut mare propulsam quiescere non possit, aqua eius expellant lutum & cinerem: volitant passim eorum libelli, atq; etiam apud nos excusi: quotidie huc appellant, & in angulis latitant olitores illi mali, quos Seminarium illud Romanum euomit, ad perniciem sui & aliorum corruptelam. Quod successiue ceteri Ecclesiæ hostes fecerunt, primò tyrannica crudelitate saeuientes, postea hæretica suasio decipientes; nunc papistæ coniunctis viribus irruentes vtrumq; moliantur. Bene Augustinus hæreticorum sui temporis prauitatem descripsit in hunc modum: Hostis ille, noster tunc leo fuit, cum aperte sauebat; modo Draco est, cum occulte insidiatur: sicut patribus nostris aduersus leonem opus erat patientia; sic nobis aduersus draconem vigilantia: illo tempore cogebar Christianos negare Christum; isto tempore docet Christianos negare Christum: apertum malum fremitus leonis à longe auditur, à longe cauetur; applicat se lubricus draco oculis lapsibus, serpens leni tractu surrept, aduto sibilo immurmurans, non agit, nega Christum, sed esto Christianus. Pontificia verò turba vtrinq; ecclesiæ Christi molestiam facit, & tyrannidem leonum more exercens, ubi stare licet, & astutum serpentem agens, ubi vi non proualeat; ubi tormentis non est locus, vtuntur argumentis; ubi terrore non mouent, errore decipiunt; ubi minis non exagitant, precibus flagitant; ubi vi non compellunt, blandè compellant: si non regunt, rogant: ubi violenti non sunt, incipiunt esse virulenti.

Quamobrem (Domini mei) sicut contra leonem sauiam principis autoritate ecclesia munita est, ita aduersus serpentem astutiam vigilantia opus est vestra; industria etiam requiritur nostra: pergite igitur bonis fauere, doctos fouere, negligētes excitare, diligentes euocare; miseris & oppressis opem ferre, fideles Evangelij ministros contra communem hostem vestro auxilio & fauore armare; lupos papisticos à grege dominico arcere, eorumq; conatus nefarios prohibere & irritos facere: Nemo vilitatem suam veritati, aut dignitatem suam Christi honori præferat: plus valere debet apud nos fidei amor quam honoris decore: gloriæ Christi cedant humani tituli: ut bene Hieron. Quomodo in legionibus & exercitibus duces sunt, tribuni, centuriones, sed commissæ pugna vacant dignitatum nomina, & sola fortitudo quaeritur; ita in hoc campo & praelio, quo contra Demones dimicamus, non quaerantur nomina, sed opera; & gloriosior ille sub Christo Imperatore est, non qui nobilior, sed qui fortior.

Nunc vno verbo dicam, quid in hoc opere præstiterim: in refutandis papisticis dogmatibus manibus argumenta penè omnia ex Scripturis deoita potius quam desumpta attingi; in præcipuè etiam quibusdam controuersijs; ad Patrum testimonia responsa adhibui: id

Vnum porro est (venerandi Patres) (dissimulare enim non possum) quod commune

THE PREFACE TO THE CHRISTIAN READER

It may seeme strange (good Christian Reader) that these first booke been taught amongst vs by such officiall goodly and learned men those two and forty yeeres which hath beene of such plain and understanding out of Scripture, and most apparent manifest of the doctrine re, that there should be found among vs, which are so open heart, in their hearts more ready to beleue like them in receiving the word whats should be so ready to be so, I cannot imagine that, which the apostle reprehendeth. Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, God that send them strong delusions, that they should beleue lies, 2. Thessal. 2. 11. And therefore we may say of them, as Hierome of some in his time. Ma-num tibi confiteor, mores meorum optime noui, facilius eos vinci posse, quam persuaderi: I will confesse one thing vnto you, I know their manners very well, they may be sooner won-come, then perswaded: aduers. Luciferiani. For if our Saviour Christes rule do hold, as it must needes stand: Ex fructibus eorum cognoscetis, &c. They shall knowe them by their fruites, Matth. 7. 16. how can that Religion be iudged to be good, that bringeth forth such bad fruites as treacherie, conspiracies, practises against Prince and Countrey, which things are so manifestly knowne, and so fresh in every mans memoria, that for proofe herof I neede not descend to particulars. What aileth then these men, that they cannot consent in Religion with vs: we build our faith onely upon the Scriptures, we seeke onely the glorie of Christ, abusing our selues, and our corrupt nature, onely extolling grace: which of these can offend them: they enuy their linings, whereas Protestants were denied their linings, they haue libertie, we were kept in straddles and miserie, they grow rich and purchase, the Protestants could not holde their owne. I cannot see then, what it is, that should discontent them: did not the Prophet Ezechiel well prophesie of such. They doe eate the good pasture, and tread downe the rest with their feetes, they haue drinke of the deepe waters, and troubled the residue with their feetes. They are not content themselves to eate the fat, and drinke the sweete of the Land, but some of them (for I accuseth not all) haue laboured and practised to disturbe our peace, and to trouble our quiet state, but let not vs (good brethren) be offended at these things. First, let vs not be astonished, as though some strange thing had befallen vs: for Saint Paul hath said, That heresies must be among vs, that they which are approued may be knowne: in time of persecution exercebant patientiam Ecclesia, they did proue the patience of the Church: but now as Augustine saith, exercebant sapientiam, they doe exercise the wisdom of the Church. Let not the number and multitude offend vs of those, which doe band themselves against the Church: for so it must be, Christs flocke is but a little flocke.
Let vs not be afraid of their wisdom, power or strength: the Scripture teacheth vs, that they in their generation are wiser then the children of light: yet the Lord our God, that is with vs, and fighteth for vs, is wiser and stronger then they. Let them not deceiue vs with a shew of holines, for Sathan can transforme himselfe into an Angel of light: neither let it moue vs because they endure some trouble and losse of their goods, and imprisonment of their bodies for their religion (which is falsely so called) for Saint Peter saith, That men may suffer as euill doers, and so doe these.
And Saint Augustine saith, Si poena martyres faceret, omnes carceres martyribus pleni essent, omnes catenae martyres traherent: If the punishment onely, and not the cause made Martyrs, all prisons should be full of Martyrs, and all that are bound with fetters and chains should

should be Martyrs. But let us (not stumbling at any of these stones) be constant in the faith, and goe forward in the profession of the Gospel, which is grounded upon the Scripture, sealed with the blood of Martyrs, watered and attended upon these many yeeres, as the mistress which be hand-maid, with peace, prosperitie, and abundance of all blessings. With whom there is no peace to be had: their owne Doctors teach, that no reconciliation can be made between vs: And indeed so it is, for there is no fellowship betweene light and darkness. The Israelites were commanded, not to sowe their ground with diuers seedes, nor to plough with an Oxe and an Asse. What is this else, but that the Church of God cannot consist of beleaguers and Idolaters, of true Christians and hypocrites, Catholics and Heretikes, Protestants and Papists? Their seeds and sows is diuers: they sow the doctrine of men, and humane traditions: we sow the seede of Gods word. The Oxe is meete fit for the Lords plough, that draweth the Oxe and draweth the horse, the Asse doth neither: Who is he that denideth the horse and chaweth the cud? Augustine telleth vs, Fissa vngula pertinet ad discernendum quid: decurrit quid sinistrum: ruminatio pertinet ad eos, qui cogitant postea quid audiunt: He denideth the horse, that denideth and discerneth what is good, and what euill: and chaweth the cud, that doe meditate of that, which they heare out of the worde. But such are not the common Catholics among the Papists: for they doe not allowe euery one, the mistress, the maid, the ploughman and artificer to talke of Scripture, or raise questions and doubts in Religion: and sa make them Asses, not Oxen to chaw the cud. They say it belongeth not to euery Christian, to discern betweene true and false doctrine, but they must take their faith of their superiours, and obey them in all things: and so neither would they haue them decide the harts, taking from them their discerning iudgements. There is no agreement therefore to be looked for as their hinder: no more then yron or clay can be tempered together. Their old vessels cannot receive the new liquor of the Gospel: but they must first become new themselves: they must first put off their buggery ragges of popish ceremonies and superstitions, or els they shall neuer put on Christ: And to be short, Reuertantur illi ad te, ne tu reuertaris ad illos: Let them returne vnto vs, we will not returne to them, as the Lord saith to Ieremie, Thou shalt not be a prophet to the people, for thou shalt not be a prophet to the people.
But lest now we should be thought to speake without booke, deeply charging our aduersaries with heresies, lies, false doctrine, and prouing nothing: we will take some paines to set downe some principall opinions of the Papists, which haue in the purer ages of the Church been condemned for heresies.

1. Marcellina the companion of Carpocrates the archheretike, worshipped the Images of Iesus and Paul, and offered incense vnto them, August. heret. 7. So the Papists doe worship the Images of Saints, and in the second Nicene Councell it was decreed, that the Image of God should be worshipped with the same honour that God himselfe was.
2. The Heraclonites did annoynt their sicke which lay a dying, with oyle and balme, Heret. 16. So the Papists haue found out extreme Vnction and made it a Sacrament.
3. The Gaiani did hold, that the sinne of Iudas in betraying Christ, was a benefite to mankind, Heret. 18. The Papists come somewhat neere: one of them affirmeth, that the Iewes had sinned mortally if they had not crucified Christ: Ex Iuel. defens. Apolog. p. 676.
4. The Pepuziani iudged heretikes, because they permitted women to be Priests, Heret. 27. So it was decreed in the Florentine Councel among the Papists, that in the case of necessitie, not onely a lay man, but an heretike, pagan, and a woman too, may baptize.
5. The heretikes called Angelici were condemned, because they worshipped Angels, Heret. 33. So the Rhemists teach, that Angels may be worshipped, Annot. in Apocal. 3. sect. 6.
6. There was a sect of heretikes that walked with bare feete, because God said to Moses, put off thy shoes, &c. Heret. 68. And so are there of Friers that goe barefoot, as the Friers Flagellants, and Franciscanes.
7. The Priscilianists did make the Apocrypha, that is, bookes not Canonically of equall authoritie with Scripture, Heret. 70. So doe the Papists, the bookes of Tobie, Iudith, Machabees, and others, which are not found in the Canon of the Hebrew, they make them bookes of Canonically Scripture, and part of the word of God: yea, they say, that whatsoener the Pastors of the Church doe teach beside Scripture in the vnitie of the Church, is to be taken for the word of God, Rhem. Annot. 1. The. cap. 2. sect. 12.
8. An Archheretike called Marcus, did holde that Christ did not verily suffer and indeede, but in shew onely and appearance, Heres. 14. The Apollinarists also affirmed, that Christ took humane flesh without a soule, Heres. 55. I pray you, how farre are the Papists from these heresies? for they affirme that Christ suffered not in soule: Nay the Rhemists hold, that it is a blasphemous assertion so to say, Annot. Hebru. 5. v. 7. What is this els, but either with Marcus to say, that Christ suffered but in shew, and that he felt nothing in soule, when he cryed out upon the Crosse, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? for if there were no such matter indeede, Christ must haue uttered those words onely in outward shew and pretense. Againe, they cannot shift off handsomely from them the Apollinarists heresie: for why did Christ take vpon him our flesh and soule, but to redeeme man, that was lost both in body and soule? and therefore he must needs haue suffered both in body and soule: for if there were no vse of the humane soule in the worke of our redemption, you might as well say with the Apollinarists that Christ had no soule at all. Thus Augustine reasoneth: Si totus homo perijt, totus beneficio saluatoris indiguit, si totus beneficio saluatoris indigebat, totum Christus veniendo saluauit: If the whole man both in body and soule were lost, he wholly had neede of a Saviour: and if he wholly needed a Saviour; Christ by his conuincing did wholly saue him. Ergo, it followeth that Christ must wholly haue dyed and suffered in body and soule to redeeme man, that was wholly lost in body and soule.

The Anthropomorphites did imagine, that God was in shape and proportion like a man, Heres. 50. Doe not our Rhemists fauour strongly of this heresie, which allowe the Image of God to be pictured like an olde man with gray haire in their Churches? Annot. Act. cap. 17. vers. 29.

The heretikes Abelian, thought it not lawfull for their sect to liue without wines, and yet they neuer vsed, nor kept company with their wines, Heres. 87. Doe not the Papists come neere them, which hold that their Priests which were married before orders, ought not afterward to haue access to their wines; yet are they their wines still, neither is the marriage knot dissolved betwene them? Rhemist. Act. 21. sect. 1.

The Pelagian heretikes did hold three pernicious opinions. First, that a man may be perfect in this life and keepe all the Commaundements, Heres. 88. So the Rhemists say, it is possible to keepe all the precepts of the law, Annot. Iohan. 14. sect. 1. Secondly, the Pelagians say, that grace is giuen vnto men onely to this ende, that they may more easily doe those things which they are commanded to doe by their owne freewill, Heres. 88. So the Rhemists say, that man was neuer without freewill, but hauing the grace of Christ, it is truly made free, Annot. Ioan. 8. sect. 2. What is this els, but that his free will is made more free, and that grace helpeth him not wholly to worke, but more easily onely? Thirdly, the Pelagians hold, Gratiam Dei non ad singulos actus dari: That the grace of God is not needfull to be giuen at euery assay, but that their freewill in most things is sufficient, August. Epist. 106. So the Rhemists say, that though the Gentiles beleued specially by Gods grace, yet they beleued also of their owne free will, Act. 13. sect. 2. What say they else, but that a man may beleue by his owne free will without grace?

The Manichees condemned the eating of flesh, as being vncleane and impure, Heres. 46. So the Papists also forbid at certaine times the eating of flesh. And herein they perhaps differ from the Manichees: They held that flesh was vncleane by creation: The Papists by reason of the curse: for God cursed the earth, and not the waters (say they) and therefore vpon fasting dayes fish is preferred before flesh, Durand. lib. 6. capit. de alijs ieiunijs. So they both agree in this, that flesh is a thing impure and vncleane: for if they had not so thought, why did not that popish Bishop of London Stokefle, rather suffer the pigge to be eaten, which was found in one Frebarnes house? Lent time, his wife being great with child longing for a peece thereof, then command it as an vncleane thing to be buried in Finsburie fields, and so the good creature of God to be spoyled and lost?

Fox. p. 1584.

There was also another most blasphemous opinion of the Manichees: for they helde that the parts and members of Christ were dispersed euery where, and that in their meats and drinks they did deliuer the members of Christ, which were tyed and bound in the creatures. Tales (saith Augustine) sunt electi eorum, vt non sint saluandi à Deo, sed saluatores Dei; liberant enim membra Christi, cum manducant: The elect amongst them (for so they call their principals) do make themselves the saviours & redeemers of God, for they do set at libertie (as they imagine) the members of Christ, he is not their saviour. Compare nowe the opinion of the Papists with these heretikes: see if they be not cosin germanes: for as they made themselves, saluatores Christi,

THE PREFACE TO THE READER.

sauours of Christ: so is it a saying among the Papists, that Sacerdos est creator creatoris sui: the Priest at Masse, which by five words speaking maketh the body of Christ, is a maker, say they, of his maker, a creator of his creator, Ex Iuell. lib. artic. pag. 615. But herein the Papists goe beynd the Manichees: for they deliuered the bodie and members of Christ from the prison of the creatures, and sent them vp to heauen: the Papists bring them downe from heauen, and close them in the creature, vnder the shape of bread and wine.

Thus farre we thought good to shew, how neere the Papists come to the heretikes of olde time: that it might appeare to the world, that we doe not vnjustly charge them with heresie, and that we haue good cause to shunne and abhorre their poysoned doctrine. Many other heresies I could haue produced, which are reniued by our aduersaries, and raked againe as it were out of their graues, In Tetralylon where they did quietly rest: But that I am not of purpose nowe to deale in this matter: which in a seuerall Treatise I haue handled more at large.

I haue onely by the way giuen a tast of the bitter and sowre doctrine of Poperie: that our countrie men, which haue been any thing that way infected, may take warning, that if they haue sipped of the whore of Babylons cuppe of fornication, they should leaue off, before they haue drunke more deeply, least they in the ende be constrained to drawe out the very dregges thereof, and to be drunken with their intoxicate cup. If they will in time be warned, they may: a word to a wise man is sufficient: and if they be wise, they will also take heede in time, I say vnto them, as Augustine did sometime to the Donatists: Si sapitis, bene & rectè, si autem non sapitis, nos vestri curam gessisse non poenitebit, quia etsi cor vestrum ad pacem non conuertitur, pax nostra tamen ad nos reuertitur: If you will be learned, it is well, and as we wish: but if you will not, it repenteth vs not, that we haue had some care of you: for although your heart be not conuerted to the peace of the Gospell, yet our peace returneth to vs againe.

Here by the way, I must remember my selfe of one thing, which I had almost ouerslipped. Euery where both in this Preface and in this whole booke, speaking of our aduersaries, I call them Papists, as we are knowne by the name of Protestants: I suppose our English Romanists will take no offence or griefe hereby so to be called: although I haue heard that some of them hold great scorne to be named Papists, yet I see no reason, why they should so doe. The Rhemists like this name well enough, because it is not deriued from any one man, but from their Popes and chiefe Bishops, to whom (say they) we are bound to cleaue in Religion, and obey in all things: So to be a Papist (say they) is to be a Christian man, a childe of the Church, and a subiect to Christs Vicar. Seeing then this name pleaseth their ghostly fathers of Rhemes so well, there is no reason why they should mislike it: and therefore we will vse it still, as best expressing their profession, who are pinned vpon the Popes slecue for their faith & Religion. As likewise the name of Protestants we refuse not: which name I thinke, though elswhere before in vse, yet in England tooke beginning in King Henry the eightes dayes, when there was a generall protestation made in the name of the King, the whole Councell and Clergie of England against the Pope: In the which protestation, thus we finde: England hath taken her leaue of popish crafts for euer, neuer to be deluded with them hereafter: Romane Bishops haue nothing to doe with English people: the one doth not traffique with the other: at the least, though they will haue to deale with vs, we will none of their merchandise, none of their stufte. Thus we see how a Papist and a Protestant are defined: A Papist is he that cleaueth to the Pope in Religion, and is obedient to him in all things: A protestant is he, that professeth the Gospell of Iesus Christ, and hath renounced the iurisdiction of the sea of Rome, and the forced and vnnaturall obedience to the Pope. These names therefore as best fitting both our professions, seeing no cause to the contrary, I purpose euery where to vse and retaine throughout this Treatise.

I would here finish and make an end of this Preface, but that first I must make the Reader acquainted with the order and method, which I haue followed in setting downe the controuersies: The whole body therefore of the controuersies betwene the Papists and vs, our worthie and learned countriman D. Whitakers hath digested and disposed into a singular Method, the which I haue propounded to my selfe throughout this discourse to obserue.

The heresies and errors therefore of Poperie, doe either impugne the offices of Christ, with his benefites and merites, or his person: the most of them are of the first kinde, some errors they maintaine against his person, but not many.

First,

THE PREFACE TO THE READER.

First, the name of Christ sheweth his offices: for it signifieth anointed: he was anointed to be our Prophet, King and Priest: In so much as he is our Saviour, and furnisheth forth the benefits of our redemption and salvation. First then of this offices, and thereof the benefits, that doe arise and spring thereof.

The first office of our Saviour Christ, is to be our heavenly Father, and Prophet. His heavenly doctrine is contained nowhere els but in the Scriptures: the first generall question is, what must be of the Scriptures: where there arise any questions, as of the Canonick books of the Scripture, of the vulgar translation of Scripture for the perspicuity and plainnesse, authoritie, interpretation and perfection of Scripture, with such other, as may be objected by any bold and audacious

The second office of Christ is to be our King: and because his kingdome is his Church: here we are to handle the controversies about the Church: whether it be the Church Militant upon earth, or the Church Triumphant in heauen.

The Church militant is to be considered, either in generall, where the questions are moved, what the Church is, whether it be visible or not, by what markes it is knowne, whether it may erre, what authoritie is hath. Then the parts of the Church, which are either assembled and gathered together, as in generall Councils: where these doubts may be discussed, whether generall Councils be necessary, by whom they ought to be summoned, whether they can erre, whether the Pope be above Councils or not, and such like: Or else the parts of the Church are severally to be considered, and they are of three sortes, either the chiefe part, the middle and meane parts, the lowest and basest parts of the Church: The chiefe member they make to be the Pope: where there are many questions and of great weight, as whether the remnants of the Church be Monarchical, whether Peter were appointed head of the Church, whether the Pope be Peters successor, whether he may erre, whether the Pope be Antichrist, with such other. The middle parts, are their Clerkes, which are either secular, as they call them, which have any Ecclesiasticall function, where we must enquire of their election and degrees, of their singler life, and such like, the Regular Clerkes are their Monks, and other of that profession, where we must entreat of vowes, of their solitarie life, their habit, their Canonick houres, with other matters. The lowest members are the lay men: where the questions about the Civill Magistrate must be handled: as whether he may put heretikes to death, whether he have any power and authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters, and hitherto of the Militant Church.

The Triumphant Church consisteth either of Angels, or other Saints departed: Concerning the Angels, we dissent about the orders and degrees of them, about their ministerie and office, and whether they are to be prayed unto.

Concerning the Saints departed, there are many questions in controuersie, as of Purgatory, Limbus Patrum, whether they are to be prayed unto, of their Reliques, Images, Temples, Holy daies and such like.

The third office of Christ is his Priesthood, whereof there are two Parts, his intercession, where we must enquire, whether Christ be the onely Mediatour of intercession, and his Sacrifice, where the maine and great controuersie concerning the Sacraments doth offer itselfe: for by the Sacraments the power and efficacie of the death of Christ is deriued vnto vs.

Here first we must entreate of the Sacraments in generall, as of their number, their efficacie, the difference betwene the Sacraments of the olde and new Testament: then in particular, as of Baptisme, and the severall questions thereto belonging, of the Lords Supper, where also the great controuersie about their Idolatrous sacrifice of the Masse, and other necessary questions must be handled. Then follow in order five other popish Sacraments, to be considered of, confirmation, penance, extreame vnction, orders, matrimony. And these are the controuersies concerning the offices of Christ.

The controuersies which concerne the benefits of our redemption, with other severall questions, are these. First of the state of man in Paradise before his fall: where we are to discusse of the state of Adams soule, and of his bodie, whether it were created immortall, of Paradise, whether it were a place knowne, and yet remaining. The second Controuersie is concerning Adams fall, where the questions are handled of Adams transgression, and of originall sinne, with the severall parts thereof. The third Controuersie consisteth of the reparation of mankind: where these principall questions are decided, of Predestination, of Grace, Free will, Faith, Iustificacion, Good workes.

Lastly,

Lastly, there remaine some questions about the person of Christ, as whether he be one, that is, God of himselfe, whether he were as in wisdom, whether he suffered to saule, whether he merited for himselfe with such others, &c.

Thus haue we the summe and body of Antichristian doctrine, which we purpose by the grace of God to goe through, beginning at the first, and so prosecuting euery particular question, till we are come to the last. My purpose is not to set down all the heresies, which impugn the Christian faith, but onely those which are maintained by the Church of Rome this day, who are the chiefe trouble and disquieters of the peace of our Church. I say therefore with Augustine, Omnis Christianus Catholicus ista non debet credere, sed nō omnis, qui ista non credit, consequenter se debet Christianū credere: Euery true Christian is bound not to beleue these things, but yet not straight-way euery man; but he that will be a good Christian for there are many errors and heresies in the world beside popistris: But this we haue only chosen to deale against in this treatise, as being most dangerous to our state, more plausible to carnall men, and most like to infect: I haue now this third time for thy benefit, Christian Reader, perused, corrected, & augmented this worke, and published it for thy vse. The second edition was in these foure points enlarged more then the former: first, I haue considered more objections of the aduersarie, and propounded more arguments for the truth: Secondly, I haue added the Canons of the ancient Councils throughout for the more lively euidence of truth: Thirdly, I haue adioyned in euery place of greatest weight, the seale and testimonie of the holy Martyrs: Fourthly, this booke containeth one hundred more of popish Errors then the first: where I haue briefly touched Bellarmines chiefe arguments in some maine Controuersies of our faith, as he hath lately caused them to be published in the third volume of his Controuersies: which came forth since the first edition of this booke. In this third edition I haue performed more then in the former, in these foure points: First, I haue answered all such places of weight, which our aduersaries alledge out of Scripture, and remoued many more objections of the aduersarie than before. Secondly, I haue inserted more testimonies of the Fathers for the prooue of the truth, and answered their shewe of the Fathers in some principall controuersies: Thirdly, I haue conuinced them by the Lawes Imperiall, and their owne Pontificall decrees, and by their owne writers. Fourthly, I haue adioyned a confutation of Bellarmines first booke of Indulgences and tubilee pardons, and added one Centurie more: so that the whole is increased to five Centuries, that is, so many hundreds of popish errors and heresies.

Lib. 17. de ci-uitat. Dei. c. 1.

This, through Gods gracious assistance I haue performed in this worke, and throughout the same, as neere as I could, I haue followed Augustines rule, Ita stylo, si potuero moderabor, ut huic operi in Dei voluntate peragendo, nec ea, quæ supersunt dicam, nec ea, quæ satis sunt prætermittam: My care hath been so to temper my style, that neither things superfluous should be inserted, nor things necessary omitted. These my labours, farre beyond my strength, though not about my hope, by the Lords extraordinarie assistance (I must needes confesse) I haue brought to an ende. Recompence I looke for none, but thy good acceptaion (Christian Reader:) it is the good of Gods Church, which I seeke: other encouragement (the Lord helpe) in these dayes we haue small: I now commend my selfe to thy prayer, my labours to thy diligent reading (Christian brother) and both you and them to Gods good blessing: who giue vs grace to discerne truth from error, and hauing discerned them, power to shunne the one, and embrace the other: that as he well saith, Speremus, quæ Christus promisit, & sequamur quod præcessit: that hoping and trusting here to that which Christ hath promised, we may follow at length, whither he is preceded and gone before vs:

THE FIRST BOOKE OR CENTVRIE CONTEINING THE ## CONTROVERSIES OF RELIGION, WHICH

ARISE IN QUESTION BETWEENE THE CHVRCH

of God and the Papiſts, about the word of God contained in the Scriptures, and the Church Militant here vpon earth, with the parts and members

THE FIRST GENERALL CONTROVERSIE

of the holie Scriptures.

According to the method which I haue propounded to my ſelfe (God aſſiſting me by his ſpirit) to obſerue throughout this whole treatiſe of the controuerſies, and as I haue ſet it down in the end of the preface, in the firſt place we are to entreat of ſuch matters as concerne the Prophetick office of Chriſt. He is our Prophet, our heavenly teacher, and Doctour, Matthis 3. verſ. 8. from him proceedeth all holy knowledge: we haue not ſeene God, nor the high things of God: but the only begotten ſonne, which is in the boſome of the father, he hath declared him. Iohn 1. 18. Wherefore all the true ſhepe of Chriſt, will heare his voyce, Iohn 10. 27.

His voyce is not elſe where heard but onely in the Scriptures: We muſt heare Moſes and the Prophets, Luke 16. 29. and as S. Ambroſe well ſaith, Qui vult ad Chriſti peruenire myſterium, non ingreditur ad illud, niſi per euangelica ſcriptura ſecutum: No man can attaine to the knowledge of Chriſt, but by the euangelicall Scriptures. Firſt of all therefore this great and moſt famous controuerſie betweene vs and our aduerſaries concerning the Scriptures muſt be handled: which is diſtributed into ſeven ſeuerall queſtions.

- 1 Concerning the Canonickall Scripture, what bookes are to be receiued into the ſacred Canon, what bookes to be reiected and counted apocryphall.
- 2 Concerning the authentickall Edition of the holy Scriptures, whether the Hebrœe, Greeke or Latine tranſlation is chiefly to be followed.
- 3 Whether the Scriptures ought to be tranſlated into the vulgar and Engliſh tongue: and whether publike prayers and diuine ſeruice ought to be vſed in the ſame tongue.
- 4 Whether the Scriptures are authorized by the Church, and not rather ſo knowne to be of themſelues.
- 5 Concerning the perſpicuie and plainenes of the Scripture, whether it be ſo hard, that the common people may not ſafely be admitted to the reading thereof.
- 6 Concerning the interpretation of Scripture: which queſtion is diuided into three parts: firſt whether the Scripture admit diuers ſenſes and expoſitions: ſecondly who hath the chiefe authoritie to expound Scripture: thirdly what meanes ought to be vſed in expounding of it.
- 7 Concerning the perfection of the Scripture, three parts of the queſtion. Firſt, whether the Scriptures be neceſſary: ſecondly, whether they be ſufficient to ſaluation: thirdly, whether there be any traditions beſide neceſſary to ſaluation.

THE FIRST QUESTION CONCERNING the Canonickall Scripture.

Of the ſtate of the firſt Queſtion.

WE haue not any thing in this place to deale with thoſe heretikes, which denie either the whole Scripture, or any part thereof: but onely with our aduerſaries the Papiſts, that holding all thoſe bookes to be Scripture, which we doe acknowledge, doe adde vnto them other bookes

The first generall Controuersie

bookes which are not canonically: so that they offend not as other heretikes, in denying any part of the Scripture, but which is as bad in adding vnto it, for both these are at fault. Reuel. 22. 18. And here I could haue wished that they would haue followed S. Hieron. counsell, writing thus vnto Leia; as touching the canonically bookes of the olde testament, which after he had reckoned vp, as we now hold them, giueth this caueat concerning the Apocrypha: Cauent omnia Apocrypha, & si quando ea, non ad dogma, ueritatem, sed ad signum rectitudinis legere uoluerit, sciat non eorum esse, quorum titulis praecedunt, nichilque his aduersum uisum, & gravioris esse prudentia aurum in luto querere: Let her take heede of all the Apocrypha, which if she will read, not for the truth of doctrine, but reuerence of the storie, let her know, that they are not their writings, whose tale they beare, and that many corrupt things are intermingled; and herein lieth great wildome, how to gather gold out of durt. Hieron. ad Latam.

First of all briefly before we proceed, let vs see who they were that did offend in the first kinde, namely in denying and detracting from Scripture. Some heretikes generally rejected the whole Scripture, some certain parts thereof, The Sadducees received no Scripture, besides the five bookes of Moses; the Manichees condemned the whole old testament, and so did wicked Marcion.

The bookes of Moses the Prolemaites refused, the booke of the Plalmes the Nicholaitaines, and the Anabaptists in our dayes: there wanted not which condemned the booke of the Preacher and the Canticles as wanton and lasciuious bookes; and the Anabaptists are not here behind with their parts. The holy and excellent booke of Iob hath also found enemies, and some of the Rabbins, which doe thinke that the storie is but fained; which heresie is confuted Ezech. 14. 14. for there Noah, Iob, Daniel are named together: so that it is manifest, that such a man there was. Wicked Porphyrie refuseth Daniel as forged.

The new testament the Manichees most impiously affirmed to be full of lies, Cerdon the heretike condemned all but Lukes Gospell. Cerinthus received none but Markes. The Valentinians could away with none but Iohns Gospell. The Alogians of all other hated Iohns writings. The Ebionites only admitted Matthwes Gospell. The Acts of the Apostles the Senarian heretikes contemned. The Marcionites the Epistles to Timothee, to Titus, to the Hebrues. The Ebionites could not away with any of S. Pauls works. But the Church of God hath euen from the Apostles time acknowledged and receiued all the bookes of the new Testament, as they now stand together, as by Origenes most annient writer of the Church is in these words confessed: Sacerdotalis institutio in Euangelio suo Matthaeus inchoauit; Marcus quoque, Lucas & Iohannes suis propriis sub sacrosanctis ecclesiasticis, &c. First Matthew foundeth forth his euangelicall trumpet, then follow Markes, Luke and Iohn singing with their Priestly trumpets; Peter also sendeth forth the trumpet of his two Epistles; Iames also and Iude, and Iohn maketh melody with his trumpet in his Epistles, and the Apocalypse, and Luke in the acts of the Apostles: Et Paulus in quatuordecim epistolarum suarum fulminat tubis: And Paul thundereth out in the trumpets of his fourteene Epistles. Vnto these former heretikes adde the Zuinckfeldians and Libertines that refuse to be iudged by the Scripture, calling it a dead letter, and flie vnto the inward and secret reuelations of the spirit. And by your leaue the Papists are not far from this heresie some of them: although the Iesuite erie neuer so much with open mouth, that we belie them; De uerbo Dei lib. 1. cap. 1. Take but a little paines to peruse that worthy learned mans and reuerent Fathers defence of the Apologie p. 21. there you shall finde how that Ladameus a Canon Lateran in Rome, said in the Countsell of Trent, that the Scripture is but mortuum atramentum, dead inke. The Bishop of Poiriers said, that it was but res inanissima & muta, a dead and dumbe thing. Albertus Pighinus, that the Scriptures were but muti Iudices, dumbe Iudges. Eckius calleth it Euangelium nigrum, & theologiam atramentariam, the blacke Gospell and inkie diuinitie: and it is nasus cereus, a nose of waxe saith he. And now in cometh Hosius with his part: that it is but lost labor which is bestowed in the Scripture: for the Scripture is a creature, and a certaine bare letter. But the Iesuit saith, that we abuse the name of that man, for those are not his owne words, but he reporteth them of Zuinckfeldians. Be it so for this time, though M. Iewel bestow some paines to proue them to be according to his owne meaning. Though these be not Hosius owne words, yet these are not much better, yea far worse, who speaking of Danids writing of the Plalmes, saith thus, Quid ni scriberet, scribimus in doctis doctique poemata possint, why might not he write (saith he) being a temporall Prince, as Horace saith, we write ballads euery body both learned and vnlearned: Hos. lib. 2. cont. Brentium.

I pray you now how much doe these Papists differ from the Libertines and Zuinckfeldians, vnlesse it be in this, that the Libertines cleaue to secret reuelations; the Papists are pinned vpon the Popes lleue, affirming that it is no Scripture nor Gospell without the determination of the Church. Nay one of them saith, Determinatio Ecclesiae appellatur Euangelium, the determination of the Church is called the Gospell, Iohannes Maria. Will you yet heare of greater impietie? Ando Domini. 1240. or thereabout, there was a booke set forth by the Friars, called Euangelium aeternum, full of their owne fables, and abominable errors: they taught that Christs Gospell was not to be compared

Homil. 7. in

compared vnto it, and that the Gospell of Christ should be preached but fiftie yeares. This booke with much adoe was condemned by the Pope, (but after long disputation) and it was burnt secretly, least the Friars should haue been discredited: and withall, the booke of Guilielmus de S. amore, which he had written against the Friars, and therein disputed against their Gospell, was commanded to be burned with the other. Besides these heresies, their opinion also is to be reiected, that thinke that the holy writers might in some things be deceiued, as mistaking one thing for another, or sayling in their memorie. To this opinion Erasmus enclined, whom Bellarmin taketh paine to confute, lib. 1. cap. 8. He might as well haue turned his argument vpon Alecbior Canis their owne champion, who thinketh that Stephen Act. 7. in telling so long a storie might forget himselfe in some things, Can. lib. 1. cap. 18. But we herein mislike both Erasmus conceite, and Canis his fancie, and who else haue so thought of the Scriptures; and say rather with S. Augustine: Tantummodo scripturis canonicis hanc debet seruitutem, &c. Epist. 19. I doe onely to the canonicall Scriptures owe this seruice and obedience, which I doe so follow, that I thinke the writers thereof erred not any whit at all: and with S. Hierome, who, whereas some accused S. Matthew of forgetfulness, as though he should haue named Ieremie for Zacharie, Matth. 27. 9. thus writeth: Ab sit hoc de pedissequo Christi dicere, &c. Hieron. ad Pamach. Far be it from me so to say of the follower of Christ, who in alleaging the Prophets, hunted not for words or phrases, but had a care to set down the sense and doctrine: for he thinketh that place there cited to be taken, though not word for word, out of Ieremie. But now to the question.

CERTAIN E QUESTIONS ABOUT SOME of the Canonicall bookes of Scripture.

THe bookes of Scripture whereof we now intreate, are of three sorts: some are both by vs and our aduersaries iudged to be Canonicall, as all the hookes of the new Testament, wholly as they stand: and all these bookes of the olde Testament, so many as are found in the Hebrue: Some are both of vs and our aduersaries reiected, and thrust out of the canon: what bookes they are, shall be declared in the next section.

A third sort there is, which our aduersaries would gladly bring into the number of the bookes of sacred Scripture, but we herein doe by warrant of Gods word resist and withstand them: and of these also afterward.

Concerning the first kinde, namely such bookes, as are both by them and vs acknowledged for Canonicall, there is no question betweene vs for the authoritie of them: only about the booke of the Preacher there ariseth some controuersie betweene Bellarmin and vs, whom especially I purpose to trace through out this treatise. We are agreed of the booke it selfe, that it is Canonicall; of the author, that he was Salomon: but these two points we varie about: first Bellarmin thinketh that Salomon made that booke before his fall: we thinke he set it forth after, as a token of his repentance: secondly, he thinketh that Salomon was a reprobate, and a cast away for euer: we hold the contrarie: let vs first examine his arguments, and then set downe our owne.

The Pupils.

That this book of the Preacher was compiled by Salomon, before he fell, thus the Iesuite would proue it.

Argum. 1. The Preacher saith, that his wisdom remained yet with him, chap. 2. ver. 9. But it is not like, that the heavenly gift of wisdom continued with him, after his heart was turned from God to Idolatrie: Ergo, it is like this booke was made before his fall, while he was in the state of wisdom, lib. 1. de verb. cap. 5.

Answer. 1. Salomons wisdom was not only in diuine, but in humane things, and in the knowledge of nature: for he spake of trees, of hearbs, of beasts and fowles, and therefore he is said to excell in wisdom the children of the East, and the wife of Egypt, whose knowledge was in naturall things, 1. King. 4. ver. 30. 33. And this wisdom might remaine with Salomon in the midst of pleasure, as we see it was not denied to the vitious and idolatrous heathen Philosophers: yea and Salomon saith of himselfe, that he thought to giue his heart to wine, and yet to leade his minde in wisdom, chap. 2. ver. 3. so that it seemeth, that the gift of wisdom did not whollie faile him, no not in his fall.

2 And what if it were graunted, that the spirit of wisdom departed from him all the time of his dotage? Why might it not returne to him againe afterwards, when he began to repent him of his fall: as the spirit of strength and fortitude being gone from Sampson, for a while, came to him againe.

3 Or thus rather the place may bee vnderstood: I was great, and increased aboue all (saith he) that were before me in Ierusalem, also my wisdom remained with me: that is, he maketh a large and ample confession of his sinne, that while he was in honour and wealth, with wisdom, even then his heart was entised from the true worship of God, euen in the midst of Gods blessings: such was his vnthankfulnes to God, and forgetfulnes of his benefits. So then the time of the continuance of his wiſedome, is not to be referred to the inſtant of making this booke, but hath reſpect to his fall: for he ſaith, that his honour, riches, and wiſedome continued yet, (I was increaſed:) but it is to bee thought, that as he being drowned in pleaſure, decayed in wiſedome; ſo alſo his credit and ſubſtance was empayred, which were giuen him as handmaidens to waite of his wiſedome.

Argum. 2. Salomon doted when he was an old man, 1. King. 11. 4. to what time then will you aſſigne then his repentance? Again, if this booke had bin made after his fall, it is like, that where-as he maketh a particular rehearſall of all his pleaſures, he would not haue omitted his pleaſure and delight in ſuch a multitude of wines and concubines: And is it like, that he being beſotted with the loue of ſo many women, could indite ſuch excellent ſayings? Bellarm. ibid.

Anſ. 1. Salomon was old when he gaue himſelfe vnto women, yet it is like he was older, when he weaned himſelfe from his pleaſure, and returned vnto God by heartie repentance: for there are diuers degrees of old age. Secondly, it was not neceſſarie that Salomon ſhould reckon up all his pleaſures: neither indeed doth he: for he ſpake of trees, and beaſts, and fowles, which no doubt was a great delight vnto a wiſe man, to be occupied and exerciſed in knowledge: yet thereof he maketh no mention in the 2. chap. Neither is he altogether ſilent concerning his delight in women: for he ſaith, I provided me men ſingers, and women ſingers, the delites of the ſonnes of men, verſ. 8. And, I haue gotten me men ſervants, and maidens, and had children borne in my houſe: or as the Latin text readeth, I had a great houſehold. He may in this place haue relation to the multitude of his wiues and concubines: why not? 3. To the third poynt, we anſwer: we ſay not, that at the ſame time, while Salomon gaue his minde to pleaſure, that he wrote this booke; but afterwards, when he was come to himſelfe, and awaked out of his long ſleepe.

The Proteſtants.

AT what time the booke of Eccleſiaſtes was written by Salomon, though it bee no materiall poynt of our faith to know; yet becauſe the truth euery where, ſo much as by diligent endeavour may bee attained vnto, is to be ſought out: It ſhall appeare by theſe reaſons following, that both it is moſt like and probable, that it was indited after Salomons fall, and that it is moſt ſafe ſo to thinke, becauſe there can no other time be aſſigned for Salomons repentance, as it ſhall euen now be ſhewed.

Argum. 1. Firſt, it is made manifeſt by the inſcription and title of the booke: the words of the Preacher: for from whence is it, that Salomon being a King, to whom it pertaineth not to teach the people, but to the Levites and Priests, doth giue himſelfe ſo ſtrange a ſtile? It is not becauſe by his writing he preacheth: for then in his two other bookes of the Prouerbs and Canticles, by the ſame reaſon, he might haue ſo named himſelfe: but of a King he is now become a Preacher, preaching vnto the people by the example of his conuerſion. The word חֲכָמִים properly ſignifieth Eccleſiaſtes, ſeu Eccleſiaſticus, a Churchman, or a man of the congregation: And ſo Salomon calleth himſelfe, either becauſe he was now reſtored, and made as it were a man of the Church againe: or becauſe publickly he had ſome ſpeech, after his returning to God, as is the manner of theſe, which publickly ſhew repentance for their ſinne, ſic ſunius in hunc locum.

Argum. 2. The Preacher in this booke doth euery where vrge his owne experience: as I turned me to behold, 2. 12. I haue ſene vnder the ſunne, 3. 16. I haue ſene all things in the daies of my vanitie, 7. 17. He alſo profeſſeth as much, that he ſought in his heart by his owne experience to finde out, wherein conſiſted the chiefe goodnes of men vnder the ſunne, 2. 3. And hauing runne thorough the courſe of al things in his owne knowledge and experience, he at the length, as a man of much obſeruation and great continuance concludeth: Vanitie of vanities, (ſaith the Preacher) all is but vanitie, chap. 1. 2. 8. Ergo, it is like that Salomon wrote this booke, being now thorough aged, and of long experience: wiſedome indeede goeth not by yeeres, but experience is the daughter and offſpring of old age.

Argum. 3. Further, the Preacher ſaith, he ſought in his heart to giue himſelfe to wine, and to apprehend folly, Eccleſ. 2. 3. But when elſe did he lay hold on folly, then, when he fell into the ſnares of women, and was ſeduced to Idolatrie? Ergo, this booke was made after his fall. It will here I know be answered, that there is no ſuch thing in the text, as I haue alledged: Indeed, in the vulgar Latine there is not, which tranſlateth cleane contrary to the Hebrue: for in ſtead of, Cogitavi pertrahere animum ad vinum, & prebendere ſtultitiam, I thought to draw my ſelfe to wine, and to apprehend folly: it is read, Cogitavi abſtrahere me à vino, & denitare ſtultitiam: I bethought to withdraw my ſelfe from wine, and to ſhunne follie; quite contrarie. But Bellarminus taketh vpon him to iuſtifie the vulgar tranſlation, and ſaith that the hebrue letter ב bet, ſignifieth in conſtruction as well from as to; and therefore wee may as well reade from wine, as to wine: and this is more agreeable to the text ſaith he, becauſe it followeth, and to leade my heart in wiſedome, &c.

signifieth to draw, is translated from: but that can he not finde, but the contrarie: as Iudg. 4. 6. Deborah biddeth Barack draw the people not from, but to the mount Tabor. 2. But he saith nothing of the other word inchoat, which neuer signifieth, down but he shunned, but the contrarie, apprehendit, he apprehended. 3. This reading agreeth better with the text: for the Preacher saith; that euen while his wisdom remained with him, he gave himselfe to wine and pleasure: as afterward in the tenth verse.

Argum. 4. Lastly, we hold it a very firme and sure thing, that Salomon recovered his fall, and was restored to fauour before he dyed: as in the next place it is to be seene: and that this booke was set forth as a seale and sure signe of his repentance, which it could not be, if it were written before, and not after his fall. And of this iudgement is S. Hierome, that the booke of Ecclesiastes was written after Salomon's fall, and to that purpose he expoundeth those words, 2. Chron. 9. 29. The rest of the workes of Salomon first and last are written in the booke of Nathan the Prophet, &c. Priori antequam prauaricatus, posteriori postquam prauaricatus: His first workes were those before his fall, and his last after his fall. But what workes were more like to follow after his fall, then his repentance, and the writing of this booke? and therefore in the storie of the Kings it is said, The rest of the words of Salomon: 1. King. 11. 41. Wherefore Salomon euen after his fall vttered many wise words, and his wisdom returned vnto him: and it is like to haue been some notable thing, that Salomon did in his latter time, seeing that three Prophets, as Nathan, Abiah, Ieda in their bookes made mention thereof: as in 2. Chron. 9. 29.

The Papists:

The second point of the difference here betweene Bellarmino and vs, is that he thinketh, Salomonem a Deo reprobatum fuisse, that Salomon was reprobate of God: though (he saith) he is not ignorant, that the Iewes and Hierome also are of a contrarie opinion, yet he rather followeth Augustines iudgement herein, who should so write (as he saith) in Psal. 126. that Salomon was reiect of God. Other arguments beside the credit of Augustines name, he vseth none, Bellarmino verb. dei lib. 1. cap. 5.

Ans. I thinke the Iesuite doth greatly mistake and misconster Augustine in the place alleaged: he speaketh there indeede of the fall of Salomon, not of his finall reprobation: Quid mirum (saith he) si in populo Dei cecidit Salomon? in paradiso non cecidit Adam? What marueile is it if Salomon fell among the people, or in the Church of God? did not Adam fall in paradise? If Salomon were no more reprobate then Adam was, nor his fall more dangerous then his, Salomon was no cast-away at all. Augustine addeth further: Iste Salomon adificauit templum domui; in typo figurat ecclesiam, & corpus Christi: This Salomon built the temple of the Lord, to bee a type of the Church, and bodie of Christ to come: ibid. in Psal. 126. Hence then a reason may be framed thus: you cannot shew me in all the Scripture, that a reprobate was euer appointed of God to be a figure of Christ or his Church: But Salomon was a figure of Christ, as it is euident throughout the whole 45. Psal. and the temple he built, as a figure of Christs bodie, Ioh. 2. Ergo.

Againe, saith Bellarmino, the Scripture maketh no mention of the repentance of Salomon, and therefore it is like he repented not.

Ans. 1. Though in matters of faith, and points of doctrine an argument may bee taken negatively from the Scripture, yet not so in matters of fact: it is a good consequent, this doctrine is not found in Scripture, and therefore ought not to be receiued: yet it followeth not, this or that thing is not mentioned to haue been done in the storie of Scripture, therefore it was not done: for Christ did many workes and miracles which are not remembered in the Gospell: doth he follow therefore, that he did no more, because no more are spoken of in the Gospell? 2. I may then frame you the same answer, which your Master of Sentences maketh to that place of Ambrose, who speaking of S. Peters repentance, saith, Lachrymas vna loco, satisfactio vna loco: Tendre of his teares, not of his satisfaction. Your Master thus answereth: Multa facta sunt; quia scripta non sunt: Many things haue been done, that are not written: Though the Masters answer be not sufficient here, because satisfaction is with them an essentiall point of penance, and pertained to doctrine: yet may it very well serue our turne in a matter of fact as touching Salomon's repentance. 3. And yet wee doe affirme, that this act of Salomon's conversion and repentance, is not altogether without euidence of Scripture, as now followeth to be shewed.

Mag. lib. 4. d. 17. l.

That Salomon was not reiect or reprobate of God, but chosen rather and elected, thus by Scripture we make it plaine.

Argum. 1. I vrge those places of Scripture, 1. Sam. 13. 24. it is said, that God loued Salomon, and thereupon the Prophet called him Solomon, beloued of God: but whom God loueth, he loueth to the end. Againe, 2. Sam. 7. 14. there the Prophet thus speaketh in the name of the Lord concerning Salomon: *I will be his father, and he shall be my sonne: if he sinne, I will chasten him, &c. but my mercie shall not depart away from him, as I tooke it from Saul, because I haue chosen him: &c.*

son is gathered thus: Salomon was not cast away as Saul was, Saul was cast away for ever. Ergo, so was not Salomon.

Argum. 2. Reade 2. Chron. 11. vers. 17. Reboboam (saith the text) for three yeeres walked in the way of David and Salomon, that is, in the true worship of God: David's way and Salomon's way, are here ioyned together, and taken for all one: but David dyed the seruant of God: Ergo, also Salomon. Neither can any man here say, that Salomon's way is here iudged by the beginning, not by the end: for God measureth the righteousnes of men by the end, not by the beginning: he iudgeth them as he findeth them, he regardeth not what they haue been, Ezech. 18. 24.

Argum. 3. Though these places of Scripture are euident enough to conuince the matter in hand, yet we will vnto these adioyne this reason: Can any man shew me, when, and where, God vied a reprobate as his instrument, and pen-man to write Scripture, or as a type and figure of Christ? but Salomon was both a writer and register of Scripture, and a most lively type of Christ: Ergo, he was no reprobate. The proposition of this argument is apparantly grounded vpon Scripture; as Rom. 8. 14. As many as are led by the spirit of God, are the sonnes of God: but the Prophets which were the writers and pen-men of Scripture, spake as they were moued by the holy Ghost, 2. Pet. 1. 21. and so were led by the spirit: Ergo, they were the sonnes of God, and so not reprobates. Now wherein Salomon was a type of Christ, is thus declared by Origen in his prologue vpon the Canticles: In plurimis Salomonem Christi typum ferre, &c. That Salomon in many things did beare the type of Christ is not to be doubted: first, in that he is called peaceable: secondly, in that the Queene of the South came vnto him from the ends of the earth: and Christ is the true Ecclesiastes, or Preacher, who took vpon him the forme of a seruant, that he might congregare and gather together his Church: A congregando enim ecclesiam ecclesiastes dicitur: For he is named of the Church of gathering y Church together. And thus it appeareth how Salomon was a type of Christ.

Again, our Saviour Christ saith, Where I am, there also shall my ministers be, Ioh. 12. 26. but the writers of Scripture were in this especiall seruice the principall ministers of Christ: Ergo, they rest with Christ and are not cast awaies. But sufficient of this by matter, let vs now proceede.

OF THE APOCRYPHAL BOOKES of Scripture.

The Papists.

There are certaine bookes annexed to the old Testament, which the Papists themselues doe not acknowledge for canonicall, as the Prayer of Manasses, the two bookes of Esdras, commonly called the third and fourth of Esdras: also other which are not vially in our English Bibles, as an appendix to the booke of Iob: the 15. 1. Psalm, a Preface to the lamentations of Ieremie, the third and fourth booke of the Machabees, a booke called the Pastor. None of all these bookes are found in the Hebrue: one of them onely is translated out of the Syriake, namely, the appendix to Iob: some of them are extant in Latin onely, as the Prayer of Manasses, the third and fourth of Esdras, the rest are in Greeke. Of all the other, the bookes of Esdras are worthie of least credit, being stuffed full of vaine fables, fitter to feed curious eares, then tending to edification: as cap. 4. 6. Iob. 4. there is a tale put in of two great fishes, Hemoch, and Lemashan, which no waters could hold: chap. 4. 41. he saith, that the soules are kept in the womb of the earth: in the 14. chapter he reporteth how the bookes of Scripture being lost in the captiuitie, were restored by Esdras, and how after he had drunke off a cup of water, but as fire in colour, giuen him by the Angell, he spake fortie daies together and ceased not: in which space fise Scribes wrote from his mouth 204. bookes: these and such like tales that booke is full of. All these aforesaid bookes are as well by our aduersaries, as our selues reiected: so that they themselues dare not allow all that is extant in their Latin vulgar translation.

Other bookes also there were some annexed to the old Testament, some to the new, which were deused by Heretikes, but now are not extant, whereof there is no question betweene vs: as another booke of Genesis, called paraphrasys, Genesis the lesse, whereof Hierome maketh mention, tom. 4. de 43. manifestis. Likewise the booke of Hemoch, which, as Augustine saith, ob nimiam antiquitatem reijcitur, is reiected because it is too old: Iob. 18. de ciuitat. dei. cap. 38.

Gelasius also in his Decretall, reciteth certaine Apocryphal bookes of the old Testament: as one of the daughters of Adam, another of Ogias, a giant, that should fight with the Dragon after the flood: a booke also called the repentance of Iannes and Mambres: Decret. p. 1. d. 13. c. 3.

These bookes also were forged in the new Testament: as the gospell of the twelve Apostles, the gospell of Thomas, another gospell of Matthias: mentioned by S. Ambrose, proem. in Luc. S. Hierome also, Catalog. scriptor. maketh mention of these bookes: the acts of Peter, the gospell of Peter, the preaching of Peter, the revelation of Paul: a gospell to the Hebræwes: an epistle of Barnabas: the peregrinations of Paul and Typha.

Gelasius

Gelasius in his Decretall reckoneth vp a great number of such like forgeries: as the Iourneyes of Peter, the acts of Andrew, the acts of Philip, the acts of Peter, the acts of Thomas: also the gospell of Thaddaeus, the gospell of Thomas, the gospell of Barnabas, the gospell of S. Andrew: likewise certaine forged reuelations, as of Paul, of Thomas, of Stephen: with many such other, as may bee seene in that place, as it is alleaged by Gratian, Decret. p. 1. d. 15. cap. 3. But of these and such like there is no controuersie betweene vs.

The question betweene vs then is concerning these bookes: first, certaine peeces ioyned to canonically bookes, as seuen chapters of Esdras, certaine stories annexed to Daniel, as of Bel and the Dragon, of Susanna, the Song of the three children: also the Epistle of Barnabas ioyned to Ieremie. Then follow certaine whole bookes, as Tobie, Iudith, the Wisdome of Salomon, Ecclesiasticus, two bookes of the Machabees: these fixe bookes, with the other three appendices or peeces of bookes the Papists hold to be canonically, and of as firme authoritie as any part of the Scripture. Arguments they haue none, beside certaine testimonies of some Fathers and Councels, which we purpose not to deale withall, leauing them to our learned cuntry men who haue taken in hand to discusse these controuersies to the full, Bellarm. de verb. dei lib. 1. cap. 4. &c. philosoph. de 3. 1. 9.

The Protestants.

WE are agreed concerning the new Testament, that all the bookes thereof as they stand are to be receiued of all for Scripture: for as for those forged gospels of Thomas, S. Andrew, of Nicodemus, and the like, though the Church were troubled with them in times past, yet their memorie being now worne out, there is no question of them. Concerning the bookes on both sides acknowledged, if some one man seeme to doubt of some one part, as Luther is thought to doe of the Epistle of James and Iude, it ought no more to preiudice vs, then Cicero's opinion doth hurt them, who called more bookes in question then Luther did, as the Epistle of James, of Iude, the second of Peter, the second and third of Iohn, the last chapter of Marke.

We differ not then in the new Testament, vnlesse it be concerning the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, which our aduersaries stoutly affirme to bee S. Paul, which wee denie not, neither certainly can affirme it, seeing in some Greeke copies it is left out, and in the Syriack translation: some would proue S. Paul to be the author of this Epistle, by that place 2. Pet. 3. 15. where the Apostle maketh mention of S. Paul's Epistles, which according to the wisdom given vnto him he wrote to you: that is, the Hebrewes, for vnto them S. Peter writeth both the first, 1. epist. 1. 1. and the second Epistle, 2. Epist. 3. vers. 1. I finde also that many excellent godly learned men of ancient time, as Hierome, Augustine, Ambrose, and before them Origen, bas. 8. in Genes. with others, haue taken S. Paul for the author of this Epistle. And among the late famous witnesses of Gods truth, and holy Martyrs (to whose iudgement I attribute as much, if not more, as to any mans beside) that blessed man Matter Philpas, doth cite S. Paul to the Hebrewes, in a certaine epistle of his written to the Christian congregation, For. p. 1832. and againe in another epistle to certaine godly brethren, pag. 1385. col. 2. But it mattereth not who was the author, seeing wee receiue it as canonically: for the title is no part of the booke, and so neither of Scripture: and we receiue many bookes in the old Testament, the authors whereof are not perfectly knowne. And of this matter, thus further writeth S. Hierome: Catalog. scriptor. Epistola, qua fertur ad Hebraeos, &c. The epistle to the Hebrewes is not thought to be Paul's, because of the difference of the phrase and stile: but either the epistle of Barnabas according to Tertullian, or of Luke or Clement: or surely, because Paul wrote to the Hebrewes, he cut off the title of his name, because it was enuied amongst them: he writeth as an Hebrew to the Hebrewes, that is in his owne tongue most eloquently. Thus Hierome reporteth many opinions, setting downe nothing certainly himselfe.

But here by the way, if I might be so bold, I would spurre a question to our Romane Diuines, that whereas it was decreed (as they would beare vs in hand) by the Apostles, can. Apostol. 84. that the two epistles of Clement, and his precepts or constitutions contained in eight bookes, should be counted amongst the canonically bookes of the new Testament: for these are the words of the canon, Sicut omnibus vobis Clericis & laicis sacri & venerandi libri, &c. Let these be accounted of all both Clerkes and lay men, as holy and reuerend bookes: and then are reckoned vp the bookes of the old Testament, and afterward of the new, amongst the which, the foresaid workes of Clement are numbered: If those bee the right canons of the Apostles, as wee are made to beleue they are, how dare our aduersaries doe contrarie to this decree? wee will giue them leaue to pause a while of this matter, and in the meane time proceede.

So then all the question betweene vs, is about the Apocrypha of the olde Testament: they are called Apocrypha, because they are hid and obscure, not because their authors are vnknowne: for as I said, we knowe not by whom certaine Canonically bookes were written. Neither are they so called because of some vntruthes contained in them contrarie to Scripture, as the most of them haue, as we heard before out of S. Hierome: Multa hinc admixta vitiosa: That there are many false things mixed in these bookes: for it followeth not, that euery booke which hath no vntruth or tam.

lye, should straightwaies be taken for Scripture: but they are therefore iudged and called Apocrypha, because they were not in former time receiued into publike and authentick authoritie in the Church, neither to be alleaged as grounds of our faith, though they may be read for example of life, and may haue other profitable vse, as S. Hierome well saith, Legas ad edificacionem plebis, non ad auctoritatem Ecclesiasticorum dogmatum confirmandam: The Church readeth them for the edifying of the people, not the confirmation of doctrine: Præfat. in Proverb. And S. Augustine sheweth why they are so called, Quia nulla testificationis luce declarati, de nescio quo secreto, nescio quomodo præsumptimè prolati sunt: Because they were published with no light of authoritie, but hatched in secret by some mens, I know not whose presumption. But the Canonickall Scripture only hath this priuiledge to giue rules of faith, and thereupon it hath the name, that we may be bold to beleue and ground our faith vpon the Canonickall and holy Scripture, which is the onely word of God. Wherefore out of this number of Canonickall Scripture we exclude all the bookes afore named, and therefore let not the reader be deceiued, that although they be ioyned in one volume with the Scripture, to thinke that they are for that, of the same authoritie and credite with the rest: first we will shew our reasons in generall, and afterward come to the particular bookes in order.

1 All Canonickall Scripture in the olde Testament was written by Prophets: We haue a sure word of the Prophets, saith S. Peter, 2. 1. 19. and S. Paul, Rom. 16. 26. calleth them the Scriptures of the Prophets: and S. Augustine saith, Quas itaque scripturas dicimus, nisi canonicas, legis & prophetarum de unitat. eccl. cap. 16. We acknowledge no Canonickall Scriptures of the old and new Testament, but the law and the Prophets: But none of those bookes aforenamed, of Tobias, Iudith and the rest, were written by the Prophets: for they were all written since Malachies time, who was the last Prophet, as the Church complaineth, Psalm. 74. 9. There is not one Prophet, nor any that can tell vs how long: Ergo none of these bookes are Canonickall.

lio prodigo.

2 All the Canonickall bookes of the olde Testament, were acknowledged of the Iewes and Hebrues, for they were then onely the Church of God, and where should Scripture be found but in the Church? To them, saith S. Paul, were committed the oracles of God, Rom. 3. 2. But the Iewes receiued none of these bookes into the Canon of the Scripture. For most of them were written in the Greeke, but none of them in the Hebrue tongue. And this some of the Papiests cannot deny. Ergo they are not Canonickall. Here also S. Augustine thus writeth, Omnes literæ, quibus Christus prophetatus est, apud Indæos sunt: All the bookes which prophesied of Christ, are kept amongst the Iewes, in Psalm. 56. and S. Hierome vpon those words of the Parable, All mine are thine, Luke 15. thus writeth to the same purpose, Omnia intelligamus legem prophetas, eloquia diuinâ: By all we vnderstand, the law and Prophets, and the diuine sayings: the Iewes then had all the Scriptures, but they had none of these Apocrypha, therefore they are no part of Scripture.

Canna a Papiist answereth, Non reiectos fuisse hos libros à Indæis, sed non receptos, that these bookes were not reiected of the Iewes, but onely not receiued, lib. 1. Annot. Ans. 1. This is but a quaint distinction, for that thing, which a man knoweth, and yet receiue not, nor alloweth, what doth he else, but reiect it? As our Sauour Christ saith, He that is not with me, is against me: and he that gathereth not, scattereth abroad, Luke 11. 23. The Iewes therefore in that they receiued not, nor acknowledged those bookes, refused and reiected them. Secondly, how could they otherwise chuse but reiect those bookes, and sunder them from the rest of the Scripture, which were written in a strange tongue, and not in Hebrue, wherein the rest of holy Scripture was written? And what opinion the Iewes haue of these bookes, S. Hierome further witnesseth thus: Arguunt nos Hebræorum studia, & imputant nobis contra suum canonem latinis auribus ista transserrere: The studious Hebrues finde fault with vs, and blame vs for translating into latine, bookes contrarie to their canon: præfat. in Tobiam. The Iewes then did not onely not receiue these Apocryphall bookes, but reiected them also: and of this iudgement is Arias Montanus one of their owne Church, that no bookes of the old Testament not extant in the originall Hebrue, are Canonickall.

3 There is no Scripture of the old Testament, but it hath approbation of the new: for as the Prophets beare witness to Christ, so he againe doth witness for the Prophets, and therefore it is a true proposition of Caietane, though he be controuled and checked of Catharinus another Papiist for it, that there is no Scripture, which was not either written or approoued by the Apostles: but in the whole new Testament you shall not finde one testimonie cited either in the Gospell or the Epistles out of any of the Apocrypha, as out of other bookes of Scripture: therefore hauing no approbation of the new Testament, we conclude, they are none of the olde.

Bellarmino answereth, that the Apostles haue declared those books to be Canonickall, lib. 1. de verbis, cap. 10. Answer. 1. Catharinus herein is contrarie to Bellarmino. For he saith, that the Church hath receiued certaine bookes for Canonickall, Quos nec scriptos ab Apostolis, nec approbatos fuisse uisitat: Which it is certaine, were neither written, nor approoued by the Apostles, lib. 1. Annot. Secondly, they are neuer able to shew, when and where the Apostles declared these bookes to be Canonickall, for as much as they are not cited, neither in the Gospells, nor Epistles, written by the Apostles, Apostles, which onely are their authentick writings. And therefore we againe conclude, that because the new Testament doth not giue any witness to any of these bookes, as it doth to the law and the Prophets, Quibus Christus (as Augustine saith) perhibet testimonium, ut testibus suis: Vnto the which Christ giueth testimonie, as his witnesses, lib. 2. contra. Gaud. cap. 23. Therefore they are no part of the old Testament: As Hierome then saith of the interpretation of Scripture, Sic illa vera interpretatio quam Apostoli probauerunt: That is the true interpretation which the Apostles haue approued; so those are the very authentick Scriptures, which haue the testimonie and approbation of the Apostles. Præfat. in E. uangel.

4 It shall appeare in the seuerall discourse of the particular bookes, that there is somewhat euen in the bookes themselues to be found, that barreth them from being Canonickall.

OF THE BOOKE OF BARUCH.

The Papists.

This is their best reason for the authoritie of this hooke, because Baruch was Jeremie's scribe: and therefore Baruch cannot be refused, vlesse also we doubt of Jeremie's Bellarmin. lib. 1. de uerbo Dei. cap. 8.

The Protestants.

This booke was neither written by Jeremie nor Baruch: first, because it is in Greeke: if either Jeremie or Baruch had written it, it is most like they would haue written in Hebrue. Secondly, the phrase and manner of speech sheweth, that it was neuer written in Hebrue: for in the 6. Chapter in the Epistle of Jeremie, vers. 2. it is said that the Israelites should be in captiuitie seuen generations, that is 70. yeares, but it cannot be found in any Hebrue booke that a generation is taken for the space of 10. yeares.

I will adde vnto this a matter of experience concerning this booke: One Ed. Allen a constant Martyr, reading this place in the 6. of Baruch, Wherefore when you see the multitude of people worshipping them (he meaneth the Idols) behinde and before, say in your hearts, it is I than, O Lord, that ought onely to be worshipped. By this place, the said Martyr saith, he was seduced to heare Masse, and therefore his conscience gaue him, that it was no Scripture. Fax. pag. 1980. col. 1. Concerning this booke also S. Hierome writeth thus: Præfat. in Jerem. librum Baruch Notarij eius, qui apud Hebræos nec habetur, nec legitur prætermisimus: I haue pretermitted the booke of Baruch Jeremie's scribe, which the Hebrues neither haue nor reade: But if it had been one of the Canonickall bookes, Hierome would not haue passed it ouer.

We want not also the testimonie of our aduersaries: for Iohannes Driado, a writer of their own, refuseth this booke to be Canonickall. lib. 1. de scriptur. & dogmatib. ecclesiastic. cap. vltimo.

OF THE SEVEN APOCRYPHAL Chapters of Esther.

The Papists.

One of their chiefe Arguments, besides testimonies and authorities, which would make too great a Volume, is this (which is common also to the rest of the Apocrypha) they are read in the Church, and haue been of ancient time. Ergo they are Canonickall. I answer, that it is no good argument. Hierome saith plainly, Legit Ecclesia, sed non inter Scripturas Canonicas non recipit. Præfat. in lib. Solomon. The Church indeede (saith he) readeth them, yet for all that they are not Canonickall. And Augustine was wont to reade vnto the people the Epistles of the Donatists, and his answers vnto them, Epist. 203.

The Protestants.

The most of our reasons against the authoritie of the 7. Chapters added to Esther (for of the 10. first Chapters, which are found in the Hebrue, we make no doubt at all) are drawne from the matter of the booke it selfe.

1 In the second of the Canonickall Esther, vers. 16. it is said that the conspiracie of the two Eunuces against the King, was in the seuenth yeare of Ahasuerus: but in the 11. Chap. vers. 2. of the Apocryphall Esther, we reade that Mardocheus did dreame of this conspiracie in the second yeare: Bellarmin answereth, that both are true; for the dreame was in the second yere, and the conspiracie in the seuenth; so belike, there was five yeres betweene. But in the 11. Chapter, it is said that Mardocheus was much troubled about that dreame, and the next night after his dreame the conspiracie was enterprised.

2 The true historie of Esther saith, that Mardocheus had no reward at that time of the king, chap. 6. 3. but the forged storie saith, chap. 12. that at the same time the King gaue him great gifts, which cannot be meant of that great honor, as Bellarmin coniectureth, which afterward was bestowed vpon Mardoche: for then Haman (being hanged the same day that Mardoche was aduanced ced to honor, Esther. 6. 7. ) could worke him no despite, whereas the forged storie saith, that after the King had rewarded him, then Haman began to stomach him, because of those two Eunuchs.

3 Againe, the storie which is added, was written many yeeres after Mardocheus and Esther's death, vnder the raigne of Ptolemaeus and Cleopatra, as it appeareth chap. 11. 1. It is not like therefore to be a true storie. Bellarmines ridiculous coniecture is this, that there were two stories written in Hebrue of Esther, the one compendious and short, which wee now haue: the other more large, which might bee translated by Lysimachus there spoken of, chap. 11. whose translation we now only haue, the originall being perished. And it might be, saith he, that these 7. chapters were sometimes written in Hebrue, sed casu aliquo perdidisse, by some mischance were lost. Answe. First, the text saith not that Lysimachus translated any such Hebrue storie, but onely the epistle of Phurim. Secondly, this cannot bee that ample and large storie imagined, being shorter, and not so full as the canonicall Esther. Thirdly, it is not like that these chapters, or this other storie, which he imagineth, was euer written in Hebrue: for they were more like to bee kept in the Hebrue tongue, then in the Greeke: for so much as there was neuer any people more carefull in keeping any thing, then the Iewes were of their Hebrue Scriptures. These therefore are but bare, and light coniectures to make canonicall Scripture.

4 Besides, the false storie saith, that Haman was a Macedonian, chap. 16. vers. 10. the true storie saith, he was an Agagite or Amalekite, chap. 8. 3. how can these two agree? Nay, the forged booke saith, that Haman would haue destroyed the King, and so conueied the kingdome of the Persians to the Macedonians: which could in no wise be: for the kingdome of the Macedonians was not yet spoken of: and so it continued in small or no reputation till Philippus the father of Alexander, who was very neere 150. yeeres after, by Bellarmines owne confession.

Bellarmines to salue vp this matter, and to bring Mardoche neerer to the end of the Persian Monarch, when as the kingdome of the Macedonians began to flourish, maketh him to be not so little as 170. yeere old, as old as Abraham; an age not incident into those daies, whereas in Moses time the age of mans life is abridged to 70. or 80. yeeres, Psal 90. or els, saith he, whereas Mardoche is said to haue been brought with King Ioachim into captiuitie, it was not, because hee was then borne, but was in his fathers loynes. Who seeth not what sillie shifts these are?

5 Other contradictions there are betweene those two stories of Esther: the false storie saith, that when Esther came in to the King, that he looked fiercely vpon her, in so much, that she fell downe as dead, chap. 15. 10. but the true storie witnesseth, that at the first the King held vp his scepter to the Queene in token of fauour, and well accepted of her comming. The false storie, that Haman went about to hurt Mardoche, because of the two Eunuchs, whose conspiracie he had reuealed, chap. 12. 6. But the true storie saith, that he began to stomach Mardoche, because he would not bow the knee to him, nor doe him reuerence, Esth. 3. 2. Vide plura apud Whitak. quæst. 1. cap. 28. de Scriptur. S. Hierome with the rest of the Apocrypha, which are not extant in the Hebrue, excludeth these chapters of Esther out of the canonicall Scripture, tom. 4. Paulino: and in his preface to the bookes of the Kings. Neither doe we here want the testimonie of our aduersaries, for both Nicholauus Lyranus, and Dionysius Carthusianus in their commentaries vpon this booke, and Sixtus Senensis, lib. 1. & 8. bibliothecæ. doe refuse this appendix of Esther, as not being canonicall.

OF CERTAINE CHAPTERS

annexed to Daniel.

THEre are three parcels ioyned to Daniel, the Song of the three children, the storie of Susanna, of Bel and the Dragon, in the vulgar Latin, which are not any part of canonicall Scripture.

1 They are neither extant in Hebrue at this day, nor are like to haue been translated out of Hebrue into Greeke: but compiled first in Greeke, and therefore not written by Daniel: for vers. 54. 58. of the storie of Susanna, where one of the Elders saith, he saw her vnder a Lentiske tree, the other vnder a Prune tree: he vseth a certaine paronomasie or allusion vnto the Greeke words: which cannot stand in the Hebrue, as of the tree ῥοῖον, he saith the Angell of the Lord ῥοῖον, shall cut you in two: and so of the tree ῥοῖον shall deuide thee in two. As if a man should thus allude in English: thou wast vnder the Prune tree: the Lord shall prune thee. This allusion is not in the Hebrue, as the learned haue very well obserued, but onely in the Greeke. This exception was taken long agoe against this booke by Iulius Africanus, who liued vnder M. Aurelius Antoninus, and hereof did write an epistle to Origene, from whom Bellarmines borroweth his answer which here followeth: Hierom. catalog. scriptor. Who also reporteth of a certaine learned Iew, that because of this allusion doubted not to say, that this booke was compiled by some Greeke: for the allusion (saith he) is in Greeke, as if a man should say in Latin, De illic arboris illicis perem & a lentisco, non lentis perem: and as if in English a man should thus say, thou wast vnder a firre tree, the Lord shall fire thee, or vnder a pare tree, he shall pare thee.

Daniel.

Bellarmines

Bellarmine answereth, that Daniel neither named the Lentiske tree, nor the Prime tree, but some other, that might haue an allusion to cutting, as the names in Greeke haue: and that the Greeke translator kept not the word, but the sense. Bellarmino, cap. 9. Ans. First, the Iesuite, that is so full of his coniectures, should likewise haue gessed, what trees they were, and how they are called in Hebrue, that Daniel named: so should his coniecture haue seemed more probable. Secondly, if his imagined Hebrue should name one tree, the interpreter should set downe another, to keepe the allusion still, one of them must needs tell an vntruth, and so both of them could not be Scripture, which faileth not in the least truth.

The particular time is not knowne when this storie should bee done: yet it is certaine, it was in the captiuitie; for Susanna dwelt in Babylon: but Daniel could not then bee so young a childe as the storie maketh, for he was carried away in the first captiuitie with Iehoiakim, as it is Dan. 1. And Ezechiel, that liued about that time, doth speake of the great prudence and sage wisdom of Daniel, Ezech. 28. 3. and ioyneth him with Noah and Iob, chap. 14. All this proueth that Daniel could not bee so very a babe in the beginning of the captiuitie, as the storie maketh him.

Bellarmino answereth, that Ezechiel maketh mention of Daniel, vluentis aetate puerilli, being but a childe: being euen then famous amongst the people for the deliuering of Susanna, and for his interpretations of dreames. Answer. But the contrarie is easily proued, that Daniel was no childe, when Ezechiel gave this testimonie of him. 1. He is ioyned with Noah and Iob, and the text saith, They shall seme neither sonnes nor daughters: which could not bee true of Daniel, being himselfe but a childe. And though, as the Iesuite saith, it be but a supposition, that if these three were among them, yet yet would not the Prophet suppose a thing impossible, as if a childe might haue both sonnes and daughters. 2. Againe, the word which the Prophet vseth, saying (if these three men, &c.) uim, is neuer given to any childe in Scripture, but is alwaies spoken of the elder sort: as 1. Sam. 17. 12. Ishai senex uenient inter homines: Ishai was counted old among men, Likewise, Esay. 32. 9. Risite ye uenientes uel matres, et uelate ye daughters: the word is uim uim, which is the plurall number of uim the first letter radicall taken away. Wherefore it appeareth by the vse and acceptation of this word, that Daniel, who is by the Prophet counted among the elder men, could at that time be no childe.

In the storie of Daniel it is said that he was fixe daies in the Lions denne: but the true storie saith, he was there but one night, chap. 6. The Iesuit answereth, he was twice in the Lions denne, or rather he thinketh there were two Danields, the one of the tribe of Juda, which was that great Prophet: the other of Leui, which was the principall in those two stories of Susanna, and of Bel and the Dragon. But this is a poore shift, to inuent another Daniel, whom the Scripture neuer knew: and if it were so, why are all their acts ioyned together, as if one Daniel had done and writ them all?

Other exceptions were taken in times past, as S. Hierome reporteth, by a certaine learned Iew spoken of before, against these forged pieces of Daniel: as against the Song of the three children: Tantum uisum irib. illis pueris &c. Had the three children such leisure, in the midst of the furnace to make verses, and to stirre vp all creatures to the praise of God? And as for the storie of Bel, what great miracle was it to finde out the deceit of the priests, or to kill the Dragon, with gobbets of pitch, which were done rather by a cunning wit, then a propheticall spirit? And concerning the taking vp of Habbaeucke, saith he, where can the like example be shewed in al the old Testament, that any of the Saints was carried in his bodie, and did lie in the ayre: whereas Ezechiel (saith he) was transported in spiris; and Paul dare not affirme, that he was rapt vp in his bodie? Thus then that Iew opposed, as Hierome hath the storie, prafat. in Danielem.

Vpon these and such like reasons, S. Hierome doubteth not to call the storie of Bel and the Dragon fables: prafat. in Daniel, and so doth S. August. de mirabilib. lib. 2. cap. 32. Bellarmino answereth, that by fables, Hierome vnderstandeth, histories, cap. 9. which is a very simple answer, and untrue: for Hierome in the same place further thus writeth: Quia fabulas, &c. nos uerum anteposito, easq. ingulantes subicimus: Which fables, because they are so well knowne, wee haue added, that is translated, but marked them with a dash stroke or crosse line to cut the throat of them: for Hierome vsed this marke in his translation, thereby signifying what he would haue put out. If Hierome calling them fables, should meane stories, why did he thus write? And Augustine in the place alleaged giueth a reason, why he will not collect any wonders, or miracles out of these bookes, because he counteth them fables: if he had vnderstood stories, he would not haue pretermitted them.

But what opinion S. Hierome had of these fabulous stories, it is cleere by Rossinus inuectiue, who blameth him, for that he cut off from the Scriptures, the storie of Susanna, an example of great chastitie, and the Song of the three children. And Rossinus in the same place, rather being stirred in choler, than speaking of iudgement, thus argueth the case with Hierome: First, saith he, it it is not to bee doubted but that Peter sitting 24. yeeres at Rome, did deliuer vnto the Church all the bookes of Scripture, and these among the rest: but it is not like he would commend vnto them false bookes: Secondly, the Apostle biddeth vs to take heede of Iewish fables, and must we now be sent to the Iewes to learne, which are the Scriptures? Thirdly, thus the holy martyrs are held to haue been in error, which did vse to sing in the Church, the Song of the three children.

These and such like arguments Ruffinus vseth in his inuectiues against Hierome: to the which Hieromes answer may be thus gathered, though I finde not in any one place these arguments by him confuted.

Apolog. 2. in Ruffinum.

To the first: it is denied, that Peter, of whose sitting at Rome so many yeeres it may be doubted, did not commend any of the Apocryphall bookes to the Church, as parcell of the Scripture: for Hierome thus writeth, Apostolici viri scripturis vtiuntur Hebraicis, &c. The Apostolike men vse none but the Hebrue Scriptures. It is manifest, that thus did the Apostles and Euangelists: but the Apocrypha are not in the Hebrue.

To the second: the same Apostle, which biddeth vs take heede of Iewish fables, yet referreth vs vnto them, for the diuine oracles: Rom. 3. 2. yea, and Origene, as Hierome saith, whom Ruffinus did so extoll, did conferre with the Iewes for the vnderstanding of the Hebrue Scriptures, as he confesseth, that he learned of one Huillan a Iew what is vnderstood by Ariel, in the 29. of Esay. v. 1.

& Oceano.

To the third: it followeth not, though they bee read in the Church, that therefore they are Scripture: the Church readeth them for the edifying of the people, as Hierome saith, not for the confirmation of doctrine. And as touching the martyrs, they might haue their errors, as their finnes: neither ought wee to embrace the errors of martyrs: Defendamus ergo peccata (saith Hierome) quia, qui postea martyres, prius peccatores fuerunt: We might as well maintaine their finnes, because they, which afterward became martyrs, first were sinners. Thus wee see how Ruffinus challenged S. Hierome for leauing out of the Apocrypha, and how S. Hierome defendeth himselfe: and yet it may seeme strange, that Ruffinus should blame Hierome for this, whereas, he himselfe in the Creede which goeth vnder his name, which is to bee found both amongst Cyprian, and Hieromes workes, doth exclude, the bookes of Tobie, Iudith, Maccabees, Ecclesiasticus, the Wisedome of Salomon, out of the number of the sacred Scriptures. But thus much of this controuersie betweene these two ancient writers.

Lastly, wee haue here the testimonie of our aduersaries, for Ioannes Driedo, a popish writer, refuseth these pieces annexed to Daniel, as being no part of the Scripture: lib. 1. de scriptur. & dogmatib. ecclesiasticis. cap. ultimo.

OF THE BOOKE OF TOBIE.

1 THis booke is not found in the Hebrue, in the which tongue all the oracles of God were kept. Ergo, it is worthily doubted of.

2 Our aduersaries themselues confesse, that in Hieromes time it was not receiued for canonicall. The Iesuite answereth: that it might be doubted of before it was determined in a generall Councell: to whom (saith he) it appertaineth to define of canonicall Scripture: As though this were not a greater doubt, whether a Councell hath any such authoritie to determine which books ought to be receiued for canonicall, for Camus a Papist maketh a question of it, lib. 2. cap. 8. And the Iesuite himselfe saith that the Church cannot, Facere canonicum de non canonico, make a booke not canonicall to be canonicall, but onely to declare those to be canonicall, which are so indeed. Wherefore the Papists take too much vpon them, to make this booke within the Canon, being of it selfe not canonicall, and so adiudged by antiquitie.

3 There is some contradiction in the storie, as it is translated in the vulgar Latin, for chap. 3. vers. 7. the text saith, that Sara dwelt in Rages, a citie in Media: but chap. 7. 1. she is said to dwell in Ecbatane: and from thence Tobie sendeth the Angell to Rages, to receiue the money of Gabriel.

Bellarmino answereth, that there might bee two cities of the same name (Rages) one where Sara dwelt with Raguel, another where Gabriel dwelt: or she might bee said to dwell in Rages, because she dwelt neere vnto it, Bellarmino. cap. 11.

Answer. First, who seeth not what beggerly shifts these are: as before the Iesuite found out two Daniels, so here he hath found vs out two cities: but none of these shifts can serue his turne: for whether he say, that Sara dwelt in his new found citie, or neere vnto Rages, both are false, if that bee true in the 7. chapter, that she dwelt in Ecbatane. Secondly, all this busines the Iesuit is put to, because he will not confesse an error in the Latin translation, which in stead of Ecbatane, readeth Rages, chap. 3. 7. as by examining of the Greeke text may easily appeare: And thus Micheael Medina dissolueth this doubt, whose iudgement though Bellarmino mislike, yet in the end he must bee faine to agree to him: or else those places will neuer bee reconciled. This obiection, though though it maketh nothing against the credit of this storie, which was impugned by other arguments, yet it much shaketh the authority of their vulgar Latin. Good shew that the world shall find that the booke itselfe shall finde that both the stile and the matter is not such as becometh canonicall Scripture: as chap. 18. the euill spirit named Asmodeus, a word not found in the canonicall Scripture, see Trism vpon that place. Chap. 6. the Angel is made to say he was of Azarias stocke. 6. 1. in the vulgar Latin but not in the Greeke, Tobias his dogge followed him, a matter not befitting the gravity of Scripture. Chap. 12. 13. Raphael one of the seven Angels: see Trism vpon that place. Chap. 2. 3. the diuell driven away with the smell of a brayell liuer.

So to rebate this he had several other reasons. Præfat in Prouerbis.
S. Hierome of the booke of Tobias, thus writeth: Legit quidam ecclesiæ sed inter Canonicas scripturas non recipiunt. The Church readeth them, but receiveth them not into the number of Canonicall Scriptures.

OF THE BOOKE OF IUDITH

An especiall argument against this booke is, that the historie cannot bee assigned to any time.

It is pretie sport to see how the Papists doe mayle themselves about this point, and cannot agree amongst themselves. Some hold that this storie fell out after Isaiah time, in Cambyses time, as Lyrannus, and Dionysius in Darius Hystaspis raigne, as Gerardus Abbat: some would haue it before the captiuitie in Sedechias time, as Combrard: some in Isaiah time, as Iohannes. Wierich think the Iesuite confuteth them all, and bringeth the storie to Manassas raigne: but he hath also mist the cushion, and he lieth at it still.

It appeareth that this storie could not be after the captiuitie, for we read not of any Nabuchadnezzar afterwards, for the kingdome was translated from the Assyrians to the Persians and Medes. Againe, it could not bee before, either in Isaiah time, Sedechias, or Manassas: first, because in the 5. chapter vers. 18. it is said, that the Temple had been destroyed and cast downe, which could not be in any of those Kings raignes: It is but a shift of Bellarmine, to say those words were foysted into the text: it is rather to be thought, that the Iesuite is put to his trumps, not hauing else what to answer. Secondly, Judith being at this time in the flower of her age, and living afterward many yeeres till she was 100. yere old, all which time, and many yeeres after her death, the booke saith in the last chapter, the land had rest: this cannot agree with Manassas times, for within in 40. yeeres or not much about, the land fell into great trouble, straight after Isaiah death. Where then is this long time of rest? And the Iesuite that still groundeth upon impossibilities and vn-likelihoods, that Judith was at this time storie yeere old, which was (saith he) in the beginning of Manassas raigne, and so to die about seven yeeres before Isaiah: yet for all his scanning is driven to this shift, that the many yeeres peace after her death must be vnderstood of poore seven yeeres.
Thirdly, if all this happened in Manassas time, whom the King of Assur tooke and carried away prisoner, and had much troubled and afflicted the countie of Iudea: what neede had Holofernes to enquire so curiously of Aschior the Ammonite, of the countie, their citie, people, kings, and such like: seeing they had knowne the countie too well before in spoiling and wasting of it, as the Iewes by wooll experience had felt? And this is Bellarmine's owne shift also against their opinion that hold Judith to haue liued after the captiuitie: Argum. 8. because Holofernes needed not then to haue enquired of the people, and of the countie, seeing the Persians could be ignorant of none of these things, saith he, when as they had dismissed the Iewes thither a little before. But this reason holdeth stronger against Bellarmine, for what neede any such inquisition after this people, seeing the King of Assur had sent his host and Captaines thither before to fetch Manassas to Babylon?

S. Hierome saith, that this booke of Judith, as the other of Tobias, were not receiued of the Church into the Canon of the Scriptures: præfat in Prouerbis. And Augustine againe thus affirmeth out of
S. Hierome: Librum Judith Iudei in canonicis scripturarum non receperunt, & minus authenticis habent ad ea referenda, quæ in contentis scripturarum continentur. The Iewes are said, not to haue receiued the booke of Judith into the canon of the Scriptures, and it is of small authoritie to strengthen any doctrine, that commeth in question, de ciuitate dei 18. 26.

OF THE BOOKE OF WISEDOME

Our aduersaries reason thus: they say that S. Paul, Rom. 1. 3. 4. vsing this speech: Who hath knowne the Lords mind, or haue his counsellor? doth challenge it out of the 4. chap. of this booke, verse 13. Ergo it is Canonicall. We answer. First, the Apostle seemeth not in that place to cite any testimonie, though the words which he vseth may else where be found. Secondly, though the like words are read in the booke of Wisdome, yet it is not necessarie the Apostle should borrow them from thence, but rather they are alleaged out of the 40. of Esay 13: where the Prophet saith: Who hath instructed the spirit of God, or is his counsellor? And this also is the opinion of the Rhetorists, that S. Paul in that place vseth the Prophets words.

OVr reasons against the authoritie of this booke are these and such like. First, because this booke is not found in the Hebrue, but written onely in Greeke: wherefore it is not Canonically, seeing the Iewes had all the oracles of God.

Secondly, because a Iewe is thought by the Papists to be the author of this booke, who lived after Christ in the time of Caligula; neither himselfe was a Christian or believed in Christ: therefore an vnlike man to be a writer of Canonically Scripture. Bellarmino saith it was another Philo, who was more auncient. Indeede Iosephus maketh mention of a Philo before this time, but he was an Heathen and no Iew: But this booke was held to be Philonis Iudaei, Philo the Iewes, as S. Hierome witnesseth, praf. in Prov. and S. Aug. lib. 17. de ciuit. cap. 10.

Thirdly, if this booke were written by Salomon, why is it not extant in Hebrue? For Salomon wrote in Hebrue and not in Greeke. Many of the Papists also doe proue, that it was not written by Salomon: for though Salomon in the second chapter be brought in praying vnto God, that is no good argument to proue Salomon the author, for the author might speake in the person of Salomon. S. Hierome doubteth not at all this booke, Pseudepigraphum, falsely intituled: and against Vigiliantius: De Salomone sumit testimonium. quod Salomone non fuit: You bring a saying out of Salomon, which was none of Salomon. And S. Augustine, Propter nonnullam eloq. similitudinem, ut Salomonis dicatur, obtrinit consuetudo: Custome hath so preuailed, that it is called Salomon, for the likenes of stile and speech: de ciuit. lib. 17. cap. 10. If this booke then were none of Salomon, and yet beareth his name, it cannot be Canonically Scripture wherein there is no vntuth.

OF THE BOOKE CALLED Ecclesiasticus.

The Papists.

THEY haue none but common and generall arguments for the authoritie of this booke, as that it was of old read in the Church, and diuers of the fathers alleadged testimonies out of it. All this proueth not, as we haue shewed before, that it was Canonically, but that it was well esteemed and thought of, because of many holisome and good precepts which are contayned in it. And for further answer, we say, that it followeth not, because the Fathers doe quote Ecclesiasticus in their writings, that therefore it is Canonically. First, the Fathers alleage also the testimonies of the heathen Philosophers and Poets, and yet they are nothing lesse then Canonically. Secondly, Hierome saith: Legit Ecclesiasticus. The Church readeth them; but yet doth not take them for Canonically: as then the Church doth reade them, and yet maketh them no Scripture, so the Fathers in their writings may vse them. Thirdly, if it shall be said, that the Fathers doe cite this booke as Canonically: to this I answer, that therein, they may be deceived as Augustine was, who sometime alleageth Ecclesiasticus vnder the name of a Prophet, lib. cont. Pagan. 6. and calleth the booke Prophetically, lib. de Genes. 15. But this his opinion he retracteth: lib. 1. Retract. 10. Or else the Fathers doe alleage these booke not as Canonically, but as Hagiographa, that is, holy writings, such as were inferior to the Scriptures; but yet to be preferred before other mens writings: as Hierome saith the Hebrues did count the booke of Tobias and Iudith among the Hagiographa, and yet did cut them off from the Scriptures.

WE doe thus improve the authoritie of this booke.

First, The author in the Preface saith, that he translateth in this booke such things, as before were collected by his grandfather in Hebrue, and excuseth himselfe, because that things translated out of the Hebrue doe loose their grace, and haue not the same force: so when it appeareth that this booke cannot be canonically being imperfect: Neither was his grandfathers worke (which is now lost) to be thought any part of the Scripture, seeing he was no prophet himselfe, but a compiler and a collector of certayne things out of the prophets.

Secondly, He exhorteth his countrey men to take it in good worth, and so craueth pardon: but the spirit of God vseth not to make any such excuse, whose works are most perfect, and feare not the iudgement of men.

Thirdly, This booke saith, chap. 46. vers. 20. that Semuel prophesied after his death, and from the earth lift vp his voice. Whereas the canonically Scripture saith not that it was Semuel, but that Saul so imagined, and thought it to be Semuel, 1. Sam. 28: And Augustine thinketh it was, phenasma Semuelis, but a shew onely and representation of Semuel, and an illusion of the diuell, lib. ad

Dulcissimum, quæst. 6. For it is not to be thought, that the diuine can discease the foules of any thing much lesse of Saints departed. See more of this, controuers. 9. quæst. 1. part. 2. S. Augustine saith, that Ecclesiasticus is thought to be Salomon, as before he said of the other booke called the Wisdom of Salomon: Propter nonnullam eloquij similitudinem: For some likenes of the phrase; lib. 17. de ciuit. Dei. c. 20. S. Hierome: Hæc duo volumina legat ad adificationem plebis: These two bookes the Church may reade for edifying of the people, not any confirmation of doctrine: præfat. in Prouerb. In the 84. Canon of the Apostles, there are onely three bookes ascribed to Salomon, the Prouerbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Canticles: but as for this booke the Canon giueth this caueat, Extriuscus ad discant iuuenes sapientiam eruditi Sirach: Let the young men learne the wisdom of learned Sirach, beside and without the Canon. Gelasius Bishop of Rome in his decree of the Canonicall Scripture, doth bring in onely two bookes vnder Salomon's name, the Prouerbs and Ecclesiastes with the Canticles, both which he maketh one booke: And thus haue we the testimonie of our aduersaries owne authors against them.

OF THE TWO BOOKES OF THE ## Machabees.

Our Arguments against the authoritie of this booke are these ensuing, for our aduersaries bring nothing on their parte, but such arguments drawn from testimonies and authorities, as doe generally serue for all the Apocrypha, which are answered afore.

1. Iudas is commended, 2. booke chap. 12. for offering sacrifice for the dead: which was not commaunded by the law, neither is it the custome of the Iewes so to doe to this day. And againe, they were manifest idolaters: for there were found iewels vnder their coates consecrate to the Idols of the Iammites. And our aduersaries grant themselues, that prayer is not to be made for open malefactors dying impenitently. Bellarmine saith, that Iudas did godliethinke, that they might repent them at the very point of death, c. 15. ad obiect. 1. Answ. By this reason a man may pray for the wickedest man, that dyeth, if he haue a conceite, that he might repent in the very instant of death: but this is contrarie to their owne Canons: Decret. par. 2. c. 24. q. 2. c. 4. Gelas. Nobis fas non est aliud decernere præter id in quo dies supremus quemque inuenit: We ought not to iudge otherwise of a man, then as his last day findech him.

2. Lib. 2. cap. 2. many things are reported of the arke, the holy fire, the altar, the tabernacle, which should be hidde by Ieremie in a caue, and that the Lord would shewe the people these things at their returne. Here are many things vnlikely and vnttrue. First, it is found, saith the text, in the writings of Ieremie: but no such storie is there found. Secondly, Ieremie was in prison till the very taking of the Citie: and the Citie being taken the Temple was spoyled, the holy things defaced and carried away; how could they then be conueyed by Ieremie? Thirdly, in their returne they found neither arke nor fire, nor any such thing. But, saith the Iesuite, the Iewes in their conuersion to God in the end of the world may hate them againe: as though when they shall beleeue in Christ, they will any more looke backe to the ceremonies or rites of the law: for what vse then I pray you shall they haue of altar or sacrifice or any such like?

3. There is a great disagreeing in the storie betwene the two bookes concerning the death of Antiochus, lib. 1. cap. 6. v. 6. 16. It is said that Antiochus died for griefe in Babylon, hearing of the good successe of the Iewes. lib. 2. 1. ver. 16. Antiochus was with the rest of his soldiers slaine in the Temple of Nanea, and his head cut off and throwen forth: Chap. 9. the same Antiochus falling sicke by the way dyed with a most filthy stinking smell, consumed of wormes: thus, this murderer and blasphemous, saith the text, 2. lib. 9. 28. died a miserable death in a strange country among the mountaines. How could this man dye thrice, in Babylon, in Nanea, and by the way in a strange country? It is confessed by the Iesuite that it was the same Antiochus, who saith he lost his armie in the temple, and sickened by the way, and dyed at Babylon. But the storie saith, that their heads were cutte off: I thinke then he could not liue, and that he dyed in a straunge country, therefore not at Babylon in his bed. These things hang not together.

4. Further, the author of these bookes saith, that he abridgeth the storie of one Iason a Syreanean, lib. 2. cap. 2. ver. 23. who was an Heathen: but the spirit of God vseth not, neither needeth to borrow of prophane writers. He saith that this worke was not easie but painefull to him, but required sweating and watching, ver. 26. But to the holy writers of Scripture though their owne labour and diligence was not wanting, yet was not the worke hard or molestious vnto them. Lastly, the author (saith he) writeth for pleasure and recreation of the reader, and craueth pardon if he haue not done well, lib. 2. 15. 39. But to reade for pleasure is no end of Scripture; neither doth the spirit of God vse any excuse either for matter or manner.

Our aduersaries say, that S. Paul likewise confesseth, that he was rude in speaking, 1. Cor. 11. 6. We answer, he so saith, because the false Apostles so gaue out of him, not that he was so indeede; and yet in that place S. Paul doth not excuse himselfe, for his not sufficient handling of his matter, as this author doth. Neither is that speech of S. Luke any thing like: for there the Euangelist doubteth not to say, that he had attayned to an exact knowledge of all things. Vpon these promises we conclude, that these bookes of the Machabees are not Canonically, nor to be taken for any part of holy Scripture, though we denie not, but that there may be some profitable vse of them for the storie.

5. Lastly, 2. Machab. c. 14. v. 42. Razis is commended for killing of himselfe, contrarie to the Scripture. Beſermine answereth, that he is commended not for his godly, but manfull act: he is said to haue dyed manfully.

Anſw. 1. The word is honorabiliter, nobly, valiantly: which very word is vsed, Act. 17. 11. where the Disciples of Berea are said to be more noble, then they of Thessalonica, that is, more religious and godly: for as the Apostle saith, godlines is great riches, so is it true nobilitie: neither shall any man finde any nobilitie in Scripture to be commended without godlines. Wherefore this author, if hee speake according to the phrase of Scripture, commending nobilitie, meaneth also godlines; otherwise, as Augustine saith, Sic ferius laudare solet historia gentium: The histories of the Gentiles doe vse so to commend the valour of their men. 2. Augustine, when the Donatists alleaged the example of Razis in defence of their madnes, which killed themselves, thus doubteth not to answer, denying the authoritie of the booke: Non habent Iudei hunc librum, sicut Moſes & Prophetarum: The Iewes doe not account of this booke, as of Moses and the Prophets, lib. 2. cont. Gaudent. ad. c. p. 24.

And that the authoritie of these bookes hath alwaies been vncertaine it may appeare: for that the number of them is not agreed vpon, some making but one, some two, some three Canonically: Gelasius in his Canon, holdeth but one of the Machabees Canonically: the 84. Canon of the Apostles reciteth three Canonically bookes, the Papists generally holde but two: and thus our aduersaries owne authorities doe not make for them.

Thus haue we seene in particular, what credite is to be giuen to these Apocryphall bookes, that they are not to be receiued into the Canon of the Scripture: and now of them all in generall, that they are not to be held to be any part of the Scripture, beside the arguments before set downe, we haue fower most eident testimonies of antiquitie.

The first of S. Hierome; who bringeth all the Canonically bookes to the number of the Hebrew Alphabet, making them but two and twentie in all: for as, saith he, there are but two and twentie Hebrew letters, whereby a man learneth to speake, and expresse his minde; so are there so many bookes of Scripture, whereby wee are trained vp to holy knowledge. And these are the bookes: five of Moses, Genesis, Exodus, Leuiticus, Numbers, Deuteronomie: eyght of the Prophets, Iosua, the Judges with Ruth, Samuel, the Kings, Esaia, Ieremias, Ezechiel, the small Prophets: then nine, which he calleth, Hagiographa, holy writings: as Job, the Psalmes, the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Canticles, Daniel, the Chronicles, Eſra, with Nehemiah, Eſter: which make in all two and twentie. Some, saith he, make Ruth, and the Lamentations two seuerall bookes; and so number them foure and twentie, to answer the foure and twentie Elders in the Reuelation: Sciamus, quicquid extra hoc est, inter Apocrypha esse ponendum: Let vs knowe, that whatsoever booke is not among these, is to be placed amongst the Apocrypha: Hierom. prefat. in lib. Regum.

The second authoritie is of S. Cyprian: who after he had rehearsed the Canonically bookes, then addeth further: Sciendum est, quod & alij libri sunt, qui non Canonici, sed Ecclesiastici à maioribus appellati sunt: We must know, that there are other bookes beside, not Canonically, but Ecclesiasticall so called: as the wisdom of Salomon, Ecclesiasticus; the bookes of Tobie, Iudith, Machabees: Cyprian. in symbolum.

The third authoritie is from the 84. Canon of the Apostles, where none of the Apocrypha are named amongst the bookes of the olde Testament, but three bookes of the Machabees onely, which are not all held to be Canonically of the Papists.

The fourth and most pregnant witnesse is the Councell of Laodicea, in the 59. Canon: Qua oportet legi & in autoritatem recipi, hæc sunt: The bookes that ought to be read and receiued into authoritie, are these, and then the two and twentie bookes Canonically are rehearsed, no mention at all being made of any of the Apocrypha. This Councell though it were prouinciall, yet is ratified by their owne Canons, decr. p. 1. dist. 16. c. 11. and was confirmed in the first generall Councell, Can. 2. as Gratian also witnesseth: decr. p. 1. d. 16. c. 7. And the Pope is sworne to obserue the eyght generall Councils, whereof the Trullane being the sixt, is one. decr. p. 1. dist. 16. c. 8. And so it was decreed in the Councell of Constante, sess. 39. and in the Councell of Basile, sess. 38. that the new elected Pope should take his oath not to violate the faith of the eyght generall Councils: Wherefore how is not the Pope forsworne in receiuing the Apocrypha into the number of the Canonically Scripture, contrarie to the 59. Canon of the Councell of Laodicea, which was confirmed signed in the first Trullane, Conz, which Council and every Canon thereof, the Pope is bound to observe; and thus the edge of their owne weapons is turned vpon their owne head.

THE SECOND QUESTION CONCERNING THE authentick and most approued Edition of the Scriptures.

Whereas it is confessed that the Hebrue Edition of the old Testament is the most ancient; <sup>1. Error,</sup> and that the new Testament was written in Greeke by the Apostles and Euangelists: yet our aduersaries doe generally holde, as it was decreed in the Tridentine Chapter, Sess. 4. decret. 2. That in all sermons, readings, disputations, controversies, the vulgar Latine translation should be taken for authentick before the Hebrue or Greeke, and that no man should presume vpon any occasion, to reiect it or appeale from it.

We doe truly affirme, that although there are diuers Editions of the olde Testament besides the Hebrue, and some of them very auncient, as the translation of the Septuagint, compiled by seventy two auncients of the Iewes, at the instigation of Ptolemaus Philadelphus King of Egypt, 300. yeares before Christ; and after Christ there were other translations in Greeke made by Aquila Symmachus, Theodotus, and others; also a Chaldee Paraphrase compiled by the Iewes, and last of all diuers Latine translations; the which as Augustinus saith, in his time were so many, that they could not be numbred; and S. Hierome saith, Apud Latinos tunc sunt exemplaria, quot codices: The Latines haue so many translations as bookes, presat. in Iesu: Yet of all the rest the Hebrue being the most auncient, and the mother of the rest, and freed from corruptions, ought to be receiued as most authentike. And for the new Testament, though there be a Syriack translation very auncient, yet the Greeke ought to be preferred (being the same tongue wherein the Apostles and the Euangelists wrote) to be the onely authentike copie.

The question then betwene our aduersaries and vs, is not about any other translation of the old and new Testament, but the vulgar Latine, as it is read in their Churches and vsed amongst them. As for the Chaldee Paraphrase they themselves confesse, that it is stuffed with Iewish fables: Belserm. lib. 2. c. 3. And the Syriack is by him confessed not to be so auncient, as the times of Urbapostus, Epiphanius, Hierome: and therefore not to be compared either with the Greeke or Latine translation. And as for the Greeke translations of the olde Testament, of them all the translation of the Septuagint, was of greatest account; who are said to haue been put apart in 72. celles, and to haue all agreed in their translation: But S. Hierome holdeth this to be a fable, of the 72. celles, the ruines whereof a long time after were shewed at Alexandria, seeing that neither Aristarchus, who was a chiefe man about King Ptolemaus, that set the 70. interpreters on worke, nor Iosaphus maketh any mention thereof. And as touching the interpreters themselves, he saith, Aliud est uerbum agere, aliud interpretari: It is one thing to be a Prophet, another to be an interpreter. And as for the translation, he saith, Germana illa & antiqua translatio corrupta & violata est: That auncient and true translation of the Septuagint, is corrupted and violated, which as Hierome saith, was agreeable to the Hebrue: but so is not the Greeke copie now extant, which is full of corruptions; and seemeth to be a mixt and confused translation of many: wherefore our aduersaries doe labour to iustifie their Latine translations: some of their arguments, let vs see.

The Papists.

Arg. 1. The Latine Church hath vsed the vulgar Latine translation for the space of eight hundred, or nine hundred yeares, and it is not like that the Church all this while was without the true Edition of the Scriptures. Ergo it is onely authentick. We answer, first, by this argument it followeth that this vulgar Latine being generally vsed, was preferred before other Latine translations, which were at the first in great number, not that therefore it is more authentike then the Hebrue in the old, and the Greeke in the newe Testaments. Secondly, there were other Churches besides the Latine all this while, as amongst the Greekes famous congregations and Churches: that be it in the Latin Church, the vulgar translation was retained being erroneous; yet the whole Church continued not in that error, which were not so tyed and bound to the Latine translation. Thirdly, if men all this while (knowledge decreasing, and a way being in preparing for Antichrist) were negligent in correcting and amending the common translation, this is no good argument to make it authentick.

Argum. 2. As the Hebrues had an authentike translation in their owne tongue, and the Grecians in theirs, why should not the Latine Church haue it also authentick in Latine? We answer, first, it is no good reason, because the Lord did consecrate the Hebrue and Greeke tongues, and therein would haue his word written, that therefore he would or should also haue made the Latine as well authentically, as they? Secondly, if the Latine Church must haue an authentike translation, why should not other countries likewise haue their authenticals? The Armenians had the Scriptures of olde translated by Chrysostome, the Sclauonians by Hierome, the Gothes by Vlphilas; why should not these also as well be authentical? And so looke into how many tongues the Scriptures should be translated, so many authentical translations should there be.

Argum. 3. They say that all other translations which are come forth since, are erroneous, and much differ amongst themselves. Ans. First, this is no reason to preferre it before the Hebrue and Greeke, though it were better then all other translations. Secondly, they charge vnsafely, that our translations are dissonant and erroneous; for their disagreement is not in such substantiall points, and where any of them doe swarue from the originall, we allow them not: and yet there is not the meanest of them, but may iustly compare with theirs; yea and be preferred before it. Thirdly, if their translation were so pure, as they say Beza himselfe maketh it, he would not haue set forth a new Edition: and he preferreth it in some places before other translations, but is faire off from making it authentically, and so are we.

Argum. 4. The Hebrue text of the olde Testament in many places is impure and corrupt, and the Apostles diuers times in citing the old Scriptures, doe follow the Septuagint, and not the Hebrue. Ergo it is not authentical. Bellarmino to proue the Hebrue to be corrupt, giueth an instance of five places: the three principall I will set downe: first, Isai 9. the Latine hath, his name shall be called wonderful: in the Hebrue, uocabit nomen eius, he shall call his name, which Caluine himselfe confesseth, not to be so good a reading. Ans. First, there is no great difference in the sense, to say his name shall bee called, or he or they shall call his name: for it is obserued by the learned in this tongue, that verbs of the third person are often taken impersonally among the Hebrues, sic Psal. tabernaculum. Secondly, the same letters in the Hebrue doe serue for both these words; the alteration is in the prick or points: which as Bellarmino himselfe saith, Extrinssecus addita sunt, uel mutati textum, were added outwardly, that is, by other writers and interpreters of Scripture, and doe not change the text, which consisteth of the letters, not of the points. Secondly, he objecteth that place, Psal. 21. 16. the Latine hath, foderunt manum, they pierced my hands: but the Hebrue is, not Carni, they pierced; but Cuari tangunt lea, as a lyon: but the former reading of all Christians is approued.

Ans. First, this is the onely place of moment, which can be objected: Bellarmino also here doth furnish vs with an answer: that these two words being so like in sound, and in the characters might easily be mistaken either by the negligence of the writers and penmen, or by the Rabbins, that first added the prickles. 2. Diuers learne dmen of both sides doe testifie, that there be many Hebrue copies to be found, which haue Carni, not Cuari: sic Andradis, Galatinus: Ioannes Isanchus lib. 2. de iud. Linden.

The third place is that, Psal. 19. where the Latin hath, as S. Paul doth cite the place, Their sound is gone forth: but the Hebrue saith, their line is gone forth. Ans. Indee the Hebrue word so signifieth, but the Septuagint, whom the Apostles follow, doe interpret according to the sense: for the glorious workmanship of the heauens, as with a noise or sound doth ring in every mans eare, and set forth the power of God, as Iob saith, How little a portion doe wee beare of him, and who can understand the thunder of his power? Iob. 26. 14. the workes of God doe as it were thunder out the power of God. But this is no good argument to iustifie the Latin translation before the Hebrue, because the Latin followeth the Septuagint, which the Apostle approueth: for first, by this reason also the Septuagint should be authentically, which they themselves will not graunt. Secondly, S. Hierome sheweth the cause, why the Apostles sometimes followed the Septuagint: Vbi cumq; loquuntur ad populos, his testimonijs vtiuntur, quoniam fuerant in gentibus diuulgata: So often as they speake to the people, they vse such testimonies, as were commonly knowne amongst the heathen: as the translation of the 70. was. Another reason thereof was, that when the Apostles alleaged any testimony out of the old Testament, non verba secutus esse, sed sensum: that they follow not so much the words, as the sense: and therefore where the Septuagint keepe the sense, though not the words, the Apostles doe not refuse them, because the translation was so well knowne, as in this place now in question: Sed ubi 70. ab Hebrai discrepant, but where the 70. doe differ from the Hebrue, the Apostles expresse the Hebrue sense, &c.

We answer further: first, that the Iesuite hath not proued, nor yet is euer able to proue the Hebrue fountaines to bee corrupt. Secondly, where they are faultie, it is to bee imputed to the negligence, or vnskillfulness of those through whose hands they haue passed, and no otherwise. Thirdly, that the Apostles alleaged the Septuagint, it maketh not for the Latin, and they alleaged it not as better then the Hebrue, but because the Greeke tongue was then more vniuersally knowne. Fourthly, neither did the Apostles in citing Scripture alwaies tie themselves to the vulgar Septuagint: as for example sake may appeare in those places, Mica. 5. 2. cited Mat. 2. 6. Ierem. 31. 13. cited Mat. 2. 18. Esay. 9. 2. alleaged Mat. 4. 15. 16. Esay. 42. 1. rehearsed Mat. 12. 18. but the

the Apostles as they being directed with the spirit were able to write Scripture, so also to receive and allege Scripture. Fifthly, for those five places which the Iesuite saith are faultie in the Hebrue, we are able to shew almost fiftie times more places in the Latin, and therefore by this reason they have gained nothing. These are the Iesuits arguments; de verb. dei lib. 2. cap. 10. and some of our Rhenish in their preface to the new Testament.

Bellarmine also taketh the like exception against the Greeke of the new Testament, shewing in some places, that the Latin text is lesse corrupte. First, saith he, 1. Cor. 11. 49. the Greeke hath; Lib. 1. de verbo, cap. 7.

the second motto is, the Lord from heaven; the Latin more truly, is from heaven heavenly.

Ans. 1. How can the truth of the Latin bee tried, but by the Greeke, out of the which it was translated? which being more ancient, must first bee beleaved. 2. The first reading is most agreeable to the text, and so readeth Damasen lib. 3. de fide. cap. 12. proving by this place Christ to be God, and man; which could not be so well gathered, if wee should not reade, the Lord from heaven.

3. The Syriake translation alloweth the first reading according to the Greeke. Secondly, 1. Cor. 7. 33. the Greeke hath there is a difference between a wife and a virgin, or they are divided: the Latin much better, in yeth it to the verse before, the man that is married, is divided, that is, distracted about many things.

Ans. 1. The former reading is approved by the Syriake translation, by Theophylact, and Basil, as Beza sheweth vpon this place: and S. Hierome alloweth it writing against Hesudius, though elsewhere he dissent from himselfe. 2. It is more agreeable to the text, for the Apostle sheweth how they are divided: The unmarried careth for the Lord, she married for the things of the world.

Thirdly, Rom. 11. 12. the Greeke hath seruing the time, the Latin much better we seruing the Lord.

Ans. The best Greeke copies haue also we seruing the Lord, as appeareth in the Syriake translation: and who seeth not, that it might rather be a scape of the writer, taking one word for another, then a fault in the text. Thus we see that Bellarmino by these exceptions hath gained nothing for the Latin, nor yet empayred the credit of the Greeke. And be it graunted, that some oversightes might be committed through the ignorance of the Scribes and Notaries, yet the authoritie of the originall is sound still: and for one scape in the Greeke, it is an easie matter to shew twentie in the Latin.

Arg. 1. If the Latin translation be authentical, as it was decreed in the Councell of Trent, then it must haue been so from the beginning, so soone as there was any Latin translation: for the Councell had no authoritie to make that authentical, which was not, but onely to declare it so to be. But the Latin translation, for the space of 680. yeeres after Christ was not receiued as authentical: for we finde that the Latin writers, as Lactantius, Hilarius, Ambrosius, Hieronymus, Augustinus, and others, did not vse the same Latin translation: Ergo, this vulgar Latin hauing not been alwaies, since it was extant, authentical, neither ought it to be now.

Argum. 2. That edition which was made, and framed, and first written by the Prophets, Apostles, Euangelists, is to be preferred before that, which was not compiled by any Prophet or Apostle. But such are the Hebrue in the old Testament, and the Greeke edition in the new, by the confession of our aduersaries, Bellarmino. cap. 7. lib. 2. Such is not the Latin, for it is vncertaine by whom it was written: for the Iesuite confesseth that it is not all of Hieromes edition: as the booke of the Psalms, Wisedome, Ecclesiasticus, the Machabees, which they thinke were not translated by Hierome. But let vs graunt that the whole was of Hieromes doing, yet was he no Prophet nor Apostle: saith he, Aliud est vatum esse, aliud interpretem; It is one thing to bee a Prophet, another to bee an interpreter. Wherefore it is no reason, that Hieromes, or whose translation else soeuer should be receiued before the writings of the Prophets and Apostles.

But say our aduersaries, if we had a perfect copie of the Hebrue and Greeke editions, wee confesse they were to be preferred: but now they are full of faults, and greatly corrupted. We answer: first, the Iesuit himselfe disputing against Camus and Lindanus, two archpapists, that though there may be some scapes in the translations by the fault of some Libraries, and imperfect copies, yet concerning the doctrine of faith and manners, faith, there is no corruption in them, lib. 2. c. 2. Secondly, though there may be, and are, some words falsely written, and by error thrust into the text, yet they shall neuer proue that they are more corrupte, the Hebrue and Greeke, then the Latin: for it followeth no more, that because of some scapes the Latin is to bee preferred before them, then that a cloake altogether patched and ragged is better then a cloake of veluet that hath but one piece.

Argum. 3. The Iesuite himselfe, and other Papists confesse, that in some cases it is very necessarie to haue recourse to the originall: as when some word seemeth to be mistaken by the writer, as where secutus is read for cecidi: derix for virax: cor for coram: or when the Latin copies doe varie, as Ios. 5. some Latin bookes haue, Quibus iuratis, et infundens eis spiritum, vnto whom he sware that he would shew them the land: that he would not say some other, and this (saith Bellarmino) is the true reading being agreeable to the Hebrue. Thirdly, when the sentence is ambiguous, as Luk. 2. Pax hominibus bona voluntatis, peace vnto men of good will: the originall sheweth, that (good will) is to be referred to peace: peace or good will vnto men, not vnto men of good will. Fourthly, and lastly, the force and propertie of the words is better vnderstood in the originall, Bellarmino lib. 2. cap. 11; Ergo, by the Iesuits confession, the originall or fountaines are more certaine and sure without doubtfulness and ambiguitie, therefore more authentick then the Latin.

Argum. 4. S. Hierome himselfe findeth fault in diuers places with the vulgar Latin, as it now standeth and therefore it is not authentick, nor yet any of Hieromes translation.

Bellarmino answereth, that all the old Testament, beside the Psalmes, the Wisdome of Salomon, Ecclesiasticus, the Machabees, are of Hieromes translating, and that these reasons may be giuen, why notwithstanding there are some places remaining in the translation, which Hierome found fault with. First, through the negligence of the Notaries. Secondly, because of the diuers acceptations of the Hebrue words, Hierome sometime taking one signification, sometime another. Thirdly, because Hierome might afterwards correct and amend the place himselfe, otherwise, then he first found fault.

Ans. 1. will now produce some few places out of Hieromes translation, wherein none of these former shifts shall serue their turne.

Matth. 5. 22. S. Hierome readeth: he that is angrie with his brother without a cause, liet (saith he) in plerisque Latinis codicibus sine causa additum non sit, though in many Latin bookes, this (without a cause) is not added: and so it is left out in the vulgar Latin.

Matth. 6. 34. Hierome readeth, sufficient for the day is, afflictio, the affliction or griefe thereof; rather, then malitia, the malice thereof, as in the vulgar Latin.

1. Cor. 15. 51. This (saith he) which is read in the Latin, we shall all rise, but not all be changed, is not found in the Greeke: yet so readeth the Latin.

2. Chron. 35. Iosias was buried in Mausolae parum, in the Mausoleum or tombe of his fathers: so readeth the vulgar Latin: but Hierome saith, ista vox profana, & gentilis: This is a prophane, and beathenish terme.

1. Tim. 3. 2. Hierome readeth, qui possit docere, that is able to teach: the vulgar, a Doctor, or teacher, or docilis, teachable: which Hierome in the same place calleth, Latinam simplicitatem, the simplicitie or ignorance of the Latin translator.

In these places alleged, the translation whereof Hierome reproveth, it may easily appeare, that the fault was neither in the Notarie or penman, nor yet is the diuers signification of the word the cause; neither did Hierome correct his iudgement afterward, restoring: that to the first reading which he had corrected: as may appeare most sufficiently by this one place, Rom. 12. 3. where he saith, Male in Latinis codicibus legitur: sapere. ad sobrietatem: It is an euill reading in the Latin, to vnderstand according to sobrietie: for sobrietie he readeth chastitie. So likewise, to shew that he was no changeling, 1. Tim. 2. 15. he saith, Non ut male habetur in Latinis codicibus sobrietas est legenda: We must not reade sobrietie, as it is euill translated in the Latin, but chastitie: S. Hierome would neuer haue called the authentick translation, simple, vnlearned, euill, prophane, as he doth this vulgar Latin, as we haue seene in these places.

Argum. 5. There are many and great errors in the vulgar translation, and contrarie to the originall: Ergo, it is not authentike. Some of the places we will quote, as Genes. 3. ipsa conteret, for ipsum, she shall breake the Serpents head, where we doe reade that not the woman, but her seede shall breake his head. Genes. 6. vers. 6. for figmentum cordis malum, the thoughts of mans heart are euill; they reade, intenta ad malum cogitatio, inclined to euill: and so extenuate originall sinne. Ecclesiast. 16. 14. for secundum opera, a man shall receiue according to his workes; they reade after the merit of his workes. Esdras 9. vers. 8. the vulgar Latin hath, pax illius, for pax illius. Pro. 16. vers. 11. lapides frons, stones of the world: for lapides faculi, stones of the bagge. And though Bellarmino here acknowledge a fault in the copies by mistaking some letter, yet are those words retained in the vulgar Latin still without correction. In their Latin translations of the Psalmes there are many corruptions, Psal. 2. vers. 12. Apprehendite disciplinam: apprehend discipline, or instruction, for Osculamini filium, Kisse the sonne. And thus an euident place against the Iewes for the second person in Trinitie, is obscured and ouerthrowne, by the corrupt Latin text. Psal. 67. vers. 12. Si dormitis inter medius ceras, though ye sleepe betweene two lots, without any sense: the Hebrue thus, inter ollas, though you haue lien amongst the pots, as being blacke with affliction. It is pretie sport how Bellarmino and the rest, that would in all things iustifie the vulgar Latin translation, how he runneth himselfe out of breath, to finde out some likely exposition of this place: and in the end he thus plaiceth the interpreter, if ye sleepe betweene two lots, that is, if ye Preachers abide in the midst between two lots, the heavenly, and the earthly, neither giuen wholly to action, nor wholly to contemplation; then shall the Church bee like a dove, &c. sure, they must sleepe betwene two lots, action and contemplation; that is, they must come at neither, but sleepe betwene both: the words will rather enforce this sense; if we take his exposition. And indeede of this sort were most of their fat bellied Monkes and Priests, nether scene in contemplation of knowledge, nor action of good life. Vers. 23. of the same Psalm they reade, conuertam in profundum maris, I will turne them into the boétome of the sea; for redueam profundo maris, I will bring them from the depth of the sea, cleane contrary. Psal. 132. 15. viduam vnu benedicam, I will blesse his widow; for viduam, I will blesse his victuals. So in the new Testament are many false readings. Ephes. 2. 10. creati in bonis operibus, created in good workes, for, ad opera bona, created vnto good workes. Rom. c. 16. 23. Gaius hospes meus & vniuersa Ecclesia, for, vniuersa Ecclesia: Gaius mine host, and the whole Church, for of the whole Church. 1. Cor. 9. 22. ut omnes salui facerem, pro, ut omnino aliquos salui facerem: that I might saue all, for, that I might saue some. Heb. 12. 8. Ergo adulteri, non filij estis, pro, spiritus & adulterini: wherefore ye are adulterers, and not children, for, ye are bastards, and not children. An hundred more errors and ouer, you may finde noted in the readings of our learned countrie inan D. Whitak, 2. quasi. de scrip. 10. 11. 12. cap. These I haue set downe for a taste.

And as the vulgar Latin is imperfect and full of corruptions, and maketh the Scriptures darke and obscure: so on the contrary side, the originals of the Hebrue and Greeke are exceeding profitable, and doe bring great light and perspicuitie to the Scripture: for neuer were the Scriptures better translated, or more plainly vnderstood, then since they were translated out of the originals. Heare the iudgement of a reuerend and learned inan sometime a Bishop in this land: who in a certaine conference and disputation of the Bishops, when some of them stood mightily for vnwritten tradition, standing vp made an oration, vsing among other these words: 7 be Germanes haue made the text of the Bible so plaine and easie by the Hebrue and Greeke tongues, that now many things may be better vnderstood without any glosses at all, then by all the commentaries of the Doctors, B. Fox. Fox pag. 1183. col. 1.

Lastly, we will rehearse Augustines iudgement: Vicunque est, ei lingua magis erodatur, unde est in aliam per interpretes facta translatio: Howlocuer the case standeth (saith he) wee ought to giue more credit to that tongue, out of the which other are translated, lib. 15. de ciuit. cap. 13. Ergo the Hebrue in the old Testament, and the Greeke in the new, out of the which the Latin and all other translations haue issued, ought to haue the onely preheminance. To this agreeth S. Ambrose lib. de inearmat c. 8. Ita in Grecis codicibus inuenimus, quorum prior est auctoritas: So we finde in the Greeke copies, whose authoritie is to bee preferred. Es lib. 2. de spiritu, cap. 6. Si quis de Latinorum codicum varietate contendit, Græcos inspicit codices: If any man doe take exception against the diuersitie of the Latin bookes, let him looke into the Greeke. And S. Hierome ad Lucinium: Vt veterum librorum fides de Hebrais voluminibus examinanda est, ita novorum Græci sermonis formam desiderat: As the credit of the old Testamēt must be examined by the Hebrue volumes, so in the new by the Greeke. And this authoritie of S. Hierome is ratified and allowed by their owne decrees: Grati. de r. p. 1. d. 9. cap. 6. And to this purpose Franciscus Mirandula made an oration to Leo 10. and the Councell of Latereane, that the Scriptures might be conferred with the originall copies. So also Isidor. in prefat. ad Concl. Quod si veritas querenda est, Græcorum sequamur stylum, eorumq; imitemur editiones & exemplaria. Es postea: Vnus & veritas ab ipsis querenda est, quorum lingua edita esse noscuntur: If we seeke for the truth, let vs follow and imitate the Greeke copies and examples. And afterward: The truth is to be sought for at their hands, in whose tongue or language it is set forth. This he speaketh of the true originall copies of the Councels to be had from the Greeke: And the same reason also serueth for the authentike originals of the holy Scriptures. Thus haue we their owne testimonies against them.

THE THIRD QUESTION: CONCERNING the vulgar translation of Scripture.

The Papists.

They doe not absolutely condemne the translation of the Scriptures into the vulgar tongue, whatsoeuer they haue thought in times past: neither would they generally haue euery man permitted to reade the Scripture, but such onely as haue especiall licence from their ordinarie, hauing the testimonie of their Curates that they be humble and deuout persons, Rhenus. prefat. 162.

scilicet. 6. So then they hold it dangerous for all men to reade Scripture, and they would not willingly licence any, but their Pope holy deuout Catholikes: they are like to make a mad peece of worke, that goe about to picke their faith out of Scripture, say the Rhemistes, annot. 1. Cor. 1. 5. This then is their opinion, that it is neither necessarie nor conuenient for all men to haue access to the Scriptures: we will see some of their reasons.

Argum. 1. From the time of Esdra till Christ, and in our Saviours time, the Scriptures were not in the vulgar tongue, but onely in the Hebrue, which the Iewes vnderstoode not after the captiuitie: Ergo it is not now necessarie to haue them in the vulgar tongue. That the people vnderstoode not Hebrue, the Iesuite proueth out of the 8. of Nehemiah: where it is said, that Esdra did expound the law to the people, because they vnderstood it not. We answer, that the text saith cleane contrarie, that he read the law before the people that vnderstood it, vers. 3. and they might giue the sense, though the people vnderstoode the language. Concerning the places objected out of the Gospel, to proue the Iewes spake another language then Hebrue, as it appeareth by those speeches Marc. 5. Talitha cumi, Matth. 27. Gethsema, which fauour not of the Hebrue tongue. We answer, that although they spake not pure Hebrue, but many strange words were vsed, yet they vnderstoode the Hebrue; for why els doth Christ bid the people to search the Scriptures? And they were not the Iewes, but the Romane souldiers that vnderstood not the voice of Christ vpon the crosse, saying, he called for Elihu. And whereas Bellarmino further would gather by that place, Iohn 7. 49. This people, that know not the law, that the Iewes vnderstoode not the Scriptures in the Hebrue tongue; it is a meere cauill: first, they note the ignorance of the people not in the letter of the law, but the sense thereof, which the Pharisees had obserued by their traditions, and therefore Matth. 23. they are said to haue shut vp the kingdome of Heauen. Secondly, it is euident Luke 4. 18. that the people vnderstoode the reading of the law: for when Christ had read the text, without further construing, or translating of it, he shut the book and said to the people, This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares. Again, Act. 15. 21. James saith, that Moses is preached, because he is read: in what sense can reading be called preaching, if it be not vnderstoode. And yet it is more euident, that the people vnderstoode the Hebrue tongue, Act. 22. 3. for when they heard, that Paul spake Hebrue, they kept silence. What dare not now these fellows affirme, thus contrarie to Scripture not being ashamed to say, that the Iewes vnderstoode not Hebrue?

Argum. 2. The Apostles (saith the Iesuite) wrote their Epistles onely in Hebrue or Greeke, and not in the vulgar tongues of the nations to whom they preached: Ergo it is not necessary that the Scriptures should be in the vulgar tongue. We answer: first, it had been an infinite labour for the Apostles, to haue left their writings in euery language; neither was it necessary, seeing out of the originals they might be translated into euery language. Secondly, they preached the same things vnto the Gentiles in their owne tongues, which they afterward left in writing. Thirdly, the Greeke tongue, wherein they wrote, was vniuersally known, and fewe countries were ignorant of it especially in the East partes. But it is most certaine, that the Apostles did write to no Churches in the Greeke tongue, which vnderstoode it not. And whereas the Iesuite giueth an instance, of the Epistle written to the Romanes, whose vulgar tongue was Latin and not Greeke, and the Epistles of James and Peter written to the dispersed Iewes: it can be no question, whether the Romanes vnderstoode Greeke, the language being so common, and most of them being Grecians, as may appear by their names, yet resident at Rome, to whom he writeth: and how could the Iewes being dispersed among the Gentiles, be ignorant of the Greeke tongue, seeing now also they speake the languages of those countries, where they are dispersed?

gum. 3.*

Argum. 3. There is no cause (say they) why the Scriptures should be translated: if it be for the vnderstanding of the people, they vnderstand them not being translated neither. We answer: many things they may easily vnderstand: and for the harder places, they are neerer the vnderstanding of them being translated, then before: for then they haue two great lets, the tongue vnkown, and the obscure and hid sense; now they neede not to labour for the tongue, but onely for the sense.

Argum. 4. The Scriptures are occasion of offence and heresie, being not right vnderstood. Ergo. And here Bellarmino telleth vs a tale of a certaine woman in England that stoode vp in the Church when she heard the 25. Chapter of Ecclesiasticus read and said, is this the word of God, nay it is the word of the Deuill? We answer: first, because many surfet of meates and drinkes, it is no reason that sober men should bee forbidden the vse of them: no more for heretikes and wicked mens sakes ought the people of God to bee barred from Scripture. Secondly, more haue perished by ignorance in Scripture, then by this vnderstanding it: and the Scripture was ordayned of God to meeete with offences, and to confute heresies, 2. Tim. 3. 15. Wherefore these men make themselves wiser then God, that thinke the Scripture is an occasion of those diseases, for the which it is appointed a remedie. The like blinde reason sometime a popish pish Frier used against M. Latimer, in his fiery sermons: that the rude people said he should heare the Scriptures read in English; the ploughman when he heareth, that he should be able to plough, and the baker when he heareth it read, that he should be able to bake his bread; might be moved not to be leaured at all: and when the Scripture saith, If a man offendeth his brother, let him be persuaded to pull out his eye: And therefore it was not good to hide the Scriptures in English. To this fiery reason, M. Latimer vouchsafed no other answer but this: he would wish the Scriptures no longer to be in English, till either the ploughman were thereby persuaded not to plough, or the baker needs to bake. For p. 173. col. 1.

Now concerning Belshazzar's tale, though we neede not beleue it, yet we will, seeing he hath it but by hearsay: yet if any foolish woman should be so simple as to be offended with the reading of the Scriptures, which she understandeth not, this can be no prejudice to the holy an exercise, no more, then the declamation of the Pythiſſe, 16. v. vnto S. Rando preaching. But she doth flite pleaseth himselfe in this tale, because he misliketh, that women should be acquainted with the Scriptures: and yet can he not be ignorant how Agatha and Priscilla his wife expounded to Paul the way of God more perfectly, Act. 18. 26. And Aquila that translated some of Origen's homilies giueth this as a reason: Heo beneſicij praeſtabile hic ſectis; ut prophetia perueniret non ſolum ad uirum, uerum etiam ad mulieres poſſet. This benefit, ſaith he, shall come by this reading, as translation; that the knowledge of this prophesie not only men, but women alſo may ſtand vnder: propter in hom. Origen. in Pfal. 36. In thoſe dayes women vnderſtoode the Latin tongue, and were acquainted with the Scriptures translated into that language; his libellus vnde dicitur, quod non erat in

The Protestants.

WE doe beleue and holde that it is requiſite, expedient, and meete ſure for the Scriptures to be vttered and ſet forth in the vulgar and common ſpeech; and that none vpon any occaſion ought to be prohibited the reading thereof for knowledge and instructions ſake: and that Chriſtian Magiſtrates ought to provide, that the people may haue the Scriptures in their mother and known tongue. Wherefore great wrong was offered to the people of England, that ſidest 110. yeares, till King Henry the eight, could not be ſuffered to haue the Scriptures in English. And how, I pray you, did the Popiſts ſtorme, whenas Tindal's translation came forth: ſome ſaying that it was impoſſible to haue the Scriptures translated into English: ſome that it would make the people heretikes: others that it would cauſe them to rebel. For pag. 119. col. 1. What ſoule and ſhamefull ſlanders were theſe! For the vulgar translations of Scripture were ſuch as Argum. 1. It is Gods commandement, that the Scriptures ſhould be read before the people, that they may learne to feare God, Deut. 31. verſ. 11. 12. The people are commanded to write the law vpon their gates, and in their houſes to conſerre and talke with their children, and teach them the law, Deut. 6. 6, 7, 8. And our Saniour biddeth the people ſearch the Scripture, Ioh. 1. verſ. 39. Ergo what God hath commanded, no man ought to prohibite or forbid: the people therefore ſhall not be kept from reading of the Scripture.

Argum. 2. Without Scripture there is no ſaith, ſaith Caluſtine for all people: Ergo the knowledge of the Scripture: that ſaith cometh by the Scriptures, reade Ioh. 20. 31. theſe things are written, that ye might beleue Ieſus Chriſto be the ſonne of God. Again, the weapons of Chriſtian men are not denied to any, whereby they ſhould fight againſt their ſpiritual enemies: but the word of God is a ſpeciall part of our harnelle, and a principall weapon, euen the ſword of the ſpirit, Eph. 6.

Argum. 3. The Goſpell may be preached in the vulgar tongue, as our bleſſed Saniour and the holy Apoſtles taught the people: Ergo the word of God may be read and written in the vulgar tongue. The propoſition our aduerſaries grant; that ſermons may be made in the vulgar tongue: but it followeth not, ſay they, that therefore Scripture ſhould be in the mother tongue; Rom. 1. Cor. 14. 8. But I pray you how can the Prieſter alledge Scripture in his ſermon, vnleſſe it be recited in the vulgar tongue: or how ſhould the people know they preach the word, vnleſſe they may compare their doctrine with Scripture, as the Bertrams did, Act. 17.

Argum. 4. I will adioyne the teſtimonie of three godly learned Martyrs, vnto whole iudgement, I thinke as much ought to be giuen, as vnto any mans beſide, who ſealed the truth they profreſſed with their blood: theſe three Martyrs are Tindal, Lambert, Bradford. Tindal was the firſt, that in thoſe laſt times tranſlated the new Teſtament into English: whereat the Popiſts ſo ſtormed, that ſome of them ſaid it was not poſſible to tranſlate the Scriptures into the English tongue: others, that it was not lawfull for the lay people to haue it in their mother tongue: ſome, that it would make them all heretikes: yea, they ſo praeciſed againſt Tindal, that at the length they tooke from him his life. This holy Martyr ſaith, that the very cauſe why the Popiſts would not haue the Scriptures tranſlated, was this, that the people might be kept in ignorance, and ſo they might tyrannize ouer their conſcience by their ſuperſtitious doctrines. For pag. 107. Lambert ſaith, that there can be no reaſonable cauſe to withhold the Scriptures from the people, ple, being the fode of their soules, especially when they desire to do more then bodily fode ought to be kept from those that hunger after it, pag. 14. col. 1. dilgnd in hoc consuetudo est ad

Blessed Bradford saith, it was aaine robbery to take from the people the English service to whom our Master hath given it, all that people ought to learne at the priests hands, to whom he hath vowed, then will you bring the people to crucifye Christ againe, and let Barabas goe, if all must be learned in the priests hands, for the priests thinke persuaded the people, pag. 162. v. 11

Argum. We have the priests of the Church of God in times past for our warrance for in Chrysostome untill the people had great standings, whereupon he exhorteth them to get them Bibles, or at the least the new Testament, the Actes of the Apostles, the Gospels, Hieremy, Epistol Caloff. We heard before that the Armenians, Selacionians, Goths had the Scripture in their owne language, somwhat distored yeares agoe in England King Alfred translated the Psalter, a copie whereof was found in Canowland Abbey, called S. Godescalch Bishop, as Master Lambert witnesseth and Bede our learned antiquary is translated S. Iohannes Gospel, Expositio of Isaiah. The Rhemists also for comfort sheweth that 800 yeares agoe the Italians had the Bible translated, and the French men about 2000 yeares agoe, Præf. in Testam. 4. fol. Why should not the people of God have the same libertie now freely to read the Scripture, as they have had in times past? 13. v. 11. 14.

Belarmine answereth, that he denieth not, but that the Scriptures were in times past extant in the vulgar tongue, yet not universally to all, but to such as taught profie by reading of them. Our Rhiquists also say, that Chrysostome, when he exhorted the people to reading of Scripture, spake as a pulpit man, not as giving a rule in schooles, Præf. in Testam. fol. 14. And Belarmine addeth that it was not his meaning that they should all read Scripture, but such as might doe it safely. lib. 21 cap. 16. respons. ad argum. 7.

Answe. First seeing in times past great and populous nations had the Scripture translated, as the Armenians, Selacionians, in their vulgar tongue, how is it like that any man was forbidden the reading of them? As we doe prove vnto them, that these nations had the Scriptures in their owne tongue, so if they can shew any prohibition to have been made in those countries, so far any from reading of Scripture (which they are never able to doe) they should say somewhat. That Chrysostome meaning was, that all which should be exercised in reading of Scripture, it doth rather appaie: for he saith so in his sermons, vnto the which all the people of all conditions resorted, therefore he spake to all: yea he would have boyes and children to read Scripture. And though Chrysostome were none in the Polin, what of that? He would not (I thinke) say one thing in the Pulpit and an other thing in schooles: he would not speake otherwise then he thought, or make the Pulpit a place to stricke in. Whereas Christ giueth libertie to all to search Scripture, yea commandeth them so to doe, with what authoritie can they restrain this libertie? And if silly men must be made to render a reason of his faith and hope, 1. Pet. 3. 15. then every man ought to studie the Scriptures, thereby to learne to give account of his faith. What profiteth a man so to have meate, and not to eat it, apparell and not to weare it? so what good doth it to have Scriptures, and not to read them? 2. ad 1. q. 1. v. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.

17. Homilia Episcopus transse studeat in rusticam Romanam linguam, aut Theotifiam, quo facilius cunctis populus intelligat, qui dicuntur. The Bishop must haue a care to translate y<sup>e</sup> Homilies into the country, Latin or vulgar tongue, that all men may the better vnderstand what is said: If it be answered, that sermons and Homilies may be read and preached in the vulgar, but not the Scriptures, we oppose another decree. In ecclesijs parvulis, per singulos dies dominice per scripti claris voce ac intelligibiliter ac verbum magis annuncians, et per organa dealogi, et articulos fidei. In the parish Churches euery Lords day, let the Presbyters declare with a loud and intelligible voice and in the mother tongue, the ten commandments, and articles of the faith: synod. Sanen. sibioret morum 11. And it was also decreed synod. Anglican. cap. 11. That the Angels salutation, and the Lords prayer should be said in the vulgar tongue. Thus we see that those popish prelates that liued 40. or 50. yeares agoe, were not altogether so popish and vnreasonable, as our Romanists in these dayes are. I will also oppose against them their owne Master of Sentences, who prescribing the office and dutie of a lector, thus saith, Non accentiū scilicet, diffusiū legat, ne iust bellum auditoribus auferat, &c. Let him know the accents, and reade distinctly, that he hinder not the vnderstanding of the hearers: let him make what must be read indicatly, what with an interrogation, and keepe his distinctions: which if he doe not, he troubleth the peoples vnderstanding, and moueth other to laughter: Mag. lib. 4. dist. 2. 4. d. But what neede these precepts of observing the accents, and keeping distinctions where no man vnderstandeth what is read, or what neede they fraye the hindring of the peoples peoples vnderstanding, where nothing is vnderstood: Wherefore it appeareth by this; that it standeth with the masters minde, to haue the Scriptures read in the vulgar tongue.

AN APPENDIX OR PART OF THIS QUESTION, concerning publicke prayers and diuine seruice in the vulgar tongue.

The Papists.

IT was decreed in the Tridentine Councell, that the seruice of the Church which they call the Masse, should not be celebrated in the vulgar tongue. sess. 22. cap. 8. And it is the common practise euery where of the Romish church to vse the Latin tongue onely. We must be content (say they) with those three tongues which God honored vpon the crosse: namely, the Hebrue, Greeke, and Latin. This libertie onely they grant, that their priest may expound some things, as he remembereth, and shew the meaning to the people.

Argum. 1. Thus they argue: The maiestie and grauitie of the sacred busines, doe require also to be vttered in a sage, sanctified and graue language: Ergo, not in the vulgar. Bellarmin. lib. 2. cap. 15 argum. 7. We answer, the grauitie, reuerence and holinesse consisteth not in words, phrases, and sounds, though neuer so eloquent, but in the things themselves. Neither is any tongue that is vnderstood, before the Lord counted barbarous: for S. Paul saith, that he is a barbarian, and speaketh barbarously in the Church, that cannot be vnderstood, 1. Cor. 14. 18. And Acts 17. 18. the very strangers and barbarians heard the Apostles vtter in their languages the wonderfull things of God: they thought the tongue no disgrace to those holy mysteries they vttered.

Pope Nicholas 1. Epist. ad Michaelum Imperatorem Constantinopolit. writeth thus of this matter, the Emperour in a certaine Epistle to the Pope had termed the Latine tongue barbarous: Whom he answereth thus: Omnia opera derogatio, redundat ad ipsius iniuriam: si forent, qui nec lingua non percipere quam deus fecit: in eo ipsa quæ verum Deum colit lingua Latina, quantum barbarum, vel scythicum linguam antecedit, agnoscat. The disgracing of his worke, tendeth to the iniurie of the worke: What madness is thus, not to spare that tongue which God hath made? and herein, how farre the Latine tongue exceedeth the Barbarians and Scythians language, it is seene, because it worshippeth the true God. By these two reasons, whereby he proueth the Latin tongue not to be barbarous, we likewise affirme neither the English tongue, nor any other vulgar language of Christians to be barbarous: both because they are the gifts and workes of God, and because the true God is by those vulgar tongues acknowledged and worshipped.

Argum. 2. Leuit. 16. ver. 17. The people is commanded to stand withoud, till the Priest come in and made attonement for them: they vnderstood not the Priest, for they heard him not: Ergo it is not necessarie the people should vnderstand the Minister. We answer: First, that this is a type of our Sauour Christ, who euen so ascended into heauen; as the high Priest did into the holy place: but types and figures proue nothing. Secondly, they vnderstood not the Priest, because they heard him not: but they cannot proue that the Priest vttered any thing in their hearing at any time, which they vnderstood not.

Argum. 3. We must onely vse those tongues in holy affaires, which were sanctified in the crosse: that is Hebrue, Greeke, and Latin. We answer: Those tongues were not then vited for any such purpose, but that the death of Christ might by those common and vniuersall tongues be the further spread abroad. And surely if they would proue that these tongues were hereby sanctified, we thinke Pilate was no fit instrument of that sanctification, by whose appointment the title was written: why then are not all tongues as well sanctified; wherein the holy Ghost spake, as these which were written by Pilate? Thirdly, doth not the Apostle say, that euery tongue shall confesse that Iesus Christ is the Lord, &c. 1. Philip. 2. 11. Seeing God hath sanctified euery tongue and language for the confession of the faith, how dare you goe against Gods ordinance? Lastly, if those three tongues onely were consecrated vpon the crosse, why did Pope Nicholas the 1. when he had decreed that seruice should be said in the Latin tongue, yet dispensed with the Sclauonians and Polonians, to haue it in their owne vulgar tongues?

Third Protestants. We doe affirme, that as it hath bene the commendable vse of all ancient Churches, to haue the seruice in the vulgar tongue, that the people might vnderstand, and be better liued vnto deuotion: so the same goodly vse ought for ever to remaine, and bee retained in the Church of God.

Argum. 1. This is most agreeable to S. Pauls doctrine, 1. Cor. 14. vers. 26. who would haue all things done to edifying: but by an vknowne tongue no man is edified: and he which heareth ther speaketh words to be vnderstood, than words not vnderstood. Some of the Papists say, that S. Paul speaketh of preaching, specially of the word of praying, do B. Prædicator pag. 187.

But in the 14. verse he speaketh specially of prayer, and in the 16. of the peoples saying Amen, which was not in genere in common, but in the end of prayers: this is but a weak answer. The Rishmits and the Iesuite say, he meaneth certaine extraordinarie Hymnes and giuing of thanks, whereof S. Paul speaketh Ephes. 5. 19. Ans. S. Paul speaketh generally of all publike exercise in the Church, whether of prayer, preaching, singing, that it should all be done in a knowne tongue: for he vseth the generall termes of speaking, et cetera, and of the voyce, as vers. 11. If I vnderstand not the power of the voyce (he saith not of the song or preaching) I shall be to him that speaketh, a barbarian: so he miliketh not onely preaching, or singing, but any kinde of speaking in the Church in a straunge tongue. And againe, S. Pauls reason is generall against all exercises in the Church ordinary or extraordinary in an vnknowne tongue, because he would haue all things referred to the edification of the Church. Bellarmine againe thus answereth, that the reason is not alike, for these extraordinarie songs and prayers, which were vsed in those times, and for the ordinary seruice: for the end of those songs, was the instruction and consolation of the people: but that is not the end of our ordinarie prayers, but the seruice and worship of God: Bellarm. cap. 16. ad obiect. 1. Ans. How is not the Iesuite ashamed thus to contradict the Apostle, who saith directly that the Scriptures are written for our comfort and consolation, Rom. 15. 4. yet he saith the end of reading the Scriptures in the diuine office is not for consolation. Secondly, as though the worship or seruice of God, can be seuered from the instruction and consolation of the people: or can God be rightly worshipped by that, which giueth no instruction to the worshipper? Thus would the Iesuite bring in againe, a Samaritane seruice or worship: for they (as our Saviour saith) worship they know not what, and so doe the Papiists: but wee, saith he, all true worshippers, worship that wee know, Ioh. 4. 22. and consequently wee know what wee worship. This place of S. Paul is too euident and plaine, then that it may bee so easily wrested and depraued by their hereticall and deceitfull glosses.

Out of this place of the Apostle, which maketh so directly against prayer in a strange tongue, these arguments may bee gathered: First, no language not vnderstood ought to bee vsed in the Church, because it edifieth not, and they should speake in the ayre, that is, vainly, to no purpose, vers. 9. Ergo, seruice in the Latin tongue is vnprofitable where it is not vnderstood. So saith S. Ambrose: Si ad edificandum ecclesiam communis, ea debent dici quae intelligunt audientes: If you come together to edifie the Church, those things must be spoken which may be vnderstood. Secondly, he that speaketh with a strange tongue, must keepe silence if there be no interpreter, vers. 18. Ergo, Latin seruice must be abandoned, vnlesse they will interpret it, which were a lost labour, seeing they may haue it as well in English. Againe S. Ambrose: Taceat debet in ecclesia, qui linguam loquitur quam solus scit: He must hold his peate in the Church, which speaketh with a tongue, which be onely vnderstandeth. Thirdly, he that speaketh in a strange tongue is as a Barbarian, or an alien to the hearer that vnderstandeth not, vers. 11. but it were absurd, that the Minister of the word or Sacraments should be an alien to the people. Ergo. So S. Ambrose: Non competis fidelibus audire linguas, quas non intelligunt, sed infidelibus, qui non sunt digni intelligere: It is not meete for beleeuers to heare those tongues, which they vnderstand not, but for vnbeleeuers, who are not worthie to vnderstand. Fourthly, no prayer or giuing of thanks ought to be vsed in the Church, vnto the which the people cannot say Amen, vers. 16. but they cannot say Amen to Latin prayers, because they know them not. Ergo. Fifthly, if it were not lawfull to vse the miraculous gift of tongues, such as this was in the Apostles time, without interpretation: much lesse is the Latin to be vsed, which may be pronounced and read without a miracle. Argum. Protestant. diss. Westm. lib. 2. pag. 212.

Argum. 2. Who seeth not that prayers made with the vnderstanding are more comfortable and fruitfull: the other nothing to profit at all, nor yet to be auailable before God? Howsoeuer our aduersaries say, that the heart and affection may pray, though the vnderstanding pray not, yet S. Paul saith, they speake in the ayre: their prayer is but winde, 1. Cor. 14. 9. and mine vnderstanding (saith the Apostle) is without fruite, vers. 14. Therefore not amisse did that godly martyr M. W. Schurz, compare the ridiculous gestures of the priest at Masse, being not vnderstood of the people, to the playing of an Ape: Fox pag. 106. col. 21. And one Iohn Ribarius was vniuallly troubled of Longland Bishop of Lincolne anno 1566. for saying, if we had our Pater noster in English, one should say it nine times, against once now: Fox pag. 984. col. 3. And was not that wholly and Bishoplike coynsaile thynke you of the Bishop of Caen to the Merindolians in France: that it was sufficient to know their Pater noster, and Creede in Latin: it was not necessarie to satisfaction to vnderstand or expound the articles of faith: for there were many Bishops, Curats, yet Doctors of Diuinitie, whom it would trouble to expound the Creede or Pater noster. Fox Martyrolog. pag. 949. col. 2.

Bellarmine answereth, that a prayer in an vnknowne tongue may be profitable, if there bee the intention of the heart, for the prayer is made vnto God, and it is sufficient if he vnderstand it: we see also, that they which are absent, who neither heare, nor vnderstand our prayers, yet may be profited by them: neither is the instruction or edification of the people any end of prayer, but it is a part of seruice that belongeth vnto God: Bellarmin. cap. 16. res. 2. & 4. lib. 2. Again, saith he, the Apostle doth not say that his prayer is without fruite, but onely his minde or vnderstanding, but his spirit and affection is profited: for he saith, thou verily giuest thanks well: and the Apostle speaketh of such a tongue as none doe vnderstand in the Church: but the Latin, though the common people vnderstand it not, yet many that know the language doe.

Ans. The heart cannot bee neere vnto God without faith, whatsoever intention it hath; but faith is ioyned with knowledge: he then that prayeth, he knoweth not what, can haue no faith or hope of those things, which he knoweth not. And if it were sufficient, that God vnderstood our prayer, then neede not the prayer to bee uttered by the voyce, because God knoweth the thoughts of the heart. Secondly, they which are absent vnderstand not the prayers made for them, because they know them not: and they are praised for, they pray not: but the people is present, within hearing of the voyce, and they all offer vp our prayer, therefore they ought to vnderstand it. Thirdly, it is an absurd answer, that publike reading is not for the peoples instruction: it hath no vse nor end, in respect of God, who neede not to receiue any information, or to haue his memorie renewed by reading of stories: wherefore it is either in vaine, or else the end thereof is the peoples instruction. And if prayer be a part of Gods worship, which must proceede from the loue of God, and God is to be loued, with all our heart, our soule and minde, Matth. 22. 37. then our prayers must not bee made with a bare intention onely, but with knowledge and vnderstanding: for God requireth both the heart, the minde and the soule. Further, where the Apostle saith, my spirit praieeth, but my minde is without fruite, he doth not so speake, as though the spirit (that is the affection) could pray without the vnderstanding: but by the spirit is vnderstood the spirituall gift of speaking with tongues, as Hierome, Sedulius, Primasius expound this place, as they are cited by Esperienus: de Christi Mediator. pag. 234. g. So that the meaning is this, he for his owne part, that hath the gift of tongues, praieeth or giueth thanks well, knowing and vnderstanding what he praieeth; but the vnderstanding of other, that heare, is not edified. Fifthly, and therefore the Apostle misliking that any should so pray, not being vnderstood of others, saith, I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the vnderstanding also, vers. 15. And that the affection cannot be good in prayer without the vnderstanding, and that such prayer is without fruit, Saint Ambrose expounding this place saith: Quem fructum habere possit, qui ignorat quae loquatur? What fruit can he haue, who knoweth not what he speaketh? Sixtly, neither were these strange tongues vnderstood of none in the Church, for there was also the gift of interpretation, as well as the gift of tongues, vers. 27. and yet many times your Latin seruice is vnderstood of none in the Church, no not of the Priest that saith it: as may appeare by that Priest that spake false Latin, when he baptized, saying, In nomine patris, filii, & spiritus sancti: Which baptism was called into question: and for better resolution, they were faine to post vp to Rome to Pope Zacharie, who after much consultation determined that notwithstanding the false Latin, the baptism was good: Dionys. pag. 3. d. cap. 86. And that many popish priests are no better Clerkes now a daies, then they were in those times, let vs heare what Erasmus saith: Quaerendum sacerdotum vulgus habet magis facias sua verba, quae nec ipsi qui sonant intelligunt: Though now a daies the most sort of Priests doe so magnifie their Latin words, which they vnderstand not, that speake them: Prefat. in Hieron. epist. Paulino. tom. 4.

Argum. 3. In the time of the Law, all things pertaining to their publike prayer, benedictions, thankgiuings, sacrifices, were celebrated in their vulgar tongue. 2. Chron. chap. 29. Ezechias commaunded the Leuites to praise God with the Psalmes of David and Asaph, which no doubt were in the Hebrue tongue: If they did so in the shadowes of the Law, much more ought we now, who, as our Sauour saith, ought to pray, spiritu & veritate, in spirit and truth. Argum. Protestanti. disput. Westmonast.

We will conclude with Augustine: Quare dicta sunt, nisi ut sciantur? quare sonauerunt, nisi ut audiantur? quare audita sunt, nisi ut intelligantur? Tract. in Ioh. 21. Why are things spoken in the Church (saith he) but to be knowne? why are they pronounced but to be heard? why are they heard but to be vnderstood? Ergo. Lessons, and Scriptures, and publike prayers must bee vsed in a knowne tongue, and easie to be vnderstood.

It was thus also decreed not long since in a general Councell: Concil. Lateranens. sub Innocent. 3. c. 9. Quoniam in plerisque partibus intra eandem ciuitatem permixti sunt populi diuersarum linguarum, distillat precipimus, ut pontifices huiusmodi ciuitatum, prouideant viros idoneos, qui secundum diuersitates regionum & linguarum diuina officia suis celebrent, & ecclesiastica sacramenta ministrent: Because in many places, in one and the same citie there be mixed together people of diuers languages, we do straightly charge the Bishops of those cities to prouide able men, to celebrate diuine seruice, and minister the Sacraments of the Church vnto them, according to the diuersitie of their rites and languages.

What could be sayd plainer, for the celebrating of diuine seruice in the vulgar tongue? Belarmine thus would answer this authoritie, that Innocentius decree is to bee vnderstoode onely of the Greeke and Latine tongues, and of no other; and that he would haue the seruice of the Church celebrated in these two tongues and no other. Ans. 1. This appeareth to be a weake answer, for the decree maketh mention of people, diuersarum linguarum, of diuers languages; and therefore he would haue the diuine office celebrated according to the diuersitie of their tongues. But diuers tongues impie not a dualitie onely of two, but a pluralitie of many. 2. This Canon prouideth, that seruice shall be said in diuers languages, because of the diuersitie of the people: but what need this prouision, if that the vnderstanding of the people should not be respected? for otherwise one language might serue diuers people. 3. A little before, if the Iesuite be remembred, he said, that many hundred yeares agoe, long before Innocentius time, neither the Greeke in Grecia, nor the Latine in Italie were the vulgar tongues, nor commonly vnderstoode, chap. 15. and yet now he graunteeth, that Innocentius would haue Greeke and Latine Seruice, because of the diuersitie of the people; that is, to their vnderstanding: so Belarmine neither agreeth with himselfe, nor with their owne Canons.

Lastly, in defence of this truth, that praers ought to be vsed in the vulgar tongue, Iohn Ardelius, and Iohn Simson gaue their liues. For pag. 1583. col. 1. and Iohn Hallingdale, pag. 2026. See the confession also of Master Rogers before Winchester, pag. 1485. col. 2. and of Master Bradford, pag. 1617. col. 2. holy Martyrs: let the Papists shew the like constancie in their popish professors if they can.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION: OF THE authoritie of the Scriptures.

The Papists.

THe Papistes of former times doubted not to say, that the Scripture is not authentically without the authoritie of the Church: so Echlinus saith, so Pighius, that the authoritie of the Scripture dependeth of the authoritie of the Church necessarilie. Hermanus a Papist most impudently affirmeth, that the Scripture should be of no more credite then Æsops fables, without the approbation of the Church: a fowle blasphemie. But our Papistes of later time, being ashamed of their forefathers ignorance, they say that the Scriptures in themselves are perfect, sufficient, authentically, but that to vs it appeareth not so; neither are we bound to take them for Scripture without the authoritie of the Church: so Canus, Belarmine, Stapleton. So that (say they) in respect of vs the Church hath absolute authoritie to determine, which is Scripture, which not. Ex Whita-chur. quæst. 3. de Script. cap. 1.

Argum. 1. There is no more certaine authoritie, then of the Church: Ergo the Church must determine of Scripture, scilicet Stapleton. We answer. First, the Maiestie of the Scriptures themselves is more certaine, and the inward testimonie of the spirit, without the which we cannot be perswaded of the truth and authoritie of the Scripture. Secondly, if they meane by the church, the Synagogue of Rome, it hath nothing to doe to iudge of Scripture, being the seate of Antichrist: neither is the authoritie of that Church to be credited, but rather suspected and mistrusted.

Argum. 2. There are certaine writings of the Prophets and Apostles not Canonically; and other writings of some that were no Prophets, made Canonically: Ergo the Church hath authoritie to iudge of Scripture, scilicet Stapleton. For the first, where he obiecteth that there are many writings of the Prophets, as of Salomon, Nathan, Abiya, Ieda, 2. Chron. 9. 29. that are lost, and if they were extant, should not be receiued: We answer. First, it is not to be doubted of, but some part of the Canonically Scripture is lost. Secondly, how proueth he that if they were extant, they were not to be acknowledged for Scripture?

Stapleton further obiecteth, that S. Pauls Epistle written to the Laodiceans whereof mention is made, Colos. 4. 16. was neuer receiued into the Canon. We answer, there is no such Epistle mentioned in that place sent to the Laodiceans, but from Laodicea, as it is in the Originall, which was not like to haue been of the Apostles writing to them, who at that time had not seene the Laodiceans, Colos. 2. 1. but an Epistle rather written by them to the Apostle; which S. Paul would haue the Colossians reade, because it might containe somewhat, which did concerne them: that Epistle therefore, that carneth S. Pauls name to the Laodiceans, is but a forged, and bastard writing, and therefore worthilie reiectet out of the Canon. This was the iudgement also of a generall Councell. Nicen. 2. actio. 6. tom. 5. Inter epistolas diuini Apostoli, quædam fertur ad Laodiceenses, quam patres nostri tanquam alienam reprobauerunt: Amongst the Epistles of the diuine Apostle there is one counted, bearing the name to the Laodiceans, which our fathers haue reiectet as a bastard and foraine writing. Their sentence is that this Epistle was fained, and neuer written by S. Paul.

To the second, that bookes not made by Prophets are iudged Canonically, as of Toby, Indisb:

We

We answer, that these bookes ought not to be canonically; neither that order they were so called till of late it was decreed by Councils of no great antiquitie: for in the Apostolike Council and other ancient Councils, they were deemed not to be Canonically.

Argument. Certaine bookes of the new Testament before doubted of, as the Epistle to the Hebrews, the Apocalypse, the second Epistle of Peter, the second of John, are received into authoritie by the Church: and other bookes, as the Gospel of Thomas, Mathias, Iudas, &c. were rejected by the authoritie of the Church. We answer, first, we denie not, but that the Church is to discern betweene the true Scriptures and forged bookes: but this she doth not of her owne authoritie, but following the direction of Gods spirit speaking in those writings: for the Church looking into the sacred and diuine matter of the Apostles writings, was moued to acknowledge them for the word of God, though of some they were doubted of: and finding the other to be fabulous bookes did by the direction of the same spirit reject them. Secondly, Augustine and Chrysostome think that the Canon of Scripture might be confirmed in the Apostles time, Iohn being the sumner of them all, who both acknowledged the true writings of the Apostles, and condemned the contrarye. If it be so (the spirit of God in the Apostles having determined this question already concerning the Canonically Scripture) the Church hath no authoritie to alter or change that decree. Concerning this matter S. Augustine writeth thus vnto S. Hierome, Epist. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. non a quibuslibet, sed ab ipse Apostolicis: ac per hoc in Canonibus aut legitur aut non legitur, non per se verax, et indubitan possit. The truth of the diuine Scriptures was receiued into the Canon of authoritie by none other but the Apostles themselves, and therefore is vndoubtedly true. The Apostles then by the spirit of God haue set downe the Canon of the Scriptures, which the Church is bound to receiue, and beleue: it hath no authoritie to make the Canon of the Scriptures: 2. Cor. 13. 1.

Argument. The Church is more ancient then Scripture, and was before it. Ergo is of more authoritie then Scripture. Argument. Echij. Buchrad. 1. Hof. 1. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. Answer. We graunt, that the Scriptures, that is the word written, haue not been from the beginning: yet though there were a Church before the Scriptures, that is the word written, the word of God notwithstanding was before the Church, which is the faith now written, that was before written. Neither is the argument good, for alwaies that, which is more authoritie is not of greatest authoritie: for Iohn Baptist in respect of his office came before Christ, yet was not his authoritie greater.

WE doe not despise the sentence of the Church, as our aduersaries doe: but we doe reuerence the iudgement of the Church of God, and heare it with all obedience to whome we confesse it belongeth. 1. As a faithfull keeper or treasurer, carefully to preserve and keepe the holy Scriptures from being violated or corrupted by Hereticks or other enemies of Scripture. 2. According to her spirituall cunning, to discern the Scripture from other forged and bastard writings, as the Goldsmith doth the gold from other adulterate metall. 3. To propound and preach, and hold out the light of Gods truth to the people. 4. To interpret and expound Scripture according to the analogie of faith. Whitaker. quæst. 3. cap. 1. de scripturis. We confesse also as much, as hath been in former times decreed by the Papists themselves: Petrus de leysa. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. discernendi auctoritas scripturas veras ab adulteris: sic etiam potestatem habet interpretandi, eligendi ex eisdem scripturis elicendi, et explanandi dogmata. the Church hath power to discern true Scripture from false; also to interpret the Scripture, and out of the same to deriue and explan precepts of religion, that is to preach. But the Church ought not to settle Lords stamp vpon false doctrine, as the Papists doe in making Apocryphall bookes Canonically. Neither doe we onely beleue the Scripture, because of the Churches testimonie, nor chiefly, but because the spirit of God doth so teach vs, and the Scriptures themselves doe testifie for themselves: so that every man is bound to acknowledge the Scripture, though there were no publike approbation of the Church: Paul. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. Galas. 6. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.

Argument. 1. The Iesuite doth reason strongly for vs: he bringeth five arguments to proue the Scripture to be the word of God: veritas historicorum, the constant and perpetuall truth of the Prophetes; incredibilis scripturarum conspiratio, the wonderfull harmonie and consent of holy writers of the Scripture: testis est Dominus ipse, the spirit of God is a principall witness vnto vs: testis est ipsa Scriptura, the Scripture it selfe beareth witness, as 2. Tim. 3. all Scripture is given by inspiration: testis est diuinarum numerus infinitus miraculorum: lastly, the many and great miracles wrought by the Prophetes and Apostles doe testifie for the truth thereof. He maketh no mention at all of the testimonie of the Church, but saith the same that we hold, that the spirit of God inwardly working in our hearts by the Scriptures themselves, which we find to be most perfect, consonant, true, of singular maiestie, doth teach vs which is the word of God. Beilarmi. de verbo Dei. lib. 1. c. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. he Those arguments or inducements, which do arise of the consideration of the Scriptures themselves (as Beilarmi here setteth downe some, and other may be added vnto them) are more forcible nible to persuade us, that it is the word of God, then the bare testimonie of the Church: First, doe divine maistie, the singular maistie of the Scriptures in the books of the Prophets and Apostles; and of the heavenly doctrine therein contained: wherein none of the writings of the Philosophers or Orators are to be compared unto them. Secondly, beside the maistie of the matter, the parents of stile, gravitie and divine beile of speech, doe commend the excellencie of Scripture.

 Thirdly, the antiquitie of these holy writings sheweth them to be divine: for the books of Mos- es are found to be more ancient, then all the writings in the world: Fourthly, the propheticall predictions and propheties, which afterward were accomplished, yea the very names of certain men were set down many yeres before they were borne, as Ishai, 1. King. 1. 3. Cyrus, Esay. 44. 28.
 Fifthly, the wonderfull and strange miracles, which were wrought by the Prophets and Apostles:
 Sixtly, the testimonies also of Martyrs, which gave their lives in defence of the holy doctrine set forth in Scripture, doe evidently declare, that they are divine writings: Seventhly, the enemies of the Scriptures, which have attempted all meanes to extinguish them, and could not prevaile, doe set forth the maistie, and authoritie thereof: Eighthly, the writers also of the Scriptures the Prophets and Apostles, doe not a little to beare witness: who were but simple and plaine men, as shepaherds, hearthmen, fishermen, before they were called and set apart of God for this worke: whereas by it is apparant, that God, who inspired them with so great graces, was the author of the Scriptures: Calvin lib. 1. inst. cap. 1. These are the motives, which easily convince, that the Scriptures are no humane, but divine writings: and they are more able to move us, then the bare testimonie of the Church: yet persuade us they cannot, which is the onely worke of the spirit, but onely prepare our hearts, and stirre us up: Ergo, much lesse is the authoritie of the Church able to doe the same, as it is not able to beare witness of the same: Calvin lib. 1. inst. cap. 1.
Argum. 2. The Scripture giveth authoritie to the Church: Ergo, the Church giveth not au-thoritie to the Scripture: the first we prove by our adversaries owne confession: for being asked, how they know that the Church erreth not, they allege such places of Scripture, as Matth. 28.
I will with you to the end of the world, and the like: how then doth the Church give authoritie to Scripture, seeing it taketh her warrant and authoritie from thence? The Iesuite himselfe saith, cha- pitulum certum vel melius Scriptura, nothing is more certaine or notoriously known then Scripture.
 And againe, secunda Scriptura est regulatradendi certissima, the holy Scripture is the most certaine rule of faith. Bellarm. de verbo. 1. 2. If the authoritie of Scripture then be most certaine, what reason is it, that they should depend vpon the iudgement of the Church, which is nothing so certaine?
 The lesse certain might (rather and so doth indeed) depend of the more certain, the Church vpon the Scripture, not contrariwise: for the Scriptures are the foundation of the Church, Eph. 2. 20.
Argum. 3. Whicke, 3. Calvin lib. 1. inst. cap. 1. To beleefe the Scripture is a worke of faith: the Church cannot infuse faith into us, but the spirit of God: Ergo the spirit of God not the Church teacheth us to beleefe Scripture:
argum. 4. Whicke, 1. 8. Calvin lib. 1. inst. cap. 1. Again, if the Scriptures depend vpon the approbation of the Church, then the promises of salvation and eternall life contained in the Scriptures doe so likewise: but it is absurd to thinke that the promises of God doe stand vpon the allowance of men, Ergo neither the Scriptures, argum.
Calvin lib. 1. inst. cap. 7. Argum. 5. The Scripture is the chiefe iudge, and ought so to be in all controversies: we may appeale from the Church to the Scripture, not from the Scripture to the Church: the Church is subject to the Scriptures, the rule of faith is in the Scriptures, not in the Church: for the compa-nie of the faithfull which is the Church, are ruled by faith: they doe not overrule faith: neither are a rule thereof: the Church is a point of beleefe, as in the Creed, not a rule or measure thereof:
Ergo the Church is not the chiefe iudge of Scripture, but it selfe to be iudged by Scripture. Whicke, argum. 6. Calvin lib. 1. inst. cap. 1. We have euident places of Scripture, Iohn. 5. 34. faith Christ, I receiue no witness of men: but the Scripture is the voice of Christ, and of the same authoritie. Ergo, ver. 36. I have a greater testimonie then of Iohn, the Scriptures doe testifie of me. ver. 9. The testimonie of the Scriptures is greater then the record of Iohn: Ergo then of the Church. 1. Ioh. 5. 6. the spirit beareth witness, that the spirit, that is, the doctrine of the spirit, is the truth. And ver. 9. if we receiue the wit-nesse of man, the witness of God is greater, Ergo, not the iudgement of the Church, but the wit-nesse of the spirit doth certifie and assure us of the truth and authoritie of Scripture. Calvin lib. 1. inst. cap. 1.
 I will adde one saying out of Augustine: Adhuc certum est, usquam a Christi auctoritate discorde, non enim reperio valentiorum. Contra Academic. lib. 3. cap. 20. I am resolu'd for no cause to leaue the authoritie of Christ (speaking in the Scriptures) for I finde none more forcible: Ergo the autho-ritie of Scripture is above the Church, which is denied by the Rheimistes, annos. 1. Gal. 3. 1. I will here vrge them with their owne authoritie: Thomas Aquinas hath this distinction: that God worketh two waies; first by mediocr causes, as the Prophet saith, Psalm. 138. Thou hast made me, that

seeth not what fillie answers these be? Augustine thus writeth of this matter, In q̄ (inquit) quæ a- partē in scripturis posita sunt, inueniuntur ea omnia, quæ fidem continent morisque viuendi: De doctrinâ Christianâ lib. 2. cap. 9. The plaine and easie places of Scripture containe all things necessarie vnto faith and good life: Ergo, the doctrine of saluation in the Scriptures is not hard and difficult, but easie of good Christians to be vnderstood.

Taletan. 4. cap. 16. it was thus decreed: Qui Apocalypsin Iohannis à Pascha vsq; ad Pentecostem Mis- sarum tempore in ecclesia non prædicauerit, excommunicationis sententiam habebit: He that refuseth to preach to the people in the time of diuine seruice from Easter to Whitsonde the Apocalypse of
S. Iohn, shall haue the sentence of excommunication. By this appeareth, that this Councell deemed not the rest of the Scripture so very hard, seeing they so streightly enioyne the reading and preaching of the hardest booke in Scripture to the people: which some reformed Churches euen at this day doe forbear the reading of.

Further, if that by the Emperiall law it was provided, Ut ad omnium notitiam, constitutiones va- leant peruenire: That the constitutions should come to euery mans knowledge: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 1.
lege. 3. iustinian: And againe, Constitutionum nostri codicis inbar omnibus clareat, leg. 3. That as the Sunne beames our constitutions should shine vpon all. How much more comfortable and perspicuous to all is the Sunne light of the Scriptures?

I will also vrge them with their owne decrees: Decret. par. 1. dist. 38. cap. 9. Ignorantia scriptura- rum, ignorantia Christi: The ignorance of the Scripture, is the ignorance of Christ. If then the people be kept from the knowledge of Scripture, they cannot attaine to the knowledge of Christ.

Hearc also what a writer of your owne alleageth to this purpose out of Psalm. Parnuli, magni, fortes, infirmi, habent in scripturis unde alantur & satientur: Great and small, strong and weake, may finde nourishment in the Scriptures. And in the same place he hath these verses:

Qua nullis animis, nullis non congruis animis

Lacte rigans paruos, pane cibans validos.

Which may be translated thus.

No age so young, no wit so small,

which Scripture doth not fit:

Ther's milke for babes, and yet witball

If then children and little ones, and men of simple wit may be admitted to the reading of Scripture, it seemeth not that it should be so difficult and obscure, as they would beare vs in hand.

I will in the last place adde the iudgement of a reuerend and learned man, that faithfull martyr, and blessed seruant of God D. Taylor, who in an epistle of his confuteth a certaine sermon made by a popish Priest in Hadley, whereof the said D. Taylor was Pastor: He saith, the Scripture is full of darke sentences: but indeed it is called David, a candle to our feete, and a light to our steps.
Our Sauour Christ calleth his word the light, which euill doers doe flie from, &c. For p. 1528.

THE SIXT QUESTION: CONCERNING the interpretation of Scripture.

THis question doth deuide it selfe into three parts: First, concerning the diuers senses of the Scripture. Secondly, to whom the chiefe authoritie to expound Scripture is committed.
Thirdly, what meanes must be vsed in the interpretation of Scripture.

THE FIRST PART OF THE SIXT QVE- stion: of the diuers senses of Scripture.

The Papists.

THere are two strange assertions of our aduersaries concerning this matter. First, they affirme that the Scripture may haue diuers senses and meanings in the same place. The sense of the Scripture is either literall (say they) and historicall, which is the first and most proper sense, or spirituall, that is an higher sense deriued out of the other. The literall sense, which there is gathered directly, and immediatly out of the words: the spirituall, which hath another reference, then to that, which the words doe properly signifie. The literall is of two sorts, either plaine and simple, or else figuratiue: as where Christ saith, I haue other sheepe, which are not of this fold, &c. Iohn 10.
Whereby he vnderstandeth other people beside the Iewes. The spirituall is of three kindes; Allegoricall, Tropologicall, Anagogicall: they shew by particular instance and induction, that the Scripture beside the literall sense may haue these also.

The Allegoricall sense is, when besides the plaine historicall and literall meaning, somewhat is signified, which by an allegorie is referred vnto Christ, or the Church, as Gal. 4. beside the truth of the ſtorie of the bond and free woman, S. Paul applieth it vnto the two Teſtaments: Ergo, one place may haue more ſenſes then one.

The Tropologicall ſenſe is, when as there is ſomewhat ſignified appertaining to manners, as Deut. 25. Thou ſhalt not muſe the mouth of the oxe that treadeth out the corne: this by S. Paul is applied to the miniſters of the Goſpell, 1. Cor. 9. Ergo, the Scripture hath diuers ſenſes.

The Anagogicall ſenſe is, when the place is applied to decipher and ſet forth the kingdome of heauen and eternall things, as Pſal. 94. I ſware vnto them, if they ſhould enter into my reſt: this is literally vnderſtood of the reſt in Canaan, and ſpiritually of life eternall: Ergo, many ſenſes. Thus reaſoneth Beſarm. lib. 3. de ſcriptur. cap. 3.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme that of one place of Scripture there can bee but one ſenſe, which we call the literal ſenſe, when as the words are either taken properly, or figuratiuely to expreſſe the thing which is meant: as in this place, The ſeede of the woman ſhall breake the Serpents head: the literal ſenſe is of Chriſt, who ſhould triumph ouer Satan, though it bee ſpoken in a borrowed and figuratiue ſpeech. There can bee therefore but one ſenſe, which is the literal: as for thoſe three kindes, they are not diuers ſenſes, but diuers applications onely and collections out of one and the ſame ſenſe: as S. Ambroſe ſaith in 17. cap. Luc. Non vna tantum figura, ſed multiplex in ſcripturis eſſe conſuevit, ut vnus ſermo plures ſpecies comprehendat: The Scripture is accuſtomed to afford not one, but diuers figures, that one ſaying may comprehend diuers kindes vnder it: that is, diuers ſpeciall ſenſes, or applications of one generall ſenſe.

Argum. 1. It ſhall appeare by a ſeueral induktion of all theſe kindes: In the firſt example of the Allegoricall ſenſe, Galat. 4. the Apoſtle ſaith not that there is a double ſenſe, but that it may be allegorically applied, which is hiſtorically ſet downe. There is then but one ſenſe of the place, part whereof conſiſteth in the ſtorie, part in the allegorie: ſo that the whole ſenſe is contained in them both. Concerning the ſecond example of the Tropologicall: there is not a twofold ſenſe of that place, but one whole generall ſenſe, that as the mouth of the oxe was not to bee muſled, ſo the miniſter of the Goſpell muſt bee provided for. Likewise of the Anagogicall kinde: it is not one ſenſe to vnderſtand the reſt of Canaan, another of the kingdome of God: but there is one whole ſenſe, that as they for their Idolatrie were deprived of the land of promiſe, ſo wee ſhould take heede leaſt by our diſobedience we loſe the hope of the kingdome of heauen: So wee conclude that thoſe are not diuers ſenſes, but one ſenſe diuerſly applied.

Argum. 2. The literal ſenſe is the onely ſenſe of the place, becauſe out of that ſenſe only may an argument ſtrongly be framed: wherefore ſeeing allegories and tropes doe not conclude, they are not the ſenſes of the place. An allegorie or type may be part of the literal ſenſe, and then it concludeth: but when an allegorie is framed beſide the literal ſenſe, it concludeth not; and therefore is no part of the ſenſe: as to reaſon thus, the oxes mouth muſt not be muſled: Ergo, the Miniſter muſt bee maintained, it followeth well, becauſe it is part of the ſenſe. But allegories deuſed beſide the ſenſe proue not, though they may illuſtrate.

Argum. 3. That propertie is the ſenſe of the place, which the text alwaies yeeldeth: for no text of Scripture is without his ſenſe: but the ſpirituall ſenſe is not in euery place to be found, but the literal ſenſe alwaies. And this the Ieſuite confeſſeth: Non inueniuntur ſpirituales ſenſus in omni ſententia ſcriptura: The ſpirituall ſenſe is not found in euery ſentence of Scripture: Ergo, it is not the ſenſe properly.

Here alſo I will vrge the Ieſuite with his owne teſtimonie: Spirituales ſenſus licet adificent, & tamen non ſemper conſtat, an ſint à ſpiritu ſancto intenti: The ſpirituall ſenſes, though they may edifie, yet it is not alwaies certaine, whether they bee intended by the ſpirit: but the literal ſenſe is certaine alwaies to bee the ſenſe of the ſpirit, Beſarm. cap. 3. The literal ſenſe therefore is the onely ſenſe, becauſe it is the ſenſe of the ſpirit.

I will alſo oppoſe againſt them their owne decrees: Sext. decretal. lib. 5. tit 12. c. 3. Nicholaus 4. Gloſſe non ſiant, niſi ſenſum per quas verbi ſenſus, vel conſtruſtio, quaſi grammaticaliter ad literam, vel intelligibiliter exponatur: Let there bee no gloſſes made, but ſuch, whereby the ſenſe or conſtruſtion of the word may bee grammatically expounded according to the letter. This decree alloweth none but the grammaticall and literal ſenſe.

The Papiſts.

8. Error.

THeir other aſſertion is this, that it is lawfull to allegorize ſcripture both in the old and new Teſtament, Beſarm. lib. 3. cap. 3. They reaſon thus, Rhemens. annot. Hebr. 4. ver. 5. The Apoſtle applieth the reſt of the Sabbath to the eternall reſt: Ergo, the like applications of the Fathers are lawfull. See Annot. Hebr. 7. 2. The Apoſtle (ſay they) findeth great myſteries, euen in the very names: Ergo, it is lawfull to make allegories.

The

WE say it is dangerous to make allegories of Scripture, without the warrant and direction of Gods spirit. This was the occasion that diuers of the ancient fathers greatly erred: as the Iesuite himselfe giueth an instance of Origen, who doth allegorize the storie of Genesis concerning the terrestriall paradise. And it is much to bee wondered at that our aduersaries doe so much stand for the allegorizing of Scripture, beyond the litterall sense, seeing that, contrary to their owne iudgement, who so much esteeme of tropes and allegories, in these words of Christ, hoc est corpus meum, they stand onely vpon the literall and verball sense, admitting no trope, figure or allegorie at all. I will put them in minde here of a saying of an old popish Bishop, aboue two hundred yeres agoe: The words in Scripture (saith he) must not bee iudged by the sense which they make, but the sense whereof they are made, the constructions in Scripture are not bound to Donatus rules, where faith is farre placed from the capacite of reason: Sic Iohann. Tresnant. Episcop. Hereford. Fax pag. 463. How well the Papists now a daies doe follow this rule it appeareth by the former example.

To their arguments our learned countrie man D. Fulk answereth: First, it followeth not, because it was lawfull for the Apostles, gouerned by the spirit, to make allegories, that it is therefore lawfull for others. Secondly, when the fathers or any other writers can bee assured of the same spirit, which the holy writers had, and of the like dexteritie in vnderstanding and expounding Scripture, they may likewise be bold to make allegories.

Let vs heare what Augustine saith of this matter: Sicut mihi multum errare videntur, qui multarum gestas aliquid aliud prater id, quod eo modo gestu sunt significare arbitratur: ita multi non audere, qui prorsus ibi omnia significationibus allegoricis involuta esse credunt. As they are much deceived, which thinke that the stories in the Scripture doe signifie no other thing, but that which was done: so they are too rash and bold, that would draw all things to allegories, which they read in Scripture. Ergo, it is not lawfull for any to inuene allegories of Scripture, as it seemeth good to themselves.

Council. Bracaren. l. can. 30. it was thus decreed: Placuit, ut nihil veteris testamenti poetice compositionis in Ecclesia psalatur. It seemeth good to vs that no part of the old Testament should be sung in meeeter in the Church, or composed after a poetical manner. But what do they else but follow poetically fictions, that draw the Scripture as they list, to imagined allegories? Spind. August. l. 13. Conciomator. fo ad caput auditorum demittat, nunc Catechista non agat, nunc interpretis scripturam, nunc vti tiorum reprehensorem, nunc doctorem mysteriorum. The Preacher must apply himselfe to his auditors capacite, sometime playing the Catechist, sometime interpreting Scriptures, other while reprehending vice, and againe vnfolding mysteries. He must then vnfold mysteries, not allegorize Scripture at his pleasure, and make more mysteries.

Let them heare also their owne decrees: Decr. par. 1. di. 7. c. 4. Psalms prophetas et prophetas accipere, qui aliter scripturas verba accipiunt, quam spiritus sanctus fecit. We vnderstand them to bee false prophets, which doe take the words of Scripture otherwise, then the spirit foundeth. And againe, ibid. cap. 14. Clemens 1. Multa quidem, et ambigua videntur peritum legimus, et ex qua legunt, ferunt similitudines captiui. Certaine wittie conceited men in your parts, as I heare, doe gather similitudes and resemblances out of that which they read: which vie is forbidden in this decree: the former can not callet them, imagines, vmbrae, phantasmas: shadows, and phantasies. And I wish in my heart, that in handling of Scripture, this age of ours were not too much giuen to follow such wittie rather then pidle conceites and phantasies.

THE SECOND PART OF THE SIXTH QUESTION

Alion: to whom the chiefe authoritie to expound Scripture is committed.

The Papists.

IT was decreed in the Council of Trene, that Scripture should bee expounded, as the Church 9. Error. expoundeth it, and according to the common and consonant consens of the fathers. 2. 4. The Rhotinists say, that the sense of the Scriptures must bee learned of the fathers and pastors of the Church, Prefat. fol. 18. If the fathers agree not, the matter is referred to a generall Council: if there it be not determined, we must haue recourse to the Pope and his Cardinals. The Iesuite dare not referre the matter to the Pope alone to expound Scripture, but ioyneth the Colledge of Cardinals with him, Bellarm. lib. 3. de script. cap. 3. Argum. 1. They object that place Deut. 17. 9. where the people are commanded to resort vnto the Priest or Iudge in doubtfull matters: Ergo, there ought to bee a chiefe and supreme Iudge in Ecclesiasticall matters, Bellarmino. We answer: First, here the ciuill Magistrate and the Iudges are ioyned together, as well: 1. 1. Wherefore if they will gather hereby, that the Pope must bee supreme preme Iudge in all Ecclesiasticall matters, then the Emperour ought to be as well in ciuill. Bel- larmine answereth, that by the Iudge is vnderstood the chiefe Priest: or if it be taken for the ciuill Iudge, he is: but to execute the sentence given by the Priest. Contra. 1. It appeareth in the 12. verse, that the high Priest and the chiefe Iudge are not all one: that man, that shall sit on the high Priest, shall be the Iudge, howsoever the vulgar Latin readeth otherwise. 2. We graunt that the Priests office was to declare to the Iudge the word of God, but not to giue sentence: for the Priest had not to doe with matters of blood, which are named amongst other causes, vers. 8. Secondly, the text saith, they shall come to the Priests, vers. 9. assigning many, not to one onely Priest. Thirdly, they must iudge according to the law, vers. 11. not as they list themselves. Bel- larmine saith, that this is no condition, if they shall iudge according to the law, for then the people should iudge the sentences of the Priest: but it is a promise, &c. Contra. 1. We say not that the people should iudge of the sentence of the Priest, but the law of God it selfe: as the Disciples by the Scriptures did examine the Apostles preachings, Act. 17. who were not inferiour in office in the Gospell to the Priests in the law. 2. Neither had the Iudges any such promise not to erre in iudgement, but so farre forth as they followed the law: for there were among them vnrightheous Iudges, as Abimelech, Iudg. 9. and the two Elders, that condemned Susanna, which booke is good Scripture with them. Fourthly, here is no mention made of doubts in interpreting Scripture, but of controuersies that may fall out betweene man and man, either ecclesiasticall to be decided by the Priest, or ciuill by the Magistrate. Fifthly, we graunt that in euery countrey there ought to bee a supreme and high seate of iudgement for the determining of controuersiall matters betweene men: but it followeth not that there should be a supreme Iudge ouer the whole Church, especial- ly in such matters as this concerning the sense of the Scriptures, which is not committed to the iudgement of men, neither is any such controuersie named in that place, vers. 8.

Argum. 2. Ecclesiast. 12. 11. The Wiseman compareth the words of the wise to nayles which are fastened, given by one pastor. In this place Salemon teacheth, that men ought to rest in the sentence of the chiefe pastor, without any further inquirie or search. And if the chiefe pastor in the old Testament had such authoritie, much more the chiefe Priest in the new: Ergo, we ought to rest in the sentence and iudgement of the Pope with his assistants, Bel- larmine cap. 4. argum. 3.

We answer, the wise men are here vnderstood to be the Pastors and Ministers of Gods word; but this one pastor signifyeth neither the high Priest in the old law, nor the Pope in the new, but Iesus Christ the high shephard for our soules. What great boldnes is this to attribute that to the Pope which is onely proper to Christ.

Argum. 3. They also picke out some places in the new Testament, as Matth. 16. 19. to thee will I giue the keys of the Kingdome of heauen. Christ saith so to Peter: Ergo, the Pope hath author- itie to expound Scripture. We answer: first, by the keys here is meant commision to preach the Gospell, not onely to expound doubts. Secondly, they were giuen to all the Apostles, not to Peter onely, Matth. 28. vers. 18. 19. Cum ibi. Quis grauius cap. 9. ex fide. Ceteri Apostoli cum Petro par conseruatum honore et potestate acceptum. The rest of the Apostles were receiued together with Peter into the same fellowship of dignitie and authoritie or power. Thirdly, the Pope is not suc- cessor of Peter, no more then any other godly Bishop, nor so much, vnlesse he follow Peter steps: As S. Hierome saith to Damasus as it is alleged in your own decrees: Deor. p. 1. can. 24. qu. 1. 14. Petri et sedem et sedem tenetis. You hold both Peters seate and faith. So they abuse that place, Matth. 16. 19. Ite, quodcumque ligaueris super terram, &c. Ergo, the Bishops and chiefe pastors must expound the doubts in Scripture. Ans. First, our Saviour speaketh here of the discipline of the Church, of corrections and admonitions, not of interpreting Scripture, which dependeth not vpon the will and pleasure of Pope, Cardinals, or Bishop Counsell, but must bee tried by the Scriptures themselves. Secondly, we must giue eare to the Church; but with a double condition: first, we must be sure it is the Church of God, as our Saviour himselfe expoundeth, vers. 20. Where two or three are gathered together in my name, &c. so that euery congregation is not the Church, but that which is assembled in the name and authoritie of Christ. Secondly, we must not heare them,

contrarie to the Scriptures, but so long as they doe teach the doctrine of Christ: for otherwise an Angel from heauen is not to be heard, Galath. 1. 8. Argum. 4. S. Paul went to Ierusalem to conferre with S. Peter, James and Iohn, otherwise he saith he should haue runne in vaine: Ergo, the iudgement of faith belongeth to Peter, and Peters successor. Ans. First, S. Paul went not vp to Ierusalem of necessitie, as though he needed to haue his doctrine confirmed by the former Apostles: for he himselfe saith contrarie, Galat. 2. 6. They that seemed to be the chiefe communicated nothing with me. And againe, Peter was rather conuincd by him, whom he openly rebuketh for a certaine slip of infirmitie, vers. 12. but he speaketh in res- pect of others, that said he taught contrarie to the Apostles, least he should haue runne in vaine. Secondly, Ambrase saith to this purpose, that Paul went vp to Ierusalem to set Peter free of ne- cessitie, cellis, Neque in aliquo alio, sed in eo, qui habet deum, sed propter affectum Apostolorum, & propter eorum. Number on learn anything of him, who had learned of Christ the author himself, but for love unto his fellow Apostle, and for concord sake. Andros in hunc locum.

Where is a more compendious way to come to the understanding of the Scripture. It were too long when we doubt of any place to stay till we have the generall consent of the pastors of the Church, or to expect a generall Councell, or goe up to Rome. And it were too much to trouble the Popes gravitie with every question; the Lord hath shewed vs a more easie and steady way, so that wee neede not ascend to heaven, or compass the earth, or passe the Alpes: but the word of God is amongst vs, the Scriptures themselves, and the spirit of God opening our hearts doe teach vs how to vnderstand them. And yet wee say not, as they doe falsely charge vs, that wee allow every private mans interpretation of Scriptures, and refusing the judgement of the Pastors of the Church, place the gift of interpretation in every mans particular breast. Bellar. de verb. delib. 3. cap. 4. But wee denie, that the interpretation of Scripture is assigned to any succession of Pastors, or tied to any place, or persons: and, yet graunt, that it is the office of the Pastors and Ministers, to whom the dispensation of the word is committed, not of private men to expound Scripture according to the sense and meaning of the spirit; and to discern betweene the orthodoxall and hereticall interpretations: yet they are but the instruments, the spirit of God speaking in the Scriptures is the interpreter of himselfe; and in this vnderstanding we consent to a decree of one of your owne Synodes: Synodus synod. decret. 4. de fide. Ecclesia catholicum sensum ab heretico, germanum ab adulterio discernit. The Church doth discern the Catholike sense from the hereticall, the true from the false. It hath no power to make or coyne interpretations beside Scripture, but to discern and distinguish. Our arguments now follow.

Argum. 1. That only hath power to give the sense of Scripture, which doth beget vs faith: the spirit onely by the Scriptures begetteth faith, Rom. 10. 17. faith cometh by hearing the word. Ergo, the spirit of God is the onely interpreter of Scripture. The proposition also is cleare, for seeing the Scripture is the true sense and meaning thereof, if any should give the sense of the Scripture, but that which worketh faith, then vpon him should our faith bee grounded. If the Pope therefore give the sense of Scripture, and our faith arise of the Scripture vnderstood, then our faith is builded vpon the Popes sense. argum. 17. bitach. 2. & 9.

Argum. 2. The Scriptures cannot be interpreted but by the same spirit, wherewith they were written: but that spirit is found no where but in the Scriptures. Ergo, The first part the Papists themselves graunt: the second is thus proved. The spirit of the Apostles is not given by secret inspiration, that fauour of Anabaptisme: where is it to be found? whether it is like that S. Peters spirit should be found in S. Popes chaire, or in his Epistles? or if they haue S. Peters spirit, where is S. Pauls found but in his writings? Yet it is all one spirit, and appeareth not elsewhere but in the Scriptures: where every man may finde it as well as the Pope: The spiritual man judgeth all things. 1. Cor. 2. 15. You haue an oymment from him that is holy, and you haue knowe all things. 1. Joh. 2. ver. 27. You neede not that any man teach you. By these places it is euident, that every faithful man by the spirit of God according to the measure of his gift, and qualitie of his calling may vnderstand the Scriptures. To this beareth witness that decree, Synod. Colonienf. pars. 2. cap. 4. Presbyteri in lege domini meditentur die & nocte & iudicia diuina exquirant & seruentur non propria presumptione, aut humano sensu, sed spiritu sancto dilatare. Let the Preachers and Presbyters meditate in the law of God day and night and search and trie out the diuine iudgements, not by their owne presumption, or humane sense, but according to the direction of the spirit. This Canon referreth Preachers to the vnderstanding of Scripture, not to the Pope or Cardinals, but to the spirit of God as the author; and the diligent searching of Scripture as the meane.

Argum. 3. The doctrine of the Church must bee examined by the Scriptures. Ergo, the Scriptures are not to stand to the iudgement of the Church. The former part is proved by the example of the Berroians, Act. 17. 11. If they did well in examining Pauls doctrine, much more may the decrees of the Pope, Church, Councels, be examined by the Scriptures. But they knew not whether Paul was an Apostlic or not, therefore they might examine his doctrine, faith the Jesuit.

Answ. First, they could not bee ignorant of his Apostleship, who was famous throughout the Churches. Secondly, they doubted only whether Paul was an Apostle, but we are sure the Pope is none, neither successor of any Apostle, but very Antichrist. Ergo, wee haue more iust cause to examine his decrees. Thirdly, if S. Pauls Apostleship might be doubted of, much more may the Popes authoritie be called into question.

Argum. 4. S. Paul faith, We are builded vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Ephes. 2. 20. The Pope nor his Church are not the foundation of the Saints: Ergo, wee are not to build vpon them nor their interpretation. Belarmine denieth the assumption, or second part, and faith, that the testimonie of the Church is a second foundation: for we know not which is the word built by the Church. resp. ad arg. 15. Ans. 1. The Iesuite speaketh absurdly in saying the Church is the foundation, the Church is the building, and the building and foundation cannot be all one. Secondly, there cannot be divers foundations, as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 3. 11. Other foundation can no man lay, then that which is laid, Iesus Christ. If it shall be objected, how then are Apostles said to be foundations? I answer, the persons of the Apostles is not the foundation, but their doctrine, which is the faith in Iesus: Thirdly, it is another error, that the Scriptures are not knowne but by the testimony of the Church; as partly hath been shewed before, and shall more afterwards, as Christ saith, John 5. 34. He did not receive the testimony of men; his owne works did witness of him; so the efficacy of the spirit speaking in the Scriptures doth testify of it, that it is the word.

Argum. 5. If the Pope have authoritie to iudge of Scripture, and that the sense of the Scripture without his approbation is not authentick, then it would follow, that the Pope is above Scripture, which were not onely a great absurditie, but a grievous blasphemy.

Bellesm. To be said to iudge of the Scripture may be taken two waies, either to iudge whether the Scripture be true or no: and who so thus iudgeth, should be above Scripture; but so doeth not the Pope: Or else to iudge of the sense of Scripture, which is not to be above Scripture, but above the private iudgements and interpretations of men, see Bellesm. lib. 3. cap. 16. Respons. ad argum. 12.

Ans. First to expound and giue the sense of Scripture, by the Scripture it selfe, is not to be a iudge of Scripture, or superiour to it, but to be subiected rather vnto it and ordered by it: but the Pope in taking vpon him absolute authoritie to expound Scripture, doth make himselfe superiour to it, in as much as the Scripture is not the letter, but the sense thereof: he therefore that ouerruleth the sense, ouerruleth Scripture. Secondly, againe, he that may giue the sense to Scripture, as it pleaseth him, may at his pleasure make the Scripture true or false; for the Scripture is the sense: the Pope for the most part giueth a false sense of Scripture, and so maketh the Scripture false: and thus is he become a Iudge of Scripture after the first way, which the Iesuite denieth.

Now let Augustine speake: Nam claritas vestra omnes nos vnum magistrum habere, sub illo discipuli esse, nec habemus istum summi, quia de superius loco loquimur vobis, sed magister est omnium, qui libenter in nobis omnibus. You know brethren (saith he) that we are all fellow scholars vnder one master, and though we speake to you out of an higher place, yet are we not your master, he is the teacher and master of vs all that dwelleth in our hearts. Ergo the spirit of God speaking in the Scriptures is the chiefe and best interpreter thereof.

I will enforce against them first their Imperiall lawes, then their owne pontificall constitutions, which order I purpose God willing to obserue thoroughout.

First, Justinian hath this law: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 17. leg. 11. Quis legum antiquitas solvere idoneus esse videtur, nisi is, cui soli legumlatorum esse concessum est. Who is thought more fit to open the darke sentences of the law, but he that hath authoritie to make them? And therefore he concludeth, Tam conditor, quam interpretator solus Imperator nulli decessibilis. The Emperour onely is of right taken to be both the maker, and interpreter of the law. As then the Imperiall lawes must be interpreted by the Emperour that made them; so the diuine lawes by the spirit of God that gaue them: to alfooth your owne law, decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 19. c. 31. Innocent. 3. Vnde ius prodigi; interpretatio quinque prodigiorum. Let the interpretation proceede from whence the law cometh.

Secondly, search further your owne decrees, part. 1. dist. 20. prefat. Diuinarum translationes scripturarum in sacrorum scripturarum expositionibus eis preponuntur. The interpreters of Scripture for the exposition thereof must be preferred before the Popes: Ergo all resteth not in the Popes breast.

Let vs lastly heare the iudgement of an holy Martyr, that maintained this truth with the losse of his life; who being demanded of Bauer, denied that the Pope had any authoritie to expound Scripture: adding further, what a goodly exposition did the Pope make of Scripture, when he set his foote vpon the Emperours necke, and sayd, Thou shalt walke vpon the Lyon and the Asse, the young Lyon and the Dragon: see Roger. Holland. Fox pag. 2040. col. 2. His reason is this, the Pope misconstrueth Scripture, and expoundeth it as he list. Ergo this authoritie is not giuen him of God.

concerning the meanes or method to be vsed in interpreting of Scripture.

10. Error.

The Popes. Our aduersaries prescribe this method and course to be taken in expounding of Scripture, which consisteth in foure rules: the generall practise of the Church, the consonant interpretation of the Fathers, the decrees of generall Councils; lastly, the rule of faith, consisting partly partly of the Scriptures, partly of traditions vñwritten, Stapleton. Concerning the three first, we haue already touched them in part: they appeare to be insufficient. First, the Councils and Fathers he made chiefe interpreters of Scripture before; and now they are but meanes: what other chiefe iudge then is there to vse these meanes? surely none but the Scriptures. Secondly, these meanes are most vñcertaine, the practise of the Church is often changed, Fathers agree not in their expositions, and Councils cannot alwaies be had.

Concerning the rule of faith consisting of vñwritten verities: he groundeth it fallily vpon that place Rom. 12. 6. Let vs prophesie according to the rule of faith, and Gal. 6. 16. As many as walke according to this rule. This rule was a certaine platforme of religion, giuen by the Apostles before the Scriptures were written, according to the which (say they) the Scriptures were afterward compiled by the Apostles, Rhemus, in Rom. 12. 6. Ansvers: Saint Paul meaneth no other rule, but that which is set downe in his writings; no other forme of doctrine but that contained in his Epistles, as in the 6. to the Galathians, speaking of this rule, he alludeth to the former verse, where he saith, he reioyced in nothing but in the Crosse of Christ: his rule therefore is to receiue Christ onely without the ceremonies or workes of the law: against the which heresie he disputeth in the whole Epistle. But of all other it is a great blasphemie to say that the Apostles set downe the Scriptures by a rule, as though the spirit of God, by whom they spake, had need of any such direction. So then no vñwritten rule can giue a direction to the written word, but the written word rather giueth a rule to all other things, as one of your owne Popes confesseth: Cum ex scripturis, integram quæ & firmam regulam susceperit veritatis, &c. When a man hath gathered a firme and certaine rule of truth out of the Scriptures, then may hee compare with it other liberall arts, &c. Concerning also these foure waies of theirs, I will appose them againe with their owne authoritie: Ist. 9. 1. d. 20. c. 3. Innocentius 1. the decree standeth thus, which I will onely set downe translated, because it is long: If there be any cause which cannot be dissolved by the books of the old Testament, the foure Euangelists and writings of the Apostles, then haue recourse to the diuine writings in Greeke: if nothing be found there, then to the Canons of the Apostolike Sees if not there, then to the Catholike stories of the Church: if neither there, consider the practise of the Saints: if yet the question cannot be dissolved, gather the elders of the province, and aske them, &c. Out of this decree I gather three things: first that the meanes here prescribed, are not to be vsed, but where the Scripture is silent: and therefore where any thing may be decided by Scripture, these helpes are superfluous. Secondly, in the last place we are not referred to the Pope and his Cardinals, but to the Elders, that is, the Bishops, Pastors, and Ministers of euey Province. Thirdly, he sendeth vs to the Greeke originall of the Scriptures, which is one of the meanes that we doe prescribe.

d. 37. cap. 14.

The Protestants.

When wee say that the Scriptures must expound themselves, our meaning is, that by certaine compendious and readie meanes, wee should labour to vnderstand the Scriptures by themselves: the meanes are especially these foure: First, to haue recourse to the Original tongue, as in the old Testament to the Hebrue; in the new, to the Greeke: as 1. Tim. 2. 15. Through bearing of children they shall be saved, if they continue in faith and love: in the English it is doubtfull whether this clause, if they continue in faith, be referred to children, or to those that beare them; but reade the Greeke and the doubt is removed: for bearing of children is all one word in the originall μικρὸν, so that it must needes be vnderstoode of the women, for the word μικρὸν, bearing of children is in the singular number, that which followeth of the plurall, and it is but an action, not a person; so that it should be improperly sayd, if they continue, that is, in bearing of children.

Stapleton objecteth against this meane: that it is not now needfull, seeing there is a perfect and absolute translation authorised by the Councell of Trent, he meaneth the vulgat Latin. We answer: first, it is no perfect, but an erroneous translation, and very corrupt. Secondly, if it were neuer so perfect, yet for more certaintie, it is profitable to search the originall: euey man will trust his owne skill, rather than another mans. Thirdly, the Councell did fondly in authorising an olde blinde translation, before the authentickall copies of the Hebrue and Greeke. For the Greeke originall, we haue the decree of Innocentius the first, before repeated; and for recourse to be had to the Hebrue, we haue the practise of their owne Master of Sentences: who in deciding of a certaine question, in the second of Genesis, whether we should reade consummasti Deum, or compleuisti, God did consummate, or accomplish his works vpon the seuenth day, resolued vpon the latter reading: quod habet Hebraica veritas, which is, saith he, according to the Hebrue veritie. lib. 2. d. 15. c.

2 Secondly, the scope of the place, the circumstance of it, with that which goeth before, and commeth after, must be weighed, which will bring great light to the place we haue in hand: an example we haue 1. Pet. 4. 8. Love conuersheth the multitude of finnes: the Papists gather out of these words, that loue doth iustifie vs before God, and taketh away our finnes: But by the circumstance of the place, the Apostle saying immediately before; Hanc seruent amor inter vos, it is euident dent he vnderstandeth brotherly loue amongst our selues, whereby faults are buried, forgiven, and forgotten.

Stapleton obiecteth, that this is but an vncertaine way, and many times fayleth: for the Scripture passeth many times from one matter and argument to another: how then can it helpe to consider the circumstance of the place being of a diuers matter? We answere, we say not that any of these meanes serueth for every place, but when one fayleth, to vse another: when the circumstance helpeth not, to run to the originall; if there we finde no succour, to compare places together; and when we may, to vse them all, or the most. This rule of examining the circumstances, as the precedence, and consequence of a text, may be also warranted by their owne practise: So Nicholas the fourth, in expounding of the rule of S. Francis giueth this precept: Sext. decretal. lib. 5. tit. 12. c. 3. Viriusque iuris argumenta nos docent, ea, qua in principio ad medium & finem; illa vero, qua in medio, ad principium & finem; & qua in fine ad utrumque, vel eorum alterum saepe referri: The reason of both lawes doth teach vs, that the beginning must be referred to the middest and the end; the middest to the beginning and the end; the end vnto both the other, or the one of them at the least. If they themselues then are so curious in the sifting out of the meaning of their superstitious Father, with what face can they blame our diligence in searching the sense of the Scripture.

3 Thirdly, the conference of places is very profitable, as Iames 2. 21. Abraham was iustified by workes, compare it with that place, Rom. 4. 2. there S. Paul saith flatly, that Abraham was not iustified by workes. Wherefore seeing one Apostle is not contrary to the other: we must needs gather, that this word iustified is diuersly taken: Paul saith that Abraham was not iustified, that is, made righteous before God by his workes; Iames saith he was iustified, that is, declared to be iust before men, and so Thomas Aquinas expoundeth it.

Stapleton obiecteth, that this meanes in comparing of places is of it selfe many times of small force. Answ. As though we affirme that these meanes must be vsed a sunder, and not rather ioynedly together, and where one faileth, another to helpe. Secondly, some things are found but once in the Scriptures. Answere, they are then either very plaine, or not greatly necessary. Thirdly, heretikes haue erred in comparing of Scripture. Answere, they compared them not diligently, nor with a sincere minde, but corruptly and negligently.

Let vs heare what that reuerend and learned man, and constant Martyr, B. Cramer thinketh of this meane in comparing and conferring of Scripture: I wonder, saith he, that you doe attribute so little to the reading of Scripture, and conferring of places, seeing the Scriptures doe so much commend the same, as Ioh. 5. Scribamini scripturas, search the Scriptures, Ex. pag. 1460. in dist. Oxoniens. This reuerend fathers iudgement, I dare set against either Stapletons opinion, or any others of that side: nay put the sentence of their whole Church in one balance, it shall not be able, in this, or any other poynt of the Christian faith, to weigh against the faith of these holy Martyrs in the day of iudgement, but shall be found lighter then vanitie.

Let the first also sometime Bishop of Rome, whose iudgement our aduersaries, I thinke, dare not refuse, thus writeth of this meane in hauing recourse to the Scripture, Epistol. decretal. 10. cap. 1. In hac infirmitate cadunt heretici, qui cum ad cognoscendam veritatem aliqua impediuntur obscuro, non ad propheticas voces, Apostolicas literas, nec ad Evangelicas auctoritates, sed ad scriptos recurrunt &c. Such is the foolishness of heretikes, that when as by some darke place they are hindered from knowing the truth: they will not resort to the Prophets and Apostles writings, but trust onely to themselves. His counsell is, if we meete with any darke place in Scripture, to resort to none other but to the Prophets and Apostles for the vnderstanding thereof. And Clement the first saith, as he is cited by Gratian. decr. p. 1. tit. 37. c. 14. Ex istis scripturis debemus sensum capere veritatis: We must take the sense of the Scripture, from the Scriptures themselues.

4 The fourth rule is the analogie and proportion of faith, which is nothing els but the summe and grounds of religion gathered out of Scripture, such as are contained in the Creede, the Lords Prayer, the ten Commandements, and in our whole Catechisme. We must take heede that in the interpretation of Scripture we swaue not from this rule of faith, nor impugne any principle of Religion. Wherefore the Papists interpretation of those words of Christ we doe reiect, Hoc est corpus meum, this is my bodie: who would haue the very flesh of Christ present in the sacrament: for this is against the article of the Creede, that Christ is ascended into heauen, and there sitteth till his comming againe in iudgement.

Concerning these meanes, thus writeth Augustine, Rarissimi inueniuntur ambiguitas in verbis proprijs, quam non aut circumstantia ipsa sermonis qua cognoscitur Scripturarum intentio, aut interpretum collatio, aut precedentis lingua soluta inspectio, de doctrin. Christi. lib. 3. 4. There is almost no ambiguitie in any word properly vsed (that is not metaphoricall or borrowed) which may not either by the circumstance of the place, the conference and comparing of interpreters, or by looking into the Originals, easily be taken away. Augustine we see approueth this methode, though our aduersaries like it not. So also in your owne decrees: decr. p. 2. caus. 24. qu. 3. c. 27. Quicumque aliter scripturam intelligit, intelligit, quoniam sensus spiritus sancti flagitat, qui scripta est, hereticus appellari potest: He that otherwise vnderstandeth Scripture, then after the meaning of the spirit wherewith it is written, is an heretike. Wherefore the Scripture out of Scripture must be expounded: for where else is the spirit of the Scripture to be found, but in the Scriptures?

Besides these meanes, which I haue shewed, prayer must be vsed before we enterprise any thing, that the Lord would direct vs. And they which cannot so easily take this course, which is prescribed, shall doe well to seeke helpe of learned and godly expositors, or to consult with their pastors and ministers.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION: CONCERNING

the perfection and sufficiencie of Scripture.

This question is deuided into three parts: First, whether the Scriptures be absolutely necessary. Secondly, whether they be sufficient without vnwritten traditions. Thirdly, whether there be any traditions of faith and manners beside the Scriptures.

THE FIRST PART OF THE NECESSI-

tie of the Scriptures.

The Iesuite laboureth to proue that the Scriptures are not simply necessary: which we denie. 11. Error.
not, for meate is not simply necessary, for God may preserue man without: so in respect of God nothing is simply necessary: God is not necessarily tyed to vse this or that meanes. But his arguments doe tend to this end, to shew that the Scriptures are not necessary at all, and may be spared in the Church (so saith Petrus à Soto) the Scripture was not alway extant; and it is not necessary vnto faith: and the Scripture is not now so necessary since Christ, as it was afore, Tilman. de verb. dei error. 17.

Argum. 1. There was no Scripture from Adam to Moses, for the space of two thousand yeares; and yet true religion was kept and continued, and why might not true religion be as well preserued 1500. yeares after Christ without Scripture, as afore? Bellarmino de verb. dei lib. cap. 4. argum. 1.

We answer: It followeth not, because in times past God taught his Church by a liuely voyce, that the written word is not necessary now: for the Lord saw it good, that his word should be left in writing, that we might haue a certaine rule of our faith in this corrupt and sinfull age. And what els is this, but to controule the wisdom of God, saying, it is not necessary or needfull for the Church, which the Lord saw to be needfull: for if the Lord had thought it as good for vs to be taught without Scripture, as in that simple and innocent age of the world (I meane innocent in respect of vs) he would not haue moued and stirred vp his Apostles to write.

Argum. 2. After the time of Moses, when the law was written, yet there were many that feared God amongst the Gentles, which had not the Scriptures, as Iob, and the other his friends: Ergo, the Scripture not necessary. The Iewes also themselves vsed traditions more then Scriptures, as Psal. 44. vers. 1, 2. The fathers did reporte the workes of God to their children: by the negligence also of the Priests the law was lost, as 2. King. 22. we reade that the volume of the law was found, which had been missing a long time, Bellarmino. ibid.

We answer: first, euen the faithfull amongst the Gentiles did reade the Scripture, as the Eunuiche Act. 8. had the booke of the Prophet Isay. Secondly, the Iewes declared the workes of God vnto their children, but the same were also written, as how the heathen were cast out before them, and of their deliuerance out of Egypt: those were the things they heard of their fathers, as we reade Psal. 44. and 78. yet all these things are recorded in the bookes of Moses. Thirdly, what though the Priests were negligent in preseruing the Scriptures, it is no good argument to proue that therefore they are not necessary, neither was the whole booke of the law lost, but either Moses owne manuscript, or the booke of Deuteronomie. Yet he hath proued nothing.

Argum. 3. The Church after Christ wanted the Scriptures many yeares: Ergo they are not necessary, Bellarmino. ibid.

We answer, it is a great vntrueth: for the old Testament the Church could not be without, and the new testament was written not long after in the age of the Apostles: whose liuely voyce and preachings were vnto them, as their writings are now to vs. See now, what strong arguments they bring: the Scriptures were not necessary in the time of the Patriarkes, when God taught them by his owne voyce; they were not necessary in the time of the Prophets and Apostles, when they had men inspired of God to teach them: Ergo they are not now necessary, when neither God teacheth from heauen, neither haue we any Propbets or Apostles to instruct vs by hea-newly revelations: nay rather because they were not necessarie then, when they had other effect-uall meanes, notwithstanding they are necessary now, seeing there is no other way of instruction left vs.

Argum. 4. If the writing of the Scriptures were necessarie, then Christ would not haue omitted to haue given his Apostles charge and commandement so to doe: but this he doeth not, neither doe the Apostles make mention of any such charge that was given them, but onely to preach;
Bellarmino cap. 4. argum. 2.

Ans. 1. It was not needfull that our Sauour Christ should giue his Apostles charge concerning all necessarie things to bee done in the Church, seeing he was to send them the holy Ghost who should leade them into all truth: and therefore our Sauour telleth them, that he had many things to say, but they could not heare them, but the spirit afterward should teach them, Iohn 16.
12. 13. The institution of deacons, Act. 6. the forbidding of things suffocated, Act. 15. for a time, were necessarie; yet hereon they receiued no instruction from Christ, who referred them to the direction of the spirit. Secondly, Christ notwithstanding did also giue them a charge to write, both by way of implication, where he biddeth them teach all nations, Matth. 28. which was impossible to be done by their lively voyce, and therefore must be supplied by their writing: as also directly Iohn is charged to write to the Churches, Apocall. 1. 11. And this being the last booke which is commanded to be written, it is not to be doubted of, but that the rest were written by the same authoritie. Thirdly, the Iesuite himselfe saith: Apostoli non nisi necessitate quadam coacti: The Apostles did not write, but thereunto moued of necessitie. But if the Scriptures were not necessarie, there should be no necessitie of writing.

The Protestants.

That the Scriptures are necessarie for the people of God, the reading, preaching, and vnder-standing whereof is the onely and ordinarie meanes to beget faith in vs, we thus proue out of the Scriptures themselves.

Argum. 1. These Scriptures containe necessarie knowledge to saluation, which cannot be learned but out of the Scripture, Ergo they are necessarie. The knowledge of the law is necessarie; but that onely is deriued from the Scripture: as the Apostle witnesseth Rom. 7. 7. he had not knowen lust to be sinne, yntil the law had said, Thou shalt not lust. And if the right knowledge of the law is not learned, but out of Scripture: much more the knowledge of the Gospell is more high and mysticall, and more strange vnto our nature.

Argum. 2. That where by we are kept from error and doubtfullnes in matters of faith is neces-sarie: but this is performed by the Scripture, Ergo. First, the Scripture keepeth vs from error, Matth. 22. 29. Yee erre, not knowing the Scriptures (saith our Sauour.) The ignorance of Scripture was cause of their error. Secondly, if our knowledge were onely builded vpon tradition without Scripture, wee should bee doubtfull and vncertaine of the truth: so Saint Luke saith in his Preface to Theophilus: I haue written (saith hee) that ibon mightest bee certaine of these things, whereof thou hast been instructed. Hence wee conclude, that although wee might know the truth without Scripture, as Theophilus did, yet wee cannot knowe it certainly without it.

Argum. 3. If the Scriptures be not necessarie, then we may be without them; but this cannot be: Ergo the Scriptures cannot be spared: for then God had done a needlesse and superfluous worke in stirring vp the Prophets and Apostles to write. S. Paul saith, that haec serua sunt scripta, ut scitis per patientiam et consolationem lib. 2. 15. The Lord saw in wisdom that his people could not be without the Scriptures, which are necessarie for their learning, for their comfort, and to strengthen their hope: how then dare our ad-uersaries say, that the Scriptures are not necessarie, seeing these things wrought in vs onely by the Scriptures, knowledge, consolation, hope, are most necessarie.

Argum. 4. The knowledge of eternall life is necessarie; but that commeth onely by the Scriptures, Iohn 5. 39. Search the Scriptures, for in them you thinke to haue eternall life: Ergo they are necessarie. Again, to be made wise vnto saluation, and perfect to every good worke, are neces-sarie: but these things the Scripture worketh, 2. Timoth. 3. 15, 17. Further, a man cannot walke in darkenes without light, so that light in darkenes is necessarie: but the Scriptures are light in a darke place, 2. Pet. 1. 19. Lastly, our Sauour himselfe saith to Martha, Luke 10. 42. unum necessarium: one thing is necessarie, namely that which Martha had chosē, to heare the word and voyce of Christ, who elsewhere speaketh not but in Scripture, Iohn 5. 39. they testifie of me, and verse
46. Moses wrote of me: Ergo the knowledge of the Scriptures is necessarie.

Let Augustine now put in his verdict: Ilud credo, quod etiam hinc diuinorum eloquiorum clarissima auctoritas esset, si homo illud sine dispensatione salutis ignorare non posset. de peccator. merit. & remiss. lib. 2. 36.
I thinke (saith he) that euen concerning this matter (speaking of the Originall or beginning of the soule) the Scriptures would not haue been silent, if we might not safely be ignorant of this matter, without

without danger of saluation: Ergo whatsoever is necessarie to saluation, is onely to be found in Scripture (for other matters there not expessed, there is no danger in not knowing them) therefore the Scriptures by this Fathers iudgement are most necessarie. Let vs heare a testimonie of their owne.

Concil. Lateranens. sub Innocentio 3. cap. 10. we finde this decree: Intra eamque ad salutem spectantem populi Christiani pabulum verbi Dei potissimum nescitur sibi necessarium, quia sicut corpus materiali, ita anima spirituali nutritur cibo. Among other things which concern the saluation of Christian people, the foode of the word of God is known to be most necessarie; for as the bodie is fed with materiall foode, so the soule with spirituall: the foode therefore of Gods word is most necessarie. And least it might be imagined, that the word vnwritten is as well here vnderstood, as the word written: let it be considered what Gelasius Bishop of Rome writeth in his decretals, Epistol. ad Euphremium. Fides ex auditu, auditus per verbum Dei: illud v. verbum, quod confessio B. Petri & Apostolicorum inferni nunquam praualeatur esse premissa. Faith cometh by hearing: hearing by the word of God: that is, that word which promised that the gates of hell should not preuaile against the confession of Peter. And this is the word written: the necessarie then of the word of God, is the necessitie of the word written.

THE SECOND PART OF THE SEVENTH

question, of the sufficiencie of Scriptures.

They do strangely affirme, that the Scriptures containe not all things necessarie to be knowne concerning faith and manners, and that they are not sufficient without traditions. Bellarmin. cap. 3. 4. Lindenius a Papist saith, that the Scriptures containe not all things necessarie to saluation. Andradus, that their approued traditions are of equall authoritie with the Scripture, Ex Tilmann de verbis error. 2. Argum. 1. The Iesuite thus reasoneth against the sufficiencie of Scripture: There are diuers bookes of Canonically Scripture lost and perished: Ergo that part of Canonically Scripture which remaineth, is not sufficient. That much is lost, he thus proueth, 1. Chron. cap. ult. mention is made of the bookes of Nathan and Gad, 2. Chron. 9. of the bookes of Athiah and Ieda: and in the new Testament, Col. 4. of the Epistle of S. Paul to the Laodiceans: all those bookes are lost.

Ans. 1. S. Augustinus thus answereth, those bookes of the Prophets, which are named in the Kings, are not found in the Canon, for what cause, saith he, I know not, Nesci quod ex istis prophetis illas, alia scilicet homines, historica diligentia; alia scilicet prophetarum inspiratione divina scribere potuisse: But that I thinke, that those Prophets might write some stories as men; and some things as Prophets, by the inspiration of the spirit, lib. 36. de ciuitat. Dei. c. 38. Thus Augustinus thinketh that those bookes now wanting, were no part of the Canonically Scripture. But wee denie not, but that some bookes are now wanting, which were part of Canonically Scripture, and yet that which remaineth is sufficient: as some of Salomons bookes are perished, which he wrote of hearbs and plants; and many of his Proverbs: the Lord saw that they were not so greatly necessarie for vs to saluation, as containing matter of storie rather then of doctrine. Secondly, there is not so much wanting, as the Iesuite would beare vs in hand: for the bookes of the Prophets which he nameth, are the same with the bookes of the Chronicles and of the Kings, which no doubt were written by those Prophets. And as for the Epistle of Saint Paul to the Laodiceans, there was neuer any such: the text is, Written from the Laodiceans; it was the Epistle rather of the Laodiceans to Saint Paul, vnto the which he partly maketh answer in the Epistle to the Colossians, and therefore he would haue it read also in their Church: And this is Saint Hieromes iudgement concerning this epistle: Legimus quidam & epistolam ad Laodicenses, sed ab omnibus exploditur: Some doe reade the Epistle to the Laodiceans, but it is refused of all men: catalog. scriptur.

Argum. 2. There are two things in Scripture, the letter and the sense: the first is knowne to all, that can reade, but the second is not had without tradition: Ergo the Scriptures are not sufficient, Bellarmin.

Ans. First, the sense of the Scriptures is contained in the Scriptures themselves, and if it bee not there to be found, it is not the sense of the Scriptures. And of this matter your owne Clement giueth a good rule, as he is alleaged by Gratian: Decret. pag. 1. dist. 37. cap. 14. Non sensum, quem extrinsecus adulteretis alienum & extraneum debetis querere, &c. sed ex ipsis scripturis sensum capere veritatis: You must not seeke for a strange sense without, which you may adulterate at your pleasure, but out of the Scriptures themselves the sense of truth must be had. Secondly, the Iesuit is intangled in his owne speech: for he saith, Duo esse in scriptura, voces scripturæ & sensum: There are two things things in Scripture, the written words, and the sense: Ergo, the sense of Scripture (by his owne confession) is in the Scripture.

Argum. 3. There are many points, which we ought in no wise to be ignorant of, which the Scriptures speake either obscurely of, or not at all.

First, these things are obscurely and doubtfully set downe in Scripture, the equalitie of the persons in Trinitie, the proceeding of the holy Ghost, from the Father and the Sonne; the doctrine of Originall sinne.

We answer: first, if these things be found at all in the Scriptures, it is sufficient concerning the question we have in hand. Secondly, the Scripture doth manifestly declare the truth in all these poynts, the equalitie of the persons is directly proued, 1. Iohn 5. 7. There are three, which beare record in heauen, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghost, and these three are one: the procession of the spirit, Iohn 15. 26. The spirit is there said to be sent from the Father and the Sonne; and Iohn 14. 26. Whom the Father will send in my name: Originall sinne is described plainly by the Apostle, Rom. 7. 14. though the name be not found in Scripture: By one man sinne entered into the world, and death by sinne, for as much as all men haue sinned.

Secondly, there are diuers things necessarie to be knowne, not at all declared in Scripture: these examples he setteth downe. It is necessarie to beleue that the Canonically Scriptures are contained in the old and new Testament. And not onely so, but to know which bookes are Canonically, as that the Gospell of Marke and Luke are Canonically, and so of the rest: yea it is necessarie to know that these are the very Gospels which were written by S. Marke and Luke, and so of the rest of the Scripture: but these things cannot bee knowne out of the Scriptures themselves, but by tradition: Ergo the Scriptures containe not all necessarie knowledge.

Answer: First, the Scriptures doe giue testimonie of themselves, the old Testament giueth witness to the new, and the new againe to the olde. All Scripture is giuen, saith S. Paul, by inspiration: and the harmonie and consent of Scripture, the prophetically predictions, the holy precepts, the chaste and pure stile, doe evidently shew, that they are the writings of the holy Ghost: and the iudgement and sentence of the Church concerning Canonically Scripture, if it be right, must and doth arise, and is grounded vpon these considerations drawn out of the Scriptures themselves.

Secondly, likewise to know euery particular booke of Scripture to be Canonically, it is not simply necessarie to saluation, seeing many godly learned men haue doubted of some bookes, who (God forbid) but might notwithstanding be saued. Again we answer, that those very particular bookes, as the Gospels of Marke and Luke are receiued, the Gospels of Bartholomew and Thomas refused; not so much because the Church hath so determined, but because their determination agreeth with the truth it selfe: seeing those forged gospels are found to be full of fables, and therefore worthe of small credit: the other are pure, chaste, and diuine writings. So S. Augustine saith: In Apocryphis licet inueniatur aliqua veritas, tamen propter falsa multa, nulla est canonica authoritas: In the Apocryphall bookes, though some things bee true, yet because there are many false, they are not of any canonically authoritie: lib. 15. de ciuitat. dei. cap. 23.

Thirdly, we answer, that it is not necessarie to know the author of euery booke, for as much as there are diuers books of Scripture whose authors are not knowne: it is enough to beleue them to be Scripture.

Further saith the Iesuit, it is necessarie to know that Mary continued a perpetuall virgin. We answer, the Scripture saith euery where she was a virgin, neither maketh mention of any children she had: and therefore out of the Scripture we gather, that she so continued. And thus doth S. Hierome answer Helvidium: Vi hac, qua scripta sunt, non negamus, ita ea, qua non sunt scripta renuimus: As we denie not, what is written, so we refuse, what is not written. That God was borne of a virgin we beleue, quia legimus, because wee reade so in Scripture: but that Mary was married afterward, we beleue not, quia non legimus, because we doe not reade it. Secondly, Basil saith that it is sufficient to know she was a virgin before the birth of Christ. Lastly, to know that the Pasch or Easter must be kept vpon the Lords day is necessarie. Answer. There is no such necessitie in it to saluation: neither needed the Church so much to haue contended about it in times past: these are the mightie weapons, which our aduersaries vse. That this day is meetest to be kept (as it is) vpon the Lords day, S. Augustine doth shew it out of Scripture: Epist. 118. Quo die dominus crucifixus, & sepultus, & resurrexit, ex Euangelio manifestum, &c. It is manifest in the Gospell, what day our Saviour was crucified, buried, and rose againe: Et vniuerso orbi persuasum est Pascha sic celebrari oportere: And the whole world was perswaded, that the Pasch ought to bee celebrated after that manner.

Vnto those obiections which the Iesuite maketh, I will adde also one other, which sometime was objected to that excellent learned man, and famous martyr Master Philpot, by Master Christopher: How doe you know that Christ is homo unius, that is, of one substance with his father, but by by the determination of the Church? Ans. I doe know it by Scripture, Heb. 1. 3. Christ is said to bee the expresse image of Gods substance. Obiect. Nay he saith, but expressa imago substantia, and an image is an accident. Ans. Yes, the text is substantia illius, of his, that is Gods substance; and ye know that in God are no accidents. Neither is this the onely place for this purpose, but we haue other: as our Sauour himselfe saith, Ego & pater vnum sumus, I and my father are one: see Philop. Fox pag. 1820. col. 2.

The Protestants.

WE doe not affirme, as our aduersaries charge vs, that all things necessarie to saluation, are expressly contained in Scripture, that is, in so many words: but this wee hold, that all things, which are necessarie to be knowne of vs, are either expressly declared in Scripture, or necessarily concluded out of Scripture, and so contained in them. Wee also graunt, that it was not Gospell onely which was written, but all that Christ and his Apostles taught by liuely voyce: the whole summe whereof and substance is contained in the written word: and so we conclude, that nothing necessarie to saluation either concerning faith or manners, is elsewhere to bee found but in the holy Scriptures.

Argum. 1. S. Paul saith: If wee, or an Angell preach vnto you otherwise then that which wee haue preached, let him be accursed: Ergo, the Scripture containeth all things necessarie.

First, the Iesuite answereth, that S. Paul speaketh not onely of his writings, but also of his preachings which were not written.

We answer, that the summe of all S. Pauls preachings is contained in his Epistles and other holie writings: for S. Paul confirmed his doctrine out of the Scriptures, as Act. 17. 10. the Berruans examined his doctrine by the Scriptures, and found it to bee consonant, and to agree in all things.

Secondly, he condemneth those which preach any thing, not besides or otherwise, but contrarie: and therefore not any other doctrine besides Scripture is forbidden, but that which is contrarie. We answer, whatsoeuer is imposed as necessarie to saluation beside the Scripture, præter Scripturas, is also contra Scripturas, contrarie to Scripture: as are all popish traditions, which they lay a necessitie vpon, both beside and contrary to Scripture. 2. Neither did those false Apostles, against whom S. Paul writeth so much, bring in another or contrarie Gospell, as the Apostle saith ver. 7. as they did labour to corrupt and peruert that Gospell, which S. Paul taught: Therefore all traditions whether præter, or contra, beside or contrary to Scripture, are notably by this place overthrowne. And as S. Augustine saith, Qui præter regulam fidei regulam, non inueniunt in via, sed recedunt à via: He that passeth beside the rule of faith, doth not goe in the way, but departeth from the way. So that, as he doth not only goe out of the way, which goeth against it, but he also that goeth beside it: so not onely traditions and ceremonies apparently contrarie to Scripture, but even them also, which haue a superstitious shew of holines are against it.

Argum. 2. Ioh. 10. 31. These things are written, that ye might beleue, that Iesus Christ is the Sonne of God, and that in beleuing ye might haue life through his name: Ergo, the Scripture containe all things necessarie to saluation: for they suffice to worke in vs faith, and faith bringeth vs to eternall life.

First, Bellarmino answereth, that Ioh speaketh onely of that which he had written: Ans. If this one Apostles writings were able to worke faith, the whole bodie of Scripture much more: but he rather speaketh of all other holie writings of the Apostles, for he was the suruiuer of them all, and acknowledged their writings & approued the. Secondly (saith he) the Apostle saith not that those writings onely suffice, but they are profitable, and referred to this end, to worke faith: Ans. The Scripture is not one of the meanes, but the sole, whole, and onely meanes: for if they perfectly worke faith, what neede any other helpes: but the first is true; for they doe beget in vs a perfect faith, which shall bring vs to eternall life: Ergo, they are the onely meanes of faith.

Argum. 3. The whole Scripture (saith S. Paul) is profitable to teach, to improue, to correct, and instruct in righteousness, 2 Tim. 3. 16. Ergo, it containeth all things necessarie: for what else is requisite besides these foure, to teach the right faith, improue error, to instruct in righteousness and vertue, and to correct vice?

First they answer, the Apostle meaneth as well every booke of Scripture, as the whole: every part therefore hath this perfection as well as the whole. But you will not say, that every booke containeth all things necessarie to saluation: therefore this perfection is not so to be taken, Bellarmino.

We answer. First, S. Paul vnderstandeth the bodie of Scripture, as ver. 15. thou hast knowne the Scriptures, he speaketh of them all. Secondly, if every part had these vtilities, you might as well conclude that euery word and sillable hath them, for they are parts of Scripture. Thirdly, it appeareth by these foure great vtilities here set downe, that the Apostle meaneth not any part or parts of scripture, but the whole, for euery part of scripture is not profitable for all these endes, but the whole.

Secondly,

Secondly, they ſay it followeth not: the Scripture is profitable, therefore ſufficient, they alſo graunt it is profitable. Anſ. But we conſide out of S. Paul, that the Scripture is not onely profitable, but ſufficient, as it followeth, verſ. 17. That the man of God may bee absolute, perfectly inſtructed to every good worke. If then the Scriptures are able perfectly to inſtruct vs, then are they ſufficient, then neede we no other helpeſ.

Neither are the Scriptures ſufficient onely to inſtruct the ignorant and vulgar ſort, but even the learned, and ſuch, as are the teachers of others: That the man of God (ſaith the Apoſtle) may be absolute, &c. That is, the Preacher of the Goſpell. To this agreeth the 67. Canon. Council. Cabil. ſub Carolo: Quid generaliter ab omnibus & in omnibus ſequendum ſit, quid vitandum, qualiter intra ſanctam eccleſiam ſit vivendum, qui plenius viſſe deſiderat, ſanctarum ſcripturarum prout percurrere non deſinit: What is of all men, in all caſes to be followed, what to be avoyded, how a man ſhould live and behave himſelfe in the Church of God, he that is deſirous more fully to know, let him not ceaſe to trace the pleaſant fields of the holic Scriptures. The Scriptures then doe teach all men, in all caſes both concerning faith and manners, what is to be done, what to be left vndone.

Further Auguſtine thus writeth, in Pſal. 66. Ne putetis (ſaith he) ex alijs ſcripturis petendum, quod forte hic deſect. I thinke not (ſaith he) that it is to be found in any other writings if it bee not in Scripture. And in another place: In Evangelio quaramus, nam ſi ibi non invenimus, ubi invenimus? Let vs (ſaith he) ſeeke to be reſolved in the Goſpell, if we finde not there, where ſhall we finde it? Ergo, by the iudgement of Auguſtine there is no truth neceſſarie to bee knowne, which is not to be found in the Scriptures.

I forbear to uſe other testimonies of the Fathers, as that of Origen: In Evangelij omnis veritas, & omnis manifeſtatio veritatis: In the Goſpels is all truth, and manifeſtation of truth, Hom. 9. in Exod. And that of Ambroſe: Quod non legi uſurpare non debes: I dare not uſe, or receive, that which I read not, lib. de inearnat. cap. 9. I will ſpare to cite the Fathers on our ſide, becauſe I omit the testimonies, which our adverſaries uſe: profeſſing in this treatiſe chiefly to deale with the Scriptures: purpoſing hereafter, if it pleaſe God, to handle the authorities alledged on both ſides: I will at this time onely urge againſt them ſuch evidence, as I finde both in the Imperiall, and pontificall conſtitutions.

First Inſtitution. Cod. lib. 1. tit. 1. leg. 1. thus decreeth concerning the authoritie of his conſtitutions, that they ſhould onely be uſed in deciding of all cauſes, Quas poſitio conſtitutionum iudicis noſtri ſufficit: Becauſe the allegation onely of the conſtitutions of our Codex is ſufficient. If then the Emperours Codex be ſufficient for all civill cauſes, ſhall we thinke that the divine Codex is leſſe ſufficient for ſpiritually?

Againe, Cod. lib. 9. tit. 5. leg. 1. the Emperours, Theodoſ. Gratian. Valentinian. enacted this law: Qui divina legis ſacilitatem, aut noſcendo omittunt, aut negligendo violant, &c. They are guiltie of ſacrilege, that either of ignorance omit, or of negligence violate the divine law. Then muſt our adverſaries be guiltie of ſacrilege, which doe omit and neglect the Scriptures, by following unwritten traditions.

Secondly, be of your owne Canons, Extravag. commun. lib. 1. tit. 3. cap. 1. Bonif. 8. thus writeth: That none ſhould be received as a Legate of the Apoſtolike ſea, niſi ſide doceat oculata: unleſſe he demonaſtrate it or make faith to the ſight, that is, by ſome writing: for it is the manner of that ſea to doe no ſuch thing, ſine ſignatis apicibus, without ſigned letters. If then in humane matters, there muſt be ſide oculata, and ſignati apices, a faith in ſight, and ſigning of writings, how much more needfull is ſide divine?

Yet more directly, Ioh. 22. Extravag. lib. 3. tit. 8. c. vine. Divina exempla debent eſſe actionum noſtrarum regula: The divine examples in Scripture (for ſo he meaneth, as it followeth in the Canon) muſt be an example of our acts.

Laſtly, the truth of the doctrine that the Scripture containeth all things neceſſarie to ſalvation, hath been ſealed with the blood of Martyrs: this was one of the articles objected againſt Doctor Taylor, Fox pag. 322. And in teſtimonie whereof (ſaith Bradford) I giue and render my life, epiſtol. ad Londineſ. pag. 1636. col. 1.

To this alſo giueſt teſtimonie, that valiant ſouldiour of Chriſt M. Haukes martyr: Is not the Scripture (ſaith he) ſufficient for my ſalvation? Yes, ſaith one of Bowers Chaplaines, it is ſufficient for our ſalvation, but not for our inſtruction. He answered, God ſend me the ſalvation, and you the inſtruction, Far pag. 286.

For this article alſo that the word of God doeth containe ſufficient doctrine to ſalvation, the townſhips of Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolke were perfecuted, pag. 1912. What neede wee doubt then of this doctrine which is proved by Scripture, grounded vpon reaſon, and confirmed by the blood of the Saints?

THE THIRD PART OF THE SEVENTH QUESTION

Whether there be any traditions beside Scripture concerning faith and manners

The Papists say

They understand by this word traditions, doctrine, precepts, and ceremonies, which are of the Church, which are not written in the Scriptures. They doe not say that all their traditions are necessary, but they make diuers kinds of them: some are vniuersally observed in the whole Church, some particular; some are free, some necessary: some are Apostolicall, invented by the Apostles, some Ecclesiasticall by the Church. So that they conclude: all traditions decreed in Councils, and iudged Apostolicall, and whatsoever the Church of Rome receiveth as Apostolicall are not to be doubted, but so be Apostolicall indeed. Secondly, all Apostolicall traditions are of equall authority with the writings of the Apostles, Belarm. lib. 4. cap. 9. 10. And they are that part of the word of God which is vniuersally written, as well as the Scriptures are that part which is written. Let vs see what arguments they bring for these traditions.

Argum. 1. They give an instance of certaine traditions, as the baptisme of infants, and the not rebaptizing of those, which were before baptized by heretikes. We answer, these two customs of the Church are grounded vpon Scripture: for as children were in the time of the law circumcised, so are they now vnder the Gospell baptized: and that promise, Genes. 17. I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed: as it belonged to them and their children, so doth it appertaine to vs and our children.

Concerning the other point, that they whom heretikes haue once baptized, ought not to be baptized againe: S. Augustine doth proue it out of the Scripture, Ephes. 4. There is one faith, and one baptisme. Ergo, not to be repeated.

But now they come in with other traditions, as the Lenten fast, which they vse most fondly and superstitiously: the eight Ecclesiasticall orders, Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Subdeacons, Acolytes, Readers, Exorcists, Doore-keepers, the worshipping of Images, with many other: these they would faine vs out to be Apostolicall traditions, and so haue bin vniuersally obserued, which are but their vaine brags, and Thraconicall crakes: they shall neuer proue them vniuersall, much lesse Apostolicall. And because they finde no Scripture to establish these their superstitious phantasies by, they flie vnto tradition, which is their onely haue, where they hope to finde succour: but all in vaine. Belarm. lib. 4. cap. 9. Consul. 17. bitacher. quest. 6. cap. 4.

Argum. 2. They proceede and alleage Scripture for their traditions, as that place Ioh. 14. 2. I haue many things to say, but you cannot heare them now: Ergo, say they, there are many traditions not written.

We answer, First, it followeth not, because Christ declared not all things at that time; that therefore he kept them from his Apostles altogether. Nay, whatsoever afterwards the Apostles learned of the spirit of God, they had heard before of Christ: for it was the office of the spirit, partly to put them in remembrance of Christs sayings, Ioh. 14. 26. which they had heard before, but vnderstood them not, and so forgot them, partly they were taught of the spirit, whatsoever was necessarie, who should leade them into all truth, and teach them things to come, which are the same things which the Apostles did both preach and write. Wherefore these things, which Christ forbearth to speake, are the same things, which were afterwarde taught by the spirit, and are contained in the Apostles writings. Secondly, if there were other matters, which Christ vttered not, how followeth it, nay what great presumption is it to say, that those trifles and apish toys, which the Papists vse in their Idolatrous sacrifice, and their other beggerly ceremonies (which boyes may well laugh at) are those profound matters, which the Apostles were not then able to conceiue.

Argum. 3. That of all other, they take to be an inuincible place, is Thess. 2. 15. Keep the instructions and traditions, which ye haue been taught either by word, or by Epistle: Ergo, there are traditions beside Scripture.

We answer, when S. Paul wrote this Epistle, all the Scriptures were not written: wherefore besides these two short Epistles, which doe not containe the summe of the Gospell, nor all necessarie precepts, he by his preaching supplied what was wanting, and so declared vnto them the whole myserie of the Gospell, as he saith, 1. Thess. 3. 2. these he calleth his traditions, because yet he had not written his other Epistles, wherein those instructions and traditions are contained. This then is but a weak argument: the Thessalonians had other instructions and traditions, beside the two Epistles written vnto them: Ergo, they had other traditions, beside all the writings of S. Paul and the other Apostles. This is shamaine and waighie argument. And further, it is not onely the Apostles phrase, but the vse of the Fathers, to call the Scriptures a tradition: as S. Cyprian prim epist. ad Pompeianum: Si aut in Evangelio præcipitur, aut in Apostolorum epistolis, aut alibi continetur, observatur etiam de his sanctis traditis. If it be either commanded in the Gospell, or contained in the epistles or acts of the Apostles, yet this tradition also bee observed. Likewise S. Ambrose: Corpus Christi traditiones sunt scripturæ. The bodie of Christ are the traditions of the Scriptures.

The Proposition.

First, wee graunt that all things are now written which our Saviour Christ and the Apostles taught; and that it was the Gospell which they preached, as well as that which is written; yet in substance they preached the same Gospell, which now is expressed in the Scriptures: neither was there any necessary precept delivered in their sermons, which is not now to be found in the Scriptures. Secondly, we deny not but there were revelations and orders ordained by the Apostles in divers Churches, which were not committed to writing, because they were not to continue and endure for ever in the Church: as that precept, Act. 15. that the Gentiles should abstaine from strangled, and from blood. Thirdly, we also graunt that the Church may use excellent rites and orders either left by tradition, or ordained by the Church for decency and comeliness, and tending to edification. But we constantly affirme, that there are no traditions in the Church of God necessarie to salvation beside Scriptures: wherein all things are contained necessarie to salvation, both concerning faith and manners.

Argum. 1. It is not lawfull, as to take ought from the word of God, so to adde any thing vnto it, Deut. 12. 32. Apocal. 22. 18. But they which bring in traditions necessarie beside the Scriptures, doe adde vnto them. Ergo.

To the proposition the Iesuit answereth: that all addition to the word of God is not forbidden; for the Prophetes did write after Moses, and the Apostles after the Evangelists. We answer: first, that those holy men had authoritie from God to compile Scriptures: if the Papists haue the like Apostolike authoritie for their traditions, let them shew it, and we will beleue them. Secondly, the Prophetes did but expound Moses and expound the law, and the Apostles did as it were set forth their Commentaries vpon the Gospell: this therefore was no addition, because they did not derogate from the perfection of the Scriptures any way.

To the assumption they answer: that their traditions are but expositions of the Scriptures. We answer, their traditions are cleare contrarie to Scripture, as the worshipping of Images, and the sacrifice of their Masse: and they adde to Scripture, making it vnperfect, saying, It doth not runne all things necessarie to salvation. Wherefore they cannot escape that censure, which they runne into that adde to the word of God.

Argum. 2. All traditions among the Iewes besides the law were condemned, Matth. 23. 23. Ergo, all vnwritten traditions now must bee abolished. The Iesuite answereth: First, Christ condemned not the ancient traditions of Moses, but those which were newly and lately inuented. Ans. First, the Scripture maketh no mention of any such traditions of Moses: Christ biddeth them search the Scriptures, not runne vnto traditions. Secondly, these seemed to be ancient traditions, bearing the name of Elders traditions, and they were in great authoritie amongst the Iewes: most like, because of some long continuance.

Secondly (saith he) Christ findeth fault with wicked and impious traditions. Ans. First, their traditions were not openly and plainly euill and pernicious, but had some shew of holiness, as the washing of pots, and tables, and beds: I would the Papists did not here take themselves by the nose, whose traditions come neerer to open impietie, and blasphemie, then theirs did. Secondly, Christ in opposing the Scripture against traditions, therein condemneth all traditions not written, besides the Scripture.

Argum. 3. If Paul preaching the whole Gospell, Act. 20. 27. did say none other things then Moses and the Prophetes; then all things necessarie to salvation are contained in the Scriptures. For it cannot bee said to bee a whole and perfect Gospell, if any thing necessarie to salvation bee wanting. But Paul preached nothing, but out of Moses and the Prophetes, Act. 26. 22. Ergo much more now is the Scripture a perfect rule of faith; worshipping beside Moses and the Prophetes, the holy writings of the Euangelists and Apostles. So that wee further reason thus: If Moses and the Prophetes were sufficient without any other helpes for the times of the law, much more sufficient is the new Testament together with the old now. But the first is true, therefore the second. The consequence of the first proposition cannot bee denied: for we see now more then the Prophetes did, Matth. 13. 17. and if the old Testament then was sufficient, much more the new together with the old. The second part is thus proued; Luk. 16. 19. The rich man's brethren are sent to Moses and the Prophetes, which were more sufficient to instruct them, then if one should come from the dead: so that the written word is to be preferred before vnwritten revelations. And Abraham, in saying, beare them, testifieth, that they contained sufficient instruction vnto life: Ergo much more the Gospell now.

Argum. 3. The Scriptures were written, to be a rule and measure of our faith: And they being the worke of God, whose workes are all perfect, must needs also be a perfect rule of our faith: and so containe all things necessarie to faith: for the rule and measure must not come short of that which is measured.

Belarm. 1. The Scripture was not ordained especially to be a rule of our faith: but onely to be, commemoratio quiddam, as a remembrancer to nourish and preferre sound doctrine by preaching: for if it were to that end, it should containe onely such things as belong vnto the faith: but now it containeth many things beside.

Answe. 1. That the Scriptures were not written, to be a rule of our faith, it is a bold and vnttrue assertion contrarie to Scripture: the Scriptures doe teach and shew vs eternall life, Iohn. 1. 9. but it is eternall life to beleeue in Iesus Christ, Ioh. 3. 16. Ergo, the Scriptures doe teach and giue rules of our faith and belief: yea S. Paul doth in direct termes talke the doctrine of Christ crucified, which is set forth in Scripture, a rule, Gal. 6. 1.

Belarm. 2. Againe we say, that the Scripture is a rule of faith (though this be not the chiefe end thereof) yet not a totall and absolute rule, but in part onely: the word of God is one part or peece of the rule, vnwritten traditions another.

Answe. 1. That it is the chiefe end of Scripture to be a rule of faith and good manners, the wise man speaketh plainly, Prover. 1. The proverbes of Salomon to haue wisdom and vnderstand the words of knowledge, so receive instruction so doe wisely. This is the end of Scripture to know true wisdom, and to doe wisely: And least they should say, that this is the end onely of that booke, S. Paul sheweth the same generally to be the end and vse of all Scripture, 1. Tim. 3. 16. 2. If the Scripture be a rule, then is it a perfect rule: for God leaueth not any of his workes vnperfect: I knowe, faith the Preacher, that whatsoever God doth, it shall be for euer: to it can no man adde, and from it can no man diminish. Eccles. 3. 14. But the Scripture is one of Gods workes: Ergo, it is perfect: yea Saint Paul saith plainly, that the Scriptures are able to make the man of God perfect to every good worke: Ergo, themselves are much more perfect. 3. It is no good argument which the Iesuite vseth, the Scriptures containe more then belongeth to faith, or then is necessary to be beleeued: Ergo, they are not properly a rule of faith. We answer. 1. Though the Scriptures be profitable for other ends, then to instruct in faith and good manners, yet this is the chiefe and principall, as we haue shewed: and though many things in Scripture declared historically, are not properly of the substance of faith, yet there is nothing therein contained, which may not be referred to faith and good manners, as profitable and helping to one of those ends. 2. This argument may be returned vpon the Iesuites owne head: for if the Scripture speake of many things which are not of the necessitie of faith, much lesse is it silent in all necessarie points of faith: if it abound in things not necessarie, Nam desit in necessarijs, much lesse doth it faile in necessarie.

Last of all, although we might multiplie many arguments, but these I trust might excluding out of Scripture, may serue as a sufficient bulwark against all Popish paper bullets: Let vs heare in the knitting vp the iudgement of Augustine. In his rebus, in quibus nihil veritas, non Scriptura, non populi Dei, vel instituta maiorum, pro lege tenenda. Epist. 86. In all those things, which he speaketh of external rites, and ceremonies, of the which we haue no certaine rule out of Scripture, the custome of y<sup>e</sup> people of God, & the godly constitutions of our forefathers must stand for a law. But concerning matters of faith and good manners the Scriptures doe giue certaine rules in another place: In his quo aperte in Scriptura posita sunt, iudicantur illa omnia, que continent fidem, morem, & viuendi, de doctrina Corin. 2. 9. All things appertaining to faith, and y<sup>e</sup> rule of life, are plainly expressed in the Scripture: Ergo, by the sentence of Augustine, traditions beside Scripture haue nothing to doe with the doctrine of faith and manners, but do consist only in external rites & customes of the Church.

This doctrine also that no traditions concerning either faith or manners are to be received besides Scripture, wanteth not the glorious consent of Marcus. Sir John Burckwicke knight was condemned by the Cardinall of Scotland for affirming, amongst other things, that the Pope ought not to obtrude vpon the Church any lawes of faith beside or contrarie to the Scripture: for as the Prophets (saith he) alwaies in the beginning of their propheties, said The word of the Lord; shewing thereby, that they preached not their owne phantasies, but the word of God; and as our Saviour had his Apostles preach, Mat. 28. not what they would themselves, but what he commanded them: so now nothing ought to be taught in the Church beside the word of God contained in Scripture. Fax. pag. 1264. See the confession also of John Fortune Martyr, that he would not beleeue vnwritten verities, which agreed not with written verities. Fax. pag. 1918. col. 2.

Let vs also see the consent of antiquitie: Council. Florentin. general. Sess. 7. Andreas Colossen being chosen a champion for the Latine Church, thus speaketh vnto the Greeke disputers, which said speech was approoued of the whole Councell: Adhuc vobis (amplissimi patres) doceri an sacratissim. euangelium perfectissim. religionis nostra doctrina curpius se ferat: Equidem, vos nihil aliud prope pro vestra summa pietate respiciatis, quam sensum maximam fidei vestre scitatum in ipso concilio esse. I would gladly gladly learne of you (honorable Fathers) whether the most holy Gospell doth not set forth the most perfect doctrine of our religion, I thinke you will make no other answer (such is your pietie) then that therein, the most absolute knowledge of our faith is contained.

Further for the Imperiall constitutions: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 18. lex. unic. Gratian. Valentinian. iunior scilicet, nemo quicquam, quod scriptis probaverit, esse arduum: Let all men know, that no man is to be credited in any thing, vntill he proue it by writing: Likewise, lib. 3. tit. 1. de p. & Constantine, placuit in omnibus rebus, pro quibus esse iussit scripta rationem: It seemeth good to vs, that in all matters greatest regard be had vnto the written law. As then in ciuill matters, the written law onely tooke place, so also in diuine, the sacred writings should onely be heard: and the rather, because there is greater danger, and more vncertainie in vnwritten Scriptures, then vnwritten lawes.

Hearc also your owne decrees: *decr. p. 2. can. 34. in 7. c. 30. Lib. 1. Qui non ad propheticas voces, non ad apostolicas litteras, nec ad angelicas auctoritates, sed ad scriptas recurrunt, idem Magistri erroris sunt: They which doe not run to the prophetical sayings, Apostolicall writings, and Enangelicall authorities, but haue recourse to themselves, become the masters of errors. Therefore Papists be masters of errors, because they doe not in all things referre themselves to the Scriptures. I would therefore they were resolu'd to follow the voice of the Scriptures, and leaue their blinde traditions: as once one of their owne Popes be thought himselfe, Iohn 22. *extrem. tit. 7. c. 1. Dignum est, et ad alterius plantari: omnes, quos non pater celestis, sed humana ueritatis audacia plantauit. Apostolicis culminis confusa diuinitas: It is meete, that such plantations, as not the heauenly father, but human rashnes hath planted, should be rooted out by the Apostolicall censure. If the Pope would thus doe, as he saith, he should be an Apostolike man in deede: and of this, he should be a true

THE SECOND GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE CHVRCH.

Having now finished the questions betwene our aduersaries and vs, concerning the Scriptures, and word of God, which all doe belong to the Prophetical office of Christ: in the next place such controversies are to be handled, as doe concerne the Kingly office of Christ. And seeing the Church of Christ is his kingdome, where he ruleth and reigneth, we must intreat of the Church: and first in generall of the whole, then in speciall of the partes and members. This present controuersie concerning the Church in generall standeth vpon three principall questions.

1. Of the definition of the Catholike Church: two partes of the question. First, whether wicked men and infidels, be true members of the Church. Secondly, whether the Catholike Church be inuisible.

2. Whether the Catholike Church may erre, and whether the visible Church may faile vpon earth.

3. Concerning the true notes and markes of the Church.

4. Of the authoritie of the Church: two partes. First, whether the Church haue authoritie in matters of Faith beside the Scriptures, and whether we ought to beleue in the Church. Secondly, concerning the ceremonies of the Church.

5. Whether the Church of Rome be the true Church: two partes. First, whether it be the Catholike Church. Secondly, whether the Church of Rome be a true visible Church: of these now in their place and order.

THE FIRST QUESTION: OF THE definition of the Catholike Church.

The Papists.

The Catholike Church (say they) is a visible companie of men professing the same faith and Religion, and acknowledging the Bishop of Rome to be their chiefe pastor, and the Vicar of Christ Christ vpon earth. Bellarm. de Ecclesiis, 3. cap. 2. Causam capit. de præcept. Ecclesiæ artic. 9. Lindenb. lib. 4. cap. 84.

The Protestants.

THe Catholike and vniuersall Church is the inuisible companie of the faithfull elected and chosen to eternall life, Iohn. 10. 16. A particular Church is a member of the vniuersall and Catholike Church, and it is a visible companie and congregation of men, amongst whom the pure word of God is preached, and the Sacraments rightly administred: in the which visible congregation, there may be and are many hypocrites, euill and vnfaithfull men founde, and shall be to the end of the world. So then betwene the vniuersall and particular Church, there is a treble difference. First, the one is dispersed ouer all the world; the other in some one cuntry, citie, or any certaine place. Secondly, the vniuersall consisteth onely of the elect; the particular both of good and bad. Thirdly, the Catholike is inuisible; the other is visible and to be seene.

The question betwene vs and our aduersaries, is about the vniuersall Catholike Church, which they doe falsely define in three points. First, they hold that wicked men are true members of the Catholike Church. Secondly, they allow not this distinction of the Church visible and inuisible, but doe affirme that the Catholike Church is visible. Thirdly, they make the Catholike Church to be in subiection to the Bishop of Rome. Concerning this last point, it belongeth to the contro- uersie of the Bishop of Rome, and therefore we will not touch it in this place. The other two are now to be handled in this question as two parts thereof.

stion, whether wicked men and infidels may be true members of the Church.

The Papists.

They affirme that not onely the predestinate, but euen reprobates also may belong vnto the Church, and be true members thereof. Bellarm. Lib. 3. de Ecclesiis cap. 7. Nay they denie that the elect which are vnborne, and not yet called, doe appertaine to the Church of Christ. Rhemists annot. in 1. Tim. 3. Sect. 10. This then is generally their opinion, that there is no internall grace or vertue required in the members of the Church, but onely the externall and publike outward pro- fession. Bellarm. cap. 2. And therefore they doubt not to say that euen wicked men and reprobates remaining in the publike profession of the Church, are true members of the bodie of Christ. Rhe- misti annot. in Iohan. 15. Sect. 1.

Argum. 1. They first alleage certaine places of Scripture, as Matth. 3. the Church is compared to a barne floore, where there is both chaffe and corn. Mat. 13. to a net cast into the sea, where all manner of fishe are gathered together. 2. Tim. 2. to a house, wherein there be vessels of honor and dishonour: Ergo, both good and bad are members of the Church. Bellarm. cap. 7. lib. 3. We answer. All these places must be vnderstood of the visible Church: which is knowne by the publike preaching of the word, and therefore Matth. 3. compared to a fanne, and Math. 13. to a draw net; the Apostles, pastors and teachers are the filther men. Wherefore we denie not but that wicked men may be in the Church, but not of it: yea they may be members of the visible Church for a time, but cannot be truly ingrafted into the bodie of Christ. Falk. annot. Iohan. 15. Sect. 1.

Argum. 2. The Church (say they) is compared to a bodie, 1. Cor. 12. as in the bodie there are some parts, which haue neither sense nor life: so in the Church there are some members, which haue neither faith nor charitie, which is the life of the Church: Ergo, wicked men may be right members of the Church: Bellarm. cap. 10. There may be also some fruitlesse branches in the vine, and so euill men may be members of Christ. Rhemist. annot. 15. Iohan. 1. Every branch not bearing fruit in me shall be cast forth: Ergo, there may be fruitlesse branches in Christ.

We answer to the first, who would haue said, as the Iesuite doth, that there are parts in the bodie, that receiue neither life nor sense of the bodie? doth he meane the nailes and haire, as he seemeth to giue instance in the end of the Chapter? but they are no partes of the bodie but ex- crements (he is so deepe in his sophistrie, that he hath forgotten Philosophie) and yet they receiue some gift from the bodie, for they growe and increase; but the wicked receiue no grace at all from the Church. The Rhemists yet are more reasonable, that say the wicked in the Church, are as ill humors and superfluous excrements in the bodie, rather then liuely parts thereof, 1. Iohan. 2. Sect. 10.

To the second, is a dead bough or a branch, I pray you, any part of the tree? I thinke not: the tree cannot conueniently spare any one of the parts thereof: but the dead parts are hurtful and com- berfome, and it doth the tree good to cut the off. But that they haue preuented vs, we would haue vsed no better argument against them, then this drawn from the resemblance of a mans bodie: for as what is in the bodie receiuing no life nor power from the bodie is not properly a part of the bodie, howsoever it seeme to be ioyned to the bodie: so the wicked although they be in the outward face of the Church, yet because they are not partakers of the spirituall life thereof by Christ, are not truly to be iudged members of it.

Argum. 3. If wicked men should not be right members of the Church, but the faithfull and predestinate, we should be vncertaine which is the true Church: which is not to be admitted, because the whole doctrine, and all the principles of Religion doe depend of the testimonie of the Church. Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 10.

We answer. First, although it is necessarie that the true Church should be certainly knowne, yet not for that cause, which the Iesuite pretendeth: for the religion of Christians is grounded vpon the Scriptures, and although the true Church doth giue a notable testimonie thereunto, yet doth not our faith depend vpon their witnesse, testimonie, or allowance. Secondly, the true visible Church is certainly knowne by the preaching of the word, and the right vse of the Sacraments: so that we doubt not but there is the true Church, where we finde these markes: neither is it needfull to know the estate of euery particular member thereof; for so long, as all actions in the Church are directed and ordered by the rule of Gods word, we neede not to doubt to commit our selues to that Church, howsoever otherwise men doe stand before God: and yet, so much as is necessary, the faithfull may be iudged and knowne by their fruites.

Thirdly, though we admit that wicked men are members: yet the vncertainie remaineth still: for they themselves hold that neither men not baptised, or persons excommunicate, or heretikes can be of the Church: but many may liue in the Church, whom we know not to be baptised, which may be ipso facto, by the deede doing excommunicate without publike sentence, and heretikes also: Wherefore euen amongst themselves they are vncertaine, who are members of the Church.

Argum. 4. There is but one Church, the wicked, which outwardly professe Christ, are of some Church: Ergo, of this one Catholike Church: argum. D. Day episcop. Cuest. Answer, there is but one true Church, but alwaies vnto the same was ioyned in the world a false, and malignant Church: these two Churches were represented in the beginning in Cain and Abel, and so haue continued. Obiect. I grant you, in the Law, before Christs comming there were two Churches, but not since Christs comming. Answer. Yes that there was, for was there not a Judas in the new law, and a Simon Magus? Obiect. But you cannot finde the two Churches after Christ was ascended. Answer. Yes, S. Paul saith that Antichrist with his false generation shall sit in the temple, 2. Thef. 2. which is not the true, but the false Church, respons. Philpotts, Fox. pag. 1818.

The Protestants.

1. Iohan. 2.
Fox. pag. 609.

WE holde that the Catholike Church consisteth onely of the predestinate, and comprehendeth the vniuersall number of all those which shall be saued; not onely those now liuing on earth, but all that haue been since the beginning of the world: of this Church S. Paul was euen being a persecutor, for hee was neuer a member of the Diuell nor reprobate, as Iohn Huss saith, articul. 2. Of this Church Judas the traytor neuer was, though he were reputed for a Disciple of Christ for a while, Huss. articul. 7. Therefore the wicked and reprobate though they liue in the outward assembly of Christians, are no more the true members of Christ, then the tares in the field may be counted wheate or good corne.

Argum. 1. The true members of Christ are also his sheepe: the wicked are not the sheepe of Christ: Ergo, neither his members.

The sheepe of Christ heare his voice; the wicked doe not heare his voice: Ergo. If they shall answer, that hypocrites and wicked men doe heare Christs voice, so long as they continue in the outward profession of Christians, we thus improue it: Christs sheepe doe follow him in life and example, Ioh. 1. 4. but so doe not they: If it shall bee yet answered, that they may also a while walke in Christs steps: this is not enough, for all Christs shall be saued, vers. 9. Wherefore the Gospell vnderstandeth such followers, as continue to the end. Bellarmin would seeme here to answer with a distinction, that sometimes in the Scripture sheepe are taken both for the good and bad; as where Christ saith to Peter, Feed my sheepe: sometime for the predestinate onely, as Ioh. 10. My sheepe heare my voice, cap. 7. ref. ad argum. 5. Contra. It is enough that he confesseth in this place of Iohn the predestinate onely to bee vnderstoode by sheepe: for it followeth in the same chapter, vers. 16. There shall bee one sheepfold, and one shepheard: therefore if the sheepe onely be in the sheepfold, and the predestinate onely bee the sheepe; then they onely belong to the sheepfold.

Argum. 2. Christ is the head of his Church, and all the parts thereof; but he is not the head of the wicked and reprobate: Ergo. The Iesuite graunteth that he is the head, euen of those parts that shall perish, Bellarmin. cap. 7. We thus answer, Christ is the head onely of those, for whom he gaue himselfe, Eph. 5. 23. 25. but he gaue not himselfe for the wicked: Ergo. If this be denied, we thus proceede, Christ died onely for those whom he sanctifieth and cleanseth, to make them a glorious Church

Church without spot and wrinkle, Ephes. 5. 26. 27. But this cannot agree in any wise to the wicked. Ergo.

Argum. 3. The Church of God is the whole familie of the children of God in heauen and earth, Ephes. 3. 15. they both make but one Church, the wicked are not of this familie: for who would say that the Saints in heauen, and wicked and reprobate men vpon the earth, are fellow seruants, and of one household? Ergo, they are not of the catholike Church. Likewise Ioh. 11. 52. The end of Christs death was to gather together in one the children of God, &c. but the wicked are not the children of God: Ergo, they belong not to the congregation which Christ hath gathered together.

Bellarmino answereth here by a distinction: that some are said to bee the sonnes of God and members of Christ, according to their present iustice; some according to Gods predestination: the wicked may be the first way the sonnes of God, and the members of Christ, Bellarmino. cap. 7. resp. ad argum. 6.

Contra. 1. This distinction is contrarie to the Apostle, Rom. 8. 17. The children of God are also heires: but the wicked are not heires; therefore they are not children. 2. The Iesuite doth not answer to the point in question: for our assertion is, that the wicked cannot bee the true members of Christ: he answereth, they may bee so called after a sort, according to their present state, which is in shew only, and outward apparance, not in deede and in trueth: for they that doe beleue in Christ, and are in deede his sheepe, shall neuer perish, Ioh. 10. 28. And againe, vers. 26. Ye beleue not, because ye are not my sheepe. Wherefore faith and beleefe maketh men Christs sheepe, contrary to that which the Iesuite affirmed before, that there is no internall grace, or vertue required to make a member of Christs Church.

Argum. 4. Of all other that is a most euident place, 1. Ioh. 2. 19. They went out of vs, but were not of vs: Ergo, heretikes and reprobates are not of the Church. Bellarmino answereth: though they were not of vs, that is, of the Church, animis & voluntate, in soule and minde, and purpose of hart: yet they were of vs, externa professione, in externall profession. Thus they are not ashamed (such is their great boldnesse) to contradict the Scriptures: for the Apostle saith, non erant ex nobis, they were not of vs: they say, yes forsooth, after a sort, erant ex nobis, they were of vs: the Apostle saith nay, they say yea, he saith indeede exierunt ex nobis, they went out of vs: which foundeth nothing like, as erant ex nobis, they were of vs, as the Iesuite subtilly would conclude.

Let Augustine speake for vs both: illa columba, unica, pudica, casta, sponsa sine macula & ruga non intelligitur, nisi in bonis, iustis, sanctis: That louely doue (saith he) the chaste, vndefiled, & vnspotted spoule (that is the Church of God) is onely vnderstood of those that are righteous, faithfull, holy: Ergo, the wicked are not of the Church, which is the spouse of Christ.

Concil. V. formati in prefatione concil. Ecclesiam catholicam precio sui sanguinis redemptam, cum eo credimus in perpetuum regnaturam: That catholike Church, which is redeemed by his blood, we beleue shall raigne with him eternally. The wicked therefore are no members of the catholike Church, for they shall not raigne with Christ.

We want not here the testimonie of our aduersaries: Ioannes de Torre cremata lib. 4. de Eccles. par. 2. cap. 20. holdeth, that they which haue no faith nor no inward grace, doe not belong to the Church.

So the Master of the Sentences out of S. Augustine affirmeth: illi ad templum dei non pertinent, qui cognoscentes deum, non sicut deum glorificant: They belong not to the temple of God, which knowing God, doe not glorifie him as God, lib. 1. d. 37. c.

Hereunto agree their owne decrees, Deer. p. 2. caus. 24. quest. 3. cap. 8. Ad ecclesiam non pertinent illi, qui in eius unitate corporaliter mixti per pessimam vitam separantur: They belong not to the Church of Christ, which being corporally mixed in the societie thereof, are separated by an euill life. Again, Caus. 33. quest. 3. dist. 1. de poeniten. cap. 70. Qui peccator est, & aliqua sorde maculatus, de ecclesia Christi non potest appellari, &c. He that is a sinner, and polluted, cannot be called of the Church, which is without spot, &c.

Lastly, this doctrine, that the faithfull onely are the true members of the catholike Church, which is the mysticall body of Christ, hath the witnesse and approbation of holy martyrs. This was one of the articles for the which Iohn Hus was condemned in the Councell of Constance, for saying that the catholike Church is the vniuersall companie of the predestinate: grounding his opinion vpon that place of S. Paul, Ephes. 5. Christ so loved the Church, that he gaue himselfe for the same: but he gaue himselfe onely for the faithfull, For pag. 610. arti. 8. Luther openly protested before the Emperour at Wormes, that he would not consent to the Councell of Constance, because it condemned this article propounded by Iohn Hus, That the catholike Church is the communion of the predestinate, and so aboliseth, saith he, this article of our faith, I beleue the holy Church vniuersall: and faith further, he was readie to spend his blood, rather then to reuoke any trueth agreeable to Gods word, pag. 852. See the confession also of Richard Fournie a French martyr,

That the congregation of Christ consisted in the number of the elect, Fax p. 912. col. 1.

This also was the faith of the Merindolians, That the catholike Church was the fellowship of Gods elect: who for this and other points of their Christian faith, were persecuted; and their countrey destroyed, Fax pag. 954. col. 1.

That the faithfull onely are the members of Christ: it is affirmed by Doctor Ridley, and Master Latimer martyrs, according to the Scripture, If any man haue not the spirit of Christ, the same is none of his, Rom. 8. 9. And the Church of Christ standeth onely of liuing stones, 1. Pet. 2. 5. that is, true Christians, not onely outwardly in name and title, but inwardly in heart and truth, respons. ad articul. Antony 7.

The blood of these holy martyrs doth giue a liuely testimonie vnto the trueth, and doth notably confirme vs therein.

THE SECOND PART OF THE QUESTION, whether the Catholike Church be inuisible.

The Papists.

15. Error.

They doe affirme that the catholike Church is, and hath been alwaies visible: not so visible, because it might be seene, but that it hath been alwaies actually visible, and not seene onely vnto the members of the Church, but notoriously knowne to the whole world, Rhemens. annot. in Matth. cap. 5. sect. 3. Neither doe they meane any particular Church so to haue been visible, but the vniuersall catholike Church, which they define to bee a visible congregation of all faithfull men, Canisius cap. de fide & Symbol. articuli. 18. Bellarm. lib. 3. de Eccles. cap. 12. section. 7.

Argum. 1. The foundation of the Church is visible: therefore the Church is visible. The proposition they prooue thus: for whether wee affirme Christ, or Peter to bee the foundation of the Church: both of them are now visible in him, which is the Vicar of Christ, and Peters successor.

We answer: First, we vtterly denie either Peter to be the foundation of the Church, or else the Pope to be his lawfull successor: for Peter is no more the foundation of the Church, then all the Prophets and Apostles, Ephes. 2. 20. whose doctrine is the foundation, not their persons. And as for the Pope, wee care not so much for outward succession in place, which notwithstanding they cannot proue to haue been perpetuall without interruption, as wee doe require a succession of faith and doctrine. Secondly, wee affirme that Christ is the foundation, but not the visible beholding of Christ with the carnall eyes, but beleeuing in his name: for when Peter had vttered that notable confession of Christ, he said that flesh and blood had not reuealed it, but his father in heauen: but if the beholding of Christ had giuen Peter a sight of the foundation, then flesh had reuealed it vnto him, his carnall eyes had brought him to Christ. Thirdly, we may much better returne this argument vpon themselues: that because the foundation of the Church, which is faith in Christ, is inuisible, therefore the Church is inuisible.

Argum. 2. They heape vp many places of Scriptures, but to small purpose, as Matth. 18. Tell the Church. Acts 15. When they came to Ierusalem, they were receiued of the Church. Philip. 3. 6. Paul persecuted the Church. How could the Church be persecuted? how could it receiue the Apostles, if it were not visible? Bellarmin. cap. 12.

We answer, what goodly reasons here be? a particular Church, such as was at Ierusalem may be seene: Ergo, the catholike and vniuersall. Secondly, a particular Church may bee sometime visible: Ergo, alwaies. Thirdly, the Church is visible vnto the faithfull, as in time of persecution, for to Paul it was not knowne, when he persecuted it, but onely to the brethren: Ergo, it is visible to the world. For these three points they must proue, that the catholike Church not a particular is visible, that the Church is not sometime but alwaies visible, yea and to the world, or else they say nothing. For shame masters make better arguments.

Argum. 3. He hath set his tabernacle in the Sunne, Psal. 19. The Church is as a citie vpon an hill, Matth. 5. Ergo, it is alwaies visible, Bellarmin. ibid. Rhemist. Mat. 5. sect. 3.

We answer. First, the Apostles themselues, euen at this time, when Christ spake these words vnto them, were not so in sole, or in monte, in the Sunne, or vpon the hill, that they were seene of the world, nay they were not seene nor acknowledged of the Scribes and Pharisees in Iewrie: the Church is seene of the faithfull, it is visible to them that search for her out of the Scriptures: they that can see the mountaine, shall see the citie, the mountaine is Christ, the citie is the Church. No maruaile if the Church be not alwaies visible to the world, for they see not, neither do they know Christ. Secondly, the Church is said to be on a hill: because the trueth seeketh no corners, heretikes and false teachers flie into the desert and into secret places, Matth. 24. vers. 26. but the truth is not ashamed: the Apostles confessed Christ, euen before Kings and Princes, Mark. 13. 19. So Augustine expoundeth it, Cont. Faustum. lib. 13. cap. 13.

Argum. 4. Christs Church is alway visible. Dic ecclesia, saith he, Tell it to the Church. But how can can a man goe vnto that Church, which he knoweth not? *argum. Baur. pag. 1691. Marc. An-

nij. ch. 1. 6.*

Answ. 1. In the times of the Apostles, when the Church was persecuted, they were faine to congregate themselves in houses and priuie places: who though they were not knowne by any external pompe, yet were they knowne among themselves, and redressed things that were amisse, euen in their secret assemblies. Neither were they altogether vnknowne of the world: for how could they then haue persecuted them, though they were not regarded, *respons. Rob. Smith. Mart.
tyr.*

2. The fault why the Church is not seene, is not because it is not visible, but because mens eyes are dazeled, and cannot see, vnlesse they looke for it, by the light of Gods word, *respons. Brad. pag.
1616. col. 1. D. Ridley ad 6. ch. 1. Marc. An. p. 1719.*

The Protestants.

Concerning the Catholike Church, wee hold, that because it is an article of our faith, it is alwaies vnto the world inuisible, and not to bee espied but by the eyes of faith, *Falk. Matth. 5.
sect. 5.*

Concerning particular Churches, if by visible, they vnderstand that which may bee seene, so we graunt they are alwaies visible, Falk. Act. 1. 1. vers. 24. If for that which is actually visible: we say it is not so alwaies visible to the world, nay it may sometimes bee so hid and secret, that the members know not one another, Falk. in Matth. 5. sect. 3.

Argum. 1. To the Hebrewes it is thus written, chap. 12. vers. 18, 23, 24. You are not come to the mount-taine, which might bee touched, but to the citie of the liuing God, the celestiall Ierusalem, &c. Ergo, the Church is inuisible, and here opposed to the visible hill of Sinay.

Bellarmine answereth, that this is vnderstood of the triumphant Church in heauen, not of the militant vpon earth, chap. 15.

To this wee make answer, the Apostle vnderstandeth the whole vniuersall Church in heauen and earth, which both make but one familie, Ephes. 3. 15. for here he nameth not onely the spirits of iust men which are in heauen, but the faithfull vpon earth, whose names are written in heauen:
the congregation (saith he) of the first borne: the words are congregatio and ecclesia, a gathering together, collection or congregation, which must needes bee vnderstood of men vpon earth. Again (saith he) ye are come, not ye shall come: they had now left the smoking mountaine Sinay, and were come to Sion, the Church vnder the Gospell. Wherefore this is a most firme and inuincible argument: the catholike Church is the vniuersal number of Gods chosen in heauen and in earth:
Ergo, inuisible.

Argum. 2. We will giue an instance: In the daies of Elias the Church was not visible, for he complained and saith that he was onely left alone, 1. King. 19. 10. Ergo, the Church is not alway visible.

The Rhemists answer: First, at that time the Church was visible in Iudea, the souldiours were numbred to 1000. thousand, 2. Chron. 17. We answer. First, belike they haue taken a more exact account of them then the Lord himselfe: for he (saith he) had reserved 7000. 1. King. 19. 18. that had not bowed their knees to Baal: they say there were ten hundred thousand. Again, Elias, if he had knowne such a number, could not haue been left so comfortlesse, as in griefe of heart to desire to die. But be it graunted that the Church was visible in Iudea at this time, though it were not so to Elias: yet where was that visible Church in the daies of Achaz and Manasseh, when Iu-dea fell also to Idolatrie?

Bellarmino also answereth, as the Rhemists doe, that in Elias time the Church was visible in Iu-dea, and therefore God saith directly, that he had left 7000. in Israel: whereby those tribes are vnderstood which were vnder the King of Samaria, cap. 16. resp. ad argum. 3.

Answ. First, they cannot shew vs of any Prophet notwithstanding at this instant in Iudea. Secondly, I will aske the Iesuite, these 7000. in Israel were they not of the Church? it cannot be denied: Ergo, the Church is not alwaies, and in all places visible, as they would beare vs in hand: for they were not knowne to Elias, who complained that he was left alone. Thirdly, S. Paul, the best expounder of the Prophets, Rom. 11. 1. expoundeth Israel to be all the people of God: and himselfe of the tribe of Beniamin he calleth an Israelite, which tribe notwithstanding belonged to the diuision of Iuda. And in the fifth verse the Apostle saith, Euen so now (saith he) there is a remnant, through the election of grace, as there were then 7000. left: whereby the Apostle signifieth, that this was the whole remnant of the elect which was left then.

Some other doe answer thus: They graunt that the Church before Christ might be inuisible, but not the Church since Christ: for he saith, edificabo ecclesiam, I will build my Church, not that I doe build, or haue built it: sic Hethus episcop. Eboracens.

Answ. By standing thus strictly vpon the future tense, you may as well proue that Christs Church was not at all before his comming, as that it was not visible before. But Christs meaning is this rather, rather, that there is no building in the Church but by Christ only: for Paul and Apollus be but waterers, ſic Bradford Martyr. Fax pag. 161 ſ. col. 1.

Argum. 3. To beleuee that there is an holy catholike Church is an article of our faith: Ergo, it is inuiſible. Bellocus answereth. Firſt, the holineſſe of the Church is inuiſible. We reſp. to the Church is partly viſible, partly inuiſible by his confeſſion. Firſt, why then doe ye define the catholike church to be a viſible congregation, if it be not wholly and altogether viſible? they know that definitio muſt conuenire definito, the definition muſt agree wholly to that which is defined: but now it is not: for they ſay, the catholike holy Church is partly viſible as it is a Church, partly inuiſible as it is holy. Secondly, doe we not ſay in the Creede, Credo Catholicam, as well as Credo ſanctam, I beleuee a catholike Church, as well as I beleuee the holy Church? then it is alſo inuiſible, as it is catholike, becauſe this alſo is part of the article. See I pray you what ſhifting is here.

Secondly he answereth, that ſome thing is ſcene in the Church, ſome thing beleueed: for wee ſee that viſible companie of men, which make the Church; but whether that companie be the true Church, we doe not ſee it, but beleuee it.

We reſp. againe: firſt, the Ieſuite hath not yet proued that ſome thing is ſcene in the Church, ſome thing beleueed: but one thing is ſcene, namely the congregation as they are men, another thing is beleueed, that they are the Church: the ſight and beleefe now by his owne confeſſion are not both in the Church. Secondly, wee denie that the vniuerſall companie of the catholike Church, which is the number of the predeſtinate, can be ſcene; therefore all is beleueed, and nothing ſcene. Thirdly, he ſaith that by faith we know which is the true Church: Ergo, by faith we know which are the members of the Church: Ergo, by faith the members doe know themſelues to be of the Church: therefore faith is requiſite in the true members of the Church: then vnfaithfull men cannot be true members of the Church: which point the Ieſuite ſtrongly before maintained againſt vs. Mendacem oportet eſſe memorem, a lier had neede haue a good memorie, leaſt he tell contrarie tales, and ſo hath the Ieſuite here: for before he denied that faith was requiſite to make a true member of the Church: here he ſaith, that without faith a member cannot be knowne, much leſſe therefore made.

Argum. 4. The Rhemiſts confeſſe in theſe very words, that in the raigues of (their imagined and ſuppoſed) Antichriſt the externall ſtate of the Romane Church, and publike intercourſe of the faithfull with the ſame ſhall ceaſe, and that there ſhall be onely a communion in heart with it, and praſtiſe in ſecret. Annot. in 2. Theſſ. 2. ſect. 10. Where then (I pray you) ſhall be your tabernaculum in ſole, ciuitas in monte, candelis ſplendens in domo: your tabernacle in the Sunne, your citie in a mountaine, your candle ſhining in the houſe, that is (ſay you) in the world? Matth. 5. ſect. 3. Ergo, out of their owne words we conclude, that the Church ſhall not alwaies be viſible, and notoriously knowne in the world.

We muſt not here ouerpaſſe the ſentence and iudgement of the holy Martyrs, whoſe witneſſe is in ſtead of many arguments.

Maſter Bradford reaſoneth thus: As Eue was of the ſame ſubſtance that Adam was of; ſo is the Church of the ſame ſubſtance that Chriſt was of, fleſh of his fleſh, bone of his bones, Ephes. 5. 30. Looke therefore how Chriſt was knowne when he was vpon earth, ſo is his Church: but Chriſt was not knowne by any external pompe in the world, but by conſidering according to the word of God: Ergo, ſo is his Church, Fax pag. 161 3.

This was one of the articles for the which Biſhop Farrar was condemned, for denying that the Church was alwaies viſible vpon earth, Fax pag. 1554. col. 2. articl. 6.

M. Robert Glouer Martyr giueth an inſtance of Elias times, when the Church lay hid and was not apparant, no not to the Prophet. It was answered him that Elias complained onely of the ten tribes that fell from *Dauid*s houſe. He replyeth, that they were not able to ſhew any Prophets that the other two tribes had at the ſame time, Fax p. 1712. col. 1.

M. Phispos confeſſeth the Church to be viſible, and inuiſible, the vniuerſall Catholike Church is inuiſible, conſiſting of the elect of God onely; the viſible conſiſteth of good and bad, and is known by the word of God and Sacraments, pag. 1824.

Laſtly, we will conclude with Auguſtine, Aliquando in ſola domo Noah Eccleſia erat: in ſola Abraham Eccleſia erat: in ſola Loth & domo eius Eccleſia erat: in ſola Henoch Eccleſia erat: Sometime the Church was onely in *Henoch*s houſe, ſometime onely in Noah, ſometime in Abraham alone, in Loth and his houſe. How then hath the Church been alwaies ſo viſible and notoriously knowne to the world, when it hath lien hidden ſometime in one houſe, yea in one man?

Interrog. Caſar. cap. 9. Eccleſia, quatenus conſtat membris ſalibus qua ſecundum charitatem viuunt, ſanctorum eſt tantum, & tenens ſpiritualis & inuiſibilis: The Church as it conſiſteth of ſuch members, which liue after the rule of charitie, is onely of the Saints, and ſo ſpiritually onely, and inuiſible. Behold here we haue the teſtimonie of our aduerſaries themſelues, ſitting in Councell for the inuiſibilitie of the Catholike Church. To this their owne decrees alſo doe giue conſent:

decr. p. 3. dist. 2. cap. 63. Societas corporis & membrorum Christi Ecclesia in predestinatione. The Societie of the bodie and members of Christ is the Church consisting of the Predestinate. If the Church consist of the elect onely, then is it not visible to men, but onely to God; for he onely knoweth who are his, 2. Tim. 2. 19.

THE SECOND QUESTION: WHETHER the Church may erre.

THis question is diuided into two parts. First, whether the Catholike Church may erre at all, or not? Secondly, whether the visible Church vpon earth may fall away from God into Idolatry and Apostasie.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE CATHOLIKE Church may erre in doctrine.

The Papists.

They doe teach that the Catholike Church cannot possibly erre, not onely in matters absolutely necessarie to saluation, but not in any thing, which it imposeth and commaundeth, whether it be contained in the word of God or not: yea that it cannot erre in those things, which beside the word of God in the holy Scriptures are commanded. And by the Church here they doe meane not onely the Pastors and Bishops, but the whole company of the faithfull: so that neither that which all the Pastors of the Church doe teach, can be erroneous, nor what is received generally of the whole Church, Bellarmin. de Eccles. lib. 3. cap. 14. Rhemist. annot. in Iohann. 14. vers. 16.

Argum. 1. The Church (say they) is the pillar of trueth, 1. Tim. 3. Ergo, it cannot erre. We answer: first, it is no otherwise the pillar of trueth, then a Virgine without spot and wrinkle, Ephes. 5. 27. As that place doth not priuiledge the Church from all sinne and imperfection of life; so neither doth this place exempt her from all error in doctrine. Secondly, she is called the pillar of trueth in respect of vs, because the trueth is preserved in the true Church, and is not else where to be found: not because the trueth dependeth vpon the Church: for Saint Paul sendeth not Timothee in this place to learne of the Church, as though it could not possibly be deceived: but (saith he) these things haue I written, that thou mayst know how to behaue thy selfe in the house of God, vers. 14, 15. Ergo, the word of God is the rule of trueth, and the Church hath no warrant to be kept from error, but as she is led and gouerned by the word of God. Thirdly, the argument followeth not, for Peter was a pillar, and yet erred, Gal. 2. 9, 11.

Argum. 2. They heape many arguments together. The Church hath the spirit of God, to leade it into all trueth, the gates of hell shall not preuaile against it, Matth. 16. God hath giuen it Apostles, teachers, Euangelists, to keepe it in the trueth, Ephes. 4. Christ hath prayed for the Church that it may be sanctified in the veritie, Iohn 17. Christ prayed that Peters saych should not faile: Ergo the Church cannot erre, Rhemist. annot. 1. Tim. 3. 15.

We answer: every one of the elect hath the spirit of God, neither shall the gates of hell preuaile against the faith of any one of the elect to ouerthrowe it: Christ prayeth for every one of his Disciples that they may be sanctified in the trueth. Ioh. 17. 20. wherefore it followeth as well by these arguments, that no one faithfull man can fall into error. The Pastors and teachers so long as they follow the Apostles doctrine, may keepe the Church from error: but it is not gathered out of that place, Ephes. 4. that the pastors, if they swarue from Gods word, cannot erre: But rather the contrarie; and therefore the Apostle addeth further, vers. 14. that we should not be caried about with euerie winde of doctrine; but follow the truth in loue vers. 15. The Church then, so long as it followeth the truth, and is not caried with wind of doctrine, cannot erre.

Concerning Peter, Christ prayed for him that his faith should not faile in that grieuous temptation, which he fell into. Secondly, he prayed not for him as gouernour of the Church, but as he prayeth for every faithfull man, Ioh. 17. 23. Thirdly, for all this prayer Peter erred, Gal. 2.

Argum. 3. This argument was vsed in the Councell of Basil: the Church is without spot and wrinkle, Ephes. 5. 27. Ergo, without error, Fax. pag. 67. ex Armon Siluis.

We answer: first, S. Paul speaketh there of a glorious Church, such as it shall be in the kingdome of heauen, not of the Church, as it is vpon earth: so Reuel. 7. 14. The elders which sitte round about the throne, which are the Saints in heauen, were scene in long white robes; which they had washed white in the blood of the Lambe.

It followeth out of this place, that the Church is as well without sinne, as freed from error: which the diuines in the Councell did also grant. But seeing by their owne confession every member of the Church, being clothed in this mortall flesh sinneth, how can the Church be without sinne? If the Church consist of men, and all men are sinners, how is the Church free? If all the parts and members be sinnefull, how is not the whole also polluted with sinne? If all the parts of the bodie be sicke and diseased, how can the whole be sounde? The Church also is not ashamed to confesse her selfe to be blacke, Can. 1. 5. she shall be made beautifull and glorious without all spot and blemish in the kingdome of God: and euen now also is made righteous and iust before God through Christ, not because she hath no sinne, but because it is remitted: and although some errors and imperfections remaine, yet shall they be no hinderance to her saluation.

The Protestants.

THis question, whether the Church may erre, must be vnderstood with a double exception: first, that the vniuersall Catholike Church of Christ erreth not, Caluin. institut. lib. 4. cap. 8. sec. 11. 12. But there is no visible Church in the earth, which may not erre, as well in faith as in manners: this position was maintained by M. Bucer, in open disputation at Cambridge, For pag. 1388. Secondly, the true Church of God may erre in some poynts not necessarie to saluation, but can not fall cleane away from God into any damnable error, Calu. ibid. Fulk. annot. in Ephes. 5. vers. 29. And in this sense is the Church called, Religionis & fidei perpetua mater: A perpetuall mother and preseruer of faith and religion, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. l. 14. Leo & Anthem. That the Church may erre as we say, we doe shew it thus: and by the Church, we vnderstand the whole company and congregation, the pastors with the people.

Lib. 3. de eccles. cap. 17.

1 When our Sauour Christ suffered, the Church erred in faith: Ergo, it may erre: the proposition is thus proued. The Church was either in the Scribes and Pharisees, or els in the Apostles: but both of them erred: they in putting Christ to death; the other in their incredulitie, not beleeuing rightly in the resurrection of Christ. Bellarmine answereth: first, that the Pharisees were priuiledged not to erre, onely till the coming of Christ. We reply againe: first, after Christ was come they sate in Moses chaire, and Christ biddeth they should be heard, Mat. 23. 2. If they erred not afore, neither could they now; for they were not displaced out of Moses chaire: but the truth is, they neuer had any such priuledge not to erre. Secondly, the Master of Sentences seemeth herein to be of another opinion, who thus saith, answering to a certaine obiection, whether circumcision ceased to be in force straight after the institution of Baptisme: In Christi morte terminata esse legalia omnia: That all the legall rites were determined in Christs death, and from that time Circumcision ceased, lib. 3. diff. 3. K. If that all the Legals were in force till Christs death, then the Priesthoode also: wherefore what priuledge they had before, they held it till then. Thirdly, if the Pharisees were now prone to error, then by our aduersaries owne confession, they ceased to be the Church: Ergo, the Church was not now visible, for in them it was not: and the Apostles fled from Christ, and shifted for themselves: how could then the Church be visible to the world?

Secondly, the Iesuite answereth concerning the Apostles. First, the Apostles were not yet entred into their office and Bishopricke, but only appoynted to it, and therefore they might erre. We reply againe: first, they were not onely appointed Apostles, but partly alreadie they had exercised their Apostleship: for they were sent forth to preach the Gospell, and had power and commission to worke miracles, and heale diseases, Matth. 10. How then is not the Iesuite ashamed to say, that they were not yet Pastors nor Apostles? Secondly, if the Pharisees erred, and the Apostles erred, then all the world was in error: Ergo, by their saying at this instant there was no Church vpon the earth, which is a great absurditie, for the Church erreth not, they say.

Thirdly, (saith the Iesuite) the Apostles erred not in faith: they were reprobued for not beleeuing the resurrection: which beleefe because they had not yet receiued, they could not looke it. We reply. First, though they had not erred in any materiall point; yet if there were any error at all in them, it is sufficient for our purpose: that they erred it is manifest, for they fled away from Christ. Secondly, he excuseth them for their infidelitie concerning the resurrection, because this faith they had not yet receiued. But had not Christ (I pray you) often instructed them of this matter? and if this were no such error in them, then Christ was too sharpe in reprobuing them for their infidelitie. Thirdly, it appeareth, that they wholly were deceived concerning the Messiah, Luk. 24. 21. the two Disciples say, they trusted that it had been he that should haue deliuered Israel: see then what weak answers these are: did these fellows thinke that their gloses should not be examined? or that their dreames should be taken for oracles?

Fourthly, some of the Papists affirme, that the true faith in the passion of Christ only remained in the virgin Marias breast: Alexand. Halens. Iohan de turris cremas. If this be true, then is Bellarmines opinion false, that the Apostles at that time kept the faith. But it is most like that they are all deceived, and that both Maria and the Apostles at that time were in great feare and doubt, and their faith shaken. That the Apostles wauered, we haue alreadie shewed: and yet there was greater cause, that they should be stable in faith, who were also to be preachers of faith, then Maria who was a beleuer onely, not an Apostle or preacher of the Gospell.

Argum. 2. The Church of the Iewes erred before our Sauour Christs coming: Ergo, the true Church may erre.

The

The proposition is proued: In the time of the raigne of good kings, they did offer sacrifice vpon hill altars, but onely to the Lord, which was an error. 2. King. 12. 14. 4. The feast of the Passouer was not kept so precisely according to Gods word at any time before, no not in the raigne of the best kings, as it was in the 18. yeare of Iosias taigne, 2. King. 23. 12. The feast of Tabernacles had not been so solemnly and truly kept from the daies of Iosias, as it was in Nebuchadnezars time, Nehem. 8. 18. Ergo all this while the Church of the Iewes erred somewhat in the externall worship of God, Falk. Eph. cap. 3. Sect. 4.

Argum. 3. We reade of famous Churches, that erred both in faith and manners after our Saviour Christs comming in the flesh, euen in the Apostles time: Ergo, the true Church may erre: The first part is thus proued: the Church of the Corinthians erred in manners: they went to law among heathen Iudges, chap. 6. which was a generall fault among them: It is so, that there is not a wise man among you 1. ver. 5. They erred also in iudgement. It will be answered, that the error, or heresie rather, concerning the resurrection was not generall: for the Apostle saith, How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? chap. 15. ver. 13. But that error and abuse in the receiuing of the Lords Supper seemeth to haue been more vniuersally spread: Every man (saith the Apostle) when they should eate, each his own supper afore, and one is hungry, another is drunken, chap. 11. ver. 21. Every man, saith he, that is, very many, yea and the most among them. The Church also of the Galatians, was (in no small part thereof) infected with this error, that the ceremonies of the law ought necessarily to be kept together with the Gospel: and therefore S. Paul vpbraideth in a manner the whole Church: O ye foolish Galatians, who haue bewitched you? &c. Chap. 3. 1. Ergo, these Churches, being notwithstanding the Churches of Christ, erred.

Bellarmin answereth, confessing that these Churches had their errors. (yea he is more liberall in granting this, then we would haue him) for hee slandereth the whole Church of Corinth, as though they denied generally the resurrection of the dead, which they did not: S. Paul only chageth some of them, that is, the false brethren, with this error, as it may appeare: 1. Corinth. chap. 15. ver. 12.

*Bellarmin*s last refuge therefore is this, that error may be in a particular Church, but not in the vniuersall Catholike Church: de eccl. lib. 4. cap. 2. argum. 3.

Answer: First, thus Bellarmin himselfe is constrained to vse Cabines distinction which he misliked before: who confesseth that a particular Church may fall into dangerous error; but not the vniuersall, de eccl. lib. 3. cap. 1. 4. princip. cap. Secondly, the Iesuite hath granted, as much as we would desire: for if euery particular Church be subiect to error, then the visible Church is; for the visible Churches must needs be particular: for vniuersall things are not subiect to the sense, but to the vnderstanding: this then he hath granted, that a particular Church may erre; but the Italian, Spanish, French, and so of the rest, are but particular Churches: Ergo, they may erre. Thus we haue the Iesuites owne confession, that particular visible Churches may erre.

Augustine saith, Quomodo eris Ecclesia in ista tempora, perfecta sine macula & ruga, cuius membra non mendaciter confitentur se habere peccata? How can the Church be perfect in this life, without spot or wrinkle, whose members do truly confesse, that they are not without sinne? Ergo, the Church sinneth and is imperfect, and why not subiect to error? But in the Councell of Basil it was denied, as ye haue heard, that the Church could sinne.

We haue their owne testimonies against them: as before for particular men, of their side, we haue heard the opinion of Alexander. Alex. 3. par. quas. ultim. artic. 2. and of Iohannes de turre cremata lib. 1. de eccl. 30. That at the passion of Church the true faith onely remained with Maria: Hereupon it will follow, that the Church that then was, erred and failed in faith; vnlesse they will say, that Maria onely was the Church.

But let vs heare the iudgement of their owne Church against them: decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 39. c. 28. Innocent. 3. Iudicium Dei veritati quibus fallit, nec saluatur, semper iudicatur; iudicium autem ecclesia nouumquam opinionem sequitur, quam & fallere sope contingit, & falli propter quod contingit interdum ut qui ligatus est apud Deum, sit apud ecclesiam solutus, &c. The iudgement of God is grounded vpon the truth, which neither deceiue, nor is deceiued; but the iudgement of the Church is many times ruled by opinion, which both may deceiue, and be deceiued: whereupon it sometimes falleth out, that he, which is bound before God, is loosed with the Church; and he that is free before God, is bound by the Church, &c. Beholde then a testimonie of one of your most learned Popes, that the Church may erre in iudgement. But it will be here answered, that he speaketh of the discipline of the Church, not of doctrine. Ans. But Bellarmin, to proue that the Church erreth not, obiectioneth that place, Matth. 18. dic Ecclesia, tell it to the Church: and he that heareth not the Church, let him be as an heathen and Publicane. But this were an hard matter, saith he, to bind men to heare the Church if it might erre: Bellarmin. 1. 4. But this place is vnderstoode altogether of discipline: wherefore his meaning is, that the Church cannot erre in the keyes: and in deede, so long as it followeth Gods word, it cannot, as our Saviour saith, whosoeuer you bind on earth,

Pelag. lib. 4.
cap. 9.

earth, shall be bound in Heaven: but otherwise it may erre in the keyes; for thus sometime, that which the Church bindeth in earth, may be loosed in Heaven: as Tomeus in this Canon confesseth. Item on this point, Thomas in his Summa 2. 2. q. 100. art. 1. Shall see now in the last place, this doctrine to the seal of the holy witnesses of Gods truth: M. Delany being demanded, whether thought of the Church, whether it might erre or not: answered, that the Catholike Church can by no means erre in faith; for it is the whole congregation of the elect: otherwise he granted not, Ex pag. 1000. artic. 4. The like confession made Henr. Bainham Martyr, pag. 1628. But concerning the visible Pastors and teachers of the Church, we haue the ancient confession of Walter Brut, who liued about two hundred years ago, that they may all erre, and haue erred: yea Peter erred (saith he) Gal. 1. and was therefore reprobod of S. Paul, onely the Scriptures are priledged from erring, Ex pag. 477.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THE

visible Church may faile vpon the earth.

17. Error.

They holde that it is impossible that the visible Church should utterly faile vpon the earth, and fall from God: but that there shall alwaies be a visible and knowie Church vpon the earth, hauing a perpetuall succession of Pastors and Doctors, where the true worship of God shall be preferred and kept, Beilarm. lib. 3. de Eccl. scap. 12.

Argum. 1. These and such places of Scripture they stand vpon, Matth. 16. The gates of hell shall not preuaile against it: Matth. 28. I will be with you to the end of the world: Psalm. 88. His throne shall be as the Sunne, and endure as the Moone: Ergo, the visible Church shall not faile vpon earth, Beilarm. lib. 3. de Eccl. scap. 12.

We answer: that these places must be vnderstood of the Catholike and vniuersall Church; whereof we denie not, but every true particular Church is a part. This Church is the spouse of Christ: this Church shall not perish, this is the kingdome of Christ; with this Church will he alway be present to the end of the world: we denie not but that the inuisible Church shall continue vpon the earth so long as the world endureth: Secondly, these places are vnproperly vnderstood of the visible Church, for therein are both good and bad: how then can that be the spouse of Christ, where there are many infidels and wicked ones, which haue not espoused themselves vnto him? How can it be called his kingdome, whereas it is not of all acknowledged? But in the true Catholike Church all and every one are espoused to Christ: all and every one haue the kingdome of God within them, as it is Luke 17. vers. 21.

Argum. 2. They doe abuse that place of S. Paul, Ephes. 4. 11. He gave some to be Apostles, some Euangelists, some Pastors and teachers, for the gathering together of the Saints: Ergo, the Church shall alwaies be visible till all the Saints are gathered together, Beilarm. sup. 13. Rhenus. Ephes. 4. vers. 11.

We answer: this place proueth that the Church hath neuer wanted Pastors and teachers for the continuance of the truth, neither shall euer be without them, as the Lord said by the Prophet Isay 59. vers. 21. My spirit which is vpon thee, and my words which I haue put into thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy seed for ever. We therefore denie not but that in all ages, yea in the most ignorant times of Poperie, God raised vp faithfull teachers vnto his Church: although they were not mitred and croziard Bishops, neither could shew any outward pompe or boast of any glorious succession: Such were Guilelmus de S. Amore, Arnoldus de noua villa. anno. 1240. Berengarius, Isachius Abbas, in the time of Innocentius the 3. Wickles, Brut, Spinderby, Badby, and others about anno 1400, with many which were not knowne to the world: for the truth neuer in any age wanted witnesses.

By the continuance of the truth and right faith we gather, that there haue been alwaies faithfull teachers, though not potiorious to the world, and shall be: but who they were, and where they liued, what pompe, what authoritie they were of, it is not materiall to know: wherefore an outward visible succession of Bishops and Pastors is not necessarie for the continuance of the truth: neither can it be concluded out of this place.

Argum. 3. Thus they reason, there haue been alwaies some faithfull men, which haue outwardly professed their faith: for if they dissembled or cloaked their profession, then were they not faithfull: Ergo, the Church hath been alwaies visible, as in the time of persecution, Beilarm. lib. 3. de Eccl. scap. 12.

We answer: first, the Iesuite doth cleane peruert and change the state of the question: for he defineth a visible Church, to be multitudo congregata, in qua sunt prelati et subditi: a multitude or compaignie gathered together, where there are both Prelates and Bishops, and people obedient vnto them. And now he giueth an instance of persecution, wherein some faithfull Christians may giue an outward profession of their faith: where is now that multitude congregate together?

where is that iurisdiction of Prelates? where is that visible and glorious succession? We denie not but that in time of persecution the faithfull may be knowne to themselves; and yet sometime they are not: for in Israel there were seven thousand faithfull beside Ethan, yet he knewe none of them. But it followeth not, that therefore the Church is then visible to the world, and notoriously knowne to men, as the Rhemists say, in Math. 3. 3. 4. 1. 3. Thus they die manifestly from the question.

The Protestants.

WE denie not, but that the Catholike vniuersall Church, as it hath hitherto continued since the beginning of the world, so shall it endure to the end: the Lord shall neuer want vpon earth a companie of faithfull men, which shall truly serue him: though it be not necessarie, neither hath alwayes been scene, that they should be in any one place: A visible Church we define to be a congregation of men, amongst whom the word is truly preached, and the Sacraments administered: Such a Church hath not alwayes been, neither can we be assured that it shall alway be found vpon the earth, wherein the worship of God publickely and visibly is practised.

Argument. In the reigne of Abaz King of Iuda there was no visible Church, where the pure worship of God was practised; for both Israel vnder Pekah, and Iuda vnder Abaz, fell to Idolatry, and followed the custome of the Gentiles, 2. King. 16. 3. yea Vriah the high Priest consented with the King to set vp Idolatry. Likewise in the dayes of Manasseh, who did euill after the abhomination of the heathen, 2. King. 21. 2. there was no place where God was publicly worshipped: for Iuda was corrupted, Israel was carried away captiue: Ergo, there was a time when there was no visible Church.

Belarius cannot here shift vs off with that anſwere, which he maketh to the objection of Edw at time: that he complayning of the ſmall number of the faithfull, meant of Iſrael onely: for at the ſame time, the true worſhip of God was exerciſed in Iudea: to this we haue answered before; 3. quæſt. 2. part. of this Controuerſie. in argum. proteſt. 1.

2. The Iewite then hath another starting hole; there is not the like reason between the Church of the Israelites then; and of Christians now, for theirs was but a particular Church; and therefore though it failed with them, yet were there many faithfull among the heathen to be found, as Melchisedech and Iob: but the Church of Christians is an vniuersall Church; see Bellarm. sup. l. 2. c. 1. ad

Answ. First I demand of them, was not the Church of the Jewes then the Church of Christ, as the Church of Christians is now? but the Church of Christ was alwaies Catholike: Ergo, so was that Church then: and though it were visible onely then among the Israelites, yet all the faithfull in the world were members of the same Church; that the Israelites belonged vnto: Ergo, there is no such difference betweene these Churches, as the Iesuists suppose. Secondly, what telles he me of certaine beleeuers among the Gentiles? that is not the question: for we doubt not but that the invisible Church of Christ hath been in all times and places: he should haue proved, that there was another visible Church to be found among the Gentiles, beside that of the Israelites: which could not be, seeing that at Jerusalem onely the sacrifices were to be offered, and the law was one-ly and the Prophets among them, which then were the essentiall notes and markes of the Church.
Thirdly, yet will the Iesuiste finde it an hard matter to finde any faithfull men at this time among the heathen, when there was none in Israel: In Melchisedechs time, there was Abraham, and when Issai liued, there were many excellent men in Israel, if as some thinke, hee liued about the time of Moses: but whom can he name now among the Gentiles, that were true worshippers, when as all Israel and Iuda were giuen to idolatrie? We conclude then, that seeing we can as-signe a time, when as the Church was not visible among the circumcised Israelites, and among the vncircumcised it could not be, that there was a time when as the visible Church fayled vpon earth: Augustine saith, Ecclesia Catholica, non solum post aduentum Domini & saluandis nostris præparata
est, sed etiam ab initio mundi multis signis & sacramentis designata: The Catholike Church began not to be called after the coming of our Lord and Saviour Christ, but waisted from the beginning of the world by many figures and sacraments described before us. Augustine here saith, that the Church before Christs coming was Catholicus, Catholice, or vniuersalis. Athenagoras saith, Ecclesia Iudeorum non erat vniuersalis, The Church of the Jewes was not vniuersall or Catholike. Out of Augustine I conclude thus, the Church of the Jewes before Christ was the Catholike and onely visible Church of the world, but sometime failed: Ergo, the visible Church may faile vpon earth at this time. At the passion of our Saviour there was no visible Church, such a Church wee still meaner; as where there are Priests, & bishops, Pastors and people; pastors and sheepe. We proue it thus: If we had won yare doid u notouigo als to flon pto not, away bnd
The visible Church was not amongst the Pharisees and Sadducees, for they shamefully and wickedly erred. Bellarmine said not amongst the Apostles, for they also erred; therefore after the Papists opinion, they were not the Church: for the Church (say they) erreth not

Н

Secondly,

Secondly, he saith, they were yet but materiall parts, not formall, that is, not Bishops or pastors : how then could there bee a visible Church, which was without the formall and principall parts, that is, Pastors and Bishops: Ergo, there was then no visible Church.

3. When the abomination of desolation shall stand in the temple, and there shall be a generall defection and apostasie from the faith, then shall the visible Church faile vpon earth: But the first is true, Matth. 24. 15. 2. Theff. 2. 3. Ergo.

To the first place the Iesuite answereth, that it must bee vnderstood of the destruction of the temple, chap. 16. But the Rhemists more liberall then so, affirme that it shall bee especially accomplished in Antichrists time, when as the sacrifice of the Masse shall utterly bee abolished, Annot. in Mat. 24. ver. 15.

To the next place concerning that defection and apostasie, which S. Paul speaketh of, first he saith, that it shall be a defection from the Romane Empire: but the Rhemists say, it shall bee a defection from most points of Christian religion. Secondly, the Iesuite answereth, that though it be a defection from the Romane faith, yet it shall not be generall but particular. But the Rhemists better aduised graunt it shall be a reuolt of kingdomes, peoples, prouinces: and the publike entercourse of the faithfull with the Church of Rome shall cease; they shall only communicate with it in heart, Annot. in 2. Theff. 2. sect. 6.

Now out of their owne words we conclude: there shall be a time when as the publike seruice of God shall cease, there shall be desolation in the Churches and temples of Christians: there shall bee then no publike entercourse with the Church, but a priuate communicating in heart: Ergo, there shall be a time when there shall be no outward visible Church notoriously and famously knowne: Ergo, our aduersaries are in an error, and are condemned by their owne mouth.

Examin. 4.

In the last place let vs see how this doctrine hath been sealed: Master Philip that blessed martyr, by that place of S. Paul, 2. Theff. chap. 2. ver. 3. Christ shall not come, except there be a departing first, sheweth, that there should bee an vniuersall departing from the faith, for so the word departing, properly signifeth, and we call him apostata that forsaketh the faith: in which sense the word is vsed, 1. Timoth. chap. 4. ver. 1. When this vniuersal departing from the faith fell out in the world; which came to passe when Antichrist was reuealed, and the man of sinne disclosed, as the Apostle there saith: what was then become of the visible Church? I thinke it failed when the profession of the faith failed.

cap. 16.

Let vs see antiquitie for this matter: The Emperour Constantine, who fauoured the Arrians, thus tauntingly said to Liberius Bishop of Rome: Quia puer es orbis terrarum, quid salus vindicas hominum infaustissimum? I pray thee how many parts of the world art thou, that thou darest alone succour this naughtie man? meaning Arianisme. Liberius answereth: Non eo quod sum solus fidei causa vincitur, nam et antiquitus tres soli reperiuntur resistentes precepto regis: The cause of faith is not therefore impaired because I am alone, for sometimes there were onely three found, which resisted the Kings wicked commandement, Dan. 3. When the true worship of God was onely found amongst three persons, it is apparant that the visible Church of God failed vpon earth. Thus haue we an authoritie of one of the Bishops of Rome against them.

THE THIRD QUESTION OF THE NOTES

and markes, whereby the true Church may be discerned and knowne.

FIRST OF THE FALSE AND ERRONEOUS NOTES OF THE CHURCH.

Our aduersaries doe deuise many notes, whereby their Church is descried, as Bellarmine reckoned vp fiftene in order, too many (certaine) to bee found in a good Church: but there are fixe principall which they doe most stand vpon: Antiquitie, vniuersalitie, succession, vnitie, the power of miracles, the gift of prophesie: We will first touch these in order, and then come to speake of the true and infallible notes of the Church.

Of Antiquitie. Note 1.

18. Error.

The Papists make great bragg of the long continuance of their Church: yea, that they can shew the descent of their Church from Adam, Rhemus, annot. in Act. 13. sect. 5. But (alacke) filie men, they must come short of our Saviour Christ and the Apostles time, by fift or fixe hundred yeeres, for the most of the opinions which they now hold. Let vs examine their reasons. In any great change of religion (say they) the authors of the sect, the time when it began, the persons that opposed it may be knowne: but no such thing can bee shewed of our Church (say they) as we can shew of yours: we can tell them the yeeres, the places, and ringleaders of their reuolt, sole, say our English Rhemists, chama. in 1. Titulus. folio. B. in 2. de. de. cap. 3. o. folio 12. v. 12.

 We answer: first, no maruile if Papistrie here in doe much differ from other heresies, they are the heresies of the Arrians, Pelagians, Donatists, because they were not long to continue, suddenly ly brake out, and suddenly againe were extinguished: But Papistrie, being the prop and pillar of Antichrists Kingdome, by whom the world must bee deluded many yeeres, was at the beginning to worke closely and secretly, not breaking out at once into open impiety and blasphemie, but vnder pretence of holinesse to let abroad her deadly poyson: therefore S. Paul calleth it a mysterie of iniquitie, which began euen to worke in his daies, 1. Thess. 2. v. 15. And so S. Iohn 1. aduersus Pe-
Nunc quoque iniquitatem iniquitatis operatur, & garrus unusquisque, quid sentiat: Euen now the mysterie of iniquitie beginneth to worke; and every man doth venter his owne fancies.
 And whereas you alledge, that the authors of euery heresie may be assigned, which cannot bee shewed, you say, of your profession: S. Bernard would haue told you otherwise, if you had consulted with him: for thus he writeth of the heretikes called Apostolici: Quid ab his sua secta auctoribus criminari debent? Aske of them the author of their sect, they can name none: which heresie had not it proper author from amongst men, as the Manichees had Mansi, the Sabellians Sabellius, the Arrians Arius, &c. But with what name will you call this heresie? surely with none: non est ab homine Wichiffe heresie, their heresie is not of men; & yet is it not by revelation, sed per hominis Serm. 66. in uic. & fraudem dominacionem, but by the fraud and deceit of the diuell: Thus saith Bernard: Thus we see, that the heretikes called Apostolicall, could name no author of their sect; yet were they heretikes: so the Papists, that haue so much in their mouths, the See Apostolike, Apostolical men, Apostolicall traditions, &c. and so shew themselves to be the Apostolici of these daies: though the authors of their superstitions say hid, yet this were not sufficient to cleere them of heresie.
 Secondly, we also answer, that all these things, the authors of their sects, the times, the persons that withstood them, may manifestly be detected: first, concerning the time, we haue a manifest prophesie, Apocal. 20. that Sathan should bee bound a thousand yeeres, and after ward let loose:
 when no doubt Antichrist should begin to shew himselfe to the world. Concerning this space of a thousand yeeres, there are two probable opinions: some thinke they are to begin immediately after our Saviour Christs time, and so counting a thousand yeeres, all which time Sathan must be bound; then Antichrist should begin to appeare: Thus Iohn Wickiffe expounded it. Others say, the thousand yeeres ought to begin after the three hundred yeeres expired of persecution for all that while it is most like Sathan was let loose, when he rag'd with open mouth like a Lion against the Church and Saviour of God: Of this opinion was Walter Brute (somewhat after Wickiffe) differtime: who by this meanes maketh the prophesie of Daniel of 1290 daies, and that in the A- pocal. 12. of 1260. daies, to agree with the thousand yeeres of *Sathan*s binding (a few yeeres excepted, which in the computation of hundreds and thousands make no great odden) for taking euery day for a yeere, we shall come to 1290. yeeres after Christ: when the thousand yeeres must be expired, beginning from the three hundred yeeres of persecution. If wee count the thousand yeeres from Christ, wee shall come to the time of Hildebrand, called Gregorie the 7. who was Pope of Rome a thousand yeres after Christ and vpward: by whom the marriage of Ministers is thought first to haue been forbidden. If we begin after the ceasing of persecution, which continued three hundred yeeres, we shall fall into the yeere 1300. about the time of Iohn Wickiffe, when the great rabble of Monkes and Friers began to swarme, and superstition to increase.

But we will take a little paine briefly to touch the authors of many superstitions in Poperie, and of their erroneous and hereticall opinions: Anno 420. Zosimus Bishop of Rome did challenge a prerogative about other Churches, that it might be lawfull to make appeales from other Churches to that See: and to set the better colour vpon it, he falsely alleaged a decree of the Nicene Councell, but there was no such thing found there: wherefore it was decreed in the Councell of Carthage at that time, that none should appeale ouer the seas to Rome.

Boniface the 3. purchased of the wicked Emperour Phocas the title of vniuersall Bishop: Transsubstantiation was first concluded against Berengarius, anno 1082. vnder Leo the 9. but not pub-likely enacted before anno 1216. vnder Innocentius the 3. The Dominicke Friers brought in the same time, and their sect established by Innocentius the 3. Auricular confession also was brought in anno 1215. vnder the same Pope.

Telismorus brought in the Lenton fast. Calixtus instituted the foure Ember fasts in the yeere: Kennic. ex-
Hyginus brought in Churme. We can also shew by whom euery piece of their blasphemous Masse hath been patched together: Marriage was first prohibited by Nicholas the second, Alexander the second, Gregorie the seventh, about the yeere 1070. The Communion in one kinde forged and inuented, and decreed in the Councell of Constance, not about two hundred yeeres agoe. By these few examples it may appeare that it is false which the Iesuite saith, that the authors of their sects and heresies cannot be shewed.

Now wee will briefly declare what oppugners and gainsayers they haue had in all ages, since their

Fol. prelat.

their grossest opinions began to bee received: Such were Beatus and Bartholomaeus about Pope Hildebrand time, that mightily impugned the grosse opinion of Transubstantiation, Robertus Gal- lus 1291. Robertus Grossetest Bishop of Lincolne, who was called malitius Romanorum, the mallet or hammer of the Romanes, anno 1250. Franciscus Petrarca 1350. Joannes de Rupe scissa, who prophesied against the Pope 1340. with many other, which ceased not to erie but against the abominable vices and erroneous opinions of the Church of Rome. Wherefore it is, a great vntueth, which the Iesuite doth so stily enough, that we cannot let down the pedigree and descent of their Church and faith, and how it hath continually bene resisted.

Now whereas they say, that they can name the ringleaders of our sect: we have none other masters and authors of our faith, then our Saviour Christ and his Apostles, by whose holy writings wee refuse not to bee tried. But you shie from the light, you disgrace the Scriptures, making them imperfect, and insufficient: this the true Disciples of Christ would not doe: you are the Disciples of Christ, as the Pharisees bragged that they were the Disciples of Moses. And as then the true Church was not in those that sate in Moses chaire, though they could alleage great antiquitie, but in Christ and his Apostles: so is not now the true Church to be discerned by custome or number of yeeres; but by that trueth which was taught and preached by our blessed Saviour, and his Apostles. Augustine also saith, Possumus etiam laudare et adulteri pro se antiquitatem adferre.

Theeves and adulterers can also alleage antiquitie for themselves, quasi. ex veter. testam. 1. 14.

Antiquitie therefore is not a perpetuall note of the Church.

Here Beza saith, whereas wee alleage, that our Church is most ancient even from the Apostles time, though it hath a long time been hid, and not been notoriously knowne in the world, as the malignant Church hath been; doth thus replie against vs: That if the true Church of Christ hath been so many yeeres buried in silence, it should bee in more miserable case, then the people of the Jewes, which have had alwaies their Synagogues: and where is then that glorie of the Church of Christ spoken of by the Prophets? Bellar. lib. 4. de Eccles. cap. 5. in fine.

Answ. 1. As for the Jewes, though their name and nation yet remaineth, yet they are a people ignominious through the face of the earth, and as vagabonds doe wander from one nation to an other, and therefore are not to be compared to the Church of Christ, which though it were in the first times obscured in the cruell persecutions of the Emperours; and since defaced through the ambition of the Bishops of Rome, yet hath been since Christs time for many yeeres a glorious and flourishing Church throughout the world: 2. Concerning the glorie of Christs Church, foretold by the Prophets, it was rather spirituall in the propagation of the faith, and preaching of Christ to the Gentiles, 1. Timoth. 3. 16. then temporall in the outward glittering shew: and yet the Church also was outwardly glorious from the time of Constantine for many hundred yeeres after. The spirituall beautie of the Church hath and shall continue to the end of the world: the temporall glorie it alwaies enjoyed not, as in the persecutions vnder the Romane Emperours, and since vnder the Italian Bishops; though in the middelt of the hot persecutions both then and since the true members of Christ shewed themselves; as partly I have touched before; in the second part of this answer to their note of antiquitie, that for the space of these five or sixe hundred yeeres, there have not wanted some of our Church, that have tasted of the persecutions.

But saith Bellarmino againe, most of your Evangelicall Doctors came out of our Church, as Lan- ther confesseth himselfe that he had been a Monke. Answ. 1. And from whence, I pray you, sprang our Saviour Christ and his Apostles? came they not of the Jewes and were not his Apostles taken out of the Jewish Church, that was then so corrupted in religion? 2. As vnder the government of the high Priests and Scribes, there were notwithstanding many devout men, that expected the coming of the Messias, as Zacharias, and Simeon: so wee doubt not, but that in Poperie there were many, and some of them Monkes, that had a taste of the Gospell, and loathed the cor-ruptions of the Romish Church.

But concerning this note of antiquitie, that it is no sufficient mark of the Church, we can urge them with both their lawes. Iust. Cod. lib. 8. tit. 59. l. 2. Constantin. Consuetudo non valet, qua rationem vincti non legem: That custome or antiquitie is of no worth, which goeth against reason or law. But such is your antiquitie against the law of the word of God, Erra.

Secondly, out of your owne law, Dever. 1. d. 8. cap. 4. Veritate manifestata, cedat consuetudo veri- tati: After the trueth is manifested, let custome give place to the trueth. Cap. 5. Gregorius 1. Chri- sti dixit, Ego sum veritas, non consuetudo: Christ said, I am the trueth, not the custome. Cap. 8. Con- suetudo sine veritate, vestitus est erroris: Custome without trueth, is the oldnes of error. Likewise, Decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 4. cap. 11. Consuetudo non derogat iuri diuino: Custome doth not preuaile against the diuine law.

By all these decrees it is manifest, that custome and antiquitie vnlesse it bee propped vp with trueth, and agreeable to the law of God, is of no force. Such antiquitie vnlesse you can shew for your

Hierome saith, Multitudo facierum nequaquam in Catholicum, sed hereticum effunditur: The multitude of your fellowes doth not therefore prooue you a Catholike, but rather an heretike, lib. 3. aduers. Pelagian. And S. Augustine: Non omnes heretici per totam faciem terra, sed summi heretici per totam faciem terra, alij hic, alij ibi: All heretikes are not dispersed ouer the face of the earth, yet heretikes are, some here, some there, Hocul de pastorib. Thus we see that heretikes may as well stand vpon vniuersalitie, as Catholikes.

The like also hath the Ciuill law, Cod. lib. 1. titul. 20. l. 1. Iustitien. Neque ex multitudine auctorum, quod melius aequiusque est indicatur, cum possit unus sorsus, & deterioris sententia, & multi & maiores aliqua in parte superari: Neither by the multitude of authors iudge ye what standeth best with equitie, when as perhaps the sentence of one that is inferiour, may in some respect goe beyond the greater and higher sort. As then equitie in Ciuill causes goeth not by multitude, so neither veritie in diuine.

Hearc also one of your owne Popes testimonie, Nicolaus and Michael Imperatores. Numerum paucissimum non habet, ubi abundat pietas; nec multiplex prodest, ubi abundat impietas: multo igitur gloriosi in multitudine, quia non multitudine, sed causa damnationis, vel iustificationis adducit: A small company hindereth not, where pietie aboundeth, neither doth a great companie further, where impietie aboundeth; glorie not therefore in multitude, for not the multitude, but the cause iustificeth or condemneth.

Secondly, you haue nothing to doe with the Church which was propagated in the Apostles time, nor for the space of five or sixe hundred yeeres after Christ: it was not your Church, for the most of your heresies are more lately sprung vp then so. And you neede not bragge of your vniuersalitie now: for the Turke (I trow) hath a larger dominion then the Pope; and Mahometisme is as largely spread as Papistrice, and further too. And for Europe, I hope you need not make your boast: the Pope had neuer lesse iurisdiction then he hath now, and I trust every day shall haue lesse. But many (you say) in the new found countries haue been conuered to your religion. Indee, if you had had grace, such an oportunitie being offered as the Spaniards had, you might haue wonne that simple people to Christ. But you thirsted more for their gold, then for their soules health: it is notoriously knowne to the world what extreame crueltie hath been wrought vpon that innocent people. Was thara Catholike part of the Spaniards to keepe dogs of purpose, to wearie and destroy the inhabitants, to vse them as horse and beasts, to plough, to carrie, to digge? Thus by your crueltie, there were out of one small Iland called Hispaniola, which was well peopled and inhabited, destroyed and footed out in short time, two millions of men and women: the storie of Bencio an Italian, is abroad to bee scene of this matter: you haue none or few of your Popish Catholikes in those countries, but of your owne brood that haue been sent thither. But enough of this.

We nothing doubt, but that our faith, the truth of the Gospel hath been long since knowne and published to the whole world.

Those two conditions, which the Iesuite putteth in, to make the Church vniuersall, do helpe vs very well: the first is, that it is not necessarie, that all countries wholly should professe the Christian faith; but it sufficeth, if there bee some of the Church in every countrie. The second, it is not requisite, that this vniuersalitie of the Church should be all at one time: but if it be done successiue, that is, in diuers ages, one countrie to be ioyned to the Church after another, it is enough.

Now keeping these two conditions, we shall easily proue our Church to be vniuersall: for there are no countries in Europe, and few in the whole world, wherein there are not some of our faith, namely, that abhorre worshipping of Images, doe onely hope to be saued by faith in Christ without merit, and beleue in the rest, as we doe. And againe, taking one age after another, we shall easily make it good, that our faith at times hath spread it selfe ouer the whole world.

Now let vs set to the seale of this our answer, the testimonie of the holy Martyrs. Bl. Philip first denieth that vniuersalitie, ynlasse it be ioyned with veritie, is a sufficient note of the Church, For pag. 181. For the Church of God hath not for the most part the greatest multitude, for it is the broad way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that find it, see Richard Woodman Martyr pag. 1996. col. 1.

Secondly, Master Philip denieth that vniuersalitie is a note of the Romish Church: for the faith which that See now maintaineth, hath not consent of all nations, neither euer had: for the Greeke Church, and a good part of Christendome beside, neuer receiued their seruice in an vknownen tongue, neither yet your Transubstantiation, your receiuing alone, your purgatorie, your Images: see Roger Holland Martyr pag. 2040.

Thurdly, saith M. Bradford, our Church is rather to be counted vniuersall, though it were but in tenne persons, because it agreeth with the faith which the Apostles vniuersally did plant: for Christs Church is not so much called Catholike, because it is vniuersally spread ouer all nations, for so was it not in the Apostles time, but because the doctrine which they had receiued of Christ, was perfect and appoynted to be preached to all the world. So saith Augustine, Ecclesia idcirco dicitur Catholica, quia vniuersaliter perfecta est, & in nullo locum: The Church is called Catholike, because the doctrine thereof is vniuersally perfect, and faileth not in any point, lib. de Gens. cap. 1. Sic Phil. pot. Fax pag. 1825.

The third Note, of succession.

They make great boast of the long and perpetuall succession of their Popes from the Apostles for the space of these 1500. yeares and more: condemning all Churches which cannot shew the like order of succession, Belarm. cap. 8. Rerum. ann. in Eph. vers. 13. And further, saith Belarmine, there are two things requisite in lawfull Pastors and Bishops, succession and ordination: for first they must succcede either immediately some Apostle, as Clement did Peter; or some consecrated by the Apostles, as Ignatius succeeded Eusebius, whom Peter made a Bishop; or must be consecrated by him that hath the Apostolike authoritie: but such succession, you can shew none in your Church, either from Apostle, or Apostolike men.

10. Error.

Secondly, ordination is requisite in a lawfull Bishop, that he bee ordained of three Bishops, which were ordained of others, and they of others before them, til they come to the Apostles: thus Isaac was ordained Bishop at Ierusalem by Peter, Iames and Iohn 1. Ananias in epist. 2. according to the first canon of the Apostles: neither can you shew such ordination of your Bishops: Ergo, you haue no true Pastors, nor lawfull Bishops, and so consequently no Church, Belarm. cap. 8.

Answ. First, as touching ordination, then concerning succession. 1. That there ought to bee in every Church a seemly ordination and consecration of the Bishops, Pastors, and Ministers, and that according to the example and rule of the Apostles, wee denie not; and such wee doubt not, but our Church hath. But such ordination, as the Iesuite requireth, is not necessarie, that euery lawfull Bishop must proue his ordination by three other successiue from the Apostles time: as thus it is shewed. First if you will credit S. Hierome, he saith, Optim. idem erat presbyter & episcopus: In the beginning, a Bishop and Priest were all one: and before that schismes entered into the Church, communis presbyterorum concilio ecclesia gubernabatur, the Churches were governed in common by the whole presbyterie: Which sentence of his is allowed in your owne canons; Decret. par. 1. dist. 95. cap. 5. If it bee thus, that this distinction of Bishops and Priests was not brought in in the Apostles time, but afterward; then can no such ordination be shewed from the Apostles time. Secondly, notwithstanding the Canon which goeth vnder the name of the Apostles, it seemeth the practise of the Apostles, and of the Church was otherwise a long time: for Timotheus, whom you hold to haue been a Bishop, was ordained by the imposition of the hands of the whole presbyterie or eldership, which was not the assemblie of Bishops only, as Belarmine would expound it, but of other pastors also, as Hierome doth interpret it, epist. ad Eusebium; and the Rhemists also in the same sense translate it, the priesthood, and in their annotations shew the ancient practise of the Church agreeable to this place of S. Paul, when as the rest of the Priesthood lay on their hands together with the Bishop. And your owne Canons to this purpose approue the sentence of S. Hierome: Senatum Romani habebant, cuius consilio cuncta agebant, & nos habemus senatum nostrum eorum presbyterorum: The Romanes had their Senate, by whose counsaile they did all things, and we haue our Senate the companie of Presbyters, Decret. par. 1. dist. 7. cap. 7. And S. Ambrose thus writeth plainly: Non per omnia communis scriptis apostoli ordinationis, quia nunc est in ecclesia: The writings of the Apostle doe not in every point answer the ordination now vsed in the Church, in 4. ad Ephos. How then is the Iesuite able to proue their manner of ordination from the Apostles time? The practise also of their owne Church is contrarie: as Decret. par. 1. dist. 95. cap. 2. Marius thus decreeth: That at the ordination of a Bishop, adesset oportet omnes, qui sunt in provincia sacerdotes, all the other Bishops of the prouince must bee present, whom the Metropolitane must summon by his letters: and if all come together it is well; but if this cannot be, yet most of the must come: but they that cannot come, must be present by their letters, that so the Bishop may bee ordained, omniuius fidei consensu, by a generall consent of all. And then he concludeth thus: Si aliter factum fuerit, &c. But if it be done otherwise, then I haue prescribed, such ordination is of no force. Likewise, dist. 66. 1. Anicetus: Archiepiscopus ab omnibus suis principibus Episcopis ordinatur: An Archbishop must bee ordained of all the Bishops in the prouince. By these Canons a presence of more then three Bishops is required. Thirdly, whereas the Iesuite saith, that Lauis after this manner was consecrated by three, Peter, Iames and Iohn, out of Ananias, he speaketh he knoweth not what, and is too much confident vpon his counterfeite Ananias: for thus Lauis the Apostle named in the 2. to the Galatians with Peter and Iohn, is the same which was Bishop of Ierusalem: for the other Lauis was slaine long before by Himel, Act. 12. and thus the Iesuite self where confesseth, lib. 1. de Roman. pontifice cap. 1. But now he bringeth in a third Lauis to be Bishop of Ierusalem. And if Lauis must needs be ordained by three, how cometh it to passe, that S. Peter against the Canon of the Apostles, himselfe alone appointed Clement his successor, saying thus,

1. Tim. 4. 14.

1. Tim. 4. 14.

Clementus hinc Episcopus vobis ordinat? I ordaine Clement your Bishop? Declar. 2. cap. 8. quest. 1. cap. 2. If it bee answered, Peter was an Apostle, and more then a Bishop, and therefore might ordaine alone; why then did he not as well alone ordaine James Bishop of Jerusalem? unless you will say that it was the chiefe Bishopricke, and therefore required the presence of more Apostles? This unless you will say, you can shew no reason of Peters sole ordaining Clement.

Fourthly, whereas Bellarmine objecteth, that as in the old law the Priesthood went by carnall generation and lineall descent from Aaron; so in the new it must be deriued by succession from the Apostles. We answer: first, that our Sauour Christ and his Apostles could shew no lineall descent from Aaron, neither had their ordination from his successors; and yet were the true pastors of the Church. Bellarmine answereth, that Christ began a new Priesthood after the order of Melchisedech, and therefore he was not tied to the lineall descent: but from Christ and his Apostles a succession must now necessarily be shewed. Contra. To grant this difference for this time, though indeed Christ came not to disolue Moses law, but to fulfill it; yet this wee say further, that both before Christ there were true pastors and Prophets, which were not ordained by the Priests of Aaron; and since Christ, that receiued not their ordination successiue from the Apostles. First in the old law, when the ordinarie Priesthood was corrupted, God raised vp Prophets from other tribes, that receiued not from the Priests their ordination and allowance; such an one was Ad Heliodor. mos, who was among the heardsmen, and as Hierome saith, Rubinus in eadem disstringit subitū prophetā effudit: was made a Prophet as he gathered wilde blackberries. After the same manner, in the corrupt times of the Gospell, the Lord hath raised vp faithfull Ministers to his Church, that could shew no succession from the degenerated Clergie. Againe, since our Sauour Christ S. Paul was appoynted an Apostle, who had not his ordination from the other Apostles, but was immediately called by Christ: yet the Iesuite telleth us that he was ordained of the other Apostles, and quoteth Act. 9. Act. 13. Contra. 1. Act. 9. 17. Ananias layeth his hands vpon Saul to receiue his sight, and to baptize him, but not to make him an Apostle: for Ananias himselfe was but a Disciple, no Apostle; how then could he ordaine an Apostle? Secondly, Act. 14. 3. The Prophets at Antioch named in the first verse, layde hands vpon Saul and Barnabas, not thereby giving them ordination of Apostles, but separating and sanctifying them for that especiall worke: for if this imposition were an ordination, and that other also by Ananias; by this reason, he should be twice ordained: and againe here were none but Prophets at Antioch, no Apostles; how then could they ordaine Apostles? Thirdly, if S. Paul were ordained by the Apostles, then he himselfe was no Apostle; for the Apostles had no authoritie to make new Apostles, but all Apostles were immediately designed from God. Fourthly, the Apostle himselfe saith, he was no Apostle of men or by men, but by Iesus Christ, Galath. 1. 1. And againe, he did not communicate with flesh and blood; neither went vp to the other Apostles, but after three yeares, vers. 16. 17. immediately after his calling from heauen preaching Christ. Here is no ordination from the Apostles, he was acknowledged by them, and receiued into the number of the Apostles, but not ordained.

If it be answered, that this example of S. Paul was extraordinarie, but now in the Church an ordination successiue from the Apostles must be shewed: We reple againe, that we alleage not this example, as though we did expect the like extraordinarie calling now, or refuse ordination deriued from the Apostles, but to this end, that if S. Paul were made an Apostle, without the ordination of the lawfull Apostles, much more may the Lord raise vp new Pastors to his Church without ordination from the vsurpers of the Apostles. Secondly, we also hold that an ordination from the Apostles is alwaies necessarie in the Church, but not such as they meane by locall succession, and outward tradition: but a lawfull consecrating and ordaining of Pastors and Ministers by the authoritie of Christ and his Apostles, according to the word of God committed to the faithfull dispensers in euery true Church and congregation of Christ; which ordination our Church hath. As for their superstitious ordination, we refuse it as superfluous and vnecessary; there may be lawfull Bishops and Pastors without it; as there were Prophets in the Law not of Aaron: yea and much more, for the Priesthoode of Aaron was of Gods institution, so is not your Popish consecration: And Saint Hierome here saith with vs; Nou facit Ecclesiasticā dignitatē Chriſtianum: The Ecclesiasticall dignitie maketh not a Christian, as he sheweth by the example of Ananias; and thus much concerning ordination. Now in the next place of *Bellarmine*s objection for succession.

Anacletus.

We answer: first, they cannot shew such a continew and perpetuall succession; without any interruption, or discontinuance for so many yeares; for some time there were two, sometime three Popes together, and this schisme continued 29. yeares, till the Councell of Constance, where three Popes were deposed at once; Ad Heliodor. 13. the Spanish Pope, Gregorius 12. the French Pope, and Iohn 23. the Italian Pope. Beside there are many other doubts in their succession: First, whether Peter were Bishop of Rome or noe, whereof more shall be said afterward in the controuersie of the Bishop of Rome: and you shal heare Canons affirme, that quod Ecclesiam Romanam solus fecerunt both both Peter and Paul did consecrate the Romane Church: you must shew then a succession from both. Secondly, it is vncertain who succeeded Peter; your decrees hold, that he ordained Clement, as we haue seene before: others affirme that Linus was, primus post Petrum Episcopus, the first Bishop after Peter; as Durandus Enchiridion 3. c. 4. Hieron. in catalog. 295. How then can you deriue your succession from Peter? Thirdly, your succession hath been interrupted and broken off, as when Pope Isidore slept into the Papall chaire, and a woman managed the affaires of your Church, say also, that she was S. Peters successor; so then they themselves cannot shew that succession, which they boast of.

2. If succession be so sure a note of the Church, it is found also in other Churches besides, as in Constantinople where hath been a perpetual succession (as Nicophorus saith) from S. Andrew, and where Ieremias is at this day Patriarch, at Alexandria from S. Mark, where Melchior also hath at this time his patriarchal seate: in other Churches also of Grecia, they haue yet their Metropolitans, as at Thessalonica, where Gabriel now sitteth, at Ephesus also and Corinth: as it may appeare by these reuerend patriarches and Metropolitans authentike letters directed vnto our Churches here in the West in the year 1595. in the behalfe of Iuane Adolphe, a Grecian of Pathmos, who collecteth for his raunsome. Other Churches therefore we see may alleadge succession, as well as the Church of Rome.

The Iesuite here is driuen to his shifts, and hath nothing to say, but this: that the argument followeth negatively, that where there is no succession, there is no Church: not affirmatiuely, that where any succession can be shewed, there straightwayes it should follow there is a true Church: So by the Iesuites owne confession he hath made but a bad argument for the Church of Rome: we haue a perpetuall succession of Popes from the Apostles time: Ergo, we are the Church. It followeth not, saith the Iesuite: we grant it. Why then a little before did he call it insolubile argumentum, an insoluble and vnanswerable argument?

3. Thirdly, we say, that a succession of persons in the same place, without succession of doctrine, which they cannot shew, is nothing worth. A succession of the Apostolike faith and doctrine proueth a continuance of Pastors and teachers, and not contrariwise. We haue the Apostolike faith, and therefore we doubt not but that there haue been continually in the Church faithfull teachers, by whom that doctrine hath been preserved and kept: though they were not famous, nor carried a glorious shew in the world. For that outward succession is not necessarie, neither so much to be stode vpon. Augustine when he had alleaged succession against heretikes, concluded thus: Quia quoniam non tantum nos de istis documentis presumimus, quod de Scripturis sanctis: althoughe Epist. 164. (saith he) we presume not so much vpon these documents as of holy Scripture.

Wherefore briefly to ioine issue with them: first we say that they themselves can shew no such succession in place from S. Peter, as they pretend, as we haue shewed before. Secondly, though they did succede in place, yet not succeeding in faith and holines, it is nothing: as Symonides your owne Bishop saith, that Petrus hereditatem inuenerit a transmisit ad posteros, that S. Peter did leaue to his successors the inheritance of his innocencie: decr. p. 1. dist. 40. c. 1. Therefore hauing left his innocencie, they haue left the succession. Thirdly, whereas diuers of the Fathers commend the succession of that See from the Apostles, it was for that they kept also the Apostolike faith: as decr. p. 1. can. 2. q. 1. c. 14. Hierome thus writeth to Damasus, Petri & sedem & sedem tenet: You holde both the seate and faith of Peter. Fourthly, a succession in doctrine is sufficient to proue a Church, though in respect of the time and place, the succession bee interrupted: so the Apostle saith: Cui seruis de progenitoribus: Whom I doe serue from my progenitors, 1. Timoth. 1. 3. meaning Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, the first Fathers of the faith, for we doubt his immediate progenitors did fauour of the leauen of the Pharisees: As the Apostle proueth his faith by a descent though interrupted from his progenitors, so we shew our Church, by succeeding the Apostles in doctrine.

And here your owne decrees doe helpe vs well, decr. p. 1. dist. 40. c. 1. 2. Non cathedra facit sacerdotem, sed sacerdos cathedram; non locus sanctificat hominem sed homo locum; non omnis sacerdos sanctus, sed omnis sanctus sacerdos: The chaire maketh not a Bishop, but a Bishop the chaire; the place doth not sanctifie the man, but then man the place; every Priest is not holy, but hee that is holy is a Priest. Wherefore where there is no episcopall chaire by succession, holines of life and sincericy of doctrine may erect an Apostolike chaire.

Here wanteth nothing but the seale, I meane the blood of Martyrs given in testimonie of this and other points of our faith.

Bl. Philippus thus answereth to the argument of succession: that it is no infallible note of the Church; for there may be a succession of Bishops where is no Church, as at Antioche, Ierusalem: But if you put to succession of Bishops succession of doctrine withall, as it was in Augustinus time when he vsed this argument against the Donatists, it is a good prooue. Obiect. Why will you not haue the Church to be certaine? by whom then will you be iudged? Answer. I denie not, but that the Church is certaine, but not necessarie tied to one place longer then it

hideth in the word, by which all controuersies ought to be iudged, Sic Philop. pag. 183.

Bl. Bradford being pressed with this argument, that he could not goe vpward and shew a succession of Bishops, as they could, he might make a leap downward, but vpward he could not goe: makech this answer. 1. The ministerie of Gods word, and ministers be an essenceall point: but to manifest this, saith he, to the outward glorious succession of Bishops, is a plaine subletie.

2. S. Stephen, Acts. 7. being accused to teach newe and false doctrine, goeth not vpwards to proue his faith, but beginneth at Abram, and so goeth downwards till Isaai time, and the captiuitie: from whence he maketh a great leap vntill the time he was in, which was about 4001 years: On this sort can we proue our faith, and so can you neuer do yours. Sic Bradford pag. 1614. col. 1.

The fourth Note, of Vnitie.

11. Error.

Our aduersaries doe stand much vpon Vnitie; which they thinke is the glorie of their Church: they doe embrace vnitie amongst themselves, and all ioyne in obedience to their head. Their vnitie also is secke, say they, in the wonderfull consent of all their writers in matters of Religion: and the notable agreement and concord in the decrees of their Popes and Councils. But as for vs, and our Church, they say, it is full of rents, schismes and diuisions. Bellarm. cap. 9.

First of the vnitie of their Church, and then of the vnitie of ours. Their vnitie, they say, is partly seene in their obedience, and louing societie and fellowship, partly in their Religion and doctrine. First, for their concord and loue one toward another: we will take some paines, a litle to decipher it. About the year of the Lord 900. there was pretie sport amongst the Popes, nipe of them one after another: Stephen the sixth abrogated all his predecessor Formosus decrees: and not content with that, he tooke vp his bodie which was buried, and cut two fingers of his right hand off, and commanded his bodie to be buried againe. After him succeeded Pope Rhomanus, Theodorus the second, Sabin the tenth, who ratified and confirmed the doings of Formosus. After them followed Pope Sergius, who disanulling all their actes, tooke vp againe the bodie of Formosus, cut off his head, and commanded his bodie to be throwne into Tiber the great riuer in Rome. Was not heere great amitie and loue, thinke you, amongst the Popes? xx. Polychron.

Another notable example of their vnitie we haue in Pope Urbanus time the 6. against whom stood vpp a contrarie Pope in Fraunce named Clement: it is worth the noting, what coyle these two Popes keepe: betwene whom many battles were fought, many thousande slaine. Pope Urbanus beheaded five Cardinals together after long torments. Bishop Aquilonus, because he did ride no faster, was had in suspicion, and slaine and cut in peeces by Urbanus souldiers, at his commandement. Behold heere I pray you the vnitie of these Catholikes.

Theoderic.

Ex paralip.
Abbat. Vrip.

We will adioyne one other example, no longer since then in King Henrie the eighth time. The Duke of Bourbon being the leader of the Emperors armie, laide siege to Rome, and sacked it: the souldiers brake in vpon the Pope, which was Clement the seventh being at Masse, slew diuers of the Priests, and one Cardinall called Santorum quatuor: they laide siege to the Castle of S. Angell, so long till the Pope yielded himselfe. The souldiers daylie that lay at the siege, made iestes of the Pope: sometimes they had one riding like the Pope with a whore behind him, sometimes he blessed, sometimes he cursed, sometimes with one voice they would call him Antichrist. See here is their Catholike obedience to their chiefe Bishop. Thus much concerning their vnitie and concord in life.

Let vs likewise take a view of their vnitie in doctrine. We heard before how Pope Stephen and Sergius abolished the decrees of Formosus: how then saith the Iesuite, that the decrees of Popes doe consent together? The Councell of Basill, and Constance before that decreed, that the Pope should be subiect to generall Councils: but this Canon was afterwarde reuerfed, and now generally the Papists hold the contrarie, that the Pope is aboue Councils.

Let vs see the consent of their writers: Bellarmin. lib. 1. de verbis. cap. 12. maintaineth against Lyrannus, Driedo, Genetard and others, that Iudas was in Manassas time. Against Alphonsus de Castro, that heretikes are no members of the Church, lib. 3. de Eccles. cap. 4. Against Iohannes de turro cremata, that faith is not necessarie to make one a member of the Church, lib. 3. de Eccles. cap. 10. And euery where the Iesuite taketh great libertie to confute and controll other his fellow Papistes: belike hauing found out some starting holes, that they either knew not, or were ashamed to creepe into, as the Iesuite dooth: see more of their dissensions in opinion, Tetrastyl. Papist. pillar. 4.

But (saith he) we denie not but that we haue dissensions, but they are not in materiall points, but in such things as appertaine not to faith. I maruaile, he blusheth not thus to say, himselfe knowing the contrarie. Is it not a substantiall point and belonging to faith, to know which bookes are canonicall Scripture, which are not? but in this question they doe much disagree. Caietanus the Cardinall saith, that we must acknowledge no Scripture, but that which was either written or approued approved by the Apostles. But Carthage a Papist doth recite that opinion: Hugo Cardinalis, Arist. as Monianus, doe hold no bookes of the old Testament to be Canonically, which are written onely in Greeke: the Papists now generally hold the contrarie: Ex 10. in Machab. 1. 1. c. 1. v. 1. quod. cap. 6. Bellarmine saith, that all those opinions, which the Church holdeth, as articles or precepts of faith, were delivered by the Apostles: and that the Church must not now seek for new revelations, but content her selfe with the Apostolike traditions and doctrine, de Serpente lib. 1. c. 2. p. 1. Out of the which words it doth necessarily follow, that the Church is not now to found any new article of faith: but this generally is denied by the Papists: and Stephanus an English Papist, is not ashamed to say, that the Church may adde more bookes to the Canonickall Scripture, by her absolute authoritie.

Further, to beleue that the Virgin Mary was without sinne, yea conceived without originall sinne, is now amongst the Papists received for an article of faith: and therefore in Paris none are admitted to be Doctors of Divinitie, which doe not first confirme this article by their oath. Yet this was a great question between the Scotists & Thomists, and a great & hot contention arose about this controversie, anno 1476. betweene the Dominicke Friars, who affirmed that she was conceived in sinne, and the Franciscanes, that held the contrarie. But these Franciscanes had the upper hand, and foure of the other order were condemned and burned for it at Berne: And yet for all this our aduersaries will say still, that they varie not in matters of faith. Thus we haue seene what is to be thought of Popish vnitie.

Now to answer briefly to their false accusation, whereby they charge vs with manifold schismes and dissensions: yea Bellarmino is not ashamed to say, that an hundred severall sects are sprung vp amongst vs, cap. 10. lib. 4. de Eccles.

1. We say with S. Paul, Opiniones huiusmodi, 1. Cor. 11. there must be heresies and diuisions in the Church. And it is a signe we haue the truth, when the diuell goeth about by schismes and contentions to hinder the preaching thereof. Wee answer to you, as Augustine did to the Pagans: Nun profertur nobis quasi concordantiam sciamus: hostem quippe, quem persequimur, esse non persequimur: Let them not boast of their concord, and cast in our teeth the dissension of Christians: the enemie assaulteth not them as he doth vs: Quid de laici off, quia litigant, vel damni sunt litigant: The diuell shall get nothing if they should disagree, nor lose any thing by their agreement: for he hath fast hold enough of them already, consenting all in Idolatrie. But amongst Christians he labourerth to hinder the truth by discord, because he cannot oetherwise withdraw them from the true religion. Harken now (o ye Papists) if you consent together, it is in euill: so long it pleaseth the diuell well enough: he should destroy his owne kingdome in sowing dissension amongst you, for you fight for him. He vseth to cast fire brands amongst good Christians, to withstand by this meanes the proceeding of the Gospell.

2. It is a great slander, that there are so many diuisions amongst vs: an hundred saith the Iesuite, but he shall neuer proue ten. He might haue bethought himselfe of a full hundred of sects amongst his owne darlings the Monks and Friars, as master Fax hath truly gathered the number, pag. 260. See more Tetrast. papist. 4. pl. where you shall finde three hundred diuers opinions and diuisions among Papists. And whereas Bellarmino saileth vpon him, to proue the Protestants guiltie of twentie severall heresies, cap. 9. I haue reserved the confutation thereof to another place in the treatise of the Pillars of Popistrie annexed to this booke: where in the second pillar, par. 3. I haue answered the Iesuites objections of heresie, and repaid them with foure heresies more, more properly incident to their Church, then his twentie are into ours.

3. Those few schismes and dissensions, which we haue (and yet too many, we must needs confesse) are not about points of faith, and articles of Religion: but concerning some things belonging to discipline and Church government; which matters we deny not, but haue been somewhat too hotly and eagerly followed of some amongst vs: but God be thanked, this contention hath not been pursued by fire or death, as the Franciscanes did persecute the poore Dominickes: nor yet to the pronouncing of each other heretikes, as Eugenius your Pope was condemned as an heretike in the Councell of Basil.

Now that it may appeare what voice is in the popish Church, I will giue an instance in their head, I meane the Popes, and that out of their owne Canons.

Whereas then diuers of them haue decreed, not to transgresse the decrees of their predecessors, as Deer. p. 2. can. 25. quod. 1. cap. 7. Zozimus: Contra statuta patrum conuersi, vel mutati aliqui sunt in alia quodammodo per se non habent: No nor this See hath authoritie to change the decrees of the fathers. And quod. 2. cap. 4. Gregorius: Si in diffinitione, qua universos, &c. non constituitur, sed eius officio comprobatur. If I should reuerse what our predecessors haue decreed, I should not be a blunder vp, but a pulke downe. And not onely the Canons of Religion, but other Ciuill constitutions of their predecessors ought to be kept. quod. 15. cap. 6. Leo 4. Quid patres supra scriptis canonicis, sive in legibus, sive in iudiciis, &c. We must not transgresse, whatsoever our fathers haue fixed either in the facred Canons, or other humane lawes. Yet notwithstanding these constitutions, the Popes themselves have one dissolved anothers decrees, both in ciuill and religious matters.

Concerning ciuill and outward matters: Clement reuerſeth Bonifacius 8. his Constitution; touching taxes and impositions laid vpon the Church, Clem. lib. 3. tit. 17. cap. 1. Ioannes 22. Extr. tit. 9. cap. 1. reuerſeth the constitution of Clement 5. which he made against Iustings and Tournaments. The same Clement abrogateth the constitutions of Benedict 11. against the preaching Friers, Clem. lib. 3. tit. 7. cap. 1. Benedict 11. likewise correcteth the decrees of Bonifacius the 8. as touching the immunities of the preaching Friers, Extr. com. lib. 3. tit. 7. cap. 1. Bonifacius 8. reuoketh whatsoever Celestinus had decreed, Extr. Ioannes 22. 7. And thus one of them is still euen with another. Benedict 11. restoreth the Cardinals, whom Bonifacius 8. had deposed and condemned. Extr. com. lib. 3. tit. 4. cap. 1. Ioannes 22. checketh the decrees of Gregorius 10. and Bonifacius 8. as touching the reservation of benefices.

The like agreement is found amongst them in matters of religion. Iohannes 22. determineth against Nicholas 4. that Christ was no begger, but had a propertie in those things he had, Extr. Ioannes 22. 14. cap. 4. The same Iohannes 22. dissolueth the sect of the Fratricelles confirmed by Celestinus, Extr. Ioannes 22. 7. The same Pope ratifieth the sect of the Beguines dissolved by Clem. 5. Extr. com. lib. 3. tit. 9. cap. 1.

If such be the vnitie of their heads, as we haue scene, one of them still opposing himselfe against another, Iohn against Clement, Clement against Benedict, Benedict against Bonifacius, Bonifacius against Celestinus, and they all against their predecessors, Zosimus, Gregorius, Leander, what shall we thinke of the rest of the body, if the head be thus dauided? And this is the vnitie of the Popish Church, which they doe so much bragge of.

Lastly, let vs adde the scale of our doctrine: Master Bradford saith, that vnitie is no sure tiote of the Church: for the Idolatrous Israelites might haue pretended this argument for themselves, Brad. pag. 162.

Master Latimer martyr saith, that a deforme disagreement is better in the Church, so Christ bee preached, then vniforme ignorance agreeing in Idolatrie, alleaging Hieromes example, whose translation of the Bible caused dissention in a Christian congregation: yet Hierome saith, Sed ego in tali opere non curam inuidentiam pretulisse, nec scripturam ueritatem posuisse denegabo. But neither I (saith he) will feare their enuie in so profitable a worke, nor yet withhold the truth of the Scripture from those which desire it, Hieron. prolog. sup. Canonic. epistol. S. Latimer. epist. ad D. Ed. Bayli. pag. 176.

Roger Holland also thus testifieth: As for the vnitie, which is in the popish Church, what is it else, but treason, murder, poysoning one another, idolatrie, superstition? What vnitie was there in your Church, when there was three Popes at once? where was your head of vnitie, when you had a woman Pope? Fax pag. 204.

The fifth Note: of the power of working Miracles.

32. Error.

THEY affirm, both to bee necessarie in the Church, to haue power to worke miracles, for the confirmation of the faith, when there is any extraordinary change or innouation of religion, and that it is a sufficient note to describe the Church: for it cannot bee (say they) but that, where soeuer this power is found, there should be the true Church.

And hereupon they take occasion to extoll the miracles of their Church: beginning at the Apostles time, and so in euery age they take vpon them to shew, that their Church neuer wanted those that were endued with this power, Belarm. cap. 14.

We answer: First, the gift of miracles doth no more prooue that to be the true Church where they are wrought, then they to be holy men and elected of God, that doe them. The Magicians wrought many straunge things in Egypt, contending a great while with Mosés: Antichrist shall come working with signes and wonders, Thessal. 2. Therefore this proueth not a Church. The like straunge wonders and miracles are to bee scene among the Turks; amongst whom their religious professors doe many straunge things, both aliue and dead: as witnesseth Capitulum Septuaginta. f. 14. The like things to bee done in Damia some 300. yeres since, reporteth Saxo Grammaticus; and not long since in Gothia, Olus. Magum. Wherefore miracles make no probation of a Church.

First Belarmine answereth, that these were false miracles, and but forged, and onely to the eye, and in outward appearance, as Antichrist is said to come with lying wonders: or else such things as though they seemed strange to men, yet were not so in their owne nature, as the falling down of fire from heauen, for which things Satan can easily performe. We reply, first they are called lying wonders, not that they are done in shew onely, and haue no such thing indeed, but because they are wrought to confirme lies, and discredit the truth. Secondly, your miracles are very like to be such, both wrought by the power of the diuell, and some of them but iugling feates of confo-ners. Thirdly, yet a wicked man may haue power to worke miracles, not in shew, but verely and indeede, as to cast out diuels, and to doe it in the name and power of Christ: and yet bee none of Christis disciples, Matth. 7. 22. And it is confessed in your owne Decrees, par. 2. caus. 1. quest. 1. ch.

Magi Pharaonis faciebant similia Moysi, that Pharaos his Magicians did like things to Moses. And a writer of your owne faith: Miracula Dei & diaboli, Christi & Antichristi communia: That miracles are common to God and the diuell, to Christ and Antichrist, Ephesim 2. Timoth. 2. 9. c. The miracles then of Christ and Antichrist, of the true and false Prophet differ not herein, that the one are in truth, the other in shew; but first in respect of the power, secondly, of the end: for the Saints of God worke by his power, the other by the power of Satan, whom God doth oftentimes restraine, as the Magicians were not able to doe the like, when Moses turned the dust into lice, Exod. 8. 19. And therefore Nicodemus saith to Christ, Ioh. 3. 1. No man can do these works, that is, such great works, as thou doest, vntlesse God were with him. Secondly, Christ and his Apostles by their miracles sought the glorie of God, and the good of men, in conuerring of their soules and healing of their bodies: so Satan worketh not, but onely to deceiue men, and confirme lyes, as Origen sheweth, lib. 1. cont. Celsum. And such are most of popish miracles, deuised for the maintenance of Idolatrie and superstitious worship.

Secondly, Bellarmine bringeth in this distinction, that miracles doe demonstrate the Church, not quoad euidenciam & certitudinem rei, in respect of the euidence or certaintie of the things, sed quoad euidenciam credibilitatis, but doe shew onely the certaintie of credibilitie: His meaning is, that by miracles we may gesse by all likelihood, which is the Church, but not certainly know it, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Eccles. cap. 14.

Ans. 1. We haue then the Iesuites owne confession, that the power of miracles is no certaine, but a coniecturall note of the Church: what marke or note then call you that, whereby a thing cannot certainly be discerned? 2. We say, that many times we cannot so much as coniecture of the Church by miracles, which may bee done without the Church, as the miracles which Anti-christ shall worke.

Heare also your owne authoritie, Decr. par. 2. caus. 1. qu. 3. c. 56. Præter unitatem, & qui facit mira- cula nihil est: in unitate erat populus Israel & non faciebant miracula: præter unitatem erant Magi Pha- raonis, & faciebant similia Moysi: He that worketh miracles without the vnitie of the Church, doth nothing: the Israelites were in the vnitie of the Church, and did no miracles; the Magicians of Pharaos were out of the Church, and yet did like things to Moses: Ergo, true miracles such as Moses wrought, may bee done without the Church, and so consequently they prooue not the Church.

Secondly, concerning your miracles we answer, that they are either fables, and old wiues tales, and no credit to bee giuen vnto them; or else they are one of those two sorts, whereof Augustinus De vnitat.
speakes: Remouentur illa vel mendacia fallacium hominum, vel portenta mendacium spirituum: A- Eccles. cap. 18.
way with those miracles, which are either coufoning trickes of deceitfull men, or wonders of lying spirits.

First, Monkish fables are not a whit daintie with our Romish Catholikes, their Legends are full of them: As that of Berinus, how being in the midst of the sea sailing into France, hauing forgotten somewhat at home, went backe walking vpon the sea, and came to them againe, hauing not one thread of his garment wet. Many like tales are reported of Aldelmus Abbot of Malmes-burie, as how he caused an infant at Rome of nine daies old to speake, to cleere Sergius the Pope, who was thought to bee his father: how he drew along a great peece of timber, that went to the making of the Church at Malmesburie. Such good stufte also they haue of Iohn of Beuerlie, of Egwinus Abbot of Buesham, who when he had locked his secte in fetters, and cast the key into the sea, afterward a fish brought the key againe into the ship where he was sayling. Reade Master Fax pag. 125. All these and a thousand more are but Monkish fables and dreames, whatsoeuer the Iesuite maketh of them. And what else is that fabulous discourse of theirs of the liues of the Saints, which they call, Legenda aurea, the golden Legend, but a dunghill of lyes? containing such monstrous fictions, and Monkish tales, as the better sort amongst them are ashamed of. Hereof long agoe complained Petrus Abbot Cluniacus, lib. 5. epist. 29. about some foure hundred yeere since, Nesci quantum me pigeant falsa in ecclesia dei Cantica, &c. You know how much these lying songs in the Church doe grieue me, &c. and he maketh mention of one sonnet or hymne of Bene- dicit, containing no lesse then 24. lyes. Lindanus a popish writer maketh mention in his 3. booke, cap. 2. de interpretandis Scripturis, of an ancient complaint of one Agobertus Bishop of Lions, who said he had corrected the Antiphonarie, amputatis, quæ superflua, temia, falsa, blasphemica, phantastica multa videbantur, cutting off many things that seemed superfluous, light, false, blasphemous, phantasticall: which Bishop (saith Lindanus) if he were now aliue to see our Missals and Antiphonaries, Deum immortalem, quæ ea pingeret nomine? Good Lord (saith he) how would he call them? And yet

yet our Papists now a daies would make vs beleue, that all in their Legend is as true as the Gospel.

In fine libri secund. de corrupt. artib.

I will adde hereunto the testimonie of Lambertus Prier of their Legend: Quam indigna diuini & hominum sanctorum historia, quam nefcio cur auranti Legendam appellent, cum scripta sit ab homine ferrei oris, plumbei cordis. How vnworthie both God and men is the storie of the Saints, which I see no reason why it should be called the golden Legend, being written by one that had an iron, that is, impudent face, and a leaden and lumpish heart. Let any reasonable man now iudge, what wee may thinke of the miracles of their Saints.

Secondly, beside that most of their miracles are forged: they all tend to an vngodly end, to establish their grosse superstitions; as to proue the reall presence, to terrifie men with Purgatorie fire, to bring in adoration of Saints, and the worshipping of Images, with such like, as one example I will alleage in stead of many. The second Nicen Councell which decreed most irreligiously, that Images should be worshipped, bringeth in many most vnflauourie tales and fables, to ratifie this their impious deuice: as in the fourth action of that Synode, a narration is brought in, how a certaine Monke was tempted with a spirit of uncleannes, who appearing vnto him said; If thou wilt be rid of me, doe not worship this Image, which was the picture of the Virgin. Is it not like now, may any man thinke, that the diuell will dissuade men from Idolatrie? or if there bee any matter of truth in this tale, it may bee applied against them, that therefore the diuell was sent to vexe this Monke, because he was an Idoll worshipper, and so soone as he began to forsake his Idolatrie, the vncleane spirit also did forsake him.

The like fiction in the same place is brought in of a certaine image of Christ, which being in a certaine Christians house, was forgotten of him when he left the house, and a Jew succeeding in the habitation, hauing inquired other Jewes to dinner, one of them espied the Image in dinner while, which the other Jew affirmed he had not seene before: then they ranne vpon the Image all at once, and pierced it in the side, out of the which issued such a streame of blood, that they filled an hydra, that is, a great water-pot with it: and then theyooke counsell, to see whether there were any such vertue in the blood, to sprinkle sicke folkes therewith, and many recovered thereby. The Metropolitane of the place hearing tell herof, tooke the blood, and sent of it in glasse vessels into Asia, Europe, Africa, requiring them by letters to keepe the first day before the Ides of Nouember with as great solemnitie yeerely, as they kept the Natiuitie, in remembrance of this miracle.

How many notable lyes are here couched together? First, that the Christian should be so carelesse to leaue such a monument behind him, which he daily worshipped. Secondly, that the Jew hauing it alwaies in his eye should neuer see it, till it was spied by his guests. Thirdly, that blood should come out of a peece of wood. Fourthly, that such abundance to fill a water-pot of two or three furlins, such as the Jewes vsed for their purification, as wee reade Ioh. 3. such store of blood, as is not thought to haue issued out of Christs side vpon the crosse. Fifthly, that the Jewes nothing astonished at the strangenes thereof, should seeke to worke miracles by it. Sixtly, that of this blood should be sent to all parts of the world: whereas Christ gaue no charge to his Apostles to gather his blood and saue it, that fell from him vpon the crosse; but onely to drinke his blood spiritually in the Sacrament. Seuenthly, that an holy day should bee erected vpon this occasion, which the Church of Rome it selfe, the mother of superstition, obserueth not, nor yet (I thinke) any Church beside.

Is not here goodly stuffe, to proue the adoration of Images by? But least any man should thinke, that of my selfe I charge this Councell with forgerie, I will produce the testimonie of a late Pope Adrian the 6. who thus writeth in the beginning of the sixth Quodlibet: Graci certe in sua illa Iconomachia scriptis admodum incertis & fabulosis rem egerunt, damnum spectris, & muliebribus somnijs parum verecundi abutentes: The Grecians fighting for Images, doe proue their matter by fabulous and vn certaine writings; abusing the illusions of diuels, and womens dreames without all shamefastnes, ut legere est in synodo Nycena. 2. act. 4. 5. as is to bee seene (saith he) in the second Nycen synode, the 4. and 5. action. Thus wee see, that both our aduersaries doe abound with many forged and lying miracles, and the same brought in to establish superstitious and damnable doctrines.

The like fabulous tales they haue of S. Bernard, who in one day, as Bellarmino is not ashamed to report out of Gosfridu, did giue sight to an eleuen blind, did heale tenne maimed persons, and 18. more that were lame, and all in one day: and (saith the Iesuite) he wrought so many miracles beside, as it is hard to number them, Bellarmino. cap. 14. Thus if wee will beleue the Iesuite, Bernard wrought more miracles, then either Christ or his Apostles: but whether is it more reasonable to credit Bellarmino for this matter, or Bernard himselfe? for he saith plainly, that he could worke no miracles, as Sermo de Benedic. Licet non habeamus nostra, consolatio nobis magna esse debent patroni nostri miracula: Although we haue no miracles of our owne, yet our patrones miracles (he meaneth Bernard) words) are our comfort. And againe, Serm. 1. in the apostlesion. Qui uult dominum sequi, seipsum negat, et crucem suam tollit. Who now & daies castrich our diuels, speaketh with tongues, &c. diuels are cast out, when sin is rooted out of the heart, &c. Is not this then hereticall forgerie, to faine so many miracles of a man, that denieth himselfe that he hath any such power?

on Thirdly, it is out of doubt, that some of them were well practised with the diocell, and through his helpe could doe much. We will begin with Dunfaine, who caused a Rodee to speake, which was more straight, then that of Bulaine also: for the aile had life, though she had no venting in the image had neither: Polydore Vergill thinketh little better of Dunfaine for this deed doing; for that he was a forerunner. Fax pag. 188.

It is famous in histories, how Schuller the second was aduanced to the Papacie by the Druggell, and gaue himselfe vnto him; and how, having some remorse before his death, he confessed the fact before the people, and willed that his bodie should be drawne of wilde horse when he was dead, and there be buried where the horse left it of their owne accord. How much such diabolical practises are favoured by the See of Rome, may appeare by this one example, which we will not touch: In Pope *Adrian*s daies, not many yeares agoe, there was a most abominable thing practised in Rome; euen vnder the Popes nose, and by his permission and sufferance. The city of Rome being at that time grievously scourged and punished of God with the pestilence, there was one Demetrius a Grecian, who with the good liking of the whole citie, to appease the wrath of their gods, tooke a wilde Bull, whom with magickal enchantments he made to come, that he led him with a twine threed; and so sacrificed him. And thus being done, the sicknes somewhat laked. Call ye this the Church of God, that suffereth such heathenish and abominable superstitions to be done in it? Or shall I take these men for Christians, that doe allow the idolatrous and heathenish sacrifices of the heathen?

Fourthly, let vs see what pretie fine iugling casts haue been wrought by the Papists to deceive the people: In King Henrius daies, there was a monstrous Idoll called the Rood of gold, which was made so with wiers and engines, that one standing within could make euery part of the Idoll to moue, the hands, the eyes, the mouth: if a man brought but a small peece of fiber, it would hang downe the lip; if it were a good peece, then should his iawes goe merilie: This abominable Idoll by the Lord Cromwells meanes was broken downe, and the engines and parts thereof shewed at Paules Crosse: Such a like thing was the blood of Hales, which they made the people believee was some of Christs blood, but in the end it was found to be but the blood of a Drake, and shewed likewise at Paules Crosse, for pag. 1188. At Caleis in the Sepulchre, it was said, there were three boatts besprinkled with blood (as it was put in writing vnder Bull and Pardon:) but the place being searched at King Henrius commaundement; they found three white counters folded in the stone with the top-bone of a sheepes taile, pag. 1223: A thousand such forged deuises the Papists had, which they are not ashamed to maintaine for strange and holy miracles: By this that hath been shewed, it is euident (I hope) to the indifferent reader, what finall cause our aduersaries haue, to boast of their miracles.

tom. 2. lib. 21.

3 Now to adde somewhat concerning the miracles of our Church. First, wee truly say, that our doctrine is not new nor strange, and therefore they are not to call for miracles at our hands. The miracles of Christ and his Apostles, are also our miracles, seeing that wee profess the same doctrine, which was confirmed by those miracles. And as Iohn Baptist comming before Christ, and teaching the people to beleue in him that was to come, wrought no miracle, seeing that Christ was to confirme that doctrine, which Iohn taught concerning the Messia, with miracles: so wee comming after Christ, and professing the same faith which hee taught, haue lesse neede of miracles, seeing that the doctrine, which wee holde, hath already been auouched by the miracles of Christ and his Apostles. Bellarmines best answer is here, that Iohn taught nothing against the common and receiued doctrine; neither separated himselfe from the Priests.

Ans. Both these are untrue: for first, Iohn preached remission of sinnes by Christ, and ministred Baptisme, both which were strange vnto the Iewish Church; and againe he liued apart in the wildernes: the Scribes and Pharisees came to him, he went not to them: and he calleth them a generation of vipers; how then did Iohn communicate with them.

This notwithstanding, we affirme still, that miracles are not now needfull: will you heare what Chrysostome saith: Iam cum nullus sit infidelis, nulla faciendorum miraculorum nunc est necessitas, igitur, qui signum vel inutile, vel non suo tempore facit, falsus propheta est, &c. Now seeing there are no Infidels, there is no necessity of making miracles: and therefore he, which goeth about now to worke a miracle vnprofitable, and out of time, is a false Prophet. By this sentence all Papists are false Prophets, that do so much vrgē miracles. But I will further presse them with their own authoritie. Nycen. synod. 2. c. 4. Tharfor the president thus said, Wherefore doe not our images now a dayes worke miracles? I answer with the Apostle: Miracula non credentibus data sunt, &c. Mi-acles are not giuen to those, that beleue; but to those, which beleue not. Hearken then you Romanists, you are conuincd of vnbeleefe if you seeke for miracles. Secondly, yet, the Lord be thanked, we are not destitute of miracles, as Augustine saith: Miracula sunt ei qui non aperit oculos miracula domini, et eorum cecum aperit oculos sermone domini. Now, saith he, the blind doth not receiue his bodily sight by the power of Christ, but the blind heart is lightened and illuminate through the Gospell of Christ. Such miracles (the Lord be blessed) we can shew: sinners are conuerted; afflicted consciences are comforted; the ignorant are instructed; many are called by the preaching of the Gospell.

Beside these, which are daily conuerted among vs by the preaching of the Gospell, the examples of those in this place would be remembred, that being enemies to the Gospell, yet by the mightie working of Gods spirit, were miraculously conuerted from Poperie, even in time of persecution, and gaue their liues for the testimonie of the truth.

George Tankersfield, hauing been a Papist all King Edwards daies, in Queene Maries time, seeing the great cruelty practised against Gods Saints, began to mislike both the Papists opinions and doings, and grew into such a liking of the Gospell, that he gaue his life for the same. See his storie, For pag. 1690. Master Groves Martyr, first an obstinate Papist, was drawne to a loue and liking of the Gospell by frequenting Peter Martyrs Lectors, and died for the same afterwards, For pag. 1851.

Among the rest, the example of Iulius Palmer is most notable, and worthy eternall memorie: who all King Edwards daies continued an obstinate Papist, refusing either to resort to common Prayer, or to Sermons but by compulsion, and was for Poperie expelled Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, where he was fellow: in Queene Maries dayes he was restored to his fellowship by the visitors, all this while remaining a very Papist: Then by the constancie of the Martyrs and blessed seruants of God in Oxford and elsewhere dying for the truth, he began to settle his heart towards the truth, and by diligent reading of Scripture, and faithfull prayer being therein confirmed, he became not onely a confessor, but a constant witness and Martyr of the Gospell: See his storie, For pag. 1934.

The like examples we haue of Mistresse Lewis, which of a Papist in Queene Maries dayes became a Protestant: pag. 2012. and the like of Roger Holland: pag. 2039. both of them holy Martyrs. What greater myrales can we desire for confirmation of the Gospell then these, shewed in their miraculous conuersions?

Yet if this will not content our aduersaries, but they will still crie with open mouth, and say, where are your miracles? Behold, to stop their wide and clamorous mouth, we will shew them also such miracles, as they looke for, like to which they haue none. Was not that a miracle, which Oecolampadius reporteth to haue been done at the Martyrdome of Master Hugh Spengler, who being cast into the water and so drowned, presently all the water was coloured with blood, hee hauing receiued no wound nor hurt in his bodie before: at the which all the people were greatly amazed?

But what thinke you of that strange signe which George Scherrer shewed at his death, who being beheaded, the body lay a pretie space vpon the bellie till one might haue eaten an egge, and then turned it selfe vpon the backe, and crossed the right hand ouer the left, and the right leg ouer the left: the Magistrates seeing it, hauing condemned his bodie to be burned before, being moued at the sight hereof, caused it to be buried, For ex Matth. 11. yrico.

It is worth the remembring, that is reported in the French stories of Petrus Berrarius a blessed Martyr: who was cast into a filthie dungeon, where a theefe had lien the space of eight moneths, being almost eaten vp with lice, and in such miserie, that he cursed his parents that bare him. This man through the teaching and the prayers of the Martyr, felt such comfort in the Gospell, that he became very patient in his affliction: and after his conuersion this strange thing was wrought vpon him; that whereas before hee was so full of lice, that hee might haue plucked out twelue at once betweene two of his fingers, the next day hee had not one, For ex Iohan. Crispin. pag. 607.

Many such other miraculous workes shewed in the life and death of the holy Martyrs, we are able to rehearse: as that of Zuinglius, whose heart was found whole and vnburned three daies after his bodie was consumed with fire, ex Oswald. Miconio: the like whereof is constantly reported of blessed Craumer, that his heart was found vnconsumed in the ashes, his bodie being burned.

Stephen Brune Martyr at Rutiers in France 1540. could not be consumed with the fire that was twife made about him, with vessels of oyle powred vpon the faggots, so that the hangman in the end was faine to thrust him thorough with his pike: ex Iohan. Crispin.

Stephen Mangin Martyr burned at Meaux anno 1546. hauing his tongue first cut out, yet so spake, that he might be vnderstood, saying, The Lords name be blessed, Iohan. Crispin. Iob. 6.

The like also is recorded of two other Martyrs, at Sanferre, Iohannes Filen, and Indrius Lemle, who who spake, their tongues being first taken from them, Fox pag. 911. ex Johan. Crispin: so did also Peter Ronsau Martyr at Bloys, anno 1558. ex Johan. Crispin. One Favianus an Italian Martyr was burned at Ferrara, anno 1550. for the truths sake, whose bodie in the burning gaue an odoriferous fragrant smell of incomparable sweetnesse to all there present, ex Henric. Paul. lib. 7.

But we need not search forraine stories for such miraculous workes: God hath shewed his great power, and set forth his glorie, euen in our English Martyrs: it is credible testified, that where Wickliffes bones were brent sprang vp a well, Fox pag. 154.

James Bainham in the midst of the flaming fire, his armes and legges being halfe consumed, spake these words: O ye Papists, behold you looke for miracles, and here now you may see a miracle, for in this fire I feele no more paine, then if I were in a bed of down, but it is to me as sweet as a bed of Roses, Fox pag. 1030. What greater miracle can be looked for, then that the cruell rage of the fire should be so strangely slaked and mitigated, that it should become not onely not grieuous, but pleasant to the sufferers? The like mitigation of paine, that constant Martyr M. Haikes gaue a comfortable and cheerefull signification of, by thrise clapping of his hands ouer his head burning of a light fire, when every man thought he had been dead, Fox pag. 1592. Many such examples might here be brought in: as of Robert Samuel Martyr, whose body is said to haue shined bright like tried silver in the midst of the fire, pag. 1704. Likewise after the burning of Iohn Noyes Martyr, there was found in the ashes one of his feete vnburned, whole with the hose on, vp to the ankle, Fox pag. 2022.

Who seeth not now, that if miracles were to be stood vpon, and that thereby we would make prooffe of our Church, that herein we might haue great aduantage against our aduersaries? But their common answer is, that all these are fables, which we report of our Martyrs. And why I pray you, doo these things seeme incredible? May not God as well shew his power in these holy Martyrs, as he did in the auncient witnessles of truth, that were persecuted and put to death vnder the heathen Emperors? for Gods armes are not shortened, he is able to doo as great workes now, as he did then: And these his seruants died for the same truth, for the which the auncient Martyrs gaue their liues: Why should it be more vnlikelie, that some of the Martyrs of our Church haue stood at the stake vntouched of the fire, as we haue heard before of Stephen Brune, then that Polycarpus continued in the fire without burning, the fire hauing no power of his bodie, but was in the end thrust through, as Stephen Brune also was serued, or that Cecilia remained a day and a night in a hot bath without hurt, as if she had been in a cold place?

Why might not the Lord giue vnto Stephen Mangin Martyr, and others power to speake, their tongues being cut out, as he did to Romanus, who being deprived of his tongue spake these words: He that speaketh Christ shall neuer want a tongue? Fox pag. 90.

Polycarpus before mentioned, his bodie in the midst of the fire glittered like silver or golde, pag. 43. Why may we not credit the like report of Robert Samuel? There came a most pleasant smell from Polycarpus bodie, as it had been of mirrhe, or some precious balme: may not this as well be true of Favianus, whose example we saw before? Polycarpus being thrust through with a sword, for he could not burne, there gushed out such abundance of blood, as that the fire was quenched therewith. May we not as well beleue, that which is reported of Bishop Latimer, whose prayer vnto God was, that he might giue his heart blood for his truth, and so it came to passe, that in the fire, his sides being opened by the violence thereof, the blood issued out abundantly, which was strange to behold. Fox p. 1740. But I will be sparing in these reports: for we haue better arguments to proue our Church by, as shall afterward appeare.

Yet, before I leaue this place, because the Iesuite hath such a spite at Luther, (hee is a great eyefore to him) we will in a worde or two declare what strange things were wrought by Luther. It is credible reported of him, that a certaine young man had bound himselfe by obligation to the Diuell, sealed with his blood to giue him his soule, so he might haue his wish and desire satisfied with money: In short time he grew to great wealth: the matter being disclosed with much adoe to Luther, he calleth the congregation together, and ioyneth in prayer for this young man: and as they prayed, the obligation was cast in at the window. This credible report of Luthers act, may counteruaile the lying tale of rayling Szaphylus, whom the Iesuite so much crediteth, how that Luther attempted to cast a diuell out of a woman, and was in danger to be slaine of the diuell himselfe, Bellarmin. cap. 16. But why should it seeme strange, that by the prayers of the congregation the diuell should depart? For by two waies are vnclane spirits cast out, one is by the extraordinary gift and faith of miracles, which though it continued some ages after the Apostles, till the Gospell was vniuersally planted, yet we holde it generally to be ceased now: the other way is ordinarie by fasting and prayer, which our Sauour prescribeth, Math. 17. 21. Whereby we doubt not, but euen in these dayes, when it pleaseth God, Satan is chased from the possession of Christs members. And in this kind Luther was singular, who vsed to pray so feruently, that the teares were seene to fall from his eyes in his prayer: And these are the weapons, whereby we fight against Satan, the word of God and prayer, which are more forcible, then any superstitious crossings, conulations, exorcizings, yea then your holy water, or holy water sprinkle. The experience hercof Origene sheweth, that as he was preaching of those words, 1. Sam. 2. of Anna, My heart rejoiced in the Lord, one being present hauing an vnclane spirite cried out: vpon which occasion Origene further said thus, Contrarius spiritus exultationem nostram in domino ferre non potuit: The aduersarie spirit cannot abide our reioycing in the Lord, &c. These meanes then of the Word and prayer seeing Lutier had, we may more easilie be perswaded of the truth of the storie.

And as he was earnest in prayer, so his prayers wanted not effect; for as he himselfe confessed, he had obtained of God, that so long as he liued, the Pope should not preuaile in his countrey. And is not this also a thing to be wondred at, that for all the Pope and Emperour ioyned together, and bent their forces against this fillie poore man; yet the Lord defended him from the Lions teeth, and graunted him to end his daies in peace?

This it is apparant and manifest, that the Lord sheweth his miraculous power many times in his Saints, to astonish the wicked: the great miracles which haue been declared in their holy martyrdomes, would fill a large volume. But these arguments we doe not chiefly stand vpon: yet thus much was not amisse by the way to be put in, to requite our aduersaries withall, who doe so greatly magnifie and extoll their Antichristian Church, for their lying and fained miracles.

The sixth Note, of the gift of Propheesing.

23. Error.

THIS also our aduersaries holde to be a perpetuall marke, whereby to knowe the Church: for they say that the true Church of God wanteth not those which are endewed with the spirit of propheesie: And so they beare vs in hand, that in euery age there hath flourished some Prophet in their Church: the first, that the Church shall alwaies haue Prophets, they would proue out of Joel 2. I will power of my spirit vpon all flesh. The second, that they haue had such prophets, they doe infer vpon a few forged examples, of Saint Bernard, and Saint Francis, a popish saint, and the founder of the superstitious order of the Franciscans, and of such others: Bellarmine cap. 15.

Iustin. lib. 1.
De ciuit. Dei
lib. 8. cap. 26.

cap. 8.

To the first we answere. 1. The propheesie of Joel was accomplished in the apostles time, Act. 2. as Saint Peter expoundeth it, and therefore we neede not looke further for the fulfilling of it. 2. The Church of the Iewes wanted Prophets for the space of foure hundred yeares and more before the comming of Christ: for we reade of no Prophet after Malachy: and the Church complaineth of this want, Psalm 74. vers. 9. that they had Prophets no more: wherefore, the Church of God after the comming of Christ, may better spare this extraordinarie function of propheesing; seeing both Christ is alreadye come, who was the very subiect and matter of all the auncient propheesies; and we haue also most euident propheesies of the Apostles, Rom. 11. concerning the calling of the Iewes, 2. Thef. 2. of Antichrist in the Apocalypse, of the generall estate and condition of the Church to the end of the world: Some of which are alreadye accomplished, some to be fulfilled in their season: In these propheesies, we must rest and content our selues, not looking for new reuelations. 3. There haue been Prophets amongst the heathen, out of the Church of God: they also can bring forth diuers old propheesies; so that if the issue lay in this point, they might as well contend to be the Church of God. Amygas dreamed that he saw a vine growing out of his daughter, that couered all Asia: which came to passe in Cyru. Augustine reporteth a propheesie of Hermes Trismegistus, how that all the images and Idols of the heathen should be broken downe through all Egypt. The Indians were foretold of the Spaniards comming many a yeare before their arriual in those places: Their Zemes, that is, their deuils, which they worshipped as Gods, told them, that there should come a people with long beardes, fierce and cruell, that at one stroke should strike men off by the middle: And all these things fell out afterwards to that nation accordingly.

But they will answere, that these were not true propheesies inspired of God, but vncertaine predictions of the diuell. What will they say then to Balaam, that propheesied of Christ? There shall come a starre of Isaac (saith he) Num. 24. 17. and in the same place, he saith, he heard the words of God.

16. Tom. 6.

The propheesies also of Sibill are wonderfull, which many yeares before the comming of Christ, propheesied of his incarnation, and of his passion, with the circumstances thereof, as how he should be crowned with thornes, that they should giue him vineger to drinke, how the vaile of the temple should be rent, and darknes should couer the earth for three houres: and he himselfe should rise the third day: yea she setteth downe the very name of the Messiah, Iesus Christ. These propheesies came not of the diuell, for these mysteries, without all doubt, were not knowne to the euill spirits: for they were not fully reuealed to the Angels themselues before the comming of Christ, Ephes. 3. 10. Wherefore we conclude thus, that as the gift of propheesing is no sure signe that they are members of the Church and elect of God, which are endewed with it; as Christ saith, Mat. 7. 22. that that many which had prophesied in his name, in the day of iudgement should be refused; and Balaam is set forth as an example of a false prophet and wicked man; Ep. Iudo 11: So neither is this gift an infallible mark of the Church of God, wherefoever it is found. Your owne canons auouch the same, decr. par. 2. can. 1. qu. 1. cap. 79. Prophetam & Saul malus rex. & tunc prophetauit, cum Dauid Saulum persequeretur: Saul also prophesied an euill King; and at that time, when he persecuted Dauid. The gift then of prophesying, as it sheweth not him to be a member of the Church, that hath it; so neither that to be the Church, where it is found.

To the Second part, concerning this marvellous gift which our aduersaries pretend to haue: we answer. 1. They are but fables which they bring: for if all that is reported of S. Bernard in his life, of his miracles, and prophesies, were true; neither S. Paul nor any of the Apostles were to be compared vnto him for number of miracles: such casting out of diuels out of men, women and children, healing of strange diseases, foretelling of things to come: the Gospell almost hath not stranger things of our Saviour Christ. And S. Hierome, who was long before Bernard came, sheweth that prophesie was then sealed: Propheta domini passiois signum est: All prophesie is sealed vp in the passion of Christ, Tom. 3. ad Marcellianum.

As for S. Francis, you may gesse by this, what spirit he was of, that prescribing to his followers, a certaine strict order of liuing, as to weare no garle, to goe barefoot, and such like, he called it regulam euangelicam, the rule of the Gospell: be like making himselfe an other Christ, and so bringing in another Gospell: for to all Christs disciples Christs Gospell is sufficient. 2. But if they haue any prophesies of credit, which they can shew, they are such, as are reported of Pope Syluester the second, who had warrant from the diuell, that he should not die before he sung Masse in Ierusalem: and so it came to passe, for hauing sung Masse in a chappell so called, he immediately died. Not much vnlike to this was that of King Henry the fourth, who ended his life in a chamber at Westminster called Ierusalem, as he had an old prophesie. Edward the fourth also was told, that his successors name should begin with G, which was the cause of George the Duke of Clarence death, his owne brother: but the diuellish prophesie notwithstanding tooke place, for Richard Duke of Gloucester was King after him. In like manner Valence the Emperour had a blind prophesie, that one should raigne after him, whose name began with Theod, which made Theodoric to rebell against him: but so it came to passe in deed, that Theodoric was Emperour after him. Such blinde prophesies we denie not but the popish Church hath had many, which as you see, doe cause murder, sedition, and bloudshed: but other good prophesies comming of God, we know them not to haue any.

3. We denie not, but that there haue liued some amongst them in their Church, which in those dayes were counted prophets and prophetisses, as Hildegardis, anno 1146. likewise Briget, Cyprianus Saxanfr: whom Bellarminus reckoneth vp amongst others that wrought miracles. chap. 14. But concerning these we will answer, as the Iesuite doth for Sibilla a prophetisse amongst the heathen: that she prophesied as touching such matters as should fall out to the Church, for a testimony of the faith of the Christians: and so to be counted herein a prophetisse of the Church rather than of the heathen. chap. 15. So we say, that if those three aboue named were Prophetisses, they were of our Church, and not theirs: for they prophesied of the decay of their Church and raising vp of ours. Hildegardis first prophesied of the beginning of Friers, and of their destruction, saying, that in the end, when their gifts and rewards ceased, they should goe about their houses like hungrie and madde dogges, drawing in their necks like doues. Briget prophesied of the Church of Rome, that it should be as a bodie condemned of a iudge, to haue the skin skaine off, and the flesh to be cut in peeces: Catharine de Senis speaketh of a reformation of the Church, and such a renouation of Pastors, that the onely remembrance thereof saith she, maketh my spirit to reioyce in the Lord. All these things we see now accomplished: the sects of Friers in many places put downe; the Popish iurisdiction cast out; a notable reformation to be wrought in the Church: our aduersaries (I thinke) haue not to reioyse in these prophesies; neither haue any greac cause to challenge them for their Prophets. But I will helpe them a little, and bring to their remembrance a notable Prophetisse of theirs in King Henry the eighth dayes, which was one Elizabeth Barton a Nun, commonly called the holy maide of Kent, who being instructed by the Friers, fained, as though she had many reuelations: She prophesied, that if the King proceeded in his diuorce, then in question betweene him and Queene Katharine, that he should not be King one yeare, no not one moneth: But (God be thanked) he liued almost twentie yeares after that, by whom many worthie things were wrought for the good of Christs Church. This prophetisse was afterward iustly met withall, and worthily suffered for her demerits, with all her accomplies: amongst the which, Fisher B. of Rocheester was one, who thereupon was imprisoned, and forsaynt his goods to the King. If they wil brag of their Prophets, let not the holy maide of Kent be forgotten in any wise.

4. Now lastly because they shall not outface vs with a vaine brag of prophets: I will shew what what prophecies the Goſpell hath been adorned withall. Was not Iohn Huſſe a Prophet, who thus ſaid at his death: centum reſolutis annis deoreſpondebitis: after an hundred yeres you ſhall giue account of this your doing vnto God? Likewise Hierom of Prage, poſt centum annis uas omnes citor: I cite you all to make anſwere after an hundred yeres. Which propheſie of theirs tooke effect accordingly: for both theſe holy men ſuffred martyrdom about anno 1416. and juſt an hundred yeres after, anno 1516. the Lord raiſed vp Luiber, who indeed called the Pope and his doctrine to account.

Was not Sauonarola a Prophet, that ſaid one ſhould paſſe ouer the Alpes like Cyrus, who ſhould deſtroy all Italie: and is it not ſo come to paſſe? for neither Cyrus, nor whoſoeuer elſe could haue more laide waſt the popiſh Italian Church then the word of God hath done, and the liuely preaching of the Goſpell? Walter Bruſe propheſied that the temporalities ſhould be taken from the clergie for the multitude of their ſinnes: this Walter liued in King Richards dayes the ſecond. Bilney that conſtant Martyr and faithfull ſeruant of God propheſied, that many Preachers ſhould come after him, which ſhould preach the ſame faith that he had taught, and ſhould conuert many from their errors.

We will come vnto neerer times: Did not Maſter Hooper propheſie, when taking his leaue of M. Bullinger at Zuricke, he ſaid thus vnto him, You ſhall be ſure (ſaith he) to heare from me, from time to time out of England: but the laſt newes of all I ſhall not be able to write, for there where I ſhall take moſt paines, you ſhall heare of me burned to aſhes? And ſo it came to paſſe, for he was burned at Gloceſter, where he was Biſhop, Fox pag. 1503.

Maſter Latimer would alwaies ſay, that the preaching of the Goſpell would coſt him his life, and he was perſwaded, he ſaid, that Wincheſter was kept in the tower for the ſame purpoſe. p. 1740.

Maſter Rogers propheſied in Queene Maries daies, that the Goſpell ſhould bee reſtored, and that the diſperſed Engliſh ſlocke ſhould bee brought againe to their former eſtate, pag. 1492. A certaine woman alſo in Exceter that died for the truth, ſpake to the like effect: who entring as it happened into S. Peters Church, where ſhe found a cunning Dutchman, making of new noſes to certaine Images, which had been diſfigured in King Edwards daies, ſaid vnto him, What a mad man art thou to make them new noſes, which within a few daies ſhall all loſe their heads: as it came indeede to paſſe, pag. 2051.

Roger Holland ſtanding in examination before bloodie Bower, thus boldly ſaid vnto him: This I dare be bold in God to ſpeake, which by his ſpirit I am moued to ſay, that God wil ſhorten your hand of crueltie, for after this day in this place, ſhall there not any by him (meaning Bower) bee put to death, pag. 2042. And after this day indeede, there was none put to death in Smith-field.

What ſhall I ſpeake of Maſter Bradford, who writeth thus in his epiſtle to Cambridge: You know I propheſied truly to you, before the Sweat came, what would come, if you repented not your carnall Goſpelling. I might here alſo inferre the prophetical praier of the Martyrs: as how Maſter Latimer praied that the Goſpell might once againe be reſtored to England, and earneſtly ſued in his praier for the preſeruatiſon of Ladie Elizabeth, now our moſt gracious Queene: the which his praier, the Lord, whoſe name eternally be bleſſed for it, in mercie to this land graciouſly granted. The like praier Maſter Philpas made at the ſtake for the reſtoring of the Goſpell, pag. 1831. col. 1. And, to make ſhort, the hie laſt Martyrs burned at Canturburie, deſired God in their praier before their martyrdom, that their blood might be the laſt that ſhould be ſhed: and ſo it was, Fox pag. 2053.

I alledge not theſe examples, vnto the which I could adde many beſides, to this end, as though I thought that thoſe prophetical gifts are ordinarie in the Church, or that thoſe holy Martyrs had the calling of Prophets (though it cannot bee denied, but that at ſome times, and in ſome caſes they had the ſpirit of propheſie;) or that hereby we meane to proue our Church: but to anſwere a little vnto our aduerſaries vaine, and vntrue bragges, that it may appeare to all men, with how much better right, wee might challenge this prophetical gift in the behalfe and name of our Church.

Hitherto wee haue touched fixe onely of the principall notes of the popiſh Church: the reſt which the Ieſuite addeth to make vp the number of ſeeteene, are ſuch vagrant and vncertaine notes, that I wonder, the Ieſuite for ſhame, would ſtuffe his booke with them: I will therefore onely name them.

Another note therefore of Bellarmines Church beſide thoſe ſet downe, is duratio diuturna, nec unquam interrupta, is the long and laſting continuance of their Church without any interruption: their Church, they ſay, hath endured 1570. yeres and more already, and is like to continue to the worlds end: but our Church is newly begun, and ſhall ſoone come to an end, Bellarmin lib. 4. cap. 6.

Anſw. 1. Duration or continuance is no good argument of the Church: the heathen Idoſa-

ters could and did say as much for their idolatrie: As Arsenius objected to Romanus (holy Martyr) Thy crucified Christ, saith he, is but a yesterdaies God, the Goils of the Gentiles are of great antiquitie. 1. It is not true that their Church hath endured so long, they must strike off almost 600. yeeres from their account; and yet most of their errors are nothing so old: yet if they could make vp the full number they speake of, they haue not much to bragge of: The kingdom of the Sycionians, as Augustine witnesseth, endured 910. yeeres, the Monarchie of the Assyrians 1300. Lib. 1. de ciuitate dei c. 16. yeeres and more; yet were they not for all this the Church of God. 2. The descent and pedigree of their Church hath not all this while, they say, been interrupted: To this we haue answered before, in the third note of succession: Our Saviour Christ and his Apostles could not stiew a perpetuall descent of their Church not interrupted, yet were they the true Church. 3. Their Church shall endure to the end of the world: so shall Sathans kingdom waxe stronger towards the end: There shall be a generall decay of faith and charitie, Matth. 24. 12. yea and there shall be some remnant of Antichrists kingdom euen at the coming of Christ: but to what end Saint Paul sheweth, to bee abolished with the brightnes of his coming, 2. Thess. 2. 8. Neither is our Church, as they falsely charge vs, newly start vp: but of our Church were the Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs, as wee haue shewed: the Church of God may sometime lie hidden in the world, and so hath ours. But they goe further, Our Church, they say, shall not long continue: So the heathen faced downe the Christians, that their religion should last but 367. yeeres: but it proued cleane contrarie, for the Christian faith increased still, and Paganisme within that compass was banished. As for our Church we know it shal continue to the worlds end, though with much trouble and persecution, and euer after shall be with Christ.

Another note, which Bellarmin maketh the sixth in number, is, Conspicua in doctrina cum Ecclesia antiqua: Their conspiring in doctrine with the ancient Church, cap. 9. where he taketh paines to cast vpon vs twentie seuerall heresies.

Ans. 1. For the full answer of this slander, I doe referre the reader to the second pillar of Papistrie, part. 3. where it is evidently proued, that the Papists (and not the Protestants) doe retaine the old heresies.

2. It may appeare, by the perpetuall allegation of Augustine and the decrees of Councils generall and prouinciall, yea and of their owne Canons, throughout this treatise in defence of our cause, that our doctrine agreeth with antiquitie, and not Papistrie.

Notwithstanding as touching the Iesuites challenge of heresie, where he laieth to our charge twentie seuerall heresies, I haue easily remoued them, and requited him with fortie seuerall heresies, all proued to bee in their Church: for the particular answer, to that place I referre the reader.

But now in generall it shall appeare by such descriptions of heretikes, as heretofore haue been made, and by them cannot be refused, that not we, but they are the heretikes of these daies.

And first, if they will be tried by the definition of an heretike in the Ciuill law, wee will not refuse: as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 1. Gratian and Valentinian thus define an heretike: Qui patris, filij, & spiritus sancti deitatem sub pari maiestate non credunt, hereticorum infamiam sustinere, &c. They which doe not beleue the deitie of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost to bee of equall maiestie, shall sustaine the infamie of heretikes. But we doe so beleue: Ergo, are no heretikes. The popish Church is rather to be suspected here, that affirme, that Christ is not deus, God of himselfe: now if the Father be God of himselfe, and the Sonne haue a beginning of his Godhead; then must there bee an inequality in the Godhead. See more of this afterward, Controu. 20. par. 2. quest. 1.

Likewise, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 8. leg. 2. Gratian Valentinian, Hereticus indicatur qui à minimo fidei debeat articulo: He is iudged an heretike, that departeth from the least article of the faith: But it is an article of the faith to beleue, that Christ sitteth at the right hand of God, and shall not come from thence till the day of iudgement: which the Papists must needs denie, affirming Christs bodie to be really and corporally in the Sacrament: and so they must either make Christ to haue two bodies, one in heauen, another in earth; or else they must hold, that his bodie may bee in two places at once, contrarie to the nature of a bodie.

We will not refuse the triall of an heretike by your owne Canons: Decret. par. 1. caus. 24. quest. 3. cap. 28. Hereticus est, qui alienius temporalis commodi, & maxime gloria, principatuque sui gratia, falsas ac nouas opiniones gignit: He is an heretike, that for some temporall commoditie, especially for glorie and principalltie sake, doth deuise and follow new and strange opinions. But the Papists doe seeke the glorie and principalltie of the Papall See, and the commoditie thereof, and thereto hold new opinions, as that it is of necessitie to saluation to beleue the Pope to be head of the Church; that the Pope is aboue Councils, and such like: Ergo, they are heretikes. And to speake the truth, most of the popish opinions are such as either tend to aduance the pride of the Bishop of Rome, as the doctrine of his primacie ouer other Churches, his superioritie ouer Kings, Princes, and such like; or else to make their owne purses fat, as their opinions of their reall presence, Masses propitiatorie tiatorie for the quicke and the dead, purgatorie, pardons, pilgrimages, and ſuch other. And it was well ſaid (though merily) of Erasmus to the Duke of Saxonie, who asked his iudgement of Luther; that he medled with two dangerous matters, that would not be touched, the Popes Crown, and the Monkes bellie.

Further alſo it followeth thus in your Canons as touching an heretike: Doct. par. 2. Conf. 24. quest. 3. c. 70. Qui non ad Prophetica voces, non ad Apostolica litteras, non ad Evangelium authoritatis, sed ad seipſos recurrunt; magistri erroris existunt, &c. They which haue not recourſe to the Prophets, Apostles writings, and the Gospels, are become the maſters of errors. And what this meaneth is expounded by Pope Vrbane in the ſame place, cap. 32. Quia magister erroris est, non tantum hereticus, sed etiam haereticus decernendi est: Becauſe he is a maſter of error, he is not only an heretike, but an hereſiarch, that is, a maſter of hereſies. But the Papiſts, and not we, leaue the Prophetically, Apostolically, Euangelicall writings, and runne vnto traditions, that is, to themſelues: Ergo they, not we, are the heretikes.

Likewiſe, Deer. p. 2. conf. 16. quest. 7. Gregor. 7. defineth, that he that ſhould graunt away to lay perſons, or others, then to Priests, oblations and tithes, inter maximos hereticos non minus habentur, let him bee counted: not the leaſt among the greateſt heretikes. But the Pope is the man that firſt alienated the proprietie of tithes, and erected impropriations, and ſo maintained them; as it may appeare in King Henry the thirds time, when the Biſhops of this land made ſuite to the Pope to haue impropriate benefices reſtored to the firſt uſe; at the contrarie ſuite of the Monkes, the Pope determined that they ſhould ſtand ſtill: Ergo, they are the heretikes.

cap. 10. p. 101.

Againe, your owne Canons allow this ſaying of S. Hierome, deciphering the authors of hereſie, Deer. p. 2. conf. 14. quest. 3. cap. 33. Veteres scrutans historias inuenire non possum ſciſſe eccleſiam, &c. & populos ſeduciſſe, niſi eos, qui ſacerdotes a Deo poſiti erant: Looking ouer the ancient ſtoories I cannot finde that any did make ſchiſmes in the Church, and ſeducer the people, but the Priests, &c. But the Papiſts ſay, that they onely haue the prieſthood, and that they are the true prieſts. If hereſie then and ſchiſme begin among the prieſts, as Hierome in his reading obſerued, and the Papiſts take themſelues to be the prieſts of theſe daies; then the Seminarie of hereſie is amongſt them. If it ſhall be answered, that Hierome ſpeaketh of the times before vnder the law, not ſince: the words following ſhew the contrarie, Iſi vertuntur in laqueum tortuoſum, in omnibus locis ponentes ſcandalum: Theſe, ſaith he, meaning the prieſts, are become ſnares, in euery place putting a ſtumbling blocke. He ſpeaketh of the time preſent and then being.

Or will they allow of the Maſter of Sentences definition of an heretike, who out of Hilario affirmeth thoſe to be heretikes, aliter interpretantes ſcripturas, quam doctorem virtus poſtulat; de intellectu enim heresis, non de ſcriptura eſt, which do interpret the Scripture, otherwiſe then the words are: for hereſie commeth not of the Scripture, but by the falſe vnderſtanding, lib. 4. diſt. 13. C. But the Papiſts doe thus interpret Scripture cleane beſide the text: for the probation whereof I reſerre the reader to the treatiſe annexed, 2. pillar, part. 2. Ergo, they are heretikes.

Heare alſo how one of your owne champions deſcribeth an heretike and hereſie: Hereſie is a falſe opinion defended with pertinacie cleerely repugning the word of God; Iohn Wyntime in his ſermon at S. Andrews in Scotland, at the condonation of M. George Wiſchart, an. 1546. For p. 1268. But many ſuch opinions the Papiſts maintaine contrarie to the Scriptures, as more at large in the place quoted before in the treatiſe annexed I haue ſhewed: Ergo, they are the heretikes.

Many other deſcriptions of hereſie I could alleage out of the Fathers, but theſe may ſuffice, gathered out of their owne authorities, by the which it is euident that Papiſts, not Proteſtants are heretikes.

Anſw. I thinke theſe men will not bluſh in the end, to make a Saint of the diuell: for what more vnchaſt and vnpure religion can there be, then Poperie is? Call you that an holy religion; that canonized Thomas Becket for a Saint, who was a rebell and traitor to his Prince? Is that pure doctrine that calleth the mariage of Miniſters the worſt ſort of fornication? ſee Rhemifſt. That alloweth ſwearing and blaſpheming? One Sampſon, for reprobuing a man of ſwearing, was ſuſpected to bee a Lutheran, and thereupon examined, condemned, and burned, For pag. 904. Is that an holy and perfect religion, which reprobates may attaine vnto? for the popiſh profeſſion requireth no more, then may bee found in reprobates. See a treatiſe of this ſet forth by W. Perkins.

Laſtly, let Roger Holland ſpeake, firſt a Papiſt, afterwards by Gods mercifull working an holie Martyr: He confeſſing of himſelfe in the hearing of his enemies, that while he was a Papiſt, he was giuen to carding and dicing, to riot, drunkenneſſe, all kinde of wantonneſſe, in hope of a particular confeſſion to the prieſt, and giuing him ſomewhat to doe penance for him, thinking, that hauing ſo done, he was of a cleere ground, and might returne to his old vocation againe. See his ſto-rie, Fox pag. 2040: Iudge now what a pure Religion this may be, which is a doctrine of libertie, and patron of all licentious linings?

The fourth note omitted, but with Bellarmine the ninth, is Efficacia doctrinae, the efficacy and force of their doctrine in converting many vnto the faith, cap. 12.

Ans. 1. Woueraunt you that your religion is strong to delude and deceive, as all superstition is, and as S. Paul saith of Antichrists teaching, Whose coming is by the working of Satban, with all power, &c. 2. Thess. 2. 9.

2. We are much beholding vnto them, in affording vs so good an argument for our religion, which is very efficacious and forcible. Let the kingdomes of England, Ireland, Scotland, France, Dutchland, Germanie, Polonia, Denmarke, testify, which sometimes were blinded with poperie; but now (God be thanked) by the preaching of the Gospell haue receiued great light: yea the efficacy of the Gospell appeareth in the conuersion of many obstinate Papists to the profession of the Gospell, euen in time of persecution, and to become constant Martyrs for the same, as hath been before declared in the fifth note of Miracles, 3. ans. by the example of George Tankerfield, Isidius Palmer, Mistresse Lowes, Roger Holland, &c.

The fifth note omitted, with Bellarmine the tenth, is Sanctitas vitae, the holines of life of the authors, and professors of their religion, cap. 13.

Ans. Go to then, let vs see what holy Fathers the patronies of Poperie haue been; we will begin with their Popes: Was not Pope Ioane a holy woman, who hauing plaid the whore, fell in trauell in the midst of proceffion? Was not Pope Iohn 13. another, who is said to haue drunke to the diuell, to haue deflowered virgins and strangers; he lay with Stephana his fathers Concubine, and at the last was slaine in adulterie? Siluester the 2. was a Coniurer and a Sorcerer, and couenanted with the diuell for his Popedom: To these we will ioine Gregorie the 7. to make vp a messe, of whom Benno writeth, that he raised vp the diuell, and poysoned fixe Popes his predecessors. Many such examples we may finde amongst their pope holy fathers.

To those we may ioine other of their chiefe pillars. The Cardinall of Crema being sent Legate into England, Anno 1129. in a Councell at London inueighing against the mariage of priests, laid it was a shamefull thing to rise from the sides of an whore, to make Christs bodie: who the night following, was shamefully taken with a notable whore, Fox pag. 1167.

Doctor Mailard a great Sorbonist in Paris, was so notoriously practised in the filthy acts of Buggerie and Sodomitie, that almost all the children in the streetes did know it: ex Iohā Crisost.

And to come neerer home: that stout champion of Poperie, and captaine disputer Doctor Fox pag. 1102. Weston, was he not apprehended in adulterie, and deprived of all his spirituall linings?

Neither were those the practises of a few, but such generally was the guise of their Clergie: It was one of the grieuances exhibited by the Nobilitie of Germany in the Councell at Noremburg, that the priests being forbidden to marrie, did goe about day and night to attempt and trie the chastitie of matrones, virgins, wiues, &c. pag. 680. Yea, and it is so shamefull to rehearse what filthy abominations were brought to light at the suppression of the Abbayes here in England, which they practised in corners, as the Apostle saith, It is a shame to speake of the things, which are done by them in secret, Ephes. 5. 12. See Master Bale his preface to his booke de actis Romanorum pontificum. Wherefore the Iesuite needed not, seeing their nakednesse is laid open to the view of the world, thus to boast of the holinesse of their professors, as to make it a note of their Church, which falleth out cleane contrarie.

The sixt note omitted, with Bellarmine the fifteenth, is, saith he, Confessio aduersariorum, The confession of their aduersaries. But here he is very weake in his prooues: Caluinus vocat Bernardum pium scriptorem: Caluin (saith the Iesuite) calleth Bernard a godly writer, cap. 16.

Ans. First, I pray you, what hath he got by Caluins confession here? May not a man commend something in one, and yet not commend all? Caluin commendeth Bernard for a godly deuout man, yet he approoueth not his iudgement in all things: godlinesse of life is one thing; purenesse and sinceritie of iudgement another. But what if he had simply commended Bernard, what is this to them? who though in many things he fauour of superstition, yet in the most points is a witness with vs rather then with them, as I could easily shew, if it were either needfull or conuenient in this place.

Secondly, the Iesuite, to prooue the confession of his aduersaries, giueth but one poore instance of Caluins confession, and such another of Melanctibons, which make nothing for them. But we can bring forth many confessions of the truth vttered by Papists: some for examples sake I will set downe.

Panormitanus, that mightie champion for the Pope, hauing disputed much in the Councell of Basil, for the preeminence of the Pope aboue generall Councells, in the end, the matter going against him, returning to his lodging complained with teares, that he had been compelled by his King,

King, to striue against the truth, and to put his soule in daunger: ex Aduers. Sylu.

Ex Henric.
Pantol. lib. 19.
anno 1543.

Doctor Medius an Italian Martyr, being before the Cardinals of Rome examined of his doctrine, which he confirmed by Scripture, concerning Iustification, Free-will, Purgatorie, at the length (they being not able to conuince him) receiued this answer, that it was truth which he affirmed; but it was not meete for this present time, because it could not bee taught without detriment of the Apostolike See.

Doctor Bassini openly in an Oration protested in a great assemblie, that he was disquieted in conscience for giuing iudgement against those which they called heretikes, because he found most part of their opinions agreeable to Scripture, For pag. 945. col. 2.

The Bishop of Cauaillon in France, committed the articles of the Merindolians to a certaine Doctor of Diuinitie to bee examined, who after eight daies perusing of them, gaue his answer, that he found them agreeable to Scripture, pag. 949.

But amongst all other the confession of Winchester lying vpon his death-bed is worthie to bee remembered: who being put in mind by another B. of Iustification only by the blood of Christ, answered, that it was dangerous to open this gap to the people; yet to him, and such other in his case it might be vttered: reported by one that was a great doer about Winchester, pag. 1788. col. 1.

I will also here adioyne the testimonie of Erasmus, whom although the Iesuite will not acknowledge wholly to bee theirs, yet he vouchsafeth to call him semi-Christianum, a semi-Christian, or halfe-Catholike: lib. 1. de verbo Dei cap. 9. he thus writeth to the Archbishop of Mentz; That many things were condemned in the bookes of Luther of Monkes and Diuines for hereticall, which in the bookes of Bernard and Augustine are read for sound and godly.

We cannot desire more large and ample confessions of our faith, then haue been made by the enemies thereof: these examples may suffice: wherefore this note better a great deale serueth our turne, then it maketh for the Iesuite.

Two other of the Iesuites notes remaine, the fourteenth, and fifteenth: The vnhappie end (saith he) of the enemies of their Church, and the externall happines and flourishing estate of the defenders thereof, cap. 17. 18.

Ans. First, more fearefull examples of Gods iudgements we shall not finde in any, then haue fallen vpon the persecutors and butcherly slaughtermen of Gods seruants for the Gospels sake: you shall finde a whole treatise of this matter, wherein such examples are gathered together, For pag. 2100. Vnto that place I refer the reader, because it were too long to giue particular instances of euery thing: yet because the Iesuite produceth certaine examples of Gods iudgements vpon Luther, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Caluin, whom he shamefully beliet; I will take a little paine, first to make answer to his slaunders, and then to shew some notable examples of Gods iudgements amongst them. First, he saith, that Luther, after he had supped merily, and made all his guests sport, died the same night; Zuinglius was slaine in battell; Oecolampadius died suddenly in the night; Caluin was consumed of lice, and calling vpon the diuell died, Bellar. cap. 16.

Ans. First, in some of these reports the Iesuite shamefully lieth: for Luther died not of a surfeit or drunkenesse, as they report, but of an old infirmirie and weaknes of stomacke, and not in the night, but the next morning at eight or nine a clocke: also hee made a most comfortable end, with a swette praiser immediately before his death, and commending his soule heartily into the hands of God; as Melancthon reporteth the manner of his death. And Oecolampadius died not suddenly, but of an old sicknesse he had, encreased with sorrow for the death of Zuinglius. For pag. 873. col. 1. And as touching Master Caluin, Bellarmino doth too shamefully belie him, who as he liued, so died the seruant of God, whatsoever these children of the father of lies say to the contrarie: Master Beza, who hath written the storie of his life and death herein deserueth more credit, then any of your lying and railing Libellers. The like vnfauourie lie Balsacus Bellarmine author, reporteth of Master Caluin, how he was confederate with one Bruleus Osianno, a poore stranger at Geneva, that he should faine himselfe dead, and should bee raised vp to life by Master Caluin, and how the said Bruleus so dissembling, when Caluin came in, and said his prayers ouer him, was found dead indeede, Bellarmino. cap. 14. But we doe nothing maruile at the impudent spirit of our aduersaries: for thus also they belied Bucer, that faithfull learned man, that he should denie at his death that Christ the Messiah was come: And that all the world may know their impudencie, euen this last yeere, they were not ashamed to blaze abroad in their writings, that Beza died a Papist conuerted, and that at his motion made at his death, the whole Church of Geneva was reuolted to Papistrie: which lying Libell is confuted by Master Beza himselfe, and the rest of the Ministers of Geneva in a pamphlet published in this last yeere 1597.

Secondly, some of these iudgements, which the Iesuite rehearseth, we take to bee none at all, as to be slaine in battaile, as Zuinglius was; who as a good shepheard gaue his life for his flocke, and would would not leave them fighting in the defence of the Gospell: he did not goe in Calpurnie to wage battaile, as some of your Popes and popish Bishops have done, but as a pastor to teach and comfort them, which your owne Canons allow: as it was decreed, Synod. Franciscan. That the servants of God, propter diuinum ministerium, for the diuine ministerie or seruice might go to warre. Neither is it to be counted a plague to die by the sword, or of any other violent death; to him that hath liued well, as S. Augustine well saith: Noli timere, non potest male mori, qui bene vixit: Feare not, he cannot die ill, that hath liued well. And againe, Vnde cumque moris pro, bene est: Death howsoever it cometh to a godly man is good: in Psalm 148. And further, saith he, Doeſt thou thinke it an euill death, to die of shipwracke, to be slaine by the sword, torne of wilde beasts; did not the Martyrs indure the like deaths?

Thirdly, it shall euen now appeare, that all these iudgements which the Iesuite hath brought forth, and many more haue iustly fallen vpon popish persecutors. And for his haue gained examples, we are able to giue him tenne times so many: but it shall not be needfull to rehearse such a number, yet some I will set downe.

Now then in the next place, as the Iesuite hath endeouored, but to small purpose, to single out some Protestants, as noted with Gods iudgements: so I will, somewhat to satisfie the reader, requite them with the like, not referring him altogether to Master Fores treatise of this matter. For as Augustine well saith, Non quemadmodum solus contristare lectorem; cum a libro, qui per te in manibus tuis alium mittitur, quem forte non habet: I know how it doth trouble the reader, when as he is referred from that booke he hath in his hands, to another which he hath not; and so he saith, facile est offerre habenti, quam differre non habentem: It is better to offer to him that hath the booke, then to defer him that hath it not, August. lib. 2. de Baptis. cap. 2. I will therefore, for their cause that haue not that large volume, sort out some notable examples of Gods iudgements vpon persecuting Papists: and because they may deny them, though they be strange, to be iudgements, I will together with the alleaging of them vse these probations.

First, the likenes of punishment in the old persecuting Pagans, and in the new persecuting Papists. Secondly, the confession of our aduersaries. Thirdly, the confession of those that were punished and iudged of God. Fourthly, the prediction of the Martyrs, whom they persecuted: Finally, their desperate ends. Sixthly, the same iudgements fell vpon them, which they procured vpon others. Seuenthly, the extraordinary course of Gods iudgements.

First then, if wee shall finde persecuting Papists to haue sustained the very same punishments with the Heathen tyrants, no man can doubt, but that they were iustly iudged of God: Aurélius a minister of crueltie in the fifth persecution vnder Alexander, whilst he was in the execution of torments vpon one Agapitus for the Christian faith, suddenly fell downe dead from his iudiciall seate, crying out; that his bowels within him burned with fire, Henricus de Erford. lib. 6. cap. 29. So fit the condemnation of Wolfgangus a Germane Martyr, the Commendator of S. Aurélius of Vienna sitting for the spirituall iudge, suddenly fell downe and died: and the Abbot of Clarifolus his assistant not long after at the cracke of gunnes fell downe and died, page 152. Maximian a minister

Again, Claudius President vnder Valerian in the eight persecution a cruell persecutor, was vexed of the diuells, and biring his owne tongue into many small pieces died, Page 74. col. 2. In like manner Cardinall Croſomius was vexed of the diuells, who was President of the Tridentine Chapter, who sitting vp late to write letters to the Pope, saw in his chamber coming toward him an huge blacke dogge with fierie eyes, and therewith stricken with a great feare died vpon whose death the Councell was dissolved, pag. 107.

Maximian that cruell tyrant was stricken with a most fearefull disease, consuming his entrails, whereout issued an innumerable multitude of lice, with a most filthy stinking sauer, that no man could abide him: his Physicians, because they could not cure him, he commaunded to be slaine, pag. 82. col. 2. In like sort was Adrianus plagued the persecutor of the innocent Marinolians, whose bowels rotted within him being consumed with wormes: who also commaunded his surgeon to be apprehended, that gaue him good exhortation; and miserably died with extreme stinck of the lower parts, with horrible blasphemies, &c. pag. 91. col. 2. Thyſidius likewise a furious Papist, who set vp the stakes in Smithfield, rotted about the ground; so that no man could abide him, pag. 128. col. 1.

Phillip the betrayer of innocent Tyndall died of lice. But also the Promooter in Queene Maries daies, was eaten of lice, pag. 101. col. 1.

Maximian that tyrant falling with his horse from the bridge, which he did lay for Quintinus, was drowned. The like iudgement befell a certaine young gentleman, an horrible blasphemer, who being admonished of his swearing, still multiplying othes, pricked forward his horse, being vpon the bridge: from the which the horse sprung aside into the water, he crying vpon his backe, Horse and man and all to the diuells, pag. 105. In like sort John Kander, a chiefe officer of Antwerpe, and a cruell persecuter, riding to the citie in his wagon, when he was come to the bridge, the horse standing still, cried out to the driver, Ride on in a thousand diuels names: and the horse springing before, he was cast into the towne ditch; and so drowned. Thus wester, how in all respects in the persecutions of the Primitive Church were punished; for enemies of Christs Church in these daies were recompenced. If then strange kinds of death were to be counted iudgements in them, so are they in these.

Secondly, we haue our aduersaries owne confession: for the Iesuite noteth foure iudgements of God, as I haue shewed before, which hee falsely affirmeth to haue fallen vpon those learned Protestants: first, suddenness of death: secondly, to be vexed of the diuell: thirdly, to die blaspheming: fourthly, to die securely and merily after pots and cups, as heilandeth Luther. Three of the first I haue before touched, and giuen an instance of themselves, that haue tasted of those iudgements: and for the last, the Iesuite might haue remembered how Pope Leo sitting at supper, and very pleasant, was suddenly stricken with a feuer, whereof he died, p. 834. And for secure death, Eckius, that mightie impugner of Luther, might haue been thought vpon, whose last words when he died were these: In case the foure thousand Guilders were readie, the matter were dispatched with the which, as it is thought, he should haue purchased some preferment at Rome.

Thirdly, let vs heare their owne confession that were punished. King Henry the 8. of France hauing receiued his deadly wound at Iusting, said, he feared he was stricken for falsely imprisoning the poore Christians, pag. 2112. Likewise one Bastien Capaine of the armie, that went against the Protestants of Luerne, and S. Martin, threatening that day to doe much against them, and returning wounded, it was said vnto him, Now it is well seene that their religion is better then ours, pag. 967.

Fourthly, the prediction and foretelling of the Martyrs of the iudgements that followed, doe shew that they were sent of God, as Master Parry Hamelton at his death did: crie the blacke Frier Campbell, that was his accuser, to appeare before the most high God to answer for the innocencie of his death at a certaine day of the next moneth: immediately before which day the Frier died, pag. 975. col. 2. Likewise, June 1561. at Amboise in France certaine gentlemen being vniustly condemned to death by the Chanceller Orsini, one of them tooke of the blood of his fellowes that were beheaded, and lift his hands to heauen, and said; Lord behold the blood of thy children, thou wilt in time reuenge it: and shortly after the Chanceller died in great despaire, pag. 2112.

Fifthly, the same iudgements ouertooke some of them, which they threatened, and had done to others: which sheweth, that they were stricken of God: One Iohn Martin of Briqueras in France, threatened he would slit the Ministers nose; who was himselfe assailed of a wolfe, which bit off his nose, whereof he died mad, pag. 955. Sir Ralph Barker Knight Marshall at Calice, when Adam Danilp was executed, said; he would not goe away before he saw his hart: but he himselfe afterward was taken in a skirmish of the French; his priue members cut off, and his hart raked out of his bellie, pag. 1229. One Landsdale a cruell enemy to the Gospell, that suffered a poore man to die in a ditch by his house, was not long after cast by his horse into a ditch, and so died, pag. 2104.

Sixthly, their desperate and fearefull ends doe declare that Gods reuenging hand was amongst them; as Plankyn and Hanning, both fellowes of New Colledge in Oxford, drowned themselves, and were taken vp, with their Crucifixes hanging about their neckes, pag. 2104. Clarke, an open enemy to the Gospell, hanged himselfe in the tower, pag. 1201. col. 1. and diuers of them beside killed themselves: others died in despaire. Guarlaus a learned man of Louaine, and a mightie defender of Poperie, vttering most horrible blasphemies in his sickness, cried out, that his sinnes were greater then could be giuen: and so wretchedly in despaire ended his life, ex epistola, Clauis Senarclai ad Biter. In like manner Iacobus Laisius, a mightie impugner of Luther, in his open Lecture in Louaine fell mad, and so was carried home and shut vp in a close chamber till he died, who had nothing in his mouth, but that he was damned: ex epistola. Many such examples might be alleaged to this purpose: but these may suffice to shew, that their desperate madness of some in killing themselves, or others in dying in despaire without all comfort, doth euidently shew that they were iudged of God.

Seuenthly, it may appeare by the extraordinarie meanes whereby some of them were punished: Doctor Whittington Chanceller, a persecutor in King Henry the 7. daies, coming from the burning of a faithfull woman, whom he had condemned, was slaine of a Bull, that offered to touch none of the people beside, but coming against him, ranne vpon him, and tossed him vpon his hornes, trailing his guts all along in the streete, pag. 775. Barton Bailiffe of Crowland, an earnest defender of the Masse, and an enemy to the Gospel, was poysoned with the excrements of a crow, which flying ouer his head, as he rode by the way, let them fall vpon his nose and beard, with the stink whereof he fell into a continuall vomiting, whereof he died, pag. 2100. A Frier of Mount

den flash of lightning, and so died: ex Paul. 2. part. 2. c. 6. Wherefore as the Iesuite noteth it to haue been a iudgement of God vpon Anastasi the Emperour, a fauourer of the Eutychie heretikes, that was smitten of lightning: so can it not be denied, but in like sort this was a iudgement vpon this Frier. Thus wee see how little the Iesuite hath gained by making the iudgements of God a note of the Church.

NOW concerning externall happinesse and good successe: first, it is no certaine note of the Church of God, which oftner is without it, then it doth enioy it: for Christs kingdome is not of this world. And as the Lord suffered his people to sojourne as strangers, and to bee euill entreated foure hundred yeeres, from Abrahams time to Moses: so is it the condition for the most part of the Church of God still; as the Prophet Jeremie saith, Dedit dilectam amicum suum in manus inimicorum eius: He hath giuen his beloued and deare heart into the hands of the enemies thereof, Jerem. 12. And S. Augustine saith, Beneficentissima providentia omnipotens deus terrenam felicitatem concessit & impijs, ne pro magna quereretur à bonis: Almighty God of his bountifull prouidence, hath graunted earthly felicitie to the wicked, that the godly should not so greatly desire it, epist. 12. ad Henerat. cap. 5. How then can that bee a note of the Church which is common to the wicked? Nay, one of your owne writers saith contrarie, that Cruz est ecclesia nota, the Crosse is a note of the Church, Epens. in 2. Timoth. p. 103. d. And againe, Prædixit Christus laboris, Pseudochristi prospera: Christ foretold of labour and sorrow, the false Christs prophesied of peace and prosperitie, pag. 100. x. By this sentence Bellarmino is a false prophet, that would haue felicitie and prosperitie a note of his Church.

Secondly, as the Iesuite sheweth in the examples of Iustinian the elder, and Heraclius the Emperour, that they prospered in their warres till they fell to be maintainers of heresie, then all things went backward, cap. 18. the like examples we can produce of the euill successe and vnhappie end of those who reuolted from the Gospell to Papistrie, whom God blessed in all their enterprises before: This was the King of Nauarre his case, father to the now French King; who after he had sustained a while the cause of the Gospell, was content at the length to alter his profession, and ioyne with the Duke of Guize, and was stricken with a pellet at the siege of Roane, whereof he died, much repenting his reuolt. It had been happie if the sonne in the same case had remembered his fathers fall. The like experience of Gods wrath vpon reuolters, of other meaner place haue felt: as Henrie Smith sometime a professor of the Gospell, afterward at Louaine peruerced to Poperie, comming home hanged himselfe, with his Arms dei about his necke. One Williams a student of the inner Temple, first a Gospeller, then a Papist, fell stark mad, and so continued, pag. 210. f. Arnoldus Bomelius a young student of the Vniuersitie of Louaine prospered well, so long as he fauoured the Gospell: afterward being peruerced by Tylman Master of the Popes Colledge, fell into despaire, and killed himselfe with his dagger: whose storie Master Fax hath at large, pag. 1106. Thus it doth appeare how vnhappely it fareth with popish reuolters, contrarie to the Iesuities obseruation: therefore they cannot bragge of their outward felicitie.

Thirdly, neither of late can our aduersaries, I thinke, boast of such good successe of their kingdome: for since the reuiuing of the Gospell in the world, the Popes Crowne and dignitie hath been much impaired, and many Princes haue withdrawne their collers and shoulders from vnder his yoke. And as for England (God enlarge our hearts to bee thankfull therefore) there was neuer seene the like continuance of peace, and abundance of temporall blessings, as the Gospell hath brought with it hitherto. And I am perswaded, were it not for our sinnes, wee should enioy many yeeres still, as I trust in God wee shall, if wee will humble our selues before God by true repentance.

Thus farre of the Iesuities fifteene notes, whereby the popish Church is deciphered. Now it followeth, that we declare the infallible and most certaine notes of the true Church.

THe outward tokens whereby the true visible Church is discerned, are not many in number, as our aduersaries doe reckon vp many: the Iesuite no lesse than 15, supplying belike in number, that which they want in waight. Neither in this place doe wee speake of the vniuersall Catholike inuisible Church, which is beleecued and not seene, being an article of our faith: but of particular visible Churches, which are discerned and knowne by these two essentiall markes, the true preaching of the word, and right vse of the Sacraments: Some also doe adde a third, namely, Ecclesiasticall discipline, Bona confess. de Ecclesiast. 7. Hauper vpon the Creede, articul. 70. But this partly is comprehended in the two former: for there cannot bee hearing and preaching of the word, and the frequenting of the Sacraments, vnleſſe there bee an exerciſe of Church diſcipline: partly alſo wee ſay that it is not ſo eſſentiall a note, as the other are: for the abſence of the other make a nullitie of the Church. If the word or Sacraments in ſubſtance be corrupted, the Church alſo is defaced: but if there bee not an exact forme of diſcipline, it doth not ſtraightway ceaſe to be a Church. Wherefore we conclude, that the true preaching of the word, and right uſe of the Sacraments, are the only neceſſarie and eſſentiall notes of the Church: where theſe two are rightly vſed according to Gods word, there is a right Church, as here in England, God bee bleſſed: where they are falſely and impurely handled, there is a falſe and corrupt Church, as among the Papiſts: where they are not at all in uſe, there is no Church, as amongſt the Turkes, Iewes, and Infidels. Firſt we will examine our aduerſaries arguments, and then bring forth our owne.

Arg. 1. Bellarmine thus argueth: The true notes of the Church ought to bee proper and particular, not common and generall, as theſe are: for every ſect of heretikes doe challenge to themſelves the right preaching of the word, and vſage of the Sacraments: Ergo, they are no true notes, Bellarmin. lib. 4. de Eccleſ. cap. 2.

We anſwere: Firſt, it ſkilteſh not how many doe lay claime to thoſe notes: the word of God it ſelfe is a maniſeſt iudge where pure doctrine is taught, and the Sacraments rightly kept according to the institution. It is no matter, howſoeuer Papiſts and other heretikes doe make their brags, the Scriptures themſelves can ſoone decide this queſtion. And S. Hierome ſaith well to this purpoſe: Nec ſibi blandiantur, quod videantur de ſcripturarum capitulis affirmare, quod dicunt: Neither let them flatter themſelves, becauſe they proue their aſſertions out of Scripture: For ſo the diuel alſo alleaged Scripture: Sed Scriptura non in legendo conſtituit, ſed intelligendo: But the Scriptures conſiſt not in the reading but vnderſtanding, &c. Cont. Luciferian. So then although heretikes by the letter of Scripture may take vpon them to proue their Church, yet by the true ſenſe thereof they ſhall neuer. Secondly, nay rather this argument may be turned vpon the Ieſuites head: for it is therefore the more like, that theſe ſhould be the true notes of the Church, becauſe every hereſie doth labour to proue their Church thereby: for if it were not the right coyne, they would not goe about to counterſeit it. Thirdly, I maruell they are not aſhamed to obiect, that our notes are common, ſeeing theirs are moſt common: for not onely aſſemblies of heretikes, but euen the heathen and Idolatrous Gentiles might as well proue themſelves to be the Church, by thoſe popiſh notes, of vniuerſalitie, for Idolatrie had ouerſpread the whole world; of vnitie, they all conſented to perſecute the Church of Chriſt; of antiquitie, for the worſhip of Idols continued aboue two thouſand yeares; of ſucceſſion, for the monarchie of the Aſſyrians endured 1300. yeares, their kings all this while one ſucceeding another. They had alſo Prophets, and ſuch as wrought miracles. Our aduerſaries may be now aſhamed to caſt vs in the teeth, that our notes are common; when as theirs doe well agree to the Synagogues of Sathan, and aſſemblies of Infidels.

Argum. 2. Saith he, the note or the marke muſt be better knowne and more notorious, then the thing marked or notified by it: ſo are not theſe; for we know not which is the word of God; nor what bookes are Canonically, and to be taken for Scripture, but by the Church, Bellarmin. ibid.

We anſwere: the Ieſuite ſtill beggeth that which is in queſtion: a foule fault in a profeſſed diſputer: for haue we not largely proued before 1. ſent. quaſt. 4. that the Church dependeth vpon the authoritie of the Scripture, and not contrariwiſe, and that there is no more certaine and euident and vndoubted thing in the whole world, vpon the which a man may be bold to build and ground his faith, then vpon the Scriptures? This ſure is a childiſh and ridiculous argument, to take that as graunted, which is moſt of all in controverſie. Secondly, he committeth the ſame fault himſelfe, chap. 14. where he maketh the power of miracles a note of the Church, and yet confeſſeth, Ex Eccleſia miracula demonſtrari: That true miracles are demonſtrated by the Church: why then may not the word of God as well ſhew the Church, although in ſome ſenſe the Church ſhew the word? Thirdly, the Ieſuite confeſſeth, cap. 2. that where the Scripture is receiued, and the Church doubted of, there the Scripture declareth the Church: which is our very caſe in theſe dayes: for ſeeing our aduerſaries and we are agreed concerning the moſt of the Canonically Scriptures, but differ about the Church, in the Ieſuites iudgement in this caſe we muſt demonſtrate the Church by the Scriptures. Fourthly, the Ieſuite miſtaketh the matter: for we doe not thus reaſon, where the Scriptures are acknowledged for the word, there is the Church; for the Iewes receiue the old Teſtament, the diuel knoweth it is the word of God, which is contained in the Scriptures; but they are neither of the Church: but where the word is faithfully preached, profeſſed, receiued, and beleued, there is the Church.

Argum. 3. The true notes (ſaith he) are inſeparable from the Church: it is neuer without them. But many true Churches haue wanted theſe: The Church of the Corinthians was a true Church; and yet they beleued not the reſurrection, chap. 15. The Galathians were a true Church, and yet they held that Moſes law was to be obſerued together with the Goſpell. And the Corinthiand likewise did not sincerely observe the Sacraments, 1. Corinth. 11. And as many true Churches haue wanted these notes, so false Churches may haue them: for there may be true doctrine among schismatikes, such as the Donatists were: for schismatikes may hold all poynts of sound doctrine, who faile in eharitie rather then in faith: Ergo, these are no true signes, Bellarm. ibid.

We answer: first, this argument may with better right be returned upon their owne head: for many true Churches haue wanted their inarkes: Christ and his Apostles had neither succellion from Aaron, nor vniuersalitie, and yet they made the true Church. The Church of the Iewes after Maldacis time had no Prophets, nor miracles, for the space of 400. yeares before Christ, and yet were they the true Church, and so of the rest of your notes, the Church of Christ hath many times wanted them: Secondly, it was not the whole Church of Corinthus that doubted of the resurrection, but certaine false Apostles that laboured to seduce others, 1. Cor. 15: 34. Some of you (saith the Apostle) haue not the knowledge of God: he saith, not all. So likewise amongst the Galatians there were false teachers, that stood for the law of Moses: Galath. 3: 9. A little leaven doth marre the whole lump. It was not therefore a publike doctrine in the Church, but secretly taught by false Apostles. Thirdly, there may be some error in the Church, but being not fundamentall, such an one as destroieth faith, it doth not dissolue the Church: as there was some abuse amongst the Corinthians in receiuing the Sacraments: but the forme and institution and substance of the Sacrament was kept. Nay, yet to graunt a little more: though the error be dangerous, and of great waight and moment, and such an one, as being stiffely maintained, would destroy the faith and Church too: yet if they haue fallen into it rather of ignorance, then any other cause, and doe not continue in it, but doe submit themselves to be reformed by the word, it ceaseth not for all that to be a Church. So the Corinthians referred themselves wholly and their opinions to the iudgement and determination of the Apostle.

To the second part of the argument, that pure doctrine may be found in an impure Church: We answer: first, the example which the Iesuite alleageth of the Donatists, is nothing to his purpose: for the Donatists did not onely offend in their schisme, but they held also schismaticall and vntrue opinions, as that the Sacraments were polluted by the Ministers, that Baptisme giuen by heretikes, ought to bee iterated: that the Church in the earth consisteth onely of the good without any mixture of euill men: that the Church was perished from the whole world, and remained onely amongst them: these were the opinions of the Donatists: they had not therefore pure doctrine. Augustine doubteth not to say vnto a chiefe Donatist: Schismaticus et sacrilegus descessione, hereticus sacrilegus dogmate: Thou art a schismaticke, for thy sacrilegious departure from the Church, and an heretike for thy sacrilegious opinions, Cont. Gaudens, lib. 3. Wherefore the Iesuite was much ouersene in alleaging this example. Secondly, there are no schismatikes, which doe separate themselves from the Church, but they doe dissent in some opinion, and so as well sayle in faith as in charitie: for what else should moue them, to be deuoid from the Church, but diuersitie and difference of doctrine? So Augustine answereth Crescensius, who made this difference of heresie and schisme: Heresis, saith the Donatist, est diuersa sequentium secta, schisma eadem sequentium separatio: An heresie is a sect of those that follow other opinions, a schisme is a separation of those which are of one opinion. No, saith Augustine, Nulla scissio, vel schisma est nisi diuersum sequantur: There is no schisme, vnlesse they follow diuers opinions: And that saying of S. Hierome is allowed in your owne decrees, Nullum schisma, non aliquam sibi confingit heresim: There is no schisme, which doth not inuent some new heresie: decr. par. 2. caus. 24. qu. 3. c. 26. For although a schismaticke should be of the same iudgement in all other things, yet herein hee sayleth in sound doctrine, in that he thinketh it lawfull, to deuide himselfe from the Church: yet the Iesuite shall neuer be able to shew me such a schismaticke, which did not beside his separation, holde some doctrine contrarie to the Catholike truth.

con. cap. 9.

Wherefore we conclude, that wherefoeuer true and sound doctrine is taught wholly and in euery part, for the matter, though not for the manner, there is the Church: as S. Paul saith, So Christ be preached, whether vnder pretence or sincerely, I therein reioyce, Philip. 1. 18.

The Protestants.

For the sufficiency of these notes, we would desire no better arguments then those which our aduersaries alleaged against vs: for first our notes are proper onely to the Church, and cannot be found in any place, where the Church of God is not. Secondly, they are most notorious marks, and a man by the Scriptures may more easily know, what true doctrine is, and which are the right sacraments, then which is the true Church. Thirdly, these marks cannot be absent from the Church, but doe alwayes accompanie it, and it is no longer a true Church, then it hath those marks.

Argum. 2. We are able out of the Scriptures to proue these marks, which may stand in stead of many reasons. Ioh. 10. My sheepe beare my voyce: Ephes. 5. Cleansing it by the washing of water through the word: Ergo, the Word and Sacraments are true notes of the Church.

Belarmine answereth to the first place, that the hearing of the word, is not a visible note of the Church, but a signe vnto euery man, whereby he may know his election. We reply againe: I like which way a man is knowne to be a member of the Church, by the same way the Church also it selfe is discerned: if the hearing of the word doe make one a sheepe of Christ, then doth it also shew which is the flocke and folde of Christ: As I know my hand or foote to be a part of my bodie, because it hath life and motion of the bodie; euen so the bodie is discerned from a carcase, because it moueth and liueth.

To the second place he answereth, verie simply: that the Apostle there sheweth not, which is the Church, but what good Christ hath wrought for his Church. We reply againe: But the Church is best known by the benefites that Christ hath bestowed vpon it, amongst the which the Word and the Sacraments are not the least: Ergo, by these the Church is known, and in that place by the Apostle described: And let the reader iudge, whether that place of the Apostle, where there is direct mention made of the word and sacraments, be not fitly applied to our purpose, concerning the description of the Church.

Arg. 3. Looke how Christ is known, so is his Church: but Christ is known only by the Scriptures, as hee himselfe saith, John 5. Search the Scriptures, for they doe testifie of me: Ergo, the true Church is to be known by the Scriptures: The word of God therefore is an infallible note of the Church, argum. Bradford. epist. ad Cantabrigiens. This argument also vseth D. Ridley Martyr, al- leading a place out of Chrysostome to this sense: In times past there were many wayes to knowe the Church of Christ by, as by good life, chastitie, miracles, &c. but nowe these things are com- mon to heretikes: and therefore the true Church is now to be known, tantummodo per scripturas, onely by the Scriptures: Hom. 49. in Mat. in oper. imperf.

S. Augustine also saith, In scripturis didicimus Christum, in scripturis didicimus ecclesiam, epistol. 166. In the Scripture we doe learne Christ, in the Scripture let vs likewise learne the Church. His ar- gument is the same that here we haue vsed. Looke how Christ is known, so is his Church: but Christ is onely known by his word: Ergo, so is his Church.

Now let vs adde the seale and stampe, which the holy Martyrs haue signed this doctrine with in their blood. Richard Fourns Martyr, who suffered at Lions for the truth anno 1554. saith, that the Church of God is onely to be known by the word of God, and the right institution of the Sa- craments. Fox page 912. Frederick Dammile Martyr at Paris, being asked whether these two were the notes of the Church, answered, That doe I beleue, and therein will I live and die, Fox pag. 922. col. 2. See the confession also of Thomas Becket Martyr. pag. 1039. Of George Marsh Martyr 1565. col. 2. Of Bartlet Green Martyr, The true markes of Christs Church, saith he, is the true preaching of his word, and ministry of the Sacraments, pag. 1852. All these with many others aduentured their liues, dying in the faith of that Church, which was known by those two infallible notes. Let the Papiests bring fourth any that durst doe the like for their vniuersalitie, antiquitie, and the like.

Last of all, for the truth and certaintie of these two notes of the Church, namely, the word and Sacraments, we haue the determination of the Papiests themselves assembled in Council. Interro- lig. Casare. cap. 10. Sunt Ecclesia vera nota, doctrina sana & sacramentorum usus, quibus à Iudeorum & Eribnicorum castris ecclesia distinguitur, quorum utrique & sana doctrina, & sacramentis noni testamenti carnis: The true notes of the Church are sound doctrine, and the right vse of the Sacraments, by the which the Church is distinguished from the Iewish and heathenish assemblies, which neither haue sound doctrine, nor the Sacraments of the new Testament.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, OF THE authoritie of the Church.

THe Papiests affirme, that the authoritie of the Church consisteth in these five points. First, in authorising the Scriptures, and defining which are Canonically. Secondly, in giuing the sense of the Scripture. Thirdly, in determining matters besides Scripture. Fourthly, in making lawes and constitutions for the Church. Fifthly, in exercising of discipline.

Concerning the two last, we doe not greatly stand with them. We acknowledge the Church hath authoritie to make decrees and constitutions, but so, as the Apostles did: Visum est nobis & spiritui sancto. It seemed good to vs and the holy Ghost: the Church must be directed by the wis- dome of the spirit speaking in the Scriptures.

We also acknowledge the wholesome power of the Church in exercising of holy discipline: but it must bee done in the name and power of Christ, 1. Cor. 5. 4. not according to the will of men.

Concerning the two first: we haue already shewed, that neither the Church doth giue autho- ritie to the word of God, but doth take her authoritie from them: for the Scriptures are of sufficient

ent credit of themselves, 1. contron. quæst. 4. neither that the sense of Scripture dependeth vpon the interpretation of the Scripture, but that the word expoundeth it selfe, 1. contron. quæst. 6.

There remaineth therefore onely one point to be discuffed of the authoritie of the Church: namely, in deciding of matters beside the Scriptures: which are of two sortes, either necessarie appertaining to faith, or indifferent concerning ceremonies: of both these in their order.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE CHVRCH hath authoritie in matters of faith beside the Scriptures.

The Papists.

WE ought to take our faith and all necessarie things of saluation at the hands of our superiours, Rhemist. Al. 10. sect. 8. In points not decided by scripture we must aske counsaile of the Church, Prefat. sect. 15. The Church is the onely pillar and stay to leane vnto in all doubts of doctrine, without the which there can be no certaintie nor securitie: we must therefore beleue it and trust it in all things, anot. 1. Timoth. cap. 3. sect. 9. Yea it hath authoritie, say they, to make new articles of faith: as in the Councell of Constance it was decreed to be necessarie to saluation, to beleue the Pope to be head of the Church. In the Councell of Basile it was made an article of the faith, to beleue that the Councell was aboue the Pope; and therefore Pope Engenius in not obeying the Councell was adiudged to be an heretike.

34. Error.

Argum. 1. Vpon these words in the Gospell, Ioh. 15. 27. the spirit shall testifie of me, and you shall beare witnes also: they conclude thus: Ergo, the testimonie of the truth ioyntly consisteth in the holy Ghost and Prelates of the Church, Rhemist. Ioh. 15. sect. 8.

Tim. 3. 9.

We answer: the witnes of the spirit, and of the Apostles, is all one witnes: for the spirit first testifieth the truth to the Apostles inwardly, and the Apostles inspired by the spirit did witnes it outwardly: so the Pastors of the Church witnessing with the spirit, which is not now inspired by reuelation, but onely found in the Scriptures, are to be heard: but if the spirit testifie one thing in the word, and they testifie another, there we must leaue them.

Argum. 2. The Church erreth not: Ergo, we must heare her in all things, Rhemist. 1. Timoth. 3. sect. 9. We answer: first, the Church may erre, if she follow not the Scriptures; proued before, 2. contron. quæst. 2. Secondly, so long as the Church heareth Christs voice, we are likewise to heare hers: and so long as she is preserued from error, she will not swarue from Christs precepts, neither impose any thing vpon her children, without the warrant of her spouse.

Argum. 3. Thou canst proue nothing by Scripture, it is dead, it must haue a liuely expositor: Ergo, the Scripture ought not to be iudge in matters of faith, but the Church, Winch. pag. 1486.

Answers. The Scripture is alieue and not dead, as you say, respons. Roger. Mart. ibid.
Obiect. 1. All heretikes haue alleadged Scriptures, therefore we must haue a liuely expositor for them, Worcest. ibid. Answers. Yea, it is true all heretikes haue alleadged Scripture, but they were confuted by Scripture, and by no other expositor, respons. Rog. Mart. ibid.

Obiect. 2. The letter killeth, but the spirit giueth life: Ergo, the Scriptures which are the letter cannot iudge, sic Bæuer pag. 1807. Answers. Saint Paul meaneth not, that the word of God in it selfe killeth, which is the word of life, but that the word is vnprofitable, and killeth him that is voide of the spirit of God: and therefore the Apostle faith, that the Gospell was to giue the sauaour of life to life, and to some the sauaour of death &c. Respons. Philpos. Mart. ibid.

Obiect. 3. The word cannot be iudge of the word: Ergo, there must be another iudge beside. Argum. Stori pag. 1805. Answers. Our Sauour Christ faith, Verbum, quod locutus sum, indicabit in nouissimo die. The word that I haue spoken, shall iudge at the last day: If the word shall iudge at the last day, much more it ought to iudge our doings now, Respons. Philpos. Mart. ibid.

The Protestants.

That the Church hath no such power to ordaine articles of faith, or impose matters to be beleued necessarie to saluation not contayned, or prescribed in the holy Scriptures: we proue it thus, and we are sure, that the true Church of Christ will neuer challenge any such prerogatiue.

Argum. 1. All truths and verities in the Scriptures are not so necessarie to saluation, that the ignorancethereof should bring perill of damnation: Ergo, much lesse are any verities out of Scripture of any such necessitie; the first is manifest: for to know the iust chronologie of time or space of yeares, from the beginning of the world to Christ, is a veritie in Scripture, yet not necessarie: so to beleue that Mary continued a virgine euer after the birth of our Lord, was thought by Basile to be no necessarie point to saluation, if we did holde her to haue been a virgin afore: and many such other points there are in Scriptures which a man may be ignorant of without perill of saluation: Ergo, much more may we be ignorant of vnwritten verities, or rather popish fables. For it is not like that the Scriptures doe abundari in superfluis, abound in superfluous things,

Argum. 2. The Church hath no more authoritie then the Apoſtles, nor yet in all things ſo much: but they had no power to make articles of faith: for S. Paul delivereſh that which he had received concerning the Sacrament, he durſt not adde vnto it, as the Papiſts haue been bold to doe ſince, 1. Cor. 11. Vpon which place S. Ambroſe thus writeth: Indignum dicit domino, qui aliter myſterium celebrat, quam ab eo traditum eſt: non enim poteſt deuotus eſſe, qui aliter preſumit, quam datum eſt ab auctore: The Apoſtle ſaith, he is vnworthy of the Lord, which doth celebrate the myſterie otherwiſe then it was by him deliuered: for he ſaith no true deuotion, which preſumeth to doe otherwiſe, then the author preſcribed: Ergo, the Church may expaine and open articles of faith out of the Scriptures, but not make new. Heare of this matter alſo a writer, whom you will not reſuſe: Vincentius Linceuſis vpon theſe words, 1. Timoth. 6. 26. O Timothee, Keepe that which is committed vnto thee: ſuſtineatur te exponere illuſtrius, quod ante obſcurius credebatur: eadem tamen, qua diſceſſiſti, doce, vt cum dicas nouū, non dicas noua: Let that be vnderſtoode more cleerely by thy expoſition, which was obſcurely beleueed before: yet teach none other things then thou haſt learned, that though you ſpeake them after a new manner, yet vtter no new things: If Timothee then was to bring in no new things, but onely to expaine the olde, how much leſſe the Paſtors of the Church now.

Fox. pag. 677.

Argum. 3. We proue it by the confeſſion of our aduerſaries. The fathers of Baſile, that concluded, it was an article of the Chriſtian faith to beleue the ſuperioritie of the Councell, did gather it out of the ſaying of Chriſt, die eccleſie, and therefore enforced it as an article. Whereby we gather, that they held, that the Church could eſtabliſh no article of faith without Scripture. Belarminus likewiſe ſaith, that the Church is not now gouerned by new reuelations, but we ought to be contented with thoſe decrees, which we haue received from the Apoſtles: Ergo, as Doctor Whitaker doth ſtrongly conclude, the Church cannot coyne new articles of faith.

cap. 4.

Argum. 4. If the Scriptures doe teach all neceſſarie poynts both concerning faith and manners, then hath the Church no authoritie to eſtabliſh other articles of faith beſide: but the firſt is true: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Scriptures are able to make a man perfect to every good worke: but where perfection is, there is nothing wanting, 2. Timoth. 3. 17. Ergo, the Church hath no ſuch power: ſee more of this, controu. 1. quaſt. 7. part. 2.

Laſtly, we haue before proued at large out of the word of God, that the Scriptures containe all things neceſſarie to ſaluation: and therefore all articles of faith muſt be deriued from thence, 1. controu. quaſt. 7. And ſo we conclude with Auguſtine: Lingua ſeius, quibus inter ſe homines ſua ſenſa communicant, paſſo quodam ſocietatis ſibi inſinuere poſſunt: Quibus autem ſacris diuinitati congruerent, voluntatem Dei ſequuti ſunt, qui recte ſaperunt: Qua omnino nunquam deſuit ad ſalutem inſtituta pietatisque hominum: Men, ſaith he, may deuiſe among themſelues what language they will uſe to expreſſe their minde: but how to ſerue God, wiſe men euer followed the will and commaundement of God, which neuer hath fayled men in all neceſſarie matters concerning righteouſnes and godlines. By this Fathers ſentence, the Scriptures which containe the will of God, containe all neceſſarie things. Ergo, we neede not ſeekelſe elſewhere.

This truth is ſealed by the confeſſion and glorious witneſſe of the holy Martyrs, that the holy Scriptures being written by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt, are the very true word of God, and therefore to be heard accordingly, as the Iudge in all controverſies and matters of religion: this was the confeſſion of the holy Martyrs ſet forth anno 1554 ſubſcribed by Iohn Hooper, Iohn Rogers, Rowland Taylor, Iohn Philpot, Iohn Bradford, Laurence Saunders, and others, Fox pag. 1471.

Laſtly, we haue the authoritie of their owne Councils, Council. Baſilienſis. epistol. ſynodal. Pope Vrbane is alleaged thus writing: Sciendum eſt quia inde Romanus pontifex novas leges condere poteſt, vnde Euangelista nequaquam aliquid dixerunt &c. Know this, that the Biſhop of Rome hath onely authoritie in this caſe to make new lawes, where the Euangelists and Scriptures are ſilent: But the Scriptures are not ſilent in any poynt concerning faith and manners. See the Councell of Caſilon. cau. 67. cited before controu. 1. quaſt. 7. part. 2. argum. 3. Ergo, neither the Church or Pope hath authoritie herein to make new lawes. And laſtly I will produce one of your owne Popes teſtimonies, Iohn. 22. extra. ſit. 14. c. 5. verſus finem. Articuli fidei in ſymbolis continentur, &c. articuli fidei habent per ſcripturam probari: The articles of faith are contained in the ſymbles or Creedes. Againe, the articles of faith muſt be proued by Scripture. Ergo, the Church can make no new article of the faith: but is bound to receiue thoſe contained in the Creede, and proued out of the Scriptures. Likewiſe Council. Ferraria. ſeſſ. 9. Beſſarion thus ſaith, ſciatis addendi ſymbolo facultatem, non ſolum Romana, verum vniuerſali Eccleſie, generalique ſynodo interdiciam eſſe: Know yee that to adde to the Creede, not onely the Romane, but the vniuerſall Church and generall Synode hath no authoritie.

AN APPENDIX OR MEMBER OF THIS PART of the question, whether we are to beleue in the Church.

The Papists.

WE ought to beleue and trust the Church in all things: yea to beleue in the Church, 25. Error.

Rhemist. 1. Tim. 3. sect. 9. the Scripture also vseth this speech, to beleue in men annos. in 10.

Argum. 1. Exod. 14. 31. they beleueed in God and Moses. Ergo. We answer. Your owne vulgar text hath it, crediderunt Deo & Mosi seruis eius: they beleueed God and his seruant Moses: that is, hauing scene the great power of God in the destruction of the Egyptians in the red sea, according to the word of Moses; they gaue credite vnto Moses, which spake vnto them from God.

Argum. 2. Philem vers. 5. Hearing of thy loue and faith which thou hast toward the Lord Iesus and vnto all the Saints. See, say they, here is faith toward the Saints.

We answer: there is no man, that is not peruerclly disposed, but may easily distinguish the Apostles words; to attribute faith to Iesus Christ, and loue to the Saints: which may appeare by the altering of the preposition, as they themselves reade in their owne translation, loue and faith in Iesus Christ, and toward the Saints: so it must needs be thus vnderstood, faith in Christ, and loue toward the Saints: this therefore is but a sophisticall canill.

The Protestants.

This word, Credo, beleue, is taken three wayes: for there is credere deo, to beleue God, that is, to trust him in all things, credere Deum, to beleue God to be, credere in Deum, to beleue in God, as our creator, Lord, and redeemer. So we doe credere ecclesiam, we beleue there is one holy Catholike Church: credere ecclesia, we doe also beleue and giue credence to the Church, following the word of God: But we doe not in any wise credere in ecclesiam, beleue in the Church.

Argum. 1. We must not beleue or put any confidence in a creature: the Church is but a creature: Ergo for to beleue in God, is onely proper to the Godhead: and therefore, Ioh. 14. 1. where Christ saith, ye beleue in God, beleue also in me: we doe necessarily out of these words inferre, that Christ is God, because we are commanded to beleue in him.

Argum. 2. Faith is of things that are absent and not scene: but the Church is present alwayes vpon earth, and alwayes visible, as our aduersaries holde: how then can it be an object of our faith? We cannot beleue in that which is visible and scene, for it is against the nature of faith.

Augustine saith, Sciendum est quid ecclesiam credere, non tamen in ecclesiam credere debemus, quia ecclesia non est Deus sed domus Dei: de tempore ser. 131. We must know, that we are to beleue there is a Church, not in the Church, for the Church is not God, but onely the house of God. Your owne decrees also doe approue that saying of S. Augustine, Hom. 3. ad Neophytos, deor. par. 3. dist. 4. c. 73. Non quomodo in Deum credimus, sic in Ecclesiam sanctam catholicam, qua propterea sancta & catholica est, quia certè credit in Deum: Non ergo dicimus vi in Ecclesiam quasi in Deum credentes: sed vi in Ecclesia sancta conuersantes in Deum credentes, &c. As we beleue in God, so we doe not beleue in the Church; which is therefore holy, because it beleueeth aright in God: therefore we said not, you must beleue in the Church as in God, but that hauing your conuersation in the Church, you should beleue in God: From whence we reason thus: that which beleueeth vpon an other is not to be beleued vpon; but the Church beleueeth vpon God: Ergo the reason of the proposition is this, because faith and beleefe is the last refuge of a Christian; but beyond our beleefe in the Church there should be another beleefe in God. And againe, there is but one and the selfe same object of faith: but now should there be diuers, God the object of the Churches faith, and the Church the object of our faith.

For the confession of this truth, that we ought to trust onely in God, and not in men; and that we are bound no further to beleue the decrees of the Church, then they are agreeable to the Scriptures: two constant Martyrs, H. Kier, and Iohn Esteb, gaue their liues at Bruxelles, pag. 874.

THE SECOND PART OF THE QUESTION

concerning the ceremonies of the Church.

The Papists.

They doe hold that the Church of God may vse and blesse diuers elements and creatures for the seruice of God: as holy water to drine away diuels: the hallowing of sale, waxe, fire, palmes, ashes, oyle, cream, milke, hoiney, Rhemist. 1. Tim. 4. sect. 5. & 13. Yea that the Church may borrow borrow rites and ceremonies of the Jewes: ibid ſell. 18. Yea by the creatures thus bleſſed, or rather conſecrated, they ſay, remiſſion of finnes is obtaind ſell. 14.

Argum. 1. Remiſſion of finnes was annexed to the oyle wherewith the ſicke were annointed, Iam. 5. Ergo, remiſſion of finnes may be applied by the like conſecrated elements, Rhemist. 1. Tim. 4. ſell. 14.

We anſwere: Firſt, it followeth not becauſe the creature of oyle was uſed in the miraculous gift of healing and by the appointment of Chriſt, which ceremonie alſo was no longer to continue than that miraculous gift endured: it followeth not that other elements may be uſed ſo now without any ſuch warrant, and there being not the like occaſion, ſeeing all ſuch miraculous gifts are now ceaſed. Secondly, it was not the oyle whereby their finnes were forgiven them, neither was it applied to that end, it was onely a pledge vnto them of their bodily health: but the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke, ſaith the Apoſtle, verſ. 15. for God hath promiſed to heare the faithfull prayers of his children both for themſelves and others.

Argum. 2. S. Paul uſed impoſition of hands, which was a ceremonie of the law uſed in conſecrating of Priests: Ergo, it is lawfull to borrow ceremonies of the Jewes.

We anſwere: It followeth not, becauſe Chriſt and the Apoſtles by the ſpirit of God retained ſome decent actions uſed in the law, therefore now the Church at her libertie may take of the Jewiſh ceremonies: this is great presumption to thinke it is lawfull for the Church to doe whatſoever Chriſt and his Apoſtles did, Fulke. 1. Tim. 4. ſell. 18.

Argum. 3. They would warrant their ſuperſtitious ceremonies by S. Pauls example, how napkins and partlets went from his bodie, and they received health thereby: and the woman that came behinde Chriſt, and touched the hemme of his veſture, was healed of her diſeaſe, by that ceremonie, argum. Fecknami.

Anſw. Concerning the firſt example, the text ſaith, God wrought no ſmall miracles by the hand of Paul, Act. 19. 12. It was God therefore that wrought, not theſe ceremonies. And for the other, Chriſt ſaith, vertue is gon out of me: it was not then his veſture that healed the woman, but the vertue: and therefore our Sauour himſelfe ſaith, go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole, reſponſ. Thom. Hanks. Mart. pag. 1588.

The Proteſtants.

Although there be great moderation to be uſed in the ceremonies of the Church, and there is alſo ſome limitation for them: yet hath the Church greater libertie in the rites and ceremonies, which are appoynted for order and comelines ſake, then in the doctrine of faith and religion. The doctrine of ſaluation is alwayes the ſame and cannot be changed, and toucheth the conſcience: but rites and ceremonies are externall and commaunded for orders ſake: and neither are they vniuerſall, the ſame in every Church, nor perpetuall, but are changed according to times, and as there is occaſion. Again, the precepts of Chriſtianitie are either directly expreſſed; or neceſſarie concluded out of the Scriptures: but externall rites and ceremonies are not particularly declared in the word: there are onely certaine generall rules ſet downe, according to the which all ceremonies brought into the Church, are to be examined: As for the Sacraments of the Church, they cannot be altered, hauing a perpetuall commaundement from Chriſt: Therefore the Church cannot appoint, what, how many ceremonies ſoever ſhe ſhall thinke good, but according to theſe foure rules and conditions, which follow here in order.

1. All things ought to be done to the glorie of God, even in ciuill actions, much more in things appertaining to the ſervice of God, 1. Cor. 10. 31. Our aduerſaries offend againſt this rule, applying and annexing remiſſion of finnes to their owne inuentions and ſuperſtitious ceremonies, as vnto penance and extreme vnction, which they alſo make Sacraments: for this is greatly derogatorie to Chriſts inſtitution, who hath onely appoynted the hearing of his word, and vie of the Sacraments, for the begetting and increaſing of faith, and by this faith onely is the death of Chriſt applied vnto vs for the remiſſion of finnes.

2. All things ought to be done orderly and decently, 1. Cor. 14. 40. Wherefore all ridiculous, light and vnprofitable ceremonies are to bee abolithed: ſuch our aduerſaries haue many, as knocking, kneeling, creeping to the Croſſe, lighting candles at noone day, turning ouer of beades, and many phantaſticall geſtures they haue in their Idolatrous Maſſe, as turning, returning, looking to the Eaſt, to the Weſt: croſſing, liſting, quaffing, and ſhewing the emptie cup, with many ſuch toys.

3. All things ought to be done without offence, 1. Cor. 10. 32. But to whom, that hath but a little feeling of religion, is not the abominable ſacrifice of the Maſſe offenſiue? what good conſcience doth it not grieve, that the Priſt ſhould create his maker, as they ſay: ſhould offer vnto the body of Chriſt in ſacrifice, and be an interceſſor as it were for his mediator, deſiring God to accept the ſacrifice of his ſonnes body: as alſo to make it a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead?

dead? But of these matters we shall haue fitter occasion to entreate afterward, when we come to the first part of this treatise.

4. All things ought to be done to edifying. 1. Cor. 14. ver. 12. But the popish ceremonies are so farre from edifying, that by reason of their infinite rabble and number, they are a clogge vnto Christians, and more burdensome, then were the obseruations of the Iewes: They haue hallowed fire, water, bread, ashes, oyle, wax, flowers, branches, clay, spittle, salt, incense, balmes, chalices, paxes, pines, altars, corporals, supertaltars, altarclothes, rings, swords, and an infinite company besides: doe these tende (thinke you) to the edification of the minde? Nay, they doe cleane destroy and extinguish all spirituall and internall motions, drawing the heart from the spirituall worship of God, to externall beggerly and ragged reliques and ceremonies. Full. v. Tit. 4. 1. 1. 1.

Let vs see the consent of antiquitie concerning ceremonies: Modus colendi deum per externos ritus, & ceremonias legis, quia hac fuerant umbra Christi & mysterium eius, ideo ad adueniente veritate Evangelicae emiserunt, & illicita facta sunt: The manner of worshipping God by externall rites and ceremonies of the law, because they were a shadowe of Christ, and of his mysteries, are now by the coming of the Euangelicall truth abolished and made vnlawfull.

Gloss. ordin. de 4. Concil. primitiue et cles.

5. But such Iewish ceremonies many yet are retayned in the Popish Church, Colonus, part. 9. cap. 16. Quicquid in huiusmodi ritibus ad usum & superstitionem spectat, & quo populus a Deo ad uolendam in externis rebus fiduciam habere possit, prohibemus: Whatsoeuer in ceremonies tendeth to a superstitious use, and may withdraw the people from God to trust in externall things, we forbid. But that such Iewish ceremonies are not to be retayned in the Church, neither that it is lawfull after the example of the Iewes to institute the like ceremonies in Christs Church; heare further the testimonie of one of your owne Popes: Innocent. 3. de re. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 4. c. 1. Postquam umbra legis transiit, & illuxit ueritas Euangelij, si uideretur post prolem emissam altara gratias Ecclesiam intrare uoluerunt, eis Ecclesiarum non deinceps esset ingressus: After that the shadow of the law is vanished, and the truth of the Gospell hath appeared, if women after their deliuerance will enter the Church to giue thanks, it must not be denied vnto them. But by the law, women could not, but after a certaine time enter into the temple: wherefore as in this ceremonie Moses law bindeeth not, so neither in the rest. And to this purpose may be applied that rule in the Ciuill law: Cod. lib. 7. tit. 6. leg. 1. Instituta. Absurdum est ipsa origines rei sublata, eius imaginem relinqui: It is an absurd thing, the originall being remoued, for the image or shadow to be retained: But the ceremoniall law of the Iewes is remoued, and therefore there ought not so much, as a shadow thereof to remaine. Vnto these we will adioyne the reasons, and iudgement of the holy Martyrs concerning Popish ceremonies. These orders of the Church are most pure, which doe come most nigh the example of the Primitiue Church: so doe not the orders of the Popish Church, but are furthest off from it: Ergo, they are vnpure, argum. Laurent. Saund. Mart. 3. 1494.

6. Bauer answered, that the proposition was false: for the Church was then in her infancie, and could not abide that perfection, which afterward was to be furnished with ceremonies. Saunders replieth, that ceremonies were invented at the first, for the rude infancie and weake infirmities of man; and therefore it was a token of greater perfection in the primitiue Church, that it had few ceremonies; and of the rudenes of the papistcalle Church, because it had so many ceremonies, partly blasphemous, partly vnfauourie and vnprofitable, ibid. And it is too absurd, to thinke the state of any Church more pure, then the Primitiue vnder the Apostles: as Gregor. Nazianzen. ad Gregor. Nyssen. orat. 3. Sanctorum patrum consuetudines, qui proximiores fuerit Christo, agnoscamus: Let vs receiue the constitutions of the Fathers, as they come nearer to Christ. So then as the waters nearest the fountaines are clearest, so the times next to Christ purest.

7. Iohn Fortescue Martyr alleadged this place of Scripture against popish ceremonies: All things that are not plaied by my heavenly father shall be plucked up by the rootes, Mat. 15. So saith our Sauour, but such are popish ceremonies: Ergo, Obiect. Nay they are good and godly, necessarie to be vsed. Answer. But S. Paul calleth them weake and beggerly, and saith, they are bewitched, that seeke to be in bondage vnto them, Galath. 4. 9. Fax. pag. 1918.

8. Lastly, in this cause Rich. Gibson gaue his life, who refused to come to procession, to beare taper or candle, or to receiue ashes, or to beare palme, to receiue the pax at Masse, or holy water, or holy bread, or to obserue the ceremonies and vsages of the popish Church, Fax. p. 2033. col. 1. artic. obiect. 7.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER THE Church of Rome be the true Church.

THIS question hath two parts. First, whether the Romane Church be the Catholike Church or not. Secondly, whether the Church of Rome be a true visible Church.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE ROMANE Church be the Catholike Church.

27. Error.

Bellarmine defining the Church, maketh this one part of the definition to be subiect vnto the Bishop of Rome jurisdiction, lib. 3. de eccl. cap. 1. And therefore they conclude, that they are out of the Church and no better then heretikes, that doe not acknowledge the Pope to be their chiefe Pastor, Canis. de precept. eccl. cap. 9. So they make the Romane faith, and Catholike, to be all one: Rhemist. annot. in 1. Rom. sect. 5.

Their reasons are none other, then we haue seene before, taken from vniuersallitie, Antiquitie, vnto the which we haue already answered, quest. 3. of this controuersie. Not. 1. 2. 3.

The Protestants.

While the Church of Rome continued in the doctrine of the Apostles, it was a notable and famous visible Church, and a principall part and member of the vniuersall Catholike: but now since it is degenerate and fallen away from the Apostolike faith, from being the house of God, to be a Synagogue for Antichrist, we take it not to be so much as a true visible Church. But neuer was it to be counted the Catholike Church, as though all other Churches were parts and members of it: but it selfe onely was a part as others, and Catholike too, while it continued in the right faith: but not Catholike as hauing iurisdiction ouer the rest, and all to ceieue this name of her.

Argum. 1. The vniuersall Catholike Church is so called, because it containeth the whole number of the elect and first borne of God, Heb. 12. 23. Whereof many are now Saints in Heauen, many liuing in the earth, many yet vborne. But all these were not, neither are of the Romane faith: the holy men departed knew not of these superstitious and prodigious vsages, which now doe raigne in the Church of Rome, nay many of them neuer heard in their life so much, as of the name of Rome: Ergo.

Argum. 2. It is called Catholike, and vniuersall, because they that are to be saved, must belong vnto this company, and be of this Church, for without the Church there is no saluation: for Christ onely gaue himselfe for his Church to sanctifie it and cleanse it, Ephes. 5. 26. But all that die out of the faith of the Romane Church, doe not perish. Nay verily, we doubt not to say, but that all which depart this life in the communion thereof without repentance, are barred from saluation, and die out of grace. You say, that who is out of your Church is damned, and we thinke verily on the other side, that if we depart from the true Church, whereto we are grafted in Gods word, we should stand in the state of damnation, see Philop. Mart. p. 1800. We are in the right faith: neither will we be our owne iudges, the Scriptures shall iudge vs: Every spirit that confesseth, that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God, 1. Iohn 4. 2. We beleue aright in both the natures and all the offices of Christ: which you doe not, which doe greatly deface his propheticall office, in not reuincing his word, but making it imperfect: his kingdome, in appointing him a Vicar and Vicegerent vpon earth, as though he of himselfe were not sufficient to gouerne: his Priesthood, in setting vp another sacrifice: Ergo, your spirit is not of God.

Argum. 3. The Catholike Church is so called, because it embraceth the whole and onely doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, Ephes. 4. 3. But the Romane Church receiveth many things contrarie to Scripture, and addeth many things vnto it, as it shall appeare throughout this whole discourse. Ergo.

The Catholike Church hath the name, because it is dispersed ouer the whole earth, Act. 1. ver. 8. But so was neuer the Romane faith, which is now professed, as we haue shewed before, Quest. 3. de Eccl. Not. 2. Ergo. And this may further appeare out of S. Augustine thus writing to S. Hierome, epist. 19. If we count it an euill thing to fast Saturday, we shall condemne the Romane Church, &c. but if we count it euill, non ieiunare Sabbato, not to fast Saturday, we shall condemne so many Churches of the East, & maioris orbis Christiani partem, and the greater part of the Christian world: Ergo, the greater part of the Church did not receive the ceremonies of the Romane Church, and so consequently, it cannot be the Catholike Church.

We will adde the testimonie of the holy Martyrs: Master Philop. reasoneth thus, the world being deuided into three parts, Asia, Europa, Africa; two parts thereof, Asia and Africa, professing Christ as well as we, did neuer consent vnto the Church of Rome: yea and most part of Europa doth not allow the Church of Rome; as Germanie, Denmarke, Poland, a great part of England and Zeland: Ergo, neither your faith nor your Church is vniuersall or Catholike, Fox pag. 1804.

He alleageth also a saying out of Augustine, Estimamus fidem Catholicam a rebus præteritis, presentibus & futuris: We iudge the Catholike faith of that which hath been, is, and shall be: If then you bee able to proue that your faith and Church hath been from the beginning taught, true Church laboureth to resist the lusts and desires of the world, the flesh and the devil: those for the most part give themselves to all voluptuousness, secretly committing such things, which as Saint Paul saith, it is a shame to speak of. Fourthly, the Church of Christ is perfected: the Church of Rome doth persecute, murder, and slay the servants of God: Ergo, it is not the true Church: plene ipsa Fals. pag. 27 to 28.

THAT THE CHURCH OF THE PROTESTANTS IS A TRUE VISIBLE CHURCH.

The arguments, which our adversaries use against vs to prove vs to bee no Church, drawne from antiquitie, vniuersalitie, succession, the power of Miracles, prophesying, and such like, I haue answered at large before in their severall places, that it shall not neede to repeat them againe. But generally the summe of our answer is this, that, whereas their argument may be thus framed: That Church which hath neither antiquitie, vniuersalitie, vnitie, succession, &c. is no true Church: but such is the Church of the Protestants: Ergo. To this argument we haue thus answered: firstly, denying the proposition, and shewing, that neither that alwaies is a Church where these notes are found; and that there may be a Church where they are wanting. Secondly, wee also infringe the assumption: for most of these notes I haue declared to bee more agreeable to our Church, and rather to be found amongst vs, than with them. But who desired to see our answer more fully, I referre him to the severall places before, wherein these things are handled.

That the Churches of the Protestants, and namely the Church of England, are a true visible Churches, and notable members of the Catholike Church, beside the arguments drawne from the preaching of the word, and administration of the Sacraments, which sheweth a Church: wee will produce other reasons, and such as may persuade our adversaries themselves.

Argum. 1. That Church which sendeth forth Martyrs, as Christ faithfull soldiers, is the true Church: but the Church of the Protestants hath brought forth many Martyrs: Ergo. The proposition, I thinke, is not doubted of for out of the Church there are no Martyrs: as S. Cyprian saith, Qui occisi est. They which are slain out of the Church, doe not wonne a crowne of their faith, but a reward of their follie, Martyr est. Again, the Martyrs of Christ are undoubtedly saunt, their soules are under the Aene, which is Christ, Apoc. 6. 9. And as Ozymias applyeth that place of the Prophet Esay. 63. 1. To them the Angels doe thus say: and welcome them into heauen: Qui est iste qui ascendit de Babilon? What is this that ascended from Babilon? this is from the hostile field: but there can be no salvation out of the Church. And further, this same Ozymias thus reasoneth out of the words of our Saviour, I have a baptism to be baptized with. Luke 12. 30. meaning his passion: Christus profertur sub aqua baptismi vocari. Christ (saith he) calleth the shedding of his blood, baptism. But there is no kinde of true baptism and acceptable to God, but within the Church: Ergo, true martyrdome, which is a kinde of baptism, is onely to bee found in the Church. But the proposition needes no longer proofe: I come to shew the assumption, that those Saints, which out of our Church haue died for the Gospell, were true and vniuersall Martyrs.

Hom. 7. in Iudic.

The ancient writers doe give vs foure rules whereby to know and discerne the Martyrs of the Church: the first is S. Cyprian, who by their singular patience: Sancti qui vultis. There are some which by certaine artificiall meanes doe stoppe their bodies that they feelenot the torments: there bee also some incontinent and outrageous affections, which take away the sense of the bodie, &c. sed patientia illorum non est in Christum martyribus. but all these are not that quiet and meek kinde of death, but which in the Martyrs of Christ. But such examples of patient death in the blessed Martyrs of our Church we haue many: and their patience appeareth both by their owne comfortable words and testimonies, by their couragious and constant behauiour, as also by the confession of their enemies. First for their owne testimonies: one Archiepiscopus Francis Thinsan, one of them, which suffered for the Gospell in Mecklin, anno 1545. when he felt the firefall thus: What a small paine is this to bee compared to the life to come? anno 1581. Anna Andehor Martyr at Orange suffering vpon a Saturday, anno 1549. thus cheerfully said: I was first married vpon a Saturday, and vpon a Saturday I shall be married againe to Christ. Notable is the testimonie of our reuerend and godly Bishop and Martyr B. Ferris, who thus said to one Mister Richard Houshe, who seemed to lament the painfulness of his death, that if he saw him once to stire in the paines of his burning, he should then giue no credit to his doctrine: and as he said, being assisted by Gods spirit he performed the same: but amongst all our most glorious and triumphant S. Stephen Martyr, who hauing his stines and legges halfe halfe consumed in the fire, and cried out: Behold & ye Papists, you looke for miracles, and here now may you see a miracle: for in this fire I feele no more paine, then if I were in a bed of downe; but it is to me as sweete as a bed of Roses, pag. 1030. col. 2. Now for their constant and couragious behauiour, it was such as became the valliant soul-douirs of Christ, void of all feare and doubtfullnes. Five constant Martyrs burned at Lyons, anno 1553. when the fire was readie to be put vnto them, they made this petition, that each might embrace and kisse the other, as being now whit afraid of death, pag. 966. Sixe Martyrs being burned together at Colchester, an. 1557. clapped their hands for ioy in the midst of the fire, that thousands of people at the hearing thereof cried out and shouted, pag. 2009. Thomas Hawkes blessed Martyr, in the midst of the fire lifted vp his hands ouer his head burning as a torch, with flaming fire, and clapped them thrice in token of great ioy, pag. 1593. Master Iohn Hoper Bishop and Martyr behaued himselfe in his bitter death, the fire being thirte remed, like a most meeke lambe of Christ, knocking still upon his breast till his arme fell off, pag. 1512. Such examples a great number might bee alleaged, of their constant and quiet behauiour: but these may suffice.

Their constancie also may appeare by the confession of their aduersaries. First, William Huffer Martyr at Roane, anno 1544. so cheerfully carried himselfe in his death, that whereas some maliciously said he had a diuell, they went of other expedient, who said, that if he had a diuell he should haue fallen into despair, pag. 960. A poore Martyr which suffered at Paris, anno 1549. being examined of his faith before the King Henry the 2. did so boldly answer for himselfe, that the King muste stich thereat. And whereas the Cardinals and Bishops told the King, that the Lutherans did but carrie smoke in their mouthes, which if they were put to the fire, would vanish away; the King himselfe therupon purposed to be present to see the execution, where the poore Martyr in his cruell and painfull death was so couragious, that the beholding thereof did more astonish the King, then all the other before, pag. 963. Likewise that reuerend Archbishop and holy Martyr D. Thomas Crommer did so manfully and valiantly endure the fire, not once mouing or stirring in the midst of the flames, that one Frier Iohn being ignorant of the constancie of Martyrs, said to the Lord Walsley, he died in despair: who smiling onely so rebuked the Friers folle, pag. 1886. But enough hath been said concerning the probation of this matter, namely the patience of the Martyrs; no whit inferiour to the constancie of the ancient Martyrs in the Primitive Church. And thus much of the first rule to know a Martyr by.

The second and third rules are Bernards, who thus writeth: Uita mors pretiosa est, quare commendat uita, &c. That death is precious which a good life commendeth: but that is more precious, which a good cause commendeth, ser. par. 2. 4.

Secondly, true Martyrs then are to be iudged by their holy life & innocent conuersation: for as it is in the Psalm 116. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints, or holy ones. They the that haue liued an vn godly and vnleane life, vnlesse they be conuerted and change their wayes, are no fit witnesses of Gods truth: But such the Lord appointeth for the witness of his truth, that are of vnspotted life and of a godly conuersation. The popish Church hath canonized for Martyrs, some that were rebels and disobedient to their Prince, as Thomas Becket, and S. Hugh: some that were Sorcerers and Magicians, as Hildebrand their Pope, and S. Dunstan: so the haue been taken for Saints amongst them, that were slaine in their drunkenness, as it may be seene, Deir. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 45. cap. 1. But our Church can shew another kind of Martyrs, men of excellent vertuous life: as Master Bowford holy Martyr; anoble example of chaste and continent life; Bishop Crommer of innocencie; Bishop Hoper of hospitalitie; Master Lutimer of painfull and diligent preaching; Thomas of continuall and feruent prayer: See theinseuerall stories, and I thinke they can not name one of the Martyrs of the Gospell of an infamous life, after they came to the knowledge of the Gospell: and so as a true Martyr described, Apocal. 14. 13. In their garments was no guile, &c.

Thirdly: but this note of an innocent life is not sufficient of it selfe, vntill it be ioyned with the other, namely the goodnes of the cause; which no doubt our Martyrs haue, and I shew it thus: First, it is a good cause to die in defence of the true worship of God, against the false adoration or worship of Idols: but such is the cause of the Martyrs of the Gospell in these daies: Ergo. The proposition is propured by a particular induction of the ancient Martyrs both before the law, vnder the law, and since the law, which haue been persecuted for this cause: as before the law Abraham persecuted for his gods sake, Genes. 12. 30. And Isaac putteth away all the strange gods in his familie, Genes. 35. 2. In the time of the law vnder the Iudges Gedeon should haue bin slaine, for destroying the Altar of Baal, Iudg. 6. 30. Vnder the Monarchie of the Chaldeans the three children were put into the fire for sake, because they would not bow downe to the image of gold, Dan. 3. Since the time of Christ vnder the Romane Emperours many thousand Christians were put to death, because they refused to worship the Idols of the Heathen.

Now then our Martyrs haue died in the same cause, which is the second part of the argument, ment it may bee thus proved. First, our aduersaries themselves cannot denie, but that they haue put many Protestants to death for refusing to worship their images of gold, as the storie of the Martyrs is full of such examples. But here is their euasion, that their images are not like the Heathen Idols, nor the worship of their images Idolatrie. Contra. That they are the only knowne Idolaters of this time, first it is cleere by the Scripture, Apocal. 9. 20. for there the Apostle and Prophet speaketh of the worshipping of Idols of gold and siluer, after the opening of the 7. seale, and the blowing of the sixth trumpet, which must be by course of that prophetic long after the Idoll worship of the Heathen: so that the popish Church must needs thereby bee signified, there being no knowne nation beside in these parts of the world, that worshuppeth Images. Secondly, the Jewes themselves doe say, that Christians worship Images contrarie to the law of God: as a Jew objected to Master George Wicliam as they laied together vpon the Rhene, Fax pag. 1269. col. 2. Wherefore it is manifest, that our Martyrs hauing strided by death against the idolatrie of these times, haue died in the same cause, for the which the ancient Martyrs gaue their liues against the idolatrie of the Heathen.

Secondly, it is a good cause to die for the faith of Christ, and they are the faithfull Martyrs which hope onely to bee iustified by his death: Apocal. 7. 14. These are they which haue washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lambe. But in this faith haue our Martyrs died, hoping onely to finde life by faith in Christs blood: whereas the Papists seeke to make their robes white in the blood and merits of Saints. And againe, whereas the Apostle speaking of the last times of persecution, saith, Here is the patience of the Saints, here are they that keepe the commandments of God, and the faith of Iesus: There haue none else in all the world been persecuted for the faith of Christ in these latter times, but the Protestants onely: the Papists persecute, they are not persecuted: and where they suffer, it is not for religion or the faith of Iesus, but for treason, and wilfull transgression of the Princes lawes. Thus then it is euident that our Martyrs are they in this place prophesied of, and dying in so good a cause, must needs be the faithfull witnesses of God.

A fourth rule to discern true Martyrs in their death, is by those miraculous and strange works of God declared in their martyrdom, though wee doe not alleage this either as a necessarie or yniuersall note. So S. Ambrose extollet the martyrdom of S. Paul: De Pauli cernices vnda lactis, Serm. 48. Out of Pauls necke being beheaded streamed milke rather than blood: And no marvaile if the nourisher of the Churches abounded with milke, who saith (writing to the Corinthians) I gave you milke to drinke, &c. So Pelicanus could not bee consumed with fire; Romanus spake, his tongue being cut out; Cecilia remained a day and a night in an hot bath, not being hurt. The like miracles are credibly reported to haue been shewed in the death of the Martyrs of the Gospel. Stephen Bruno could not be consumed with the fire being twice rekindled, and though oyle were poured into it; but the hangman was constrained to thrust him thorough. Stephen Adrian Martyr spake, his tongue being cut out. The like also is recorded of Gabriel Berandinus, put to death for the Gospel at Troyes, anno 1550. pag. 904. See more of such examples before in the 1. contro- uersie, 3. question, in the fifth note of Miracles: but we stand not so much vpon this point. Wherefore shortly to conclude this argument, where true Martyrs are, there is the Church: the Protestants Church hath true and faithfull Martyrs, as I haue shewed, by their singular patience; holie life, their honest and good cause, and by the wonderfull workes shewed in their death: Ergo, we are the true Church of Christ.

Secondly, we reason thus: That Church which hath been from time to time persecuted in the world, is the Church of God: that which hath alwaies persecuted and been filled with the blood of the Saints, is the malignant Church. But our Church for these foure or five hundred yeeres hath been alwaies persecuted; and they haue been the persecutors. Ergo, we are the true Church of Christ.

For the probation of the assumption or second part of the argument, we neede not much labour: for all the world knoweth how the popish Church continually hath persecuted the Protestants, and especially within these 60. or 60. yeeres since the reuiling of the Gospel: in which time they haue spilled the blood of not so few as an hundred thousand of Gods Saikes; if an account bee taken thereof. For in Fraunce onely in this bloodie massacre in the yeere 1572. there were put to the sword in one moneth 30. thousand Protestants, Fax pag. 1155. And the Pope at Rome hearing tell thereof, he with his Cardinals raised a solempne procession to bee made, with singing of Tu Deus, and proclaimed a yere of iubilae. We haue also for this point the confession of the Rhemists: That Protestants (whom they call heretikes, as Paul of the persecuting Jewes was counted an heretike, Act. 24. 14.) are put to death at Rome, and thus they allow of their punishment in other countries. Rhemist answer in Apologia 7. fol. 8.

Now for the truth of the first part of the argument, that it is the lot of the Church of God to be persecuted in this world, the Apostle thus witnesseth, Gal. 3. 23. then he that is in Christ is persecuted that was borne after the spirit, so is persecuted. And further, that it is a proper badge of the malignant Church to sucke the blood of the Saints: wee reade in the Revelation 17.6. I ſaw the woman drinke with the blood of the Saints, &c. In which place by the bloodthirstie whore of Babylon is signified the persecuting Antichrist at Rome: which is so plaine a text to conuince the aduersarie, that they cannot possibly auoyd it, though they haue found out diuers shifts and euasions, and especially three, but all to little purpose. I will set them downe in order.

First, by this whore the Rhemists would vnderstand the whole corps of all the persecutors that haue been from the beginning of the world to the end, Apocal. 17. felt. 6. Contra. But this cannot be so. First, chap. 17. vers. 1. the Angell saith to Iohn, I will shew thee the damnation of the great whore: speaking of the time to come, not of the time past. Secondly, vers. 6. She is drunken with the blood of the Martyrs of Iesus: which must of necessitie be vnderstood of the persecution since the manifestation of Iesus to the world. Thirdly, vers. 18. The whore is the great citie, that reigneth ouer the kingdomes of the earth: It is a certaine citie or regiment, therefore not an vn certaine and indefinite bodie or companie.

Secondly, by the whore of Babylon the Rhemists vnderstand, the terrene state of the persecuting Emperours, not the Church or ecclesiasticall state there, annot. 17. Apocal. felt. 4. Contra. First, the beast, whereon the whore sitteth, signifying that great citie, which bare rule ouer the kingdomes, was and is not, chap. 17.8. that is, the imperiall state was remoued, when the Popes succeeded yet in them was reuiued the imperiall tyrannie. And hereunto agreeth that propheticie, chap. 13. 11. Another beast cometh out of the earth, which did all that the first beast could doe, and healed his deadly wound, and gave life and spirit to the image of the beast, vers. 15. This is the beast that was, and is not, namely the beastly tyrannie of the persecuting Emperours reuiued by the cruell Popes: wherefore the whore cannot signifie the terrene state of the Emperours, for this beast was and is not. Secondly, S. Hierome also thus expoundeth, saying to Rome, Maledictionem, &c. Thou maist by repentance escape that curse threatned thee by our Sauour in the Apocalypse, lib. 2. aduers. Iovinian. But when S. Hierome thus did write, the heathenish persecution was ceased: wherefore by Babylon the imperiall state is not signified.

Thirdly, the Rhemists by the beast, that was, and is not, doe insinuate Antichrist, who is not yet come (say they) in our daies, neither shall come as long as the Empire of Rome standeth, ibid.

Contra. 1. By the same reason wee conclude that Antichrist is alreadie come, because that which letteth, or hindered the reuealing of Antichrist, as the Apostles saith, 2. Thess. 2. 6, 7. namely the Romane Empire, is taken away: for nothing now remaineth of the imperiall soueraigntie; but onely an image thereof: first, the large dominion of the Empire is lost; he beareth little sway, that is Emperour, but in his owne seignorie, that he hath beside the title of the Empire. Secondly, the seat of the Empire is chaunged, which was at Rome, but now is no certaine place. Thirdly, then the Empire went by descent and succession, now by election. Fourthly, they were called the Romane Emperours, now the Emperours of Germanie. Fifthly, then Rome and Italie were subiect to the Emperour, now he hath nothing to doe there: so that the Romane Empire is long since decayed and dissolued; and vpon the dissolution thereof Antichrist was to be reuealed. 2. Whereas Antichrist by their owne confession must be the seventh Regiment, five were then past in S. Iohns time, The Regiment of Egypt, Canaan, Babylon, the Persians, Greekes, the sixth was the Romane Empire: (though these sixe Regiments are better referred to the sixe formes of gouernment among the Romanes; the Kings, Consuls, Decemviri, Tribuni militum, Dictators, Emperors) then the sixth, which is the Romane Empire, being abolished (for now there is no Emperour, but a King of the Romanes, and that but a bare title neither the Emperour is of Germanie) the seventh which is Antichrist must needs succede; wherefore Antichrist is alreadie come. 3. S. Hierome thus did write in his daies, calling Rome Sodome, epist. ad Lucinum; And againe, Dum in Babylone versarer, & purpurat meretricis effrem colonus, &c. While I was in Babylon, meaning Rome, and was an inhabitant of the skarlet whore, &c. prius et Paulinianus. He neither vnderstandeth this propheticie of the time past, nor suspendeth it for the time to come; but even in those daies sheweth how it began to be accomplished, the Heathen persecution being then ceased. So then it is cleere, that Rome was not onely, neither shall be onely, but even now is and hath been a great while that skarlet whore of Babylon, drunken with the blood of the Saints; and what Saints blood haue they sucked, but of the Protestants? And thus much for our second argument.

3. Argument. Thirdly, the holy Apostle saith, Every spirit that confesseth that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God, 1. Iohn 4. 2. But the Church of the Protestants so confesseth: Ergo, it is of God.

Obiect. The Rhemists in their Annotations vpon this place say; that this was a note onely for those times: for there are many which confesse that Christ is come in the flesh, and yet are heretikes.

Contra. First, the contrarie appeareth, for that the Apostle in the first verse giueth a caueat to trie euery spirit, and afterward setteth downe that rule whereby to trie them: this rule then is generall for every spirit. Secondly, by this rule Antichrist is to be tried, both he that was then come, and he that should come, vers. 3. Ergo, it was a rule also for afterward. Thirdly, this rule is the same with that confession of Peter, Thou art Christ the Sonne of the living Lord, Matth. 16. 18. Vpon which rocke Christ saith he would build his Church: Ergo, this confession being the foundation of the Church, is a touchstone for all ages. Fourthly, I will oppose against them a Synode of their owne, that maketh this rule generall for all ages. Synod. Colonien. p. 6. c. 15. Fidelis dispensator. &c. He is a faithfull dispenser, as Iohn witnesseth, whose onely scope Christ is, and whose spirit confesseth that Christ is come in the flesh; and as S. Paul doth interpret, Tit. 2. that the grace of God our Sauour hath appeared to all men, to teach vs to denie vngodly lusts, &c. in the which words the Apostle doth comprehend two natures in Christ; of the Word, in teaching vs the will of his fether; of the flesh, in being offered for vs. Fifthly, though some heretikes may in word confesse Christ to bee come, yet if they detract from any of his offices, as the Papiſts doe from his Priesthood, in making other mediators, and satisfactions, in that they denie that, for the which Christ came, they denie Christ. Wherefore we conclude, that seeing we hold the confession of Peter, vpon the which the Church is builded, and acknowledge that Christ for his natures God and man, for his offices our only King, Prophet, Priest, and Mediatour is come in the flesh; our spirit is of God, and our Church the true Church of Christ.

Arg. 4. Fourthly, we reason thus; that Church, which maintaineth no heresie contrarie to the Scriptures, is the true church of Christ: but such are y<sup>e</sup> reformed Churches of the Protestants. Ergo. The proposition cannot be denied, the assumption or second part is thus prooued: They which beleue the law and the Prophets, and all things contained in the Scriptures, cannot maintaine any heresie: so doth S. Paul cleere himselfe from the accusation of heresie, Act. 24. 14. But the reformed Churches beleue all written in the Scriptures, submitting themselues to the iudgement of the word for the triall of their faith and doctrine: Ergo, our Church cannot bee iustly charged with heresie. Beside, I haue shewed before, by the seuerall definitions of heresie, that it can in no sense bee laid to our charge in the question of the notes of the Church in this controuerſie. And againe in the other treatise of the pillars of Papiſtrie it is prooued at large, that the Churches of the Protestants hold no one opinion, in the purer ages of the Church condemned for heresie. And though Belarmine doth charge vs with twentie heresies, he shall neuer be able to proue one: but into their sinke of superstition, fortie seuerall hereticall stinking puddles doe runne downe, as in the same place more at large may bee seene. So then Protestants are no heretikes, nor yet their Church hereticall, and consequently a true Church.

Argum. 5. Fifthly, where the true foundation is laid, which is Iesus Christ only, there is the house of God. But our Churches lay no other foundation beside Iesus Christ: Ergo. The proposition is the Apostles, 1. Cor. 3. 11. Other foundation can no man lay, then that which is laid, Iesus Christ. And Ephes. 2. 20. The Church is thus described to bee built vpon the foundation of the Prophets, and Apostles, Iesus Christ being the chiefe corner stone.

The assumption also is manifest: for that we receiue onely the Scriptures, no v<sup>n</sup>written traditions: we acknowledge no Mediatour, but Christ; no satisfaction for sinne, but his blood, and in all things make him the onely foundation of our building: whereas our aduersaries doe ioyne as fellow with Christ the Virgin Mary, as the Iesuite in the end of all his bookes most blasphemously doth ascribe the honour and praise of his labours to Christ, and the blessed Virgin. So beside faith onely they haue brought in merits, satisfactions, works of supererogation, and such like: and they doe not condemne any doctrine of the Protestantes more then faith onely, which in effect is to denie Christ onely, the object of faith, to be the foundation. Wherefore they laying another foundation are not the Church: and the Protestants by the same reason are the Church, being builded onely by faith vpon Iesus Christ the onely foundation.

Thus farre then I haue by most euident arguments shewed, that the reformed Churches of the Protestants are the true Churches of Christ: first, for that they haue sent forth the constant Martyrs as faithfull witnesses of Christ. Secondly, because they haue been alwaies persecuted and kept vnder by the malignant Synagogue. Thirdly, they haue the true confession of Iesus Christ to be come in the flesh, which proceedeth from the spirit of God. Fourthly, they can shew no heresie condemned in the purer ages of the Church for heresie, to bee maintained by our Church. Fifthly, they are founded vpon the true foundation Iesus Christ, and therefore are the right buildings and true Churches of Christ. Many other reasons might be alleaged, and may hereafter at better leisure, for the demonstration of our Church: but I will content my selfe with these for this time, and so proceede vnto the rest:

THE THIRD GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING COUNCELS.

Councell is nothing else but an assembly and gathering together of the people of God, about the affaires and businesse of the Church: and they are of two sorts, either vniuersall in the name of the whole Church; or particular, which are either Nationall, when the learned of a whole Realme are called together; or Prouinciall, when as the Churches of one Prouince doe assemble into one place to consult of Religion.

There may be two especiall occasions of Councils: the one for resisting and rooting out of heresies, as the Apostles and elders met together, Act. 15. against those which would haue imposed the Iewish ceremonies vpon the beleeuing Gentiles. So the Councell of Nice was celebrated the yeare of the Lord 327. to confound the heresie of Arrinus, who denied Christ, as he was God, to be equall to his Father. In the Councell of Constantinople, anno. 383. or thereabout, the heresie of Macedonius was condemned, which denied the holy Ghost to be God: In the Ephesine Councell the first, Nestorius heresie was ouerthrowne, which affirmed Christ to haue two persons, anno 434. The Councell of Chalcedon was collected, anno 454. about the heresie of Eutiches, which held that there was in Christ but one nature after his incarnation; so confounding his humanitie and diuinitie together.

The other cause of the calling of Councils, is, to provide and establish holisome Lawes, decrees and constitutions, for the gouernment of the Church: so the Apostles called the brethren together, Act. 6. to take order for the poore. And in the Councell of Nice an vniforme order was established for the celebration of Easter, which before had much troubled the Church.

legator. scilicet.
Concil. Trident.

Vnto these two causes of assembling Councils, which are Extirpatio heresis & reformatio morum, the rooting out of heresies, and the reformation of manners, may also be added a third, and that is, pax externa Ecclesie, the externall peace of the Church, namely in compounding of controuersies, and in working reconciliation betweene some principall members of the Church: As in the generall Councell of Ephesus, the matter was agreed betweene Zenon Bishop of Cyprus, and the Patriarch of Antioch, who chalenged a prerogative ouer that Iland, that the Bishops of Cyprus should chuse their owne Metropolitane: In the Councell of Chalcedon, actum. 11. 12. the strife betweene Bassianus and Stephanus for the Bishopricke of Ephesus was taken vp: Concil. Basiliens. An order of agreement was set betweene the French King, and the Duke of Burgundie. Concil. Florentin. great labour made for the vnitng of the Latine and Greeke Church, &c.

Ex Appendi-
ce Concil.

The questions betweene vs and the Papiests concerning councils, are these. First, whether generall Councils be absolutely necessarie. Secondly, by whom they ought to be called. Thirdly, of what persons they ought to consist. Fourthly, who should bee the president of the Councell. Fifthly, concerning the authoritie of them. Sixthly, whether they may erre or not. Seuenthly, whether they are about the Pope. Eighthly, of the conditions to be obserued in generall Councils: of these in order.

THE FIRST QUESTION CONCERNING the necessitie of Councils.

The assertion of the Papiests.

29. Error.

They seeme in words to affirme, that generall Councils are not absolutely necessarie: for the Primitiue Church was without any Councell for the space of 300. yeares and more: yet they hold that some Councils, either generall or particular, are of necessitie to be had, BeLarmius de concil. lib. 1. cap. 11. And yet this is to be maruelled at, that they should so much stand for Councils, seeing they might vse a farre more compendious way, in referring all to the determination of the Pope, whom they boldly, but very fondly affirme, that he cannot erre.

Although they seeme not to lay a necessitie vpon generall Councils, yet in truth they doe contrarie: for they allow no Councils at all, without the Popes consent and authoritie; neither thinke it lawfull for any Nation or Prouince, to make within themselues any innoation or change change of religion. So in the assembly at Zurich, anno 1531. For the reformation of Religion, Faber took exception against that meeting, affirming that it was no convenient place, nor the time for the discussing of such matter, but rather the cognition and tractation thereof belonged to a generall Council. Steid. lib. 2.

And further they hold, that what hath been decreed in a Council, cannot be dissolved but by the like Council, as if the Council of Trent were to be dissolved, it must be done by the like Synod. Declaratio de concilio lib. 3. cap. 1. Which Council they affirme to have been generall, and therefore another generall Council must by their opinion necessarily be expected, before it can be revoked.

WE doe holde that generall Councils are an holesome meane for the repressing and reforming, both of errors in Religion, and corruption in manners: and that true generall Councils ought to be much desired, and conveniently expected: there is such a Council, where every man franke and free may utter his minde without feare: an holy Council, where every man may goe about to set vp godlines, not to oppress the truth. Such a Council King Henry the eight of worthie memorie in his protestation for the Church of England, for not coming to the Council of the Pope, truly affirmeth, that he desired, and craved nothing so of God: but because there is no hope of any such Council, seeing the Pope would be the chiefe doer in it; and it is too vnrasonable, that the same man should be both a partie, and Judge. We doubt not, but that it is lawfull by the word of God, for every Prince, Duke, Lord, within his owne seignorie, without any further delay, or expectation, by the aduice and counsaile of the learned and godly of the land, according to Gods law, to reforme their Church.

First, because all delay in matters of the Church are dangerous, and in conuersion are at the first hand to be met withall, as we see, Act. 6. and Act. 15. immediately, when any question did arise, the Apostles assembled together. In the Council of Basil, where it was decreed, that the Pope was subiect to the Councils, Pavementus a stiffe champion on the Popes side, would haue the decree staied till the returne of the Princes Embassadors: But Arelmans that worthy Cardinall stepped vp, and shewed what danger there might be in a small delay, by the example of Hannibal, who deferring his going but one day to Rome, was driven cleane out of Italie, having been very like to haue taken the citie, if he had vsed the opportunitie. But without all controuersie, matters of faith ought not to be delayed: which could not be auoided, if a generall Council should alwayes be waited for.

Secondly, a Prince hath the like authoritie in his dominion, as the householder hath in his house. But every man ought to reforme his house, without any further delay, aduisement or consultation, as Iesus saith, I and my house will serue the Lord, 2.4. ver. 15. Wherefore the Prince may and ought to performe the like in his country.

To this purpose is that place scilicet applied in the second psalme: Erudimini qui timetis dominum: get you learning ye that are Iudges of the earth, to what end, that they may be able to vnderstand the diseases of the sicke Church, and to seeke redresse for the same within their owne Realmes. Jo Henric. Rex. in protestat.

Lastly, we finde by experience, that the Lord hath blessed such reformation, which haue been made by Princes in their owne territories: as that in Zurich anno 1531. at Bern, 1538. and the most happie reformation of our Church of England begun by King Henry the eight, increased by that most vertuous Prince King Edward the sixth, and prosperously continued and established by our gracious Soueraigne Queene Elizabeth.

I will adde the testimonie of Augustine: who answering to the Pelagians, which objected that they were condemned by certaine single Bishops in their owne diocesse, without a Synod, he saith thus, Ac si congregatione synodali non, ut aperta periculis damnaretur, quasi nullo bursi aliquando, nisi synodi congregatione damnata sit. Epistol. Pelag. lib. 4. cap. 2. As though, saith he, a Synod or Council were alwayes necessarie to condemne a knowne heresied Nay, we finde that more heresies without comparison, haue been in the same places condemned, where they first sprang, without any such necessitie, more so, then otherwise.

The same also hath been the iudgement of the holy Martyrs, that in reforming of religion, generall Councils are not alway to be expected. So saith Richard Fourn Martyr, in his examination, speaking of the Church of Genoa, that albeit the Pope and the Ministers of the Church of Rome were not called to the institution of the foresaid Church of Genoa; yet it follo with this, that there was no lawfull order obserued, in establishing that Church.

Thus also Bishop Ridley that godly and learned Martyr. We doe not reade that Christ in any place hath laid so great a burthen vpon the members of his spouse, that he hath commanded them there may be a Monarch over one or two kingdomes: But also one al the world: for why should there be one Ecclesiasticall Prince rather over the vniuersall Church, then one ciuill Magistrate over all the world?

We denie this: it belongeth to Metropolitans or Princes in their Provinces to appointe provinciall Councils: for establishing Ecclesiasticall lawes: but that is appertaining of right to the Princes and Dukes in their seuerall Kingdomes. Neither is the Conuocation of the Clergie in England summoned without the Princes authoritie: neither any lawe made to stand in force without the counsaile first. As for the Synodes, Irenes, visitations and such like of Metropolitans, Bishops, Archdeacons in their seuerall iurisdictiones, they are for another end: not to enact new Ecclesiasticall Lawes, but to see to the execution of such which are already enacted.

Wehold it is a fond and ridiculous assertion, that generall Councils should be ruled by the Pope becke, but that this is not so: and hath been of old vnto Christian Princes and Magistrates. And the Pope is so doing both by vltimate and by right.

Argum. 1. That the Pope hath not absolute authoritie, to call, remove, dissolve, or establish Councils, it is proued out of Scripſure: for Act. 15. the twelve Apostles, and not Peter onely, whose success for the Pope doth falsely challenge to be called the multitude together about the election of Deacons.

Argum. 2. The Councils in times past were summoned by the Emperors, which our adversaries themselves cannot deny, as the Nicene first by Constantine the great: Constantinopolitan by Theodosius the elder. Epistol. 1. by Theodosius the younger: Chalcedon by Marcianus. But, say our adversaries, these Councils were not appointed without the consent of the Bishops of Rome: In answer they are not ashamed so to say: for when Theodosius called the Council of Chalcedon, Leo then Bishop of Rome, neither liked the time; for hee would haue had it deferred: nor the place, being desirous to haue it in Italie; yet hee was content to obey the Emperors commandement, and sent his Agents to the Countie, there to appeare for him: Epistol. 31. 34. ad Martinum: This was alleged by Theophilus and Strogilus two archbishops in their epistle to Cardinal Pader.

In somewhat therefore to be a meere forgery, that Gratian writeth Epistol. ad episcopos, Dardani, Iustinianus et synodus Chalcedonensis. Item, fide deus et apostolus fides: The Apostolicke See by its sole authoritie decreed, that the countie should be holden at Chalcedon: for first Leo disliked the time: Epistol. ad synodus Chalcedonensis: Item, fide deus et apostolus fides: Epistol. 13. The Emperour hath let too short a time for the Council: Secondly, he would haue had the Countie removed into Italie: Omnes sacerdotes cum laicis in synodo vestra supplicauerunt, et generalem synodum iubebat intra Italiam celebrari: Epistol. ad imperatorem. All the Clergie with teares doth beseech your clemencie, that you would command a generall Synode to be kept in Italie: To the same effect he writeth to Theodosius, epistol. 31. and to Pulcheria Augusta, epistol. 34. For all this since the Emperour would not condescend to haue the Countie in Italie: but whereas he had summoned it to be kept at Nice, he from thence remoueth it to Chalcedon, whether also he sendeth for Leo himselfe to come, who excuseth himselfe for not coming, by reason of other great lets, yet sendeth his Legats in his place, epistol. Leon. 13. It appeareth then, that Leo at this time wanted of his will, and was ouerruled by the Emperour, as it was good reason, to whom the soueraine right of summoning Councils did onely appertaine.

Bellarmin graunteth, that these ancient Councils were congregated by the Emperors, yet the right was in the Pope still: hee rendreth two reasons why the Emperors authoritie was then requisite: first because, although it belongeth to the Pope to call Councils, yet hee cannot gather the assemblies in any Cite or conuenient place, without the leage and consent of the Lord of the soile: as if now a Council should be appointed by the Pope, and some place assigned for it, in Germanie, France, or Spaine, the consent of the Lord of the cite must first be required.

2. Answer. First, the matter is then come to this issue: the Pope cannot call a Council, without the leage of the ciuill Magistrate, but may be by him leued from his purpose: but the Prince may call his subjects together, and aske the Pope no leage, neither is the Pope able to resist his proceedings: I pray you which of these hath the best right, and the most Soueraigne power to congregate these great assemblies?

Secondly, if the Pope hath receiued authoritie from Christ, as you say, to proclaim and summon generall Councils: what reason is there that Christ should write vpon earthly gouernours, and make them leage, to haue his ordinance take place? Nay if Christ had enticled the Pope with any such matter, he would both haue giuen him power sufficient, and all means and means requisite, to effect and accomplish his holy, soueraigne, and puissant commission.

3. Answer. Second reason, why the Emperors authoritie is not now so needfull, as it was then: because in those daies they were Lords of the world, and the Pope did submit himselfe to the Emperour,

There be one Ecclesiasticall Prince over the universall Church, then one civill Prince over the civill Church: But now the Pope is Imperiall Prince in his owne Right, and is also King in his Temporall matters: But now the Pope is Imperiall Prince in his owne Right, and is also King in his Temporall matters:

Answer. 1. Yea, but vntlesse the Pope were a temporall Prince ouer all the Christian world, as the Emperors were, the Icture: haue no force nor effect: for hee is a Prince in his owne Territorie, let him meddle with his owne subjects, to fill the world with his pleasure: but what anisme to generall Councils? Secondly, hee pethers confesse, that the Pope was then a subiect to the Emperour, but so he is not now: since vntill he was a temporall Prince, as in the 12. c. Why: must I what fudging is due? Let hee shew that paragon which make the Pope deadly why he should beare all waies had right vsed is? And why should the Pope now challenge them, and their predecessors, seeing they would beare it in hand, that by a temporall Councils, often froe Southey, did fetch the Iurisdiction of Popes both spirituall and temporall?

3. Angustine faith : Catholicos Episcopos et partu Donati in suu imperatoris disputatione inter se habitatione. Brerical collection 147, f. 9. v. The Catholic Bishops and the Donatists did meet together to dispute at the commandment of the Emperor. There were in this Council, which was at Carthage of the Catholic Bishops 86; and of the Donatists 29. Brerical collection 147, f. 9. v.
Lastly, we have the determination of the Popish Councils against the Contra Gentes. It is decreed that the going away of the Pope should be no let or stay, but the Council might proceed. So Pope Gregory would have dissolved the Council of Bafil, but the Council cited him to appear by himself or his Legates under a great penalty.

By this it appears that the Pope has no right to call, continue, or dissolve general Councils.

We have also their own decrees against them, chap. 15. cap. 3. The Nicene Council was perfected under Constantine, the second general at Constantinople was assembled under Theodosius the elder, &c. That is by their authority, chap. 16. cap. 6. The sixth Synod, Constantinople, the Emperor congregated.

THE THIRD QUESTION OF WHAT PERSONS

the Council ought to consist

WHereas there are foure sorts of men vically present at Councells, the princes and Magnificates, Bishops and Inferiour Ministers and Priests, and other lay people: of all these Bishops (they say) chiefly must haue a speaking or determining voice: Priests and other learned may dispute and haue a consultative voice: Princes are there to defend the Councell, and for order kept; other of the Laity may be there as officers and Ministers, as Scribes and Notaries, and the suffrages and voices must only be giuen by Bishops. Ecce quid de consilio. Bull. in concilio. cap. 15. Let vs see some of their reasons.

First, to teach and to feed is proper for the Pastors onely, and to establish and decree in Council is nothing else but to feed and teach. Every Pastor onely must rule in Council; which none are but Bishops. Sed Ep[iscop]i pastores sunt (sunt) the sentence) unusquisque suus unus Ecclesiasticus quoniam Onely Bishops are pastors, and none other of the Clergie besides: And to them only be left that it is to be applied. Act. 20. Take heed for your selves and the flocke over the which God hath made you ouerseers.

I answered, First, what an absurd laying it is, and void of sense, that the Bishop is the only pastor of his Diocese, and that every Minister is not pastor in his owne parish. Nay, if the Levites would speake truth, he shall finde that popish Bishops are neither pastors nor Doctors, for the most of them neither feede nor teach; and they bee not affirmed to profess in: 3. Item 1540. or thereabout, Thomas Farris Martyr, being found fault withall by the Bishop of Dunkelden in Scotland, because he preached so oft, exhorted the Bishop againe, and wished that he did preach: The Bishop answered: Nay, nay, let that be, wee are not ordained to preach. And in further talke the blind blockish Bishop bewraied his owne ignorance, I thanke God (saith he) that I neuer knew what the old and new Testament was. Thereupon rose a common proverbe in Scotland, you are like the Bishop of Dunkelden, that knew neither the old nor new law. For Adversus pag. 126.

With this blind saying of the popish Bishop, our countriemen of Rhemes also doe agree, which doubt not to say, that many which haue no gift to preach, yet for their wisdom and gouernment, are not vnmeet to be pastors and Bishops, Annot. in 1. Tim. 5. fol. 13.

2. I answer, the Iesuit bewraith his ignorance, in making no difference betweene communis and propria potestas ecclesie, the common and speciall policie and office of the Church; for there are proper offices and duties, some of pastors, some of gouernours, some of other ministers: but this office to bee performed in generall Councils, is not proper to pastors, but common to the whole Church: whereupon we denie, that it is Proprium pastorum munus, suffragia ferre in Conciliis: It is not the proper dutie of pastors, to giue voyces and make decrees in Councils.

3. By the Iesuites argument, the fathers of Basil do conclude the contrary out of that place, Ephes. 4. That because Christ instituted not onely Apostles and Prophets, but pastors and teachers for the worke of the Ministerie, who doubteth (say they) but that the gouernance also of the Church is committed vnto others together with the Apostles? And hence they inferre, because the worke of the Ministerie is laid vpon the rest of the Clergie, that therefore they ought not to be excluded from Councils.

4. That place, Act. 20. vrged by the Iesuite, is otherwise expounded by S. Hieronim: Ad omnes ecclesie sacerdotes ita Paulus loquitur, &c. Paul thus speaketh to the Ministers of one Church, calling them all Bishops: whom before, vers. 17. he calleth Presbyters or Priests: And from this place he concludeth, that in the Apostles time there was no difference betweene a Bishop and a Priest. Hieron. Enagrio.

Argum. 2. Secondly, Pauromitane in the Councell of Basil thus reasoneth for Bishops: That they were the pillars and keyes of heauen, and therefore had onely deciding voyces. Vnto him answered at that time the wise and courageous Cardinall Arelatensis, shewing Augustinus iudgement vpon those words (I will giue thee the keyes of heauen) that the iudicial power was giuen not only to Peter, but also to the other Apostles, and to the whole Church, the Bishops, the priests. Whereupon he inferreth, that if the priests haue a iudicial power in the Church, they also ought to haue a determining voyce in Councils.

Thirdly, Lodouicus the Prothonotarie in the same Councell thus argued; Albeit (saith he) Christ chose twelue Apostles and 70. Disciples, notwithstanding in the setting forth of the Creede, onely the Apostles were present; thereby giuing example, that matters of faith did pertaine onely to the Apostles, and so consequently to Bishops. To him Arelatensis made this answer: First, it followed not, because the Apostles onely are named, that they therefore onely were present at the setting forth of the Creede: for wee see that Princes beare the name and commendation of many actions, which are done notwithstanding by their helpers. Secondly, Lodouicus cannot be ignorant (saith he) that there bee some articles in the Creede, which were not put to by the Apostles, but afterward by generall Councils: as that part, wherein mention is made of the holy Ghost, which the Councell of Lyons did adde. Thus much out of the Councell of Basil.

The Protestants confession.

Our opinion grounded vpon truth and Scripture is this: that, not onely Bishops, but all other pastors admitted to the Councell, and the learned and discrete amongst the lay men, ought to haue concluding voyces in Councell: and that rather the discussing and consulting of matters pertaineth to the learned Diuines, the deciding to all, then contrariwise.

First, that inferiour pastors are to be ioyned with Bishops and Prelates, it was amply proued in the Councell of Basil, of the which I haue so often made mention, as noble Arelatensis reasoned thus: The dignitie of the fathers is not to be respected but the truth: neither will I preferre a lye of any Bishop, be he neuer so rich, before a veritie or a truth of a poore priest: This is his first reason, that the truth ought to be receiued at any maner of mouth be he neuer so simple: and therefore Priests as well as Bishops are to be admitted to the Councell.

Argum. 2. He declareth the ancient practise of the Church: In the Councell of Nice, where there were assembled 322. Bishops, Athanasius being then onely a Priest, withstood the Arians, and infringed their arguments. In the Synode of Chalcedon, there were present sixe hundred priests, which name is common both to Bishops and priests. When Paul Bishop of Antioch preached chied that Christ was a man of common nature: the Councell assembled against him at Antioch, where the said Paul was condemned: neither was there any man, which did more confound the said Paul, then one Malchion priest of Antioch, which taught Rhetorike there.

Concerning the second part, that lay men also with priests ought to be admitted: first we have testimonie out of the word of God for it. Tit. 3. 12. For this cause Zenas the lawyer is signed, as fellow in commission with Apollas. But we have a more evident place, Act. 15. 22. It seemed good to the Apostles and Elders with the whole Church. Here we see that not onely the Elders but the whole multitude, were admitted into consultation with the Apostles. To this place our aduersaries doe thus answer: Lodouicus the Prothonotary, first thus rashly and fondly gave his verdict in the Councell of Basil, that there was no argument to bee gathered of the Acts of the Apostles, whose examples were more to be margined at, then to be followed. But to this Arelatensis replied, that he would stay himselfe most vpon the Apostles doings: for what (saith he) is more comely for vs to follow, then the doctrine and customes of the Primitiue Church? And Ennas Silvius reporteth (who writeth of the acts of that Councell) that all men impugned this saying of Lodouicus, that the Apostles were not to be followed, as a blasphemie.

Wherefore the Iesuite hath found out another answer; he saith that none but the Apostles gaue sentence, the rest onely gaue consent, and inward liking and approbation. This cauill Arelatensis met withall long before the Iesuite was borne, in the forenamed Councell. Neither this word, facta he, It seemed good, signifieth in this place consultation, but detision, and determination. And so it doth indeed for seeing there is one word applied to them all placuit, it seemed good to the Apostles, Elders, and the whole multitude, why should it not be taken in the one and selfsame sense, and after the same manner vnderstood of them all?

Argum. 2. Seeing the Councell doth represent the whole Church, there ought to bee present and to giue sentence of all sorts and callings of men: and the rather, because the matter of faith and religion is a common cause, and as well appertaineth to lay men as to Bishops, it behooueth them also to bee present. And further, it were more reasonable that Princes and temporall Magistrates should binde their subiects to their lawes, without their consent, then that ecclesiasticall persons should lay yokes vpon Christians against their wils, for ciuill matters are more indifferent and left to our choice, then spirituall are: Yet wee see there are no lawes enacted in our Realme but by the high court of Parliament, where alwaies some are appointed for the commons, even the whole neither house, without whose consent no act can passe. So it were very reasonable, that no law should be laid vpon the Church, without the generall consent thereof.

Thirdly, Augustines iudgement wee heard before alleaged by Arelatensis, that seeing the iudiciall power of the keyes is committed to the whole Church, to Bishops, to Priests, they all ought to be entertained in generall Councells.

Lastly, that not onely Bishops, but other also of the Clergie haue determining voyces in Councell, we haue the consent of antiquitie. In the Councell of Antioch assembled against Samosatenus, the whole Synod writeth thus: Episcopi, presbyteri, & diaconi dilectissimis fratribus in domino salutem. The Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, to our beloued brethren in the Lord, greeting. And in their epistle they write thus: Necessarium est visum, hunc resistentem Deo, neque acquiescentem veri fidei abscindere. It seemed necessarie to vs, that this fellow, enemy to God, and not obedient to the truth, to be cut off. They all both Elders and Deacons gave consent to his condemnation.

Acquisitum est sub Lodouico Cuius venerabilium praesulum & sanctis ordinis religiosorum sacerdotum synodali consensu. The assemblie of the reuerend Prelates, and of the next order, of the deuout priests, being councelllike assembled together, &c.

Chalcedonensis Actio. 1. Orientales Clerici una cum Episcopis clamauerunt, Flavianus in proprio loco quare non sedet? The Clergie of the East parts together with the Bishops cried out, why doth not Flavianus sit in his proper place? This Flavianus Patriarch of Constantinople, was disgraced in the hereticall Councell, Ephesus. 2. and thrust downe to the fifth place: And therefore in this Catholike Councell, the Clergie thus cried out: then the Egyptians together with Dioscorus the Eutychan heretike, cried againe, Imperator Episcopos vocauit, synodus Episcoporum est, superflui quare clamant? The Emperour hath called the Bishops together, the Synode consisteth of Bishops, these fellows are superfluous. Those heretikes were the first that tooke exception against the voyce of simple priests in Councell, calling them superfluous.

So likewise in the Roman Councell vnder Pope Hilarie, in the last canon, where it was propounded, that no Bishop should appoint his successor, but that he should be elected, Ab omnibus Episcopis & presbyteris acclamatum est. An acclamation was made by all the Bishops and priests: exclamation, Effusus est. Titus d. p. 371 c.

And least it should be said, that the priests did not sit as Iudges, but onely to aduise and discusse matters, I will answer them out of their owne Decrees; Decret. p. 1. dist. 23. c. 1. In the Lateran Councell vnder Nicholaus 2. this report is made, Confidentibus reuerendiss. Episcopis, Abbatibus, presbyteris, hyeris &c. While the reuerend Bishops, Abbots, and Priests did sit, &c. Nicholau began thus, &c. they all therefore did sit as Iudges. And yet more evidently, dist. 95. c. 6. Presbyteri ab initio negotiorum indices esse mandati sunt, & interesse sacerdotum concilio: Priests in the beginning were appointed to bee the iudges of the affaires of the Church, and to be present in Councils, &c. Marke this, they must be present as iudges.

As touching also the presence of graue and wise men of the Laitie in Councils, wee haue the practise and examples of former times: In the Chalcedon Council, there were present 7. noble Earles, appointed as Iudges, Anatolius, Palladius, Taciannus, Vincemalus, with the rest, and 10. noble Senators, Florentius, Nannius, Prilogenes, with others.

Toleration. cap. 3. Consonam enim regi, corde & ore promulgamus sententiam, simul etiam cum sanorum optimatum, & illustrium virorum consensu sancimus, &c. We decree our sentence, in heart and voyce, according with our Prince, and together with the consent of his Nobles, w<sup>ch</sup> doe enact, &c. Here the Ecclesiasticall and Ciuill state decree in Council together.

We haue also a most cleere testimonie euen of a Pope himselfe: Nichol. 1. epistol. ad Michaelem imperatorem. Vbi nam legis imperatores antecessores vestros in synodalius competitis interfuisse nisi forsitan in quibus de fide tractatum est, quia vniuersalis est, quia vniuersum communis est, quia non solum ad clericos, verum ad laicos, & ad omnes omnino pertinet Christianos? Where, I pray you, doe you reade, that the Emperours your predecessors were present in Synodes, but where they entreated of faith, which is common to all, and doth not onely concerne the Clergie, but lay-men also, and generally all Christians? Ergo, of matters of faith lay men may together with spirituall persons consult in Councils.

Bellarmine answereth, that Pope Nicholau is so to bee vnderstood, that the Emperour may bee present not as a Iudge, but only as one to defend the faith by good lawes, and where need is with the sword.

Contra. But the Emperour Martian saith otherwise in his oration in the Chalcedon Council: Nos ad confirmandam fidem, non ad ostendendam virtutem, &c. We by the example of Constantine thinke good to be present in the Synod, to confirme the faith, not to shew our power: But the Iesuite saith, to shew his power, and vse his sword.

THE FOURTH QUESTION, WHO OUGHT TO be the President and chiefe moderator in Councils.

The Papists.

With one whole consent they all agree and hold, that the Pope onely ought to haue the chiefe place in Councils, either himselfe in his owne person, or else his Legates and deputies for him, they reason thus:

1 The Pope is the chiefe pastor of the vniuersall Church: for vnto Peter only it was said, Pasce oues meas, Feede my sheepe, and he is called and saluted in Councils by the name of father: and all other both Princes and Bishops are sheepe in respect of him. Bellar. cap. 19.

We answer: first, in the Iesuites argument, there is petitio principij, a foule fault in a good Logician, though it bee none in a Sophister, still to begge that which is in question: for yet he hath not prooued that the Pope is the vniuersall pastor. Secondly, that place, Feede my sheepe, proueth it not: Augustine saith, Redditiur negationis trina trina confessio, ne minus amari lingua feruiat, quam timori: In Iohann. tract. 123. He recompenceth a threefold deniall, with a threefold confession, leaue that his tongue should bee lesse seruiceable to loue, then it was to feare. So then, by this fathers iudgement, it was no priuiledge to Peter to be thrice admonished, but he is thereby put in minde of his thrice deniall of Christ. Again, I marueile the Iesuite can so soone forget himselfe: for in the 15. chapter afore, he prooued by these words (Feede my sheepe) that Bishops onely were pastors; and he can now turne the words to serue onely for the Pope. Thirdly, what great matter is it for the Pope to be called father, seeing he is not ignorant that all Bishops assembled in Council and other learned, are called by that name? Nay, it is no rare matter for other Bishops to bee saluted by the name of Pope: as Proper writing to Augustine, twice in one epistle calleth him, beatissimum Papam most blessed Pope, Tom. 7. 4. Princes and Bishops to the Pope are sheepe, saith the Iesuite. First, for Bishops, though he had a iurisdiction ouer all, which will sticke in his teeth to prouue, yet shall they be no more his sheepe, then priests are to Bishops, and Bishops to their Metropolitans, who cannot be said to be their sheepe, though they haue some preeminence ouer them: for Augustines rule must stand; Nemo se nostrum Episcopum Episcoporum constituit. de Baptis. 2. 2. No man is a Bishop of Bishops, nor shepherd of shepherds. Secondly, for Princes he hath nothing to doe with any but those in his owne Bishopricke: and as they are his sheepe one way, as they are taught of him; so he and his Cardinals are the Magistrates sheepe another way, and in respect of the ciuill government he is their shepherd: And both he and they, Prince and Priest are sheepe fellowes, vnder Iesus Christ the chiefe shepheard: as Augustine saith, Tanquam vobis pastores sumus, sed sub illo pastore vobiscum omnes sumus. in Psalm. 126. We are shepherds to you, but both you and I are sheepe vnder that great shepheard.

Argum. 2. Peter was President in the Councell of the Apostles, Act. 15. Ergo, the Pope ought to be now, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, S. James seemeth rather to haue been President there, then S. Peter, and to haue determined the matter in question: first, because S. James speaketh last, S. Peter first: and the last place is commonly giuen to the moderator or determiner. Secondly, S. James, when he had spoken, concludeth thus: vers. 19. wherefore my sentence is, &c. he determineth and giueth sentence: whereas Saint Peter saith not so, my sentence is, as a moderator, but rather as a perswader and counsellor: Now therefore, why tempt ye God? &c. vers. 10. Thirdly, it is confessed by our aduersaries, that S. James was Bishop at Ierusalem, and therefore was most like to bee the chiefe, if any were, in his owne iurisdiction.

But we affirme neither of these, to haue had any such preeminence about the other, to bee the President and chiefe Iudge, or to haue an ouerruling voyce: but that the matter was decided by an vniforme consent of them all, being directed by the holy Ghost: It seemed good to the holy Ghost and vs, vers. 28.

Secondly, though Peter had been President then, it followeth not that the Pope should be now: for we denie the Pope to bee Peter's successeur, either in his Apostolike doctrine, or Apostolike office: as shall appeare when we come to that place.

Argum. 3. Bellarmino taketh vpon him to prouoe, that the Pope was President by his Legates in the eight generall Councils, and maketh a particular induction of them all.

Ans. But this argument rather maketh for vs, as it followeth argum. 3. that because the Pope was not President in any of the eight generall Councils, therefore the Presidentship belongeth not vnto him: for in some of them, the Pope was not present neither personally, nor by his Legates, as in the first of Constantinople, where Nestorius was President: in some the Pope was resident in the citie, but not present in the Council, as Vigilius was in Constantinople, what time the fift generall Council was there held: in some of them the Popes Legates were present, but they had not the chiefe or Presidents place, as in the fourth generall Council. But see more hereof afterward, argum. 3.

The Protestants.

WE doe truly affirme, that the soueraigne Maiestie of the Emperour and chiefe Magistrate, or his Legate, if he either be present himselfe, or send, ought to be President of the Council: or else in their absence, one to bee chosen and elected by the Council for that function, as Cardinal Arelatenus was chosen in the Council of Basil by the fathers to be moderator.

Argum. 1. First, that it belongeth to the Prince, to haue this prerogative, it is hence prouoed, because he is the chiefe iudge in all matters and causes, both Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall: And it appeareth by the ancient practise of the godly Kings in Israel and Iuda; Dauid gathered a Council together, when he brought the Arke to Ierusalem, 1. Chron. 15. 3. where he was the chiefe doer, and director; for he appointed the Leuites their courses, and set forth a certaine forme of thanksgiuing to be vsed, 1. Chron. 16. 4, 7. Hezekiah assembled a Council, 2. Chron. 30. 2. where it was decreed, that the Passouer should be solemnely kept: & the posts were sent forth with the Kings writ or commission. In Iosiah his raigne there was a great assembly at Ierusalem, of the Princes, the people, priests, and Leuites, and all from the greatest to the smallest: where the King himselfe was president and chiefe agent, reading the law before the people, 2. Chron. 34. 30, 31.

Bellarmino answereth. 1. These are extraordinarie examples: Dauid and Salomon did deale in Ecclesiasticall matters, not as Kings, but as Prophets.

Ans. That Dauid and Salomon were Prophets we graunt, as by their Prophetical writings may appeare: But for the rest of the godly Kings of Iuda, how is it likely that they were Prophets, seeing neither by word or writing they deliuered any prophecies? Againe, the care of religion was neither in Dauid, or the rest extraordinarie or prophetical: for how can that bee extraordinarie, which was vsuall and commonly practised of all the religious Kings? And further, it was not the Prophets, but the Kings office to commaund their subiects to assemble together, as Hezekiah and Iosiah did: for if it belonged to the Prophets, not to the Kings to assemble Councils, then Naïban, not Dauid; Isaia, not Hezekiah; Ieremias the Prophet, not Iosiah should haue called those holy assemblies, which were summoned by these Kings. Lastly, not onely these godly Kings of Iudah tooke this vpon them, but euen the King of Ninieue with the consent of his Nobles did call a fast, Jonas 3. 7. So properly is it incident to the Emperiall Crowne to take care of religion.

Bellarmino. 2. We see that some of the Kings were punished, for meddling with the priestly affaires: for this cause Hezekiah was stricken with leprosie, 2. Chron. 26. by this it appeareth, that it was extraordinarie in Kings to handle matters ecclesiasticall, Bellar. ibid. cap. 30.

Ans. Facili would haue offered incense vpon the Altar, which was only lawfull for the priest, and therefore was worthily punished. Neither doe wee say that the Prince ought to deale with preaching of the word, administering of the Sacraments, giuing of orders, or such like duties, which are properly incident to the pastors office: But concerning these duties, of summoning Councils, and enacting ecclesiasticall lawes, and the commaunding of all Estates and persons euen in religious matters, wee affirme that the right and power hereof, is meere cyuill, and belongeth properly to the ciuill gouernour.

Argum. 1. Secondly, we finde that the Emperours themselves haue been present at Councils: as in the Nicene, Constantine the great was present: in the Council of Chalcedon, Marcianus; in the Constantinopolitane, Constantinus the Emperour: in the Constantinopolitane, Basilius the Emperour was present. Is it to be thought that these noble Emperours, were at the Councils as inferiours or vnderlings? or had they not the chiefe places? then sure they were Presidents: for in the Council the chiefe place belongeth to the President. They might appoint a speaker or prolocutor for them, as in the Parliament house, though the Prince bee present, yet the Lord Chaucellor speaketh: but the chiefe power and Souerainie in the Council, was in the Emperours.

Beitarinus here answereth by a distinction: Imperator non praesidebat concilio proprie ut iudex, praesidebat solum quo ad locum materiale: The Emperour was not president in Councils properly as Iudge, but onely as chiefe in the place. And a little after he saith: Non tam ex loco, quam subscriptione colligenda est praesidentia: The Presidentship is not so much by the place to be knowne, as by the subscription: de Concil. lib. 1. cap. 19.

Ans. First, the Iesuites distinction is nothing worth: for hath not alwaies the Iudge in place of iudgement the chiefe room? for seeing the president or Iudge in Councils, hath the supreme and chiefe authoritie, and to the highest person of right belongeth the highest place; how can it otherwise be, but that to whom the chiefe place in Synods was assigned, the presidentship also of right appertained.

Secondly, that the Emperours and in their absence their Legates, were presidents in Councils, not onely in respect of the highest place, but as Iudges properly: we are able to iustifie it by the auncient actes and monuments of antiquitie. Council. Epist. ad Th. Basilian. 70. ann. 431. clemens tamquam, ut per literas suas pietatis ratum esse iubens, confirmansque concilii decretum: The Council writeth thus to the Emperour: We beseech your clemencie that by your goodly letters you would ratifie and confirme the Decree of the Council.

Martinus the Emperour in his oration to the fourth generall Council of Chalcedon speaketh thus: Nos ad confirmandam fidem, non ad ostendendam virtutem, exemplo Constantini adesse synodo volumus: we not to shew our power, but to confirme the faith, haue thought good, by Constantinus example, to be present in the Synode. To whom now (I pray you) did it belong to confirme and ratifie the actes of Councils, but to the Iudge and president? but this did the Emperours. Ergo.

In the Chalcedon Council, actum. 1. thus we finde Residentibus magnificis & gloriosissimis iudicibus in medio, &c. The most glorious and magnificent Iudges sitting in the midst, and on the left hand the reverend Bishops, Paschasius and Lucentius, Leo the Bishop of Romes deputies, and Anatolius Archbishop of Constantinople: and on the right hand, Dioscorus Patriarch of Alexandria, &c. We see then, that the Noble men, supplying the Emperours place, were Iudges and presidents in this Council, not so much because of their seate, as for their authoritie: for whereas Paschasius and Lucentius tooke exception against Dioscorus, saying, Nos sedens in Concilio, sed audiendus intermitatur: Let him not sit in the Council as iudge, but come in to be heard and iudged, yet the noble Iudges permitted it not.

That the Emperours were presidents, they or their deputies in their name: we proue it not onely by their place in Councils, but by their subscription. Also Council. sub Sylvestro cap. 20. Constantinus, with his mother Helena subscribed. Toletan. 3. Reccaredus the King, together with Baltha the Queene subscribed to the decrees of the Council. Council. 6. general. Constantinop. actum. 18. Constantinus the Emperour subscribed thus: Subscripto pissimi & Christo dilectis Constantinus Imperatoris: the subscription of the most deuout and beloued of Christ Constantinus the Emperour. Justinianus the second subscribed to the decrees of the first general Synode assembled in Trullo. Wherefore if the Emperours had the chiefe place in generall Councils, and the greatest authoritie, and by their royall consent, and subscription confirmed the actes and decrees of Councils, why should it be doubted that they were chiefe presidents in Councils, and ought of right so to be.

Argum. 3. As we haue shewed that Emperours or their deputies were presidents in generall Councils; so with as easie labour can we make it plaine, that the Popes and Bishops of Rome, were not in their owne persons, or by their Legates, presidents in any of the eight generall Councils.

In the first generall Council Nicene, Basilianus of Antioch was president: so witnesseth Felix Bishop of Rome, epistol. ad Zenonem imperatorem.

Wherefore Bellarminus in saying, that Pavus and Vincentius the Bishop of Rome's Legates, were the presidents, doth oppose himselfe against the testimonie of the Bishop of Rome himselfe, and giueth him the lie. Their owne decrees also thus testifie, decr. part. 1. dist. 15. c. 3. Gelasius, That the Nicene Synode was celebrate, Mediante Constantino: Constantinus the Emperor being the mediator, or moderator: and Eustathius was his speaker or prolocutor.

Constantinopol. 1. The second generall Councell was celebrate vnder Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, sic patet Chalcedon. synod. actio. 16.

Here Bellarminus confesseth that neither the Pope, nor his Legates were present, but that Nestorius was president: Ergo, by his owne confession the Pope was not President in this Councell: And whereas he saith the Emperor was not President, it is contrarie to their owne decrees, decr. part. 1. dist. 15. c. 3. Gelasius, who affirmeth that the second generall Synode was held at Constantinople: Mediante Theodosio seniore: Theodosius the elder being mediator.

Ephesine synodo sancta memoria Cyrillus praefatus: Cyrillus of blessed memorie was President in the Ephesine, the third generall Councell, sic Leo epistol. 45.

Bellarminus saith that Cyrillus was the Popes Legate in this Councell. Answers. 1. Leo before cited maketh mention of no such thing. 2. The Pope did vse to send Legates of his owne, and not to nominate Bishops of the Greeke Church. 3. Coel. lib. 1. tit. 8. l. 8. Valentinian, Adrianus thus testifie of this Synode, Cui beata memoria Cyrillus praefatus: Where Cyrillus of happie memorie was President. The same witnesseth Gelasius, decr. part. 1. dist. 15. c. 3. In the Ephesine Synode, Nestorius with the consent of Celestinus was condemned, Mediante Cyrillo, &c. Cyrillus being the mediator or President. And againe, dist. 16. c. 10. The Fathers in this Councell did conclude twelue articles against so many heresies of Nestorius, autore Cyrillo, Cyrill being the author.

Gelasius, decr. de Apocryphis, affirmeth the Councell of Chalcedon, which was the fourth generall to be celebrated, Mediante Martino Augusto, & Anatolio Constantinopolitano: By the mediation or Presidentship of Martinus the Emperor, and Anatolius Patriarch of Constantinople. Yet notwithstanding this authoritie of Gelasius, Bellarminus still avoucheth that the Popes Legates had the Presidentship in this Councell. Contra. 1. The Synode saith, Residentibus magnificis iudicibus, &c. The most magnificent Iudges sitting, &c. there were seven noble men by the Emperor appoynted as Iudges: but who else is Iudge but the President? 2. These seven Iudges sat in the midst by the altar, the Patriarch of Constantinople and Alexandria on their right hand, Paschasius and Lucianus, the Bishop of Rome's Legates, on the left hand: wherefore by their place it seemeth they were not Presidents. 3. They would haue Dioscorus excluded out of the Councell, but the Iudges would not permit it. 4. Decr. part. 1. dist. 16. c. 10. Anatolius is said to be author of the 27. Canons made against Eutychus; wherefore he rather was the President then the other. See also to this purpose the second Nicene Councell, actio. 1. where Theodosius President of that Councell saith, Anatolius quartae synodi principem fuisse: That Anatolius was the Prince or President of the fourth Synode: Ergo the Popes Legates were not.

Constantinopol. 2. The fift generall Councell was kept, Praesidente sanctissimo & beatissimo domino nostro patriarcha Menna: Our most holy and blessed Lord Menna Patriarch of Constantinople being President: act. 1. 2. 3. & 4. Yet Bellarminus is not ashamed to say, that not Menna, but Eutychius his successor was President in the fift generall Councell; whereas in euery action of this Councell, which are but foure in all, there is mention onely made as before, of the Presidentship of Menna.

But what hath Bellarminus gained; if Eutychius, and not Menna was President? What maketh this for the Popes Presidentship? And if it be so, that Vigilius the Bishop of Rome was at that time present at Constantinople, as the Iesuite thinketh, why came he not to the Synode to challenge his Presidentship, but that he feared to be thrust downe into the second place, as Ilyricus truly coniectureth, and is without cause chalenged by the Iesuite of a lye, seeing he himselfe confesseth as much in the beginning of the 19. chapter, alleaging this as a reason, why the Popes refused personally to be present, in the Greeke Synodes, because the Emperor or his Legates would sit in the Presidents place?

Constantinopol. 3. The sixt generall Councell, actio. 1. Praesidente piissimo imperatore Constantino, The most deuout Emperor Constantinus being President.

Yet notwithstanding the words of the Councell stand thus, Bellarminus saith, that the Legates of Agathus the Bishop of Rome had the Presidentship; whereas beside the direct testimonie of the Councell, as we haue heard, which maketh the Emperor Constantinus President, the Legates of the Bishop of Rome fate vpon the left hand of the Emperor, and on the right George Archbishop of Constantinople, and Macarius of Antioch, as the chieffer men.

Nicem. 2. The seuenth generall Councell, Theodosius Patriarch of Constantinople, was President and author of the decrees.

This is notwithstanding denied by Bellarmin, that Thomaz was President: and yet the words of the Synod are these: We thinke it very meete and convenient, that the most holy and high pastor and rector President of the imperiall Citie of Constantinople, new Rome, in the beginning to propound what matters shall be handled, and as it were to open a doore to the rest: but whose office was it else, but the Presidents to propound the questions, and to moderate the disputations? Though we need not to contend for this Synode, which was most erroneous, grosse and idolatrous, and not wordie to be counted amongst the eight generall Councils, and in deed it is none of them: most blasphemous of them, as y<sup>e</sup> same thing is to y<sup>e</sup> olden times as to y<sup>e</sup> new.

Constantinopol. 4. The eight generall Council, 8. after the Emperour was present; and President, for he concludeth the Council thus, Placuit omnibus in domino aliquibus habere auctoritatem, in medium exhibere: We give licence to all, that have any doubt, to bring it forth. He was then the President: whatsoeuer the Iesuite can object to the contrary. O saying a Bishoppe was not present.

In these eight generall Councils the Pope of Rome was not himselfe personally present: what will you say now to a generall Council, where the Pope was present in person; and yet not president.

In the Council of Florence, Paladynus Emperour of Constantinople, and Iosaphus Patriarch there, also Eugenius the fourth Bishop of Rome were personally present, with the whole state Ecclesiasticall both of the Greeke and Latine Church: yet was not Eugenius president, as may appeare by these arguments.

At their first meeting there was great contention about their seats in the Council, the Pope would have placed the Greekes with their Emperour on the left hand; the Latine Clergie on the right, and himselfe to sit in the vpper end in the midst betwene them both: but the Emperour would not suffer that, saying, that that place was meetest for him then for the Pope: Hereupon the Pope relented, and was contented to sit on the right side, over against the Emperour: but if he had been president, that place in the midst of right had belonged vnto him.

The Grecians craved leave of their Emperour, and Patriarch, when they began to speake, as Bellarmino doth sess. 1. and Martin Bishop of Ephesus sess. 3. and sess. 7. Iohannes Mouchas saith thus to Marcus, Non ego sed Imperator, tibi legem imponere potest, Nec I. but the Emperour is to appoint you the law of disputing: But this onely belongeth to the president and moderator. sess. 10. Imperator in istis ut utrumq; sessio habetur ut, The Emperour commanded another session to be kept: Ergo, he was president, and not the Pope.

Argum. 4. Lastly, not to heape vp many reasons in so plaine a cause; I will alleadge one example most manifest out of Augustine who writeth, that in that great Council at Carthage where the matter was discussed betwene the Catholikes and the Donatists, there being present more then 300. Bishops of both sides, Marcellinus was appointed to be moderator of that disputation: who diuers times putteth in his sentence in the disputation, and last of all, bidding both partes to goe aside, he writeth the sentence definitive, and concludeth against the Donatists, approving the actes of the Catholike Bishops. bat Aug. breuic. collation.

THE FIFT QUESTION, WHETHER

Councils may erre or not.

The Papists.

They are not all agreed, what to determine of this matter: some affirme that Generall Councils can in no wise erre, although the consent of the Pope be wanting: thus the Fathers in Basile concluded, Who is it, say they, that will preferre a sinfull man before an vndefiled Church? But Bellarmin more the Popes friend then so, holdeth, that even generall Councils may erre, vnlesse they follow the instructions and directions of the Pope: Yes that it is not sufficient for the Pope to call a Council, and send his Legate thither, but he must write continually for aduertisement from his master before any thing be concluded: and therefore they doubt not to say, that the Council of Basile erred; though it had the consent of the Popes Legate in defining, that the Council is about the Pope, because he had no such direction from the Pope, Bellarmino de concil. 26. cap. 1.

Nay the Iesuite goeth further, that particular Councils being approved by the pope cannot erre, say: So they holde that the holy fathers of the great Inquisition cannot erre: Yea Panormitanus was not ashamed to say openly in the Council of Basile, that he would preferre the iudgment of the Cardinals of Rome before all the world. This then is the Iesuites opinion, that no Councils by the Pope confirmed can erre: and that a particular Council hauing his allowance, is to be preferred before a generall without. Let vs see some of their reasons.

They abuse certaine places of Scripture for their purpose: as that Act. 15. It seemed good to vs, and the holy Ghost: I am with you to the end of the world: He that heareth you, heareth me.

Belarmine cap. 2. Rhemish in Act. 15. 8. 10. so then thus they argue, Councils are neuer without the spirit of God: therefore they cannot erre. A silly argument, as though the spirit of God were in their commaundment, or were tyed to places or persons: They must first performe the condition before they can challenge the promise: that is, to follow the rule of Gods word, and obediently to submitte themselves thereunto; then will God vouchsafe to be present. The Gospell saith, that wheresoever two or three are gathered together in my name, I will be present euell in the midst of them: Here promise is made, not to thousands or hundreds, but to two or three; and therefore by this place an assembly of few persons may as well be exempted from error, as Councils: But there is a condition, in nomine meo, in my name, and then followeth, in medio vestrorum, in the midst of them: if when they assemble in the Lords name, they cannot looke for the presence of Christ. I pray you where was the holy Ghost present in that Countell at Rome vnder Ioh. 23. when there appeared a great Owle, which stared and out faced the Pope, who blushing at the matter, and fuming, rose vp and departed: At the sight of which Owle they whispered one in another, eare, that the spirit appeared in the likeness of an Owle: and after that in another session the same Owle appeared, and could not be driven away, vntill by throwing bats and cudgels at her, she fell downe dead before them, as Nichol. Clemens in the beginning of the Council of Constantine after the accustomed hymne sung, Veni sancte spiritus, a bill was set vp with these words, alibi respuit occupat i, mune adeo non possunt. We are now otherwise occupied, we cannot be present with you. We see now how sure the Papists are of the holy Ghost in their popish Councils.

Argum. 2. Act. 15. 28. It seemed good to us and the holy Ghost: As the Apostles might say, that their decrees were the decrees of the holy Ghost: so all other Councils are sure to haue the assistance of the spirit: Ergo, they cannot erre, Belarm. lib. 2. cap. 21. but we say this is not of substance but of name.

Answer. First, if the Councils which are now held in the Church, are as sure not to erre as the Apostolickall Councils by the same reason every particular pastor of the Church may haue as good a priuiledge, to be exempted from error, as the Apostles themselves had: for their Councils which erre not, consisted of particular members likewise not erring. But there is not the like reason of the Apostles, and their Councils then, as there is of ours now: for the Apostles, whose preachings, decrees, and writings are now, and were then to be rules of our faith, for this cause receiued the spirit of God, whereby they were assured to be led into all truth, Ioh. 16. 13. But Councils now are not to set rules of our faith, neither are their decrees to be taken for Scriptures: therefore there is not the like reason of the assistance of the spirit now in such measure, as they had in theirs.

Answer 2. Yet we graunt that the spirit of God is present still in Councils assembled in Christs name, to direct them in all things necessarie: so that they be content to be ruled by the Scriptures, as we see the Apostles grounded their decrees vpon Scripture, Act. 17. 16. For thus the Apostles concluded, that seeing God foretold by his Prophets, that the Gentiles should be called as well as the Iewes, that they were not therefore to be clogged with Iewish ceremonies, seeing they were ordayned to be a people holy vnto God, as well as the Iewes: But if the Pastors of the Church refuse to heare the voice of God in the Scriptures, they are very like to be deceiued, yea, are sure to misse the line of truth.

Argum. 3. The Church cannot erre: for the Apostle, calleth it the pillar of truth, 1. Timoth. 3. but a generall Council representeth the whole Church: Ergo, it cannot erre. Belarm. lib. 2. de Concilio 2.

Answer. First, concerning the assumption, or second part of this argument, we graunt, that a generall Council lawfully assembled in some sort representeth the vniuersall Church, but is not the vniuersall Church: but fewe Councils are so generall, as the which some of every nationall Church are present, which thing ought to be in an vniuersall Council. And againe, a generall Council may erre, when as notwithstanding some particular members of the Church hold the truth: as in that generall assemblie of 400. of Basil priests in *Achab*s time, they all being in error, the Prophet Micaiah only was in the right.

Secondly, concerning the proposition, first wee denie that the Church is absolutely freed from error, neither doth it follow, it is the pillar, therefore cannot erre, for Peter erred, and yet was a pillar, Galath. 2. Secondly, the Church is called a pillar, and ground of truth, not absolutely or substantially, as though the truth should be measured by the Church, but onely demonstratiuely, because it professeth the truth, and as a golden candlelicke holdeth out the light in the world, which is not elsewhere to be found but in the Church: and it is the pillar of the truth, as it is the house of God, suffering it selfe to be ruled and guided by the word of God.

The Protestants. We doubt not to say, that Councils haue erred, and may erre, presuming any thing besides the warrant of Gods word, and that neither vniuersall or particular Councils are priuiledged much lesse any one man, nor the Pope, not to erre in matters of faith, otherwise, then following following the truth of the Scriptures, for in so doing, they are sure not to be deceived.

Argum. 1. We haue examples in the Scripture of Councils that erred, as that assemblie in Abraham daies of 400. Prophets, who were all deceived. The Iesuite thus answereth, that it was an assemblie of Prophets, not of Priests: as though Priests were more priuiledged from error, than Prophets. And the Iesuite, if he be well remembred, whereas we alleaged the examples of Dauid, Hieremiah, Iohas, that assembled Councils, he gaue vs this answer, that they did it as Prophets, and not as Kings: wherefore by his owne confession it belongeth to Prophets as well as to Priests to assemble, and be assembled in Council. Secondly (saith he) these were false prophets, not Prophets of the Lord. We graunt so, and this withall, that wheresoever the Lords prophets and pastors, and ministers assemble, that there they will heare the Lords voyce: which the Pope in his Councils doth not. But he still supposeth, that the Pope and his ministers are Christs disciples: which is an vnreasonable supposition, seeing we hold him to be Antichrist, and that the Iesuite knoweth. Thirdly, this Council was called by the authoritie of the King, not of the high priest, and therefore might erre. Ans. First, the holy Councils summoned by Dauid, 1. Chron. 15. 3. by Hieremiah, 1. Chron. 30. by Iohas, 2. Chron. 34. though they were by the authoritie of the King, not the high priest collected, were notwithstanding godly and lawfull Councils. Secondly, neither was it the authoritie of the high priest, that could priuiledge Councils from error, seeing they themselves erred, as Orijah the high priest vnder that vngodly King of Iuda Ahas was a most grosse idolater, 2. King. 16. 11. Wherefore the Iesuite hath here answered nothing.

Argum. 2. Such a Council also was that of the Iewes, Ioh. 9. where all they were excommunicate that confessed Christ, and Mark. 14. Christ himselfe was by the Council condemned: It cannot be denied, but that this Council erred. Let vs heare the papists goodly answers: some say that the Council erred in a matter of fact, de facto, non de iure, not in a case of right, as whether Christ should be put to death: As though in condemning him, they denied not that he was the Messiah. Other that they erred in their owne opinion, not in the sentence giuen, for Christ indeed was guiltie of death, say they, because he did beare our sinnes: the Iesuite findeth not much fault with this answer, and yet it is an open blasphemie, as is that also of the Papists, that the Iewes had sinned mortally, if they had not put Christ to death. Some of them say, the Council erred not in that which was done, but in the manner of iudgement because it was tumultuous and disorderly, and done by suborning of false witnesses: and this saith the Iesuite, is probabilis responsio, a probable answer, saith he, being most impious and blasphemous. And their Master of Sentences determineth otherwise: Occidere Christum fuit mala actio & peccatum: To kill Christ was an euill and sinfull action, lib. 1. dist. 48. b. But he dare not rest in this answer; but findeth out a fourth of his owne, that the chiefe priests and Councils of the Iewes could not erre before the coming of Christ, but after hee was come, they might. A blind popish answer: for doth not Christ euerie where impugne the traditions and decrees of the Elders; as Mark. 7. which our Sauour should not haue done belike, seeing the Elders before his coming could not erre: or will they say, that those traditions were right and good before, and afterward erroneous? I know not else what they should say.

Againe, I oppose against the Iesuite the determination of their owne Master: who saith, In Christi morte terminata esse Legalia omnia: That all the Legals were determined and tooke their end in the death of Christ; and so long Circumcision (saith he) was in force, lib. 4. Sentent. dist. 3. b. But the law and priesthood ceased together. Ergo, till Christs death the priests should bee priuiledged not to erre, if they had any such priuiledge at all.

Argum. 3. We see by experience that many Councils haue erred: we let passe those which the Iesuite himselfe confesseth to haue erred, as the third Council of Antioch, where Arrianisme was condemned, and the Arrian heresie approued: the Council of Arimus, where the same heresie was furthered: the second Ephesine approuing Eutichei heresie: these Councils, though they were generall, the Papists confesse to haue erred, and they haue a trick to shifte it off, but a sillie one God knoweth. They were not approued by the Pope, say they: As though all veritie and knowledge in the whole earth were locked vp in the Popes breast.

In the Council of Nicephorus confirmed by Leo the fourth can. 7. second mariage is forbidden: that the Priest should neither giue consent to second mariage, nor be present at the mariage feast, but rather inioyne penance for second mariage.

Bellarmin answereth, Non prohiberi matrimonium, sed solemnitate secundum matrimonium, that not second mariage, but the solemnity of second mariage is forbidden: for the celebratie of mariage was once onely accustomed to be done in the Church. (saith he) when as virgins were coupled in matrimonie.

Contra. 1. The Canon speaketh not of any solemnitie in the Church, but of the feast at home, Presbyterum coniugio secundario suscipiarum iustitiam non debere, That the Priest or minister must not be present at the second mariage feast. Secondly, the Canon saith, Quis est presbyter, qui propter con-

minimus illi ei sentia nuptiarum: He is a priest of no worth, that for the feast sake will give his consent to second law ge. And againe, Præcipitur secundis nuptijs penitentiam tribuere: He is commanded to inioyne pen. nce for second mariage: not for the solemnitie of second mariage, but for the mariage it selfe. It is plaine therefore, that this canon forbiddeth second mariage it selfe. Thirdly, neither is it true which the Iesuite saith, that all solemnitie in the Church was cut off in second mariage: It was decreed indeed, Council Lateran. part. 9. cap. 2. In secundis nuptijs non debet benedictio iterari: The matrimoniall or mariage blessing must not bee iterate in second mariage, because it was once giuen before: yet both first and second mariage was to bee solemnized in the Church, Synod. Colomens. part. 7. cap. 43. Coniunctio coniugum in facie ecclesie peragenda: The ioyning together of couples is to bee done in the face of the Church. He saith not in the first or second mariage, but indefinitely of all.

Toletan. 1. can. 17. Is qui non habet uxorem, & pro uxore concubinam habet à communione non repellatur: He that hath not a wife, but in stead of his wife a concubine, is not for this cause to bee repelled the communion: a manifest error. This Councell was confirmed by Leo, as it may appeare canon 11. Beilarmine answereth, that a concubine is here taken for a wife, Dalla sine dote, & ex-terna solennitate, married without a dowrie, and any outward solemnitie, as Agar is said to be Abrahams concubine, yet she was indeed his wife: and Keturah likewise.

¶ 2. Whereas Beilarmine telleth vs, that in the Ciuill law a wife married without solemnitie, is called a concubine, his law here deceiueth him: for whether he will be tried for this point by the Ciuill law or Canon, they make both against him. As Cod. lib. 5. tit. 16. leg. 2. Antonin. forbiddeth that a souldiour should make a gift to his focaria, or concubina, his concubine or houseliad: which there is taken for one that is kept without mariage. Likewise, titul. 26. l. 1. Constantin. It is lawfull for no man to keepe a concubine, constante matrimonio, as long as he is married. In the same sense is a concubine taken in the Canon law: Decret. p. 1. dist. 34. c. 6. Est non habetis uxores, &c. Though you haue no wiues, yet is it not lawfull for you to haue concubines. Thus then a concubine is one, and a wife another.

¶ 3. That Agar was not Abrahams wife, but his concubine, it appeareth thus: First, she was not made free, but remained a bond-woman still, Gen. 16. and 21. Secondly, she had no dowrie, nor her sonne any inheritance with Isaac, Gen. 21. 10. Thirdly, if she had been Abrahams wife, he should haue done euill in dismissing of her, and sending her away. Fourthly, the Scripture onely calleth Sara Abrahams wife, Gen. 16. 3. the other a bond-woman, euen after she had a childe by Abraham, Gen. 21. 13. she is also called the maide of Sara, and Sara her dame or mistresse, Gen. 16. 6. 9. Sara also giueth Agar to Abraham, and saith, It may be I shall receiue a childe by her, Gen. 16. 2. the bond-womans childe is by right her dame and mistresses according to the law, Exodus 21. 4. All this prooueth that Agar was a concubine onely, not wife to Abraham in any respect.

As for Keturah, it cannot bee denied, but that sometime the Scripture calleth her Abrahams wife, Gen. 25. 1. sometime his concubine, 1. Chron. 1. 32. yet in diuers respect: for she was his concubine, as some thinke, while Sara liued, and his wife afterward: and the Iewes doe hold that Keturah and Agar are all one woman. To which opinion Hierome seemeth to incline, being moued thereunto by two places of Scripture: the first, 1. Chron. 5. 19. where beside the Agarens, are named Isachur and Naphis, as enemies to Israel, which were the sonnes of Ismael, Gen. 25. 15. The other is, Psal. 83. 6. where the Ismaelites and Agarens are named as two diuers nations: but Agar had no more sonnes but Ismael, so that the Ismaelites and Agarens must bee all one, vnlesse the sonnes of Keturah bee vnderstood for Agarens, which is most like. But how could Keturah her sonnes be named Agarens, if she also were not Agar? But leauing this as a coniecture of historie, whether Keturah were the same that Agar, or not, it is verely to bee thought that she was both a concubine and a wife, the first while Sara liued, the second after her death. So whatsoeuer the Iesuite hath said, or can say, the Toletan Councell decreed an error.

In the 6. generall Synode, Can. 2. the Councell vnder Cyprian which concluded that heretikes should be rebaptized, is approued. Can. 73. The mariages betwene Catholikes and heretikes are iudged to be voyd, huiusmodi nuptias, saith the Canon, irritas existimari, a manifest error, and contrarie contrarie to S. Paul, 1. Cor. 7. 13. Can. 12. speaking of the Canons of the Apostles, Can. 6. which permiteth Ministers to dwell with their wives, which by them is forbidden in this place, they say thus, Statum ecclesiasticum in pulcherrimo ordine prout voluerit: Being desirous to reduce the ecclesiasticall state to a more beautifull and perfect order, then it was in the Apostles time. As though any Church since was purer, then the primitive vnder the government of the Apostles. Can. 67. Damnatus est qui cuiuscunque animalis sanguinem aliqua arte coquitur, & se comedit: We condemne those that by skill of Cookerie doe dresse the blood of any beast to be eaten. But Saint Paul saith, every creature of God is good, and not to be refused, &c. 1. Tim. 4. 4. These and sundry such errors were concluded in this generall Council: consented and subscribed vnto by Iustinian the Emperour, the Bishop of Rome, the Patriarch of Constantinople, and by 200. Bishops beside and more, as may bee seene Can. 102. And approoued in the 7. generall Council, act. 4. where Thrasius the President speaketh thus of the Canons of the sixth Council, Scandalum est dubitare quod sit sexta synodus: It is scandalous, or offensive to doubt, whether they bee the right Canons of the sixth Synod. And Adrian Bishop of Rome thus writeth to the same Thrasius, as he is alleged in the Decrees: I receiue the sixth Synod with all the Canons thereof, Dist. 2. diff. 16. c. 3.

Council. Carthaginiens. 3. can. 47. The Apocryphall bookes of Tobias, Judith, Ecclesiasticus, Sapientia, the Maechabees, are made Canonically, contrarie to the Laodicean Council, cap. ult. where all these bookes are reiected out of the sacred Canon. Therefore the Countell of Carthage erred.

Bellarmino answereth, first that the Council of Carthage is of more authoritie then the Laodicean, because it is the latter, and for that it is ratified by Leo 4. diff. 20. c. 1. and so is not the better.

Contra. 1. The Councils the more ancient they are and neerer the Apostles times, ought to bee so much the more had in authoritie, and not the new to bee preferred before the old: I marueile that the Iesuite, which so much vrgeth antiquitie, would haue vttered such a speech. 2. And againe, the same Leo the 4. in the same place confirmeth the Laodicean Council: and likewise Felix 4. Decret. 2. citeth the 26. and 59. Canons of this Synod: and it is confirmed in the sixth generall Council, Can. 1. and so is not the Council of Carthage: as it is also alleaged in the Decrees, distin. 16. c. 7. Wherefore the Laodicean is to bee preferred, and the Iesuite hath said nothing.

In the second Council of Nice, act. 5. it was concluded, that Angels and the soules of men haue bodies of their owne, and are inscriptible & immutabiles picture, and may bee described by picture, and that the Angels mullati in propriis corpora vultu, haue often been seene in their owne bodies. Act. 1. It was decreed, Hanc esse veritatem ut in sanctis ecclesijs veneranda imagines colantur: That in holy Churches the images of Saints should be worshipped. Yet in the Eliberin Council it was long before determined in this wise, Can. 36. Placuit, picturas in ecclesia esse non deesse: It seemeth good to vs, that there should bee no pictures at all, or images in the Church. And to this Council subscribed Ofius Bishop of Corduba in Spaine, who had been present before in the first Nicene Council, and subscribed for the Bishop of Rome: this appeareth therefore to be a manifest error, which was decreed concerning the adoring of Images. And to make the error more foule, being blasphemous enough in it selfe, act. 4. one Iohannes Monachus steppeth vp, and saith, Imago maior est quam oratio. An Image is more worth then prayer: whereas prayer is instituted of God, an Image is the deuice of man. And in the same place, the same superstitious and idolatrous Monke saith, that it was better for a man to breake his oth, & iuramentum piscare, and to be forsworne, then to keepe his oth, in destructionem imaginum, for the pulling downe of Images. And yet for all this Bellarmino will not yeeld that this Council erred.

In the Council of Rome vnder Pope Stephan the 7. all the acts of Formosus his predecessor were reuoked. And in the Council of Rauenna vnder Iohn 9. Pope, Formosus acts were established, and Stephans decrees abrogate.

Bellarmino here answereth, that Pope Stephan erred onely in a matter of fact, being falsely informed, that Formosus was not the lawfull Pope. Contra. But to reuerse all the acts and decrees made by the Pope, sheweth an error in iudgement also in one of them, either in him that first enacted them, or in him that after reuerfed them: As the putting of Christ to death, though it were a matter of fact, yet proceeded from a corrupt, blind, and reprobate iudgement. By this shift the Iesuite also may excuse the high priests from error, that put Christ to death.

Lastly, in the Council of Constance, they are excommunicate, that receiue the Sacrament in both kinds: the Council of Basil on the contrarie side, permiteth and giueth leave to the Bohemians to vse both kinds. One of these Councils must needs erre, and both of them were confirmed by the Popes: the Council of Constance by Martin the 5. the Council of Basil by Felix 5. By this induction of many particulars we inferre and conclude, that Councils euen approued by the Pope, may and haue erred.

4. Lastly, Augustinus opinion is this, that prouinciall Councils ought to giue place to generall: Et ipsa plenaria priora posterioribus emendari: And the former generall Councils must bee amended mended by the latter. The Rhemists haue found out this shift, that in matters indifferent, which are to be chaunged, according to time and place, Councils may be altered, Art. 15. sess. 8. But to that it is answered, that the word emendare signifieth not onely a chaunge, but a correcting of that which is amisse. And that clause of Augustine must be put in, why Councils must be amended: Si a spiritu deuotum sit, If they swarue from the truth: de Baptismo lib. 2. cap. 3. Wherefore we conclude, that Councils may erre.

Againe, that saying of Augustine is confirmed in your owne Decrees: Ego solis eis scripturae, &c. I haue learned, onely to those writers which are called Canonically, to attribute this honour, that I beleue none of them to haue erred in writing, &c. Dee. 2. dist. 10. c. 5. If the holy writers onely are priuiledged from error, then all other that are not Canonically may erre, and so Councils among the rest.

Lastly, let vs put to the scale of this doctrine, the testimonie of the holy Martyrs witnessed by their blood: M. Rogers Martyr, allcgeth the authority of a learned lawyer of the Church of Rome, namely, Panormitanus which saith that vnto a simple lay man, that bringeth the word of God with him, there ought more credite to be giuen, then to a whole Council gathered together: vnto which sentence, the said blessed Martyr giueth his consent, For. pag. 1487.

Bishop Ferrar Martyr, was condemned for this article amongst other, because he would not subscribe, that generall Councils neuer did nor can erre, For. pag. 1554. col. 2. ar. 4.

Bishop Ridley also holy Martyr, confesseth that Councils gathered together of such guides, and pastors, as doe walke after the guiding of Gods word, haue a promise to be guided of the spirit in to all truth, and not otherwise. For. pag. 1720.

THE SIXT QUESTION, CONCERNING THE AV- thoritie of generall Councils, whether they may absolutely deter- mine without Scripture, and necessarily binde all men to the obedience of their Canons.

The Papists.

IN words they would seeme to magnifie the Scripture about Councils: for they say, that the authoritie of the Scripture dependeth not in himselfe, of Church, Pope, or Councils; but in respect of vs: the word of God, is the word of God, say they, though there be no determination of the Church; but we doe not know it so to be, but because the Church hath so defined: Bellarmin. lib. 2. de con. cap. 12. Here is a goodly glosse, but nothing to the purpose: for in that they say the Church hath absolute authoritie to declare and pronounce which is the word, (which indeede it hath not without testimonie and warrant of the word it selfe) by this meanes it cometh about, that much is taken for the word of God which is not: and so the Church doth not onely declare the word, but maketh that the word which is not.

First, beside the Apocrypha, which they make part of the word, as we haue shewed afore, they hold that their traditions are also the word of God, Bellarmin. cap. 12. Secondly, Gratian is so bold to affirme that the decretall Epistles of the Popes are to be counted amongst the Canonically Scriptures, dist. 19. can. in canonicis, and that the Canons of Councils are of the same authoritie, dist. 30. can. decretales. And Greg. 1. epist. 24. saith, he doth reuerence the foure generall Councils, as the foure Euangelists. Thirdly, they shamefully affirme, that whatsoever the Pastors and priests doe teach in the vnitie of the Church, is the word of God, Rhemens. 1. The. 2. ver. 12.

First then they conclude, that Councils are not bound to determine according to the Scriptures, but as iudges may determine of their owne authoritie. Secondly, that all men are bound of necessitie to receiue the decrees of Councils, without any further tryall or examination. They reason thus out of Scripture.

concil. cap. 12.

Argum. 1. Deut. 17. 12. He that harkeneth not vnto the priest, that man shall die. But marke I pray you, what goeth before, vers. 11. according to the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the iudgement which they shall tell thee, shalt thou doe: See then, here is no absolute iudiciall power giuen to the priest but according to the law of God.

Thus answered Master Latimer Martyr, to the like obiection made by Bishop White: If any controuersie shall arise, they were indeed referred to the Priests who were to iudge, not as they would themselves, but secundum legem Dei, according to the law of God, For. pag. 1762.

Argum. 2. The example of the Apostles Act. 15. is as fondely alleadged, where it was decreed (saith the Iesuite) that the Gentiles should not be burthened with ceremonies, which, saith he, was not determined by the Scriptures but by the absolute suffrages of the Apostles. Againe, their decrees were absolutely imposed vpon the Churches, without any further examination of the Disciples: Ergo, we are now also absolutely bound to obey all decrees of Councils, Bellarmin. de concil. l. 1. c. 18.

We

We answer: first, it is false, that this matter was determined without Scripture. For first allleageh Scripture: and Power thus reasoneth. We beleue through the grace of God to be saved as well as they, ver. 11. therefore what need this yoke of ceremonies? Secondly, Though there had been no Scripture, who seeth not that the spirit of God so ruled the Apostles, that their writings and holy actions should serve for scripture vnto the ages following? Thirdly, the Disciples needed not to examine their decrees, knowing that they were governed by the spirit, as they themselves write: It seemed good to vs and the holy Ghost: yet we see the brethren of Berms searched the Scripture for the truth of those things, which the Apostles preached, Act. 17. 11. When they can proue such a plenarie power and fulnes of the spirit in their Pastors and Councils, as was in the Apostles, we will also beleue them.

Argum. 3. Our Saviour Christ saith, if he refuse to heare the Church, let him be vnto thee as an heathen man and publicane: Ergo the Church is absolutely to be obeyed in all things. *Bellar. lib. 1.
de consil. cap. 18.*

Answer. first, our Saviour in this place speaketh not of the Canons and decrees of the Church concerning faith: but onely prescribeth the forme of Church discipline, for reformation of manners and correction of sinne: If thy brother trespass against thee, &c. ver. 17. Our Saviour Christ saith no more then this, that Christians ought to obey the sentence of the Church in censuring of sinne: but it followeth not that we ought to receiue newe articles of faith imposed by the Church beside Scripture. Secondly, Christ speaketh not of every Church absolutely, but of a Church guided and ruled by his word, and assembled in his name, ver. 20. for other wise by the former collection, our Saviour Christ and his Apostles should haue been as Publicanes, because they obeyed not the Scribes and Pharisees, amongst whom they cannot denie, but that the Church was at that time.

The Protestants.

We do firmly beleue that neither the Church nor Councils haue any such absolute power to determine without the holy Scriptures, either beside or against them, or to bind other men to obey such decrees: Neither that the true Church of God dare, or will arrogate such power vnto it selfe: But that Councils are ordained for the discussing and deciding of doubtfull matters, according to the Scriptures and word written.

Argum. 1. If the Apostles preachings might be examined according to Scripture, much more the actes of all other Bishops and pastors. But that was lawfull in the Disciples of Berms Act. 17.
11. which are commended for it: therefore called noble courageous Christians, because of their prowess, and diligence in searching out of the truth. Ergo.

Argum. 2. All things necessarie to saluation to be beleued, are articles of our faith: but all such articles must be grounded vpon the word of God: therefore nothing can be imposed as necessarie to saluation without the word of God. Wherefore it is a blasphemous saying of the Papists, that the Church may make new articles of faith, Romans. 1. Tim. 3. self. 9. And Eckius maintained the same point against Luther, in the disputation at Lipsia, and brought forth a new article of faith, agreed of in the Council of Constance; that it is de necessitate salutis, of the neces-sitie of saluation, to beleue that the Pope is the head of the Church: The fathers of Basil more modest then so, concluding that it was an article of faith to beleue that Councils were above the Pope, doe tie this reason: Those things (say they) which we challenge for the superiourie of generall Councils, are gathered out of the sayings of our Saviour Christ &c. we are bound to obey them. Therefore we conclude, that the word of God onely written is the rule of faith, and of all things necessarie to be beleued: Remains out of Faith committeth by hearing, withstanding by the word Councils are to expound and declare articles of faith, not to establish new.

Argum. 3. S. Paul saith, if an Angel should preach a sermon, howe soe, whether hee be a man or a (the familie of which preaching is now onely to be found in their holy writings) in his be heard self Galath. 1. 8. 9. But an Angel preaching beside Scripture, is to be heard as soone, may sooner then a Council assembled of men decreeing any thing beside the word of God. Ergo, neither is such a Council to be respected, but rather to be despised according to the word.

This was the faith also of the holy Martyrs, for the which they nothing doubted to give their lives: Iustified Scriptures contained all things necessarie to saluation: neither would they receiue any decree of Church, Pope, or Council, not agreeable to the same.

Fact. Master Bradford saith, In testimonie of this faith I put my life, Epist. ad Landoni.
pag. 62. homo in lib. 1. de consil. cap. 18. homo in lib. 1. de consil. cap. 18.
Master Bishop holy Martyr, to Stories demanded, who said vnto him, When as the Iudge in Westminster hall giue sentence, doth the word giue sentence of the Iudge, maketh this answer, Civil matters be subiect to civil men, and they haue authoritie to iudge of them: but the word of God is the subiect to mans iudgement, but ouer to iudge all the thought, wisdom, and doing of man, Fox pag. 156.

Master Manus Martyr, when Bowen had thus said to him: Ah sir, you will have no more then Scripture teacheth, but even as Christ hath left it here. He thus answered: He that teacheth me any otherwise, I will not beleue him, pag. 1587. Thus wee see our doctrine hath been laid to the touchstone, and tried in the fire: and neither the workmen were ashamed, nor yet their worke burned. Wherefore it remaineth sound and sure, against the contentions brabbling, and sophisticall caule of all the Papists in the world.

Lastly, we will heare Augustine speake, Nec tu debet Ariminensis, neque ego Nicenum: tamquam praedicatum proferre concilium, scripturarum auctoritatibus, &c. Neither must I alleage the Nicene Councell, nor you the Arimine, I am neither bound to the one, nor you to the other, let the matter be tried by Scripture, cont. Maxim. Arrianum lib. 3. cap. 14. By thus fathers sentence therefore, no man is bound of necessitie to be tied to Councells, but the Scripture onely is absolutely to be beleued.

Wee haue also for this matter the euident testimonie of antiquitie; Constantinus the great thus spake in the Councell of Nice: Evangelici sunt libri & Apostolici antiquissimi Prophetarum sententiae, qui nos erudunt, quid de sacra lege sapiamus: expellentes igitur hostile certamen, ex verbis dominici imperatoris solutionem questionum mentis capiamus. There are the bookes of the Gospels, of the Apostles, and Prophets, which doe teach vs, what to hold in religion: therefore expelling all hostile and bitter contention, let vs seeke the solution of these questions out of Scripture.

Florentin concil. sess. 3. Andreæ Colossens. thus speaketh in the name of the Latin Church: Divino Evangelio supremum obtinens locum & dignitatem, in primis habet esse inuitandum. We must relie especially vpon the holy Gospell, as hauing the chiefe place and dignitie: Councells then must determine according to the Scripture, neither are we bound otherwise to giue care vnto them.

The Ciuill law thus saith, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 3. Martiau. Intra Apostolicas expositiones, &c. Those things which concerning the faith were decreed in the Councell of Chalcedon by our commaundement, were defined according to the expositions of the Apostles, &c. Et tit. 8. leg. 4. Valentinus speaking of the Chalcedon Councell he saith: Nihil adiungit sacrosancto symbolo, nec adiciens: Adding nothing to the sacred Creede, nor taking from it. Councells then must determine according to Scripture, and cannot adde new articles of faith.

So likewise their owne decrees testifie: Decr. p. 2. anst. 24. quast. 1. cap. 21. Non afferimus statum delectas, &c. Let vs not bring deceitfull waightes, to waigh as we thinke good our selues, saying, this is heauie, this light: but let vs bring the waightes and balance out of the Scriptures, &c. And their owne Master of Sentences thus saith: Ne ultra praeferat iudicium dei sermo de deo si forma fidei coram eis, non ergo aliquid addendum: That of God beyond Gods owne warrant, wee should not speake: the forme of faith is certaine, and nothing to be added to it, lib. 1. dist. 330.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION, WHETHER COUNCELLS be about the Pope or not.

37. Error.

The Papists, in libano 1. tit. 1. cap. 1. This is a matter yet not fully determined amongst the Papists: neither are they all of one opinion. In the Councell of Constance and Basle, it was fully concluded, that the Councell is about the Pope. Grisey of Paris, that was also present in the Councell of Constance, and a great doer against Joh. Huse, fully maintaineth the authoritie of Councells about the Pope. Other Papists more favourable to their new god might, say, that the Pope is by right about the Councell, but he may (if he will) submit himselfe to the Councell. But now cometh in the stout Iesuite, and saith with the rest of the Schoolmen, that the Pope hath such a soueraignie about the Councell, that he cannot be subject to their sentence, though he would, Belarm. de concil. lib. 2. 14. Yet he is in a mannering with himselfe: for saith he, in periculo schismatis, When there is a schisme, and it is not knowne who is the true Pope: in such a case the Councell is about the Pope. Let vs examine some of his best reasons.

Argum. 1. Now cometh in a great blasphemie. All the names, saith the Iesuite, that are given to Christ in the Scriptures, as head of the Church are ascribed to the Pope, as he is called lib. 1. dist. 330. anst. 24. quast. 1. cap. 21. a faithfull shepard in the Lords house: Pastor gregis, Ioh. 10. the shepheard of the flocke: Caput corporis ecclesiae, Ephes. 4. the head of his bodie the Church: Vir sanctus, Ephes. 5. the husband or spouse of the Church: All these titles (saith he) are due to the Pope: Ergo, he is about the Church, and so consequently about generall Councells, Belarm. de concil. lib. 2. 17.

O Lord, what great blasphemie is here, to appropriate the titles of Christ, to a mortall man! But goe to Belarmine, and the rest of that packe, fill vp the measure of iniquitie of your forefathers: say with Pope Gregorius, that the people of the world are the parts of his bodie: with Cassiodorus the Bishop in the Councell of Trene, the Pope being the light came into the world, and not loued darknes rather then light: with Pope Callistus in the Councell of Rhemes, who, when he saw the Council would not consent to communicate the Emperour, impatiently cried out that they had forsaken him, as Christ was left of his Disciples: with Imperium in the church, that all things in heaven and earth, and vnder the earth doe bowe the knee vnto him: with Ordo no Pope but a Cardinal, that sitting amongst his Bishops, blasphemously applied to himselfe the vision of Ezechiel, chap. 1. resembling the Bishops to the foure faced beastes, himselfe vnto God that appeared to the Prophet in the midst. Euen thus with the like spirit of blasphemie, doe the Iesuites cry out, that the Pope is the chiefe shepherd, steward, husband, and head of the Church vpon earth.

But wee will leaue to charge them so deeply with blasphemie, which notwithstanding they cannot anioide: let vs heare what the fathers of Basil say to this point. Testimonium saith the Pope is the husband; but they reason cleane contrary: the Church (say they) is the spouse of Christ: the Pope, make the best of him you can, is but a Vicar: but no man doth so prouide a Vicar, that he maketh his spouse subiect vnto him, but that the spouse is alwaies thought to bee of more authoritie then the Vicar, inasmuch as she is one bodie with her husband, whereas the Vicar is not so: thus haue they to the full answered the Iesuite, ex Euse Syluio. Better arguments they haue none for the Popes prerogative, then we haue seene.

Argument. The Pope by his sole authoritie may congregate a generall Council: Ergo, he is aboue a generall Council.

Ans. First, to this answereth the Council of Basil, Epistolae synodales after this manner: by denying of the argument: Ante Concilij congregationem Concilium non est, sed in primis congregatus est, statim potest et vniuersalis ecclesia, quae est intermediaria à Christo, in quibus et confidimus et si offensa Concilium supra Papam: Before the gathering together of the Council, it is as yet no Council: but as soon as it is congregated, the power and authoritie of the vniuersall Church is transfused into it, and so the Council becommeth aboue the Pope: therefore it followeth not, that because the Pope doth call before it be a Council, that he is aboue it, when it is called.

Secondly, we answer, as wee haue shewed in the question before, that this authoritie of summoning Councils belongeth not to the Pope.

Other arguments vsed by our aduersaries are answered to the full, by Iohannes Patriarch of Antioch, epistola Basil. Concilio. As first the Church receiueth the iurisdiction of the keyes from the Pope: Ergo, it is inferior. Secondly, Christ said to Peter, Fecisti my sheep, the pastor is aboue the sheepe. Thirdly, the Pope is the head of the Church: Ergo non legitimum est membra ab obedientia capitis recedere: Therefore it is not lawfull for the members to depart from the obedience of the head.

Ans. The Patriarch answereth thus: to the first, Petrus recepit clauis sub nomine & signo ecclesiae. Peter receiued the keyes not in his owne name, but in the name and signification of the Church. The Church then receiueth them not from Peter, but he receiued them for the Church.

To the second, Christ in saying to Peter, Fecisti my sheep, gaue him power super singularia membra, ouer some particular members, not ouer the vniuersall Church.

To the third he frameth this answer: first, he denieth the Pope to bee head of the vniuersall Church. Secondly, and yet he saith, Si caput in humero corporis officium languinem &c. If the head in the bodie be weake and distempered, it is lawfull for the partes, ad hoc ut & ceteris modis, to binde and cauterize it, least the sickness of the head should affect the whole bodie. And againe, he putteth this case: Si Papa esset furiosus & discerneret eum gladius &c. If the Pope were mad, and should runne vp and downe with a drawne sword, killing whom he met, it were lawfull for his subiects to take him, and binde him: Si hoc liceret pro salutem corporis &c. If this bee lawfull to be done by private men, for the health of the bodie, much more may a generall Council representing the vniuersall Church doe it, for the health of the soule. Who list to see shall finde diuers other popish arguments there answered: opuscul. Iohannes Patriarch. Antiochen.

The Protestants to him. THe Pope is by right, and ought to bee subiect to generall Councils, and that they haue authoritie to iudge, examine, suspend, punish and depose him, if there be just cause, it is proued thus: This matter was pitifully disputed vpon by the fathers of Basil, some of whose reasons, it shall be sufficient here to follow.

They proue this conclusion out of Scripture. First, whereas Panormianus had said, that the Pope was Lord of the Church: vnto him Sogonius answered, that it was the most honorable title of the Bishop of Rome, to be called the servant of the seruants of God: and Peter, saith he, forbiddeth pastors to behaue themselves as Lords ouer the Clergie, 1 Pet. 5. And if Christ the sonne of God, came not to be ministered vnto, but to minister and serue, how then can his Vicar haue any dominion? So was Panormianus answered.

Againc, the Diuines thus argued: Christ saith to Peter, Da ecclesiae, Peter is sent to the Church or Council: Ergo, the veritie doth reside in the Bishop of Rome, to the Council. But to this the Iesuite faith, that Peter was not yet entred into his office to bee chiefe Bishop, but was as a private person. So then belike, this rule of our Saviour Christ, die ecclesia, tell it to the Church, did but binde Peter, till Christ were ascended, and he received his Vicardome.

This caullous answere the fathers of Basil wisely foresaw, and prevented it: for they shew how Peter was subiect to Councils euen after the ascension: as Act. 15. Peter is rebuked (say they) by the congregation, because he went to Cornelius, an heathen man: as if it had not been lawfull for him to attempt any great matter without the knowledge of the congregation. But that seemeth to make more for the purpose, Galath. 2. where Paul rebuked Peter to his face, because contrarie to the decree of the Council of the Apostles, he did cooperare gentes iudicare, he would constraîne the Gentiles to doe like the Iewes: Ergo, Peter was subiect vnto the Council, xx. Anna Syluis.

Other reasons many were alleaged by the fathers of Basil. First, the Bishop of Borgen: As in euery well ordered kingdome, the whole realme should bee of more authoritie then the King; so the Church ought to be of more authoritie then the Pope, though he were prince thereof.

Argum. 2. The Diuines brought these arguments: The Church is the mother of the faithfull, and so of the Pope, if he be a faithfull man: the Pope is then the Churches sonne, as both Anacletus and Calixtus Bishops of Rome confessed: Ergo, how much the sonne is inferior to his mother, so much is the Church superiour to the Pope. Secondly, the Pope is inferior to Angels, he is not greater then Iohn Baptist, of whom it is said, that the least in the kingdome of God is greater than he: but the Angels doe generally accord vnto the doctrine of the Church, Ephel. 3:10. Ergo, the Pope is bound to doe the same, who is lesse then the Angels. These fathers thought none so absurd to denie the Pope to be inferior to Angels, and therefore labour not to proue it. Yet Antoninus an old Papist saith, Nou minus honor datur Papa, quam Angelis: There is no lesse honour due to the Pope, then to the Angels. Nay another saith (I thinke it be Pope Paschalis) Datur Episcopis, quod ne Angelis, ut Christi corpus crearent: It is graunted to Bishops, which is not given to the Angels, to create the bodie of Christ. But the fathers of Basil thought not these men worthe the answere; no more doe wee, and so let them passe. Thirdly, the Pope (say they) being the Vicar of the Church (for he is more truly so called then the Vicar of Christ) he may bee deposed of the Church: for a Lord may put out his Vicar at his pleasure: Ergo, the Pope is vnder Councils.

Argum. 3. If the Councils might not ouerrule the Pope, there were no remedie left to resist a wicked Pope: Shall we suffer all things, say they, to runne into ruine and decay with him? for it is not like, that he would congregate a Council against himselfe. To this the Iesuite answereth: that there is no remedie left, but to pray to God in such a case; who will either confound, or conuert such a Pope. Here is goodly diuinitie: we know that Antichrist shall at length be destroyed at the coming of Christ; but if he should be let alone in the meane while, and not bee bridleed, he might doe much hurt, as he hath done too much already. Yet the Iesuite confesseth, that a wicked Pope may be resisted by force and armes: and why not, I pray you, as well by peateable meanes? these sayings are contrarie, Belarm. cap. 19.

So then, this is popish diuinitie, that be the Pope neuer so wicked, doe he neuer so much harme, he is not to be controlled of any mortall man. Such doctiss schoole poynts, maintained especially by begging Friars, the fathers of Basil complained of: As that they should say, that no man ought to iudge the high and principall seate; that it cannot bee iudged, either by Emperour, Clergie, King, or people. Other affirme that the Lord hath reserved to himselfe the deposition of the chiefe Bishop. Others, yet more mad, are not ashamed to affirme, that the Bishop of Rome, though he carrie soules in neuer so great number to hell, yet is he not subiect to any correction, or rebuke. For all these strange and blasphemous positions, the fathers concluded, as ye haue heard, that the Pope ought to obey generall Councils.

Lastly, I will adioyne the iudgement of Augustine, who writing in his 162. epistle concerning the Donatists, whose cause was heard and determined by the Emperours appointment at Rome before Miltiades then Bishop there, and other Bishops assistants: and yet for all this the Donatists would not be quiet: Thus he saith, Putemus, illos iudices, qui Romam iudicauerunt, non bonos iudices fuisse: Restabat adhuc plenarium Concilium. Put case (saith he) that the Bishop of Rome and the rest, iudged corruptly: there remained yet another remedie: A generall Council might haue bin called, where the Iudges and the cause might further haue bin tried and examined, and their iudgement, if there were cause, reuerfed. Whereby it appeareth, say the fathers of Basil, that not onely the sentence of the Pope alone, but also the Pope with his Bishops ioyned with him, might be made frustrate by a Council. Here the Iesuite paltereth and saith, that a matter determined by the Pope in a particular Council, may bee called againe in question by the Pope in a generall Council. First, what neede that, seeing that a particular Council hauing the Popes authoritie, as the Iesuite confesseth, cannot erre? Againe, Augustine saith, Vbi cum ipso iudicibus causa posita agitur: In the which generall Council, the cause together with the iudges, of the which Miltiades was one, may be tried and examined: so that the Pope himselfe might bee adiudged by the Council, cell, and not the cause onely. Vpon the premises wee truly and iustly conclude, that the Pope is, and of right ought to be subiect to generall Councils.

This also was the iudgement of the holy Martyrs: Bishop Cramer appealed from the Pope to the next generall Council: the tenor of whose appeale you may finde; See pag. 1882. Master Latimer also being vniuertally condemned by Bishop White, the Popes Commissioner, appealed from his sentence to the next generall Council which should bee congregated in Christs name. And with this appellation the Bishop seemed to bee content, contrarie to the opinion of the Iesuite, who maketh the Pope supreme Iudge of generall Councils; and superiour vnto them, See pag. 1767.

Let vs see the consent of antiquitie. In the first generall Council, Constantinopol. Anno. 3. Honorius Bishop of Rome was condemned, because he was a Monothelite, affirming one will onely to be in Christ, and so consequently but one nature. Sergius & Honorius anathematized, Pyrrhus & Paulus anathematized. We hold Sergius and Honorius, Pyrrhus and Paulus accused: those three were Patriarchs in Constantinople and held the same error: the Council iudged and condemned Honorius: Ergo, it was greater in authoritie.

Marcellinus also was condemned in the Sinuesiane Council, for offering incense to Idols. Bel-larmine answereth first, that in the case of infidelitie such as this was, the Council may discusse the Popes case. Ergo, by his owne confession in some case the Council is aboue the Pope.

Secondly saith he: Marcellinus first condemned himselfe, and after that he was iudged of the Council.

Contra. But the matter appeareth to bee farre otherwise. 1. Marcellinus appeared foure times before the Council: the first time he laid the blame vpon the Priests and Deacons that did forsake him: the second time he asketh one of the witnesses vpon what day he saw him offering incense, and so would haue denied the fact: thirdly, he extenuated the fault, that he did not offer sacrifice, but onely burnt the incense in the fire. 2. There were 72 witnesses produced against him, to conuince him. 3. One Quirinus a Bishop seeing Marcellinus so stiffe in his owne defence, rose vp in the Council and said thus; Non recedam de synodo, I will not depart from the Synode, till thy heart be manifested, &c. and so Marcellinus at the last fell flat to the earth, and confessed his sinne, and was condemned of the whole Council, where were present 300. Bishops, and 30. Priests. Wherefore the Iesuite may be ashamed to goe against so euident a storie.

Stacius the third was accused of one Bassus: whereupon the Emperour Valentinian assembled a Council, wherein he was cleered and purged: Deer. par. 2. caus. 3. quæst. 5. c. 1.

Symmachus in a Romane Synode, dignitate sua expoliatus, was deprived of his dignitie: Deer. par. 2. caus. 2. quæst. 7. c. 41. in glossa.

Likewise the Church of Rome did anathematize Disforas Pope after his death: caus. 24. quæst. 6. cap. 6. Wherefore by these particulars it appeareth, that Councils haue been of an higher authoritie then the Popes: we can vige also their owne authorities against them.

Constant. Council. sess. 4. it was thus decreed, Synodus in spiritu sancto congregata generale Concilium faciens potestatem a Christo immediatè habet, cui quilibet cuiuscunque status, etiam populi existit obedi-re tenetur: A Synode congregated in the holy Ghost making a generall Council, hath power immediatly from Christ, to the which euery man, of what state soeuer, although he be the Pope, is subiect to obey. And sess. 45. Pope Martin ratified and confirmed whatsoever was decreed in this Council, in materijs fidei, in matters of faith: And that this was veritas fidei catholica, a veritie of the Catholike faith, to hold generall Councils to be aboue the Pope, it was concluded; Basilien. Council. sess. 33. The practise also of these two Councils was according to their decrees: for in the Council of Constance, three factious Popes were deposed: Johannes 23. Gregorius 12. and Bonifacius 13. and Martinus the 7. chosen Pope. In the Council of Basil Eugenius the 4. deposed, and Felix 5. elected.

Lastly, Agidius Viterbiensis, in his oration or sermon before the Lateran Council, in the hearing of Pope Innocentius the 2. said thus: Si quis forte ipsam pontificem per se inuenerit per se propter eius summe synodi auctoritatem metueret, & vereri consueuerunt: Nunc si synodum rei potestas repotamus, nihil illi potestatis, nihil metus, nihil vniuertus intelligimus: If any haue been so bolde, as to be light by the Pope, being but weake of himselfe, yet they feared and stood in awe of a Council: for if we will but call to mind the acts of Synodes, we shall vnderstand that there is nothing of greater power, strength, or defence then they. Here is a large confession, vttered euen in the hearing of the Pope, without checke or contriement, that Councils are of greater authoritie then the Pope. And it is agreeable also to their owne Canons: Deer. par. 2. caus. 3. quæst. 7. c. 35. If Peter were corrected by Paul, &c. how much more easily that which is confirmed by the whole Church, Unius Episcopi auctoritas, &c. ought to be preferred before one Bishops authoritie. And caus. 15. quæst. 1. c. 1. Gratianus, euery Christian ought not to bee ignorant, that what the vniuersall Church in Synode hath assented vnto, nullo magis alicuius sedem oportere, no See ought more readily to execute, then she first, first. So that by this Canon, even the first See is bound to keepe the decrees of the vniuersall Church.

THE EIGHT QUESTION, OF THE CONDITIONS and qualitie of generall Councils.

The Papists.

Their vnreasonable and vnequall conditions, are these and such like, as follow.

1 That the Pope onely should haue authoritie to summon, call, proroge, dissolve and confirm Councils, and he onely to be the iudge, President and moderator in Councils, or some at his appointment.

2 They will haue none to giue voices but Bishops, and such as are bound by oath of allegiance to the Pope.

3 That the Council is not bound to determine according to Scripture, but to follow their traditions, and former decrees of Councils.

4 That no Council is in force without the Popes assent, yea the Pope himselfe (say they) by his sole authoritie may abrogate and disannull the Canons and decrees of Councils.

These and such other conditions the Papists require in their Councils: So they will be sure, that nothing shall be concluded against them: And how vnreasonable these conditions are, I haue shewed severally in the particular questions belonging to this matter.

The Protestants.

Our conditions, which we would haue obserued and kept, in generall Councils, are these, most iust and reasonable:

1 That the Pope, which is a party, should be no iudge: for it is vnreasonable, that the same man should be both a party and a iudge: and therefore he ought not to meddle with calling and appointing Councils, with ruling, or moderating them, seeing it is like, he would worke for his owne aduantage.

Belarmus answereth, that this rule, that the same ought not to be a partie and a iudge, may holde in private and inferiour iudges, but not in the chiefe iudge, Belarm. lib. 2. cap. 21.

Contra. If it be iust that no man should be iudge in his owne cause, the same rule of iustice ought to bind both the inferior and superior iudges: so Athanasius tooke exception against the Patriarch of Antioch, by whom he was deposed, because he was his enemy, and a partie; and his exception was admitted in the Chalcedon Council, decr. p. 2. c. 3. qu. 5. c. 15.

Also Pope Nicholas the 1. Epist. ad Michaellem Imperator. bringeth in a saying of Gelasius sometime Bishop of Rome: Quare iudicium, quod praesidendi, obis non possit agitari? an apud ipsos, ut idem fuit & testis & iudex? sed tali iudicio, nec humana committi possunt negotia: I aske, that course of iudgement, which they pretend, where should it be handled? would they haue it among themselves, to be both witnesses and iudges? Which is not to be admitted, no not in humane affaires: Ergo, the Pope, by the testimonie of a Pope himselfe, ought not to be both accuser and iudge. Yea both the Ciuill and Canon law doe refuse him as an incompetent iudge, that is a partie in the cause: as Cod. lib. 2. tit. 6. Valentin. That no man in the same cause, should be an aduocate and a iudge, lib. 3. tit. 5. l. 1. Gratian. Nemo in sua causa iudex. That no man should be iudge in his owne cause. So likewise their owne Canons: decr. part. 2. caus. 4. qu. 4. c. 1. Fabianus: That no man should presume to be both an accuser and a iudge: And c. 2. Damasus: The same parties must not be both accusers and iudges. Yea and that the Pope himselfe whom they make the supreme iudge ought to obserue this rule, a president we haue in the Chalcedon Council, where, when Paschasius and Lucentius the Bishop of Romes Legates would haue Dioscorus excluded out of the Council, the iudges said thus to Lucentius, Si iudicis obtrinet personam, non ut accusator dehis persequi: If you take vpon you the person of the iudge, you cannot prosecute the matter as an accuser. Wherefore we iustly take exception against such Councils, where the Pope taketh vpon him to be iudge, seeing he ought not to be a iudge in his owne cause.

2 That such time and place be appointed, as when and where the Churches of Christendome may most safely and conveniently meete together: not at such a time as Paul the third called a Council, when all Princes in Christendome were occupied in great affaires: nor such a place, as he then appointed at Mantua in Italie, whither Princes could not come without perill of iourney and danger of life, being penned in by the Popes garrisons. Thus Pope, or Bishop Leo, (for then there were no Popes) writ to Martianus the Emperour, to haue the Council removed from Calchis to Italie, but he preuailed not. So Pope Eugenius would haue dissolved the Council at Basile, and brought it vnder his owne nose: but was withstood by the Council.

Concerning the quietnes and fireenes of the place to be chosen for the Council, the Synode of Basile thus writeth to the Bohemians, that whereas they had complained in times past, that they could could not have liberam audientiam, a free and safe hearing, iam cessabit, say they, omnis querela cessabit, now all occasion of complaint shall cease. Ecce iam locus est facilius plura audientia preberetur. Beholde we offer vnto you both freedom of place, and libertie of hearing.

Here Bellarmino maketh this answer, that whereas Cyprian hath this Canon lib. 1. capit. 3. That controuersies should there be tried, where they arise: that this is to be vnderstood of the particular suites of men, not of matters of faith, which may be in any place determined, as he sheweth by diuers presidents.

Contra. That such a place, not for iudgement of matters of fact onely, but in deciding of points of faith ought to be chosen, to the which all parties may safely, and without danger resort, both the Ciuill law and your Canons doe warrant: as first, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 1. l. 1. Constitutio. Personarum miserabilium &c. Miserable and poore persons must not be drawne out of their promiscue. And lib. 7. tit. 1. l. 26. Gratian. l. 1. iniquitas &c. The length of the journey doth hinder appeales to be made a farre off: So also the decrees consent hereunto 3. a. c. 1. q. 6. c. 1. Anathema. Peregrinatio iudicia subueniunt: That iudgements in a strange countrey must not be admitted, lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 28. Innocent. 3. That no man should be called aboue two daies journey from home, no not by the Apostolike letters, because of expenses, and wearines of journey: these two causes being rendered both by the Ciuil law and Canon, why no man ought to be summoned a farre off, may very well stand, and be obserued in congregating and calling of Councils.

3 We would haue it a free Councell, where euery man might fully vter his minde, and that there should be a safe conduct granted to all to come and goe: which the Pope for all his faire promises is vnwilling to doe, as it was flatly denied to Hierome of Prage in the Councell of Constance; to whom it was answered, that he should haue safe conduct to come, but none to goe. Neither if they should giue a safe conduct, were they to be trusted, for is cannot be forgotten, to their perpetuall infamie, that they brake the Emperour Sigismund safe conduct granted to Iohn Huss in the Councell of Constance, saying, that faith was not to be kept with heretikes.

Concerning this poynt also, the libertie of speech in Councils: Constantinus the Emperour thus writeth, epistol. ad Nicen. 2. Damus unicuique libertatem, ut sine omni formidine ea eloquatur, qua secum animo deliberauerit, quod veritas magis magis gloriatur, et in scriptis hanc audiat. We giue vnto euery man liberty, to vter without feare, what he hath deliberated in his minde, and to be heard without dread, that the truth may better appeare.

Bellarmino here answereth, that it is reasonable a safe conduct should be granted, as was offered of late at the Councell of Trent.

Contra. In deed such a safe conduct, as was offered to Iohn Huss by the Councell of Constance, as I haue said, which they might breake at their pleasure: but that such a place ought to be chosen indifferently, where euery man might goe and come safely, one of your owne Popes thought it reasonable, thus writing in defence of the King of Sicilie, cited and summoned by the Emperour: Clementin. lib. 1. tit. 1. l. 1. Non quod venire debuit ad iudicium exercitus feroci spiritum &c. What should he come to a iudge being garded with a fierce armie? Or to a populous place and of great power which was bent against him? Now if the Pope would call a Councell in Rome or in Italie, or in any other place, where he is received, may we not vse the same defence, which Pope Clement did for the King of Sicilie?

4 That the matter should not be left wholly to Bishops and Prelates, but that the learned of the Clergie and Laity besides, should giue voices, seeing the cause of religion is common and concerneth all. But most of all, that nothing be carried with violence or popularitie, against the Scriptures, but euery matter determined according to the truth thereof.

See for this matter the testimonie of Pope Nicholas the first, cited before question 3 of this controuersie: Fides vniuersalis est, omnium communis est, qua non solum ad Clericos, sed ad eos pertinet &c. That faith is vniuersall, and a thing common to all, and appertaineth not onely to the Clergie, but to Laymen, and generally to all Christians.

Bellarmino here answereth, that it is against the forme of all Councils, that any but Bishops should haue deciding voices in Councils.

Contra. The Iesuite if he would speake his conscience, knoweth the contrarie: for first in that Councell held by the Apostles, whose authoritie was greater then of Bishops, Act. 15. the question is determined by the whole consent of the Apostles and Presbyters or elders: at vers. 6. The Apostles and Elders came together to looke to this matter: and vers. 22. It seemed good to the Apostles and Elders &c.

So in the Chalcedon Councell there were assembled 630. Fathers, not all Bishops, but many of them Priests, as in the first action, the Egyptian heretikes took exception against the Priests, calling them superfluous: and Martianus alloweth the acts of this Councell, actum a sacerdotibus, which were done by Priests assembled at Chalcedon, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 24. leg. 3.

And S. Hierome saith, whose sentence is approved, de scriptis. 1. 6. q. 1. c. 7. That as the Romans had their Senate, without whose Councell they did nothing: Ita & nos habemus senatum nostrum: scilicet Presbyterum. So the Church also hath their Senate, the companie of Presbyters: Wherefore if Priests be as Senators in Councels, there is no question, but they ought to haue determining voices.

It is a most reasonable condition, that all things in Councels should be decided by the Scriptures. Bellarminus answereth no, because according to the law of Martian, nothing ought to be called in question, which hath been concluded in Councell, as this hath been determined in the seventh generall Synode, that traditions not written ought to be received, Bellarmin. lib. 1. c. 21. respons. ad 4. conditionem.

libet. 6.

Contra. First, the law of Martian speaketh of articles of faith once concluded, which ought not afterward to be doubted of, and of such conclusions, as are made iuxta Apostolicas institutiones: according to the institutions of the Apostles: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 3. But this decree of the seventh Synode is neither an article of faith, nor yet agreeable to the Apostles institutions. Secondly, as for the seventh Synode, we with the Greekes reiect it as an idolatrous Synode, and afterward repealed with the actes thereof in the Councell of Frankford, vnder Charles: yea one of their owne Popes, Adrian the first thus writeth of this Synode, Perum verecundè abutentes, &c. They doe without all shame abuse old wines fables and dreames, &c. Thirdly, that it is agreeable to the ancient practise of Councels, so haue all things decided by Scripture: see before question 6. of this controversie.

Such a Councell we refuse not, nay we much desire, which is the true generall Councell: that is not generall, where all men cannot speake; no freedome nor libertie graunted for men to vtter the truth, where all things are partially handled, and are swayed by one mans authoritie. Wherefore the Rhemists slander vs in saying we raile vpon generall Councels, annot. in Act. 15. 10. and that we refuse them, 2. Galath. 1. Whether we or they are enemies to true, generall, free, holy, indifferent Councels, let all men iudge.

THE FOVRTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE BISHOP OF ROME, COMMON- LY CALLED THE POPE.

His great and waightie Controuersie containeth thine seuerall questions.

- 1 Whether the regiment of the Church be Monarchicall.
- 2 Whether Peter were the prince of the Apostles, and by our Sauour Christ made head of the Church.
- 3 Whether Peter were at Rome and dyed Bishop there.
- 4 Whether the Bishop of Rome be the true successor of Peter.
- 5 Concerning the primacie of the Bishop of Rome: sixe parts of the question. First, whether he haue authoritie ouer other Bishops. Secondly, whether appeals are to be made to Rome. Thirdly, whether the Pope be subiect to the iudgement of any. Fourthly, whether he may be deposed. Fifthly, what primacie he hath ouer other Churches. Sixthly, of his titles and names.

6 Whether the Bishop of Rome may erre, and likewise whether the Church of Rome be subiect to error.

7 Of the spirituall iurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome: two parts. First, whether hee can make lawes to binde the conscience. Secondly, whether other Bishops doe receiue their iurisdiction from him.

8 Of the Popes temporall iurisdiction: two parts. First, whether he haue authoritie adoue Kings and Princes. Secondly, whether he be a temporall Prince.

9 Of the prerogatives of the Pope.

10 Concerning Antichrist nine parts. First, whether Antichrist shall be some one singular man. Secondly, of the time of his coming. Thirdly, of his name. Fourthly, of his nation and kindred. Fifthly, where his place and seate shall be. Sixthly, of his doctrine and manners. Seuenthly, of his miracles. Eighthly, of his kingdom and wars. Ninthly, whether the Pope be a very Antichrist: of these in their order.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER THE

Regiment of the Church be Monarchical!

WE are not ignorant that the Philosophers made three formes and states of government in the common wealth: the Monarchieall, when in the principall and fourest power rested in one, as in the King; the Quene, or Emperour; as Rome Emperour was ruled by Kings; and many yeares after by Emperours. Secondly, the Aristocratically, where the common wealth was gouerned by an assembly and Senate of Nobles, as the Romanes had a long time. Then Consuls and Senators. Thirdly, the Democratically, which is the popular state, when the people and multitude bare the greatest sway. As sometimes in Rome, when the officers for the people had the chiefe authoritie. Now of all these in common weylth, the first kind is the best and safest, the Monarchieall or princely gouernment. The question now is whether the same forme ought to be receyued in Church gouernment, and in what sort of things are to be obserued. First, that we haue not to deale in this place with that part of Ecclesiasticall regiment, which in the Princes liath interest, as in ordaining Ecclesiasticall Lawes, and relating to the excommunications thereof: but the question is onely of that regiment Ecclesiasticall, which is proper to the officers of the Church, which consisteth in the minister of the word and Sacraments, in ordaining and electing of Church-ministers in the dispensing of the Sacraments of the Church, in the Ecclesiasticall censures and discipline, and such like: wherein the Church they ought to haue a chiefe Bishop, from whom all other receiue this power in the ministerie. Secondly, the question is, what of the spirituall gouernment of Christ, where the Bishop is Monarch and King, of his Church. But of the outward and externall regiment vpon earth. Thirdly, we speake not of the state of any particular Church, either Nationall, prouinciall, or diocessall, but of the general state of the Church: whether ouer all Churches there ought to be one chiefe Bishop. These things premised, we come now to the question.

21. That there ought to be one chief Monarch or high Bishop over all the Churches in all parts of the world.

Argument. The militant Church is in all things invulnerable and conquers the bodies of the triumphant companies in Heaven: as Heb. 8. 5. Moses was bid to make all things according to the pattern shewed in the Mount. But in Heaven there is but one Queen, the Mother, and she is the commander of the Angels, even Michael the Archangel, Raphael, Gabriel, and all Angels fought. Ergo, it ought to be so upon earth. Behold now, Michael the Archangel is named on our Latin and English

We answere: First, the Church ypon earth, neither is, nor can be like unto the Church of Iherusalem: for there is no temple, Reuel. 3. and There shall enter no temple into it: and many such like differences there are: We are bid so follow them in hells, and obedience, for farre we must imitate the Angels, as in the Lords prayer a Psalm. As for imitation and conformitye in other things, we haue no such commandment: we are promised blessing to be like them, but that is not yet. Neither doth that place proue any such thing, Heb. 8. For how following in Moses was shewed a patterne to make the Tabernacle by: Exod. 25. the Church hath a patterne of her go- perment from heauen? When they can shew any such patterne reuealed in the world. (For their dreames and phantasies we will not beleue) for the Church as Moses had for the Tabernacle, then they shall say somewhat.

It is a vaine curiositie so to defiant of the Angels, as to appoint them a Capaine and commander, and to make nine orders or bands of them, as our Romish monks in Ephes. vi. 12. These are but their dreames, they haue not a word in Scripture for it. And concerning Michael they are much deceived, for in that place Apocal. 12. 7. Christ is called Michael, Michael and his Angels fought against the Dragon. And who, I pray you, is the chiefe Capaine of the Church against the diuell and his host But Christ! And so is it expounded verf. 10. Next is saluation in heaven, and the strength and kingdome of our God, and the power of his Christ: Here he is called Christ, who before is Michael. In other places also, Michael is vnderstoode to be Christ, as Dan. 10. 21. there is none that holdeth with me but Michael your Prince; here Michael is the Prince of the Church, and not of the Angels. And that Michael is not the Prince of the Angels, as our adversaries meane, taking Michael for an Angel, it is proved out of the 13. verf. Michael one of the chiefe Princes: the Angels are all called Princes, and none one to be Prince aboue them.

2197 Likewise the nature and signification of the world? Answer agreed hereunto: for it is compounded ded of three his one personhood as much as to say, one that is equally and God: which name in this sense cannot be given vnto any creature.

Further, Epistle Iud. 9. there is mention made of Michael the Archangel, who strove against the Diuel, and Michael the Archangel. Michael is the name of the Apostle called Michael to that place of Zachar. 3. 2. where the very same Michael is named. Michael is the name of the Prophet called him Lebanah, that spake those words, and here the Apostle calleth him Michael: So that in this place it must needs be vnderstood that Michael is not a name of a creature, but of a person.

But to conclude, we deny not, but that Michael may be the name of some glorious Angel: but duties of his place are common to many. And againe, it will not stand with them, but that there may be degrees of excellencie amongst the Angels, as there shall be amongst the Saints: but that any one such any such excellencie and standing should be over the rest, it is a curious and presumptuous fornication.

The Church of the old Testament was a figure of the Church vnder the New: but they had a high Priest, and one Christ, and yet there ought to be more. Belarmine thus saith, and hee is answered, first, that the high Priest was a figure, but neither of Peter nor Pope, but only of Christ: for in two things, but the high Priest resembled Christ, in offering of sacrifice (so hath Christ offered up himselfe Heb. 7. 27.) and in entering into the sanctuary to make atonement for the people: so Christ entered into the heavenly sanctuary, to appeare in sight for vs before God, as the Apostle saith, Heb. 9. 24. And yet neither of these the high Priest could be a type either of Peter or Pope: for Michael Belarmine saith, Michael was a figure, not of Christ only, but of Peter, and his successors, esp. 9. cap. 1. 3. Michael Belarmine saith, Michael was a figure, not of Christ only, but of Peter, and his successors, esp. 9. cap. 1. 3. Michael Belarmine saith, Michael was a figure, not of Christ only, but of Peter, and his successors, esp. 9. cap. 1. 3. Michael Belarmine saith, Michael was a figure, not of Christ only, but of Peter, and his successors, esp. 9. cap. 1. 3.

Neither doth it follow, because there was an high priest in one country, therefore there ought to be one over the Churches in all countries: as the Iesuite frameth an other argument by a comparison, because a Bishop is over his diocese, a Metropolitane over his prouince, there may be a Pope over the whole Church: For by the same reason, because a Lord may be the chiefe ruler of a signorie, a Duke in his prouince, a Prince in his kingdome, therefore there ought to be an Emperour over all the world: or as M. Caluine saith, because one field is committed to one Husbandman, so is it to be said, that the whole world may: which were a thing impossible: or againe, against his own bid, as hee saith, 1. 8. de Haer. 1. 8. de Haer. 1. 8.

Belarmine answereth, first, it followeth rather strongly out the contrarie, that if one particular Church hath neede to haue one chiefe priest to keepe it in vnitie: much greater neede hath the whole Church to haue one principall, because the whole Church is in greater danger of schisme and diuision, then one particular.

Secondly, the Iesuite had said something, if one man were as well able to prouide for the peace of the whole Church, as for the vnitie of one: but now he is not. But the best way to auoide schisme, is for euery countie to be gouerned in it selfe: as in the Civill state, one Monarch is better able to keepe one kingdome from rebellion, then many kingdomes: And this is the reason why the many Monarchies were dissolved, for that their prouinces rebelled, and withdrew their obedience from them. Secondly, there is also one head of the vniuersall Church, that doth preserue it in vnitie, Iesus Christ: and therefore we neede none other: as the Apostle saith, Ephes. 4. 15. Let vs follow the truth in love, and grow vp vnto him which is the head, that is Christ.

Belarmine secondly thus answereth Master Caluine similitude: that one husbandman is not by himselfe sufficient, yet by his seruants may occupie many large fields: and so the Pope by his ministers may be pastor of the whole Church.

Caluine saith, this similitude holdeth still, for as it were an seruement, that all tillage in the world, may in one countie, should be occupied vnder the title and interest of one man: for by this meanes corn might be engrossed, prices raised, the common wealth hindered: so was it as hurtfull for the Church to be vnder the command of one that soe stalled all causes, and sought advantage to himselfe.

These ought not to be any one chiefe Bishop, Pope or prelate, to exercise iurisdiction over the whole Church, we doe thus make it good. We acknowledge no head of the Church but Christ, neither doth the Scripture attribute this title of Master over the whole Church, but only to Christ. If the Pope or any els be the head, the Church is his body, which Belarmine is ashamed to graunt yet. Pope Belarmine saith.

Again, if he be the head, he must doe the duty of an head, which is, to knit and ioine the parts together, and to giue effectually power to euery part. Ephes. 4.16. where the Apostle alludeth to the gouernment of mans body: in the which the parts receiue a double benefite from the head, the knitting and ioining together by sinewes, which come from the head; and sense and motion also giuen to euery part from the head: but it were blasphemie to thinke this of the Pope, that he giueth any influence to the Church. If they answer, he is but a ministeriall head, Christ is the principall. We say againe, that although these things are principally wrought by the principall head, yet they must be done instrumentally, or ministerially by the Ministeriall head: or else it is but a rotten head: such an one as the Woolfe found in a caruers shop. (as you know the fable is) a goodly head, saith he, but without witte or braine. If Christ performe all the duty of the head himselfe, then is there no other head: if the Pope doe somewhat that belongeth to the head, tell vs, what is it? If he will be an head and doe nothing, surely he must needes be a brainelesse and witlesse head.

Argum. 2. It is a dangerous and impossible thing to haue the charge of all Churches committed to one man: God alone is sufficient to beare that burthen. Saint Paul saith, who is sufficient for these things? No pastor or minister, that is but set ouer one flocke or parish, is sufficient to preach the word: much lesse is any one man sufficient to gouerne the whole Church.

Belarmine answereth: first, S. Paul saith of himselfe, that he had the care of all Churches, 1. Cor. 11.28. We reple againe, first, then belike S. Paul was vniuersall pastor and not Pater. Secondly, we must consider that the Apostles were sent to all the world: their calling was not limited; when they had planted the Gospell in one place, they did take care also for other places: but now there is no such Apostolicall calling. Thirdly, Paul did not beare this burthen alone, but the Apostles and Euangelists were his coadjutors and follow-helpers.

Secondly, saith he, why may not the care of the whole Church be committed to one man, as well as the gouernement almost of the whole world was appointed by God to Nathan, Cyrus, Augustus; seeing the gouernement of the Church is easier then the ciuill and pollicie regiment?

We reple. First, we neuer read of any that had dominion ouer the whole world; as the Pope challengeth to haue ouer the whole Church, which is disperfed throughout the world. Secondly, these great and large Monarchies were said to haue been giuen of God, Dan. 2.37. Not that this large dominion and vsurpation ouer other Countreyes so much pleased God; (for the people of God the Israelites in their most flourishing estate neuer had such souerainty ouer other countreies; but by voluntarie subiection; as in Salomons dayes, 1. King. 4.21: the Kings round about brought presents vnto him;) but because the Lord turned and vied this their large and mighty dominion to the good of his Church: for Cyrus was a defender of the Church, against all that bare euill will thereto: and the large Empire of the Romans serued very commodiously for the propagation of the Gospell. Thirdly, the Iesuite sheweth his skill, when he saith, that the regiment of the Church is easier then the gouernement of the Commonwealth: Whereas there is no greater and weightier burthen vpon earth, then is the charge of soules. It seemeth the Pope taketh his ease, finding the care of the Church to be so easie and pleasant a thing: indeede as he vseth it, it is no great matter; for he preacheth not, but giueth himselfe to ease and idleness and all princely pleasures. But England hath found by experience, and so did that worthy and famous Prince King Henry the eight, that there was neuer matter so hardly compassed, as was the reformation of the Church, and the suppression of idolatrie and superstition in this land. S. Chrysostome better knew the weightie charge of a Bishop, then any of the Popes that preach not, or then the Iesuite seemeth to vnderstand: he writeth cleane contrary, Esse difficilius Episcopum agere, quam regere: That it was an harder matter to be a Bishop, then a King, &c. And againe; The whole world hath but one Emperour Vniuersalis Episcopus, &c. A Bishop is but ouer one citie; but his care is so much the greater, as a tempestuous sea exceedeth a small river troubled with the winde, Hier. 3.10. Alia. This godly father sheweth the vanitie of the Iesuities argument, that an example from the Ciuill state is not to be taken for Ecclesiasticall gouernment. And how impossible it is for one man to manage all the busines of the Church, one of your owne Popes this complainingly writeth: Beatus Card. Extraneus lib. 3. tit. 8. 13. Multis modis, quasi totius praeuinculae regitur, &c. We are ouercharged with multitude of busines, as a brooke that runneth downe with many waters, &c. Wherefore Augustinus thus saith; Nemo nostrum Episcopum Episcopatus constituit, aut quasi tyrannice terrore ad obsequendi necessitatem collegas suos adigit, de Bapt. 2.2. None of vs doth count himselfe a Bishop ouer other Bishops, or taketh vpon him after a commanding manner, as tyrants use, to enforce his followers to obey. Ergo, by his iudgement all Bishops are of like and equall authoritie.

Argum. 3. The Apostles describing the Hierarchie of the Church, saith, that Christ hath giuen some to be Apostles, some Prophets, &c. he saith not, he hath ordained one chiefe Bishop. And againe, And he hath giuen some to be Pastors, and some to be Teachers, &c. he saith not, one Pope, &c. Ephes. 4. 11.

Belarmine answereth. 1. That the chiefe gouernment of the Church was committed to all the Apostles while they liued; but after the death of the Apostles, the Apostolike authoritie remained in Peter's successor onely, and so the Pope is signified in the Apostles, per ad argum. 2.

Contra. First, why should not the rest of the Apostles haue power as well as Peter, to leaue their authoritie to their successors, as S. Paul saith, 1. Cor. 9. 5. Habeo uos in potestate, &c. as well as Cephas leade a sister, a wife, &c. As he had power equall to Peter in this particular, so in the rest also. Secondly, if Peter left the gouernment Apostolike to his successor, what doe you thinke of S. Iohn, the suruiuer of the Apostles, had he also resigned his Apostleship to Peter's successor, for he liued after Peter. Thirdly, there were other Sees alwaies as well counted Apostolike, as Rome: Syrus epistol. 4. ann. 1. Extra consecrationem sedis Apostolicae &c. That no man should take vpon him to ordaine a Bishop, without the knowledge of the Apostolike See: meaning the Primare or Metropolitane. By your Popes testimonie, euery Pimate is Apostolike.

Belarmine. 2. The Pope is comprehended in these words: one bodie, one spirit: for as the bodie is knit in one obedience to the head, so the Church to the Pope.

Contra. First, by this reason the Church shall bee the Popes bodie; which the Defuite denied before. Secondly, he hath vttered a great blasphemie: for that which the Apostle attributeth onely to Christ, by whom all things being created, &c. Ephes. 4. 16. he giueth to the Pope.

We may adioyne vnto this that hath been alleaged, certaine reasons out of Bishop Longland's Sermon, which he preached before the King: who although in his time he were a great persecutor of the flocke of Christ, yet herein he held the truth: That there can be no other head or Monarch of the vniuersall Church, but Christ: thus he sheweth it: Christ onely is the great Prophet: so the Angell declared vnto Maria, Magnus vocabitur, he shall be called great, Luk. 1. And againe, Prophetam magnu sortitus inter uos, a great Prophet is risen amongst vs, Luk. 7. Sinne maketh a man small and lowly, vertue and holynesse maketh him great. No man was euer without sinne but Christ: Ergo, he onely was the great Prophet. The Pope nor yet any mortall man, cannot forgive sinne, as this Bishop doth; nor iustifie as he doth: neither enter into Sancta Sanctorum with his owne blood, as hee did: therefore no mortall man can bee this great Bishop. Hoc illi, Fax, pag. 2. 150.

Let vs see what antiquitie saith, Theodosius patriarch of Constantinople president of the seventh generall Councell, thus writeth, Epistol. ad Adrianum Papam. Nos accipientes uenerandos uiros legatos vestros ad ipsam Metropolim uenimus: & omnibus nobis sedantibus, Aliger nobis caput, utramque ipsam Sanctam Bisum est. We together with your reuerend Legates came to the Metropolis or chiefe Citie of Nice, and sitting all together, it seemed good to chuse vs an head, euen Christ. He acknowledgeth no head of the vniuersall Church but Christ.

Lastly, in defence of this article Iohn Huss gave his life: Non est scitum illa apparetia, quod oportet esse unum caput in spiritualibus regens Ecclesiam. There is no apparence or likely hood of crutch, that there shoulde be one head in spirituall things to gouerne the Church. Christus sine talibus capitibus monstrat, per suos ueraces Discipulos sparsos per orbem terrarum, melius suam ecclesiam regulantur. Christ without such monstrous heads did better gouerne his Church by his true Disciples dispersed ouer the world: Articuli. 27. abbas. Constantin. Concil.

THE SECOND QUESTION, WHETHER PETER

were the chiefe, and Prince of the Apostles, and assigned by Christ to be head of the Church

37. Error.

This our aduersaries doe stiffly maintaine, that he was not onely head of the Church, but of the Apostles also, Belarmine, lib. 1. de pontif. cap. 1. &c. And the Rhemists doubt not to call him the chiefe and Prince of the Apostles, 1. Cor. 9. vers. 5. per ad argum. 2.

Argum. 1. We will omit many of their weightie arguments, as out of these and such like places: I haue prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith should not faile: Cast forth thy net into the deepe, I will make thee a Fisher of men: Peter payed toll for Christ and himselfe: Peter drew the net to the land full of great fish: Peter onely drew out his sword in the defence of Christ: Ergo, Peter was the Prince of the Apostles and head of the Church. anwers. Basilic. Fax pag. 673.

Such other goodly arguments our Rhemists doe make: Peter did excommunicate Anania and Saphira: he healed the lame by his shadow: Ergo, he was the head of the Church. anwers. Alti. fol. 5. 8. Again, Peter's person was guarded with foure quaternions of Souldiours, Act. 1. 4.

the Church prayed for him, ibid. fol. 4. Paul nameeth him Cephas, 1. Cor. 9. 1. Ergo, he was chiefe of the Apostles. Are not here goodly arguments thinke you? To these reasons I neede make no other answer, then that which our learned countrie man doeth in his Annotations. You must, saith he, bring better arguments, or else children will laugh you to scorne, Fulk. Annot. Alt. 5. fol. 5. Let vs see therefore if they haue any better.

Argum. 2. They take that to be a maine inuincible place for them, Matth. 16. 18. Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I builde my Church: Ergo, the Church is builde vpon Peter.

To make this argument the more strong, they set vnder it diuers props: First, why did Christ giue Peter this name more then to any other of the Apostles, to call him Peter, of Petra a Rocke, but to shew that he was appoynted to be the foundation of the Church? Bellarmine cap. 17. We answere, Christ hereby signified, that Peter should be a principall pillar of his Church, as the rest of the Apostles, Ephes. 2. 20. He changed also the names of some other Apostles, as Samias and Iohn were called Boanerges, the sonnes of thunder, Mark. 3. Therefore this was no such preeminence to Peter: neither is it true that Peter was almost called by no other name, for he is often in the Gospell after this called by his old name Simon, Mat. 16. 17. and 17. 25. Fulk. Annot. in Ioh. 1. fol. 7. Secondly, againe (saith Bellarmine) the text is adificabo, I will build my Church: but if Christ be here taken for the rocke, his Church was built already, for many beleued in him: But Peter was not made the foundation of his Church, till afterward after his resurrection; and therefore he saith, I will build.

We answere. First, it is a corrupt glosse, to say the Church of Christ was not builde, till after the resurrection: for seeing that many beleued before in Christ, and made a Church, either they must graunt, that the Church was without a foundation, or else, that the foundation was changed from Christ to Peter. Secondly, it is taken therefore for the enlarging and intreating of the Church of God. It followeth not, because Christ saith, I will build, and his Church was begun to be built already, that therefore another kinde of building must be excogitate: no more then, because Christ gaue his spirit to the Apostles, Matth. 10. 1. and againe, Ioh. 20. 22. and yet biddeth them stay at Ierusalem till they should receiue the holy Ghost, Acts 1. 7. that therefore they should looke for another holy Ghost, or as though they had not receiued the holy Ghost before. But as the sending of the holy Ghost, is meant, for the increase and more plentifull measure thereof, so is the building of the Church here taken for the increase of the building.

We yet further answere with Augustine: Super hanc petram, quam confessus es, edificabo ecclesiam: Vpon this rocke, which thou hast confessed, will I build my Church: So that in this place is meant not Peter to be the rocke, but either Christ, whom he confessed, or his faith; whereby he confessed him; which cometh all to one effect. There is no great difference, whether we say, the Church is builde vpon Christ, or faith is the foundation of the Church, for faith is an apprehension of Christ: but of the person of Peter it can no more be vnderstood then of the rest of the Apostles, who in some sense are called the foundation of the Church; namely in respect of their holy Apostolike doctrine, vpon the which the Church is built, Ephes. 2. 20. Bellarmine and the Iesuites denie not, but here is relation also to the faith of Peter, but faith considered in his person. We answere: if they meane Peters particular faith, which was a proper adiunct to himselfe, the vniuersall Church cannot be built vpon that faith, seeing when Peter dyed, his faith also, as a proper accident to his person, ceased: if they vnderstand that generall faith, whereby Peter in the name of all the rest made this confession; then they all are as well made pillars and foundations of the Church, as he, because it was their generall confession, Fulk. annot. in 16. Matth. fol. 8.

Let vs now see howe the holy Martyrs haue vnderstood this place, Thou art Peter, &c. First, Iohn Huse thus interpreteth this place: that Christ in saying, vpon this rocke, &c. did not purpose to build the Church vpon Peter, but vpon himselfe, who is the true Rocke: for as much as Iesus Christ is the onely head and foundation of euery Church; and not Peter; Fulk. pag. 61. dist. ad artic. 9.

A Sir Iohn Bortwick Knight, condemned for the truth in Scotland, anno. 1546. thus declareth his minde: as Abraham tooke his name of the multitude, which should come of his seed, so Peter was named of the rocke; but Abraham was not the multitude it selfe, no more was Peter the rocke: for the Church should be stayed vpon a weake foundation if Peter were the ground thereof, who bring amazed and overcome with the words of a little wench, did so constantly deny Christ; Fulk. pag. 1260.

Bishop Ridley Martyr, agreeth in the same exposition: Christ said vnto Peter, vpon this rocke of thy confession I will build my Church: for this beleefe that Christ is the sonne of God, is the foundation of Christianitie, and the foundation of the Church: Christs Church is not built thess vpon the frailtie of man, but vpon the stable, and infallible word of God, Fulk. p. 178.

See the consense also of antiquitie: Fabianus B. of Rome, Epistol. 3. In ecclesia supra petram statum, dum

dom confessionis soliditas humiliter tenetur: In the Church, we then stand vpon the rocke, while we hold the sound confession of faith with humilitie:

Papianus epistol. ad Romanos imperator. vpon these words: Tu es Petrus, thus writeth: Super ista confessio edificabo ecclesiam meam: I will build my Church vpon this confession, and the gates of hell, &c.

Council. Basiliens. oration. ad Bohemos in appendice. Super hanc petram, scilicet fidei, edificabo ecclesiam: I will build my Church vpon this rocke (that is to say) of faith. Thus we see, that those ancient Bishops of Rome, and former Councils haue expounded this text, no otherwise, then we doe now.

S. Ambrose is a notable witness in this case: Petrus primatum confessionis accepit, non honoris, &c. Peter received the primacie of Confession, not of honour, the primacie of faith not of order, he answered before the other, nay for the other Apostles: de incarnat. cap. 4. And againe, cap. 5. Fide est Ecclesie fundamentum. Faith is the foundation of the Church: for it was not spoken of Peter self, but of his faith, that the gates of hell should not preuaile against him, &c.

And Origen hath an excellent place to this purpose: Tract. 1. in Matth. Petra est quisquis, &c. Every Disciple of Christ, that drinketh of the spirituall rocke, is this Peter or rocke: for if we thinke that the Church is built vpon Peter alone, what shall we say of Iohn the sonne of thunder, and of the rest of the Apostles? shall we dare to say, that the gates of hell shall not preuaile against Rom onely? &c. Thus these Fathers expound this place, not of Peter person, but of his faith.

Argum. 3. Another place, which our aduersaries mightily vrge, are those words which follow vers. 19. I will giue vnto thee the keyes of the Kingdome of Heauen; whatsoeuer thou shalt binde in earth, shall be bound in Heauen: Ergo, Peter had especiall iurisdiction giuen him more then any of the rest, Bellarm. cap. 12.

We answer. First, as Peter confessed in the name of all the rest, so this power is giuen him not onely for the rest (as the Rhemists falsely charge vs, that we make Peter a proctor for others) but together with the rest. Peter person must be excluded: for immediately after he deserved for certaine slip of his person to be called Sathan: it were an vnfit match, the same person at the same time to be honoured with the glorious title of the rocke of Christ, and to sustaine so great a rebuke as to be called Sathan. Secondly, here is no more promised to Peter then vnto all the rest of the Apostles, Matth. 18. 18. They likewise haue authoritie giuen them to binde and loose; and it is performed to them all alike, Ioh. 20. 23.

2. By the keyes here cannot be vnderstoode that large iurisdiction which the Papists dreamt of, as not onely the authoritie and chaire of doctrine, iudgement, knowledge, discretion between true and false doctrine, all which we graunt together with Peter to haue been giuen to all the Apostles besides: But, say they, hereby is signified the height of gouernement, the power of making lawes, of calling Councils and confirming them, of ordaining Bishops and Pastors, finally to dispense the goods of the Church spirituall and temporall: All this is added without ground, neither had either Peter or any of the Apostles this ample authoritie, no nor the Bishops of Rome for many hundred yeeres after Christ. For this plenarie power of the keyes, when they signify a soueraigne and chiefe, and surpassing power, are so onely giuen vnto Christ, and to no mortall creature: He is said to haue the key of David, who openeth and no man shutteth; who shutteth and no man openeth; Apocalyp. 3. 7. Ezech. 16. 26. Matth. 17. 20.

Lastly, I will oppose the iudgement of the Fathers of Basile, who alleage out of Augustine, that Peter received the keyes for the whole Church; and out of Ambrose, that when Christ said to Peter, pasc oves, the blessed Apostle tooke not charge of them alone, saith he, but together with vs, and we together with him, Fax. pag. 673.

It shall not be amisse also to adioyne the opinion of the holy Martyrs, concerning the true sense of this place: I will giue vnto thee the keyes, &c.

First, Thomas Beza Martyr, he saith, that as well to the rest, as to Peter: for Peter had no more authoritie giuen him then the other Apostles: or else the Churches planted in euery kingdome by their preaching, are no Churches. S. Paul also saith, vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Ephes. 2. 20. that is, indifferently vpon them all, Fax. pag. 1039.

Sir Iohn Barwick confessor of the truth in Scotland, and condemned for the same; he alleageth out of Augustine, that Peter, when he received the keyes, did figure the whole Church: for as Peter all being demanded, answered for them all, thou art Christ; so he received this power for them all, and in the name of the rest, Fax. pag. 1260. so answereth also Master Lambert Martyr, alleaging to that purpose the authoritie of Cyprian: respons. ad articulu. 3. pag. 1119.

Master Philip Martyr saith, that Peter received the keyes in the name of the rest: citing a place out of Augustine to that end: Si hoc Petro solum dictum est, non habet Ecclesia; si autem Ecclesia habet, quando clauis accepit, totam Ecclesiam designauit: If it were said onely to Peter, then the Church hath not this power: but if the whole Church haue this power, namely to binde and loose; then

then Peter, when he received the keyes, represented the whole Church. 10. tratt. in Iohann. Philop. pag. 1804.

For the meaning of this text also, let vs consult with antiquitie: Concil. Aquisgranens. cap. 9. ex Jfider. Ceteri Apostoli cum Petro par. consortium honoris & potestatis acceptum: therest of the Apostles together with Peter receiued the like fellowship of dignitie and authoritie.

*Synod. Coloniens. sub Adulpo: Medium 6. cap. 1. vpon these words, Tibi dabo claves, &c. do commere thus: quam promissionem non ad unum Petrum pertinere sed in omnes apostolos transmissam alio loco dicit Christum ubi infirmus, Amen dico vobis, &c. Matth. 18. 18. Christ in saying to Peter, I will giue thee the keyes, &c. did not make that promise onely to Peter, but that it belongeth also to the rest of the Apostles, Christ doth shew, Matth. 18. Verilie I say vnto you, whatsoeuer you binde on earth, shall be bound in Heauen, &c. Thus also S. Hierome expoundeth this place, lib. 1. aduers. Iouinian: But thou wilt say, Super Petrum fundatur Ecclesia, &c. The Church is founded vpon Peter: yet in another place, the same thing is done to all the Apostles, and all receiued the keyes of the kingdome of Heauen: Et ex aqua super eos, and equally vpon them all the strength of the Church is established. So Origen also long before him interpreteth: tratt. 1. in Matth. An verò soli Petro, &c. Are the keyes of the kingdome giuen onely to Peter, and none of the blessed beside shall receiue them? &c. Wherefore if this be common to the rest, how not the other sayings also, &c.*

Argum. 2. Other arguments they alleage for the primacie and preëminence of Peter, as Matth. 10. He is named in the first place, Ballermine cap. 18. We answere, this myght be, because Peter was the most auncient in yeares, or one of the first that was called: and so S. Hierome saith, asking the question why Peter was preferred before Iohn, Etati delatum est, quia senior erat: His age was preferred because he was the elder. But howsoeuer it was, it is no great matter: for this order is not alway kept, as Galath. 2. Paul nameth James first; James, Cephas, Iohn, saith he, vers. 9. the Iesuites best shift is here to denie the text, saying; it should be read, Cephas, James, Iohn: vnlesse James be named first, because he was Bishop of Ierusalem: Marke I pray you: Ergo, at Ierusalem Peter was not before James, but next vnto him; therefore not prince of the Apostles. Ballermine. c. 18.

But for a more full answer as touching this obiection of the first naming of Peter: first I deny, that he is alwaies named first, as in the place alleaged: And againe it is euident, that the Scripture doth not perpetually obserue the same order in such rehearials, as Apocal. 10. 19. The twelue Apostles are compared to twelue precious stones, whereof the Iasper is the first, but Exod. 28. 20. where the twelue precious stones are named, which should be set in Aarons breastplate, the Iasper stone is the last: If the Iasper for the dignitie thereof doe signifye Peter in the Apocalypse, how as it placed last in Exodus? So then we may heere say with Origen, who thus writeth of the order of the twelue Patriarches, Sciendum est, quod in singulis locis, &c. It is to be marked, that euery where, where the Scripture maketh mention of the Patriarches, there is great diuersitie in the order: there is one order obserued in their natiuitie, another in their going downe into Egypt; another when they are blessed of Iacob; another when they are numbered to doe any thing in the wilderness; another, when the land of Canaan was deuised: after the same manner wher the twelue Apostles are named, they are not alway set downe in the same order. Ballermine. obiection. 1.

cap. 18. Contra. So Ruben is the first named of all the Patriarches in those five seuerall places noted by Origen. He is first borne, first entereth into Egypt, first blessed, first numbered, first deuised: yet Ruben for all this was not the chiefe among the Patriarches: neither by this reason shall Peter be the greatest among the Apostles. Hom. 17. in Genes.

Again, say they, Peter standeth vp in the election of Matthias, Acts 1. preacheth the first Sermon, Acts 2. Acts 15. Peter speaketh first. We answere to the first: We denie not a primacie of order to haue been in Peter: but it followeth not, that he which speaketh first, or giueth the first voyce, should be the head and commaunder of the rest. To the second, we also graunt that Peter in zeale, promptnes and forwardnes, was not behind any of the Apostles, but euens with the first: for in him was that saying of Christ verified vpon the woman: She loued much, because much was forgiven her. Luk. 7. so was it with Peter, for whom Christ forgave much, and therefore he loued much. To the third we answere, that by the ciuities owne confession, James, who was (as they say) Bishop of Ierusalem, had the primacie there: how then can they now giue it to Peter? That James was the Bishop of the Apostles at Ierusalem, it is affirmed also by Steuens Garsden in his booke de ecclesiastica, by the testimony of Eusebius, and by Bishop Staley and Bishop Treo flus, one of Clement Alexandrinus, who thus writeth: Petrus, Iacobus, Iohannes, post apostolicam salutem, quoniam ab ipso Iesu Christo per gratiam, communi sibi videretur gloriari, sed Iacobum apostolorum episcopum statuerunt: Peter, James and Iohn, after Christs ascension into Heauen, although they were by him preferred almost before all others, yet they chalenged not that glorie to themselves, but desired James to be the chiefe of the Apostles: Epistol. ad Roginund. Polin. Fidei pag. 1066.

There

There is another place, beſide theſe already alleaged, which our aduerſaries commonly obiect for the primacie of Peter: for that Chriſt ſhould ſay vnto him paſce oues meas, feede my ſheepe, that is, rule and gouerne them:

To this answereth, first Walter Brute an ancient confessor of the truth: that Chriſt ſaid vnto him feede my ſheepe: becauſe he preached chiefly vnto three Churches, and inſtructed them in the faith: namely, the Iewes, Grecians, and Romanes.

Doctour Taufal out of Cyrrill thus alleageth: that becauſe Peter had thiſe denied Chriſt, whereby he thought, he had loſt his Apoſtleſhip, Chriſt by thiſe asking if he loued him, reſtored him to his office againe. pag. 1662. So in your decrees. p. 2. c. 6. q. 1. c. 10. Peter becauſe he denied Chriſt thiſe doth alſo confeſſe him thiſe.

Againe, S. Iohn Berthwick Knight condemned for the truth, ſaith, that to feede the flock of Chriſt ſignifieth not to beare rule or dominion ouer them: for in the ſame words he exhorteth all other paſtors to feede their flocke, 1. epiſt. 5. Whereby it appeareth, that either our Sauour Chriſt gave no ſuch authoritie to Peter more than to others, or that Peter did equally communicate that right to others. p. 1261. reſponſ. ad articul. 1. ſee the anſwere alſo of Maſter Bradford to the ſame effect, epiſt. ad Domin. Vanum, p. 1647.

The Proteſtants.

That Peter had no ſuch iuriſdiction ouer the Apoſtles, as to be called the head and Prince of them: but that to them all indifferently were the keyes committed, and did all faithfully execute their Apoſtleſhip without any ſubiection of each to other, but ioynd the right hands of fellowſhip together: we thus confirme it out of the holy Scripture, and neceſſarie arguments deriued out of the ſame.

Argum. 1. Ephes. 2. 20. Apocalyp. 21. 14. The Church is ſaid to be built vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles. Ergo, no primacie of power amongſt the Apoſtles, they all founded the Church.

Bellarmino confeſſeth that in reſpect of their doctrine, there was no difference betweene Peter and the reſt, for they all were firſt planters of Churches, they all preached the Goſpell by reuelation: But in reſpect of gouernment, they were not equall: they had chiefe authoritie committed to them as Apoſtles and Embaſſadors of Chriſt: But Peter, as ordinary paſtor.

We anſwere: Firſt, by his owne confeſſion the Apoſtles had chiefe authoritie as Apoſtles, but there was no higher authoritie or power then of the Apoſtleſhip. But as they were Apoſtles they were equall (ſaith the Ieſuite): Ergo, there could be no ſuperioritie; for the calling of the Apoſtles was the higheſt in the Church. See alſo your owne decrees, where that ſentence of S. Cypriane is allowed, deſcript. part. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. c. 18. Hoc erant omnes ceteri Apoſtoli, &c. The reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame that Peter was, hauing the like fellowſhip of honour and power.

Argum. 2. To preach the Goſpell, and to haue iuriſdiction of gouernment, doe both belong to the power of the keyes: but the keyes were equally committed to all: Ergo, they had all equal power both to preach and to gouerne. That they all had the power of the keyes equally granted vnto them, we haue prooued before out of Matth. 18. 18.

Bellarmino himſelfe confeſſeth, that Iames was Biſhop and ordinarie paſtor at Ieruſalem, and ſaith with Anſelm and Thomas Aquinas, that therefore he is named firſt by Saint Paul, Gal. 2. 1. Bellarmino cap. 19. Therefore at Ieruſalem Peter was to giue primacie to the ordinarie paſtor there.

If they anſwere, that Rome was then the chiefe citie, and therefore Peter being Biſhop of Rome was to haue the preeminence. To this we reply: that Ieruſalem was rather to be preferred in reſpect of place, which was choſen by the Lord himſelfe, to be the chiefe citie of his Church: but Rome through the tyranny and vſurpation of the Romans ouer other countries was aduanced to that dignitie, not by the election of God.

But Bellarmino answereth, that Peter was Biſhop of the whole Church, and ſo of Ieruſalem too. We anſwere, he now ſaith leſſe for Peter, then if he called him, as he was, the Apoſtle of the whole world: for it was more to be an Apoſtle than a Biſhop. Diuers were called in the Apoſtles times, epiſcopi, ouerſeers, or Biſhops, that were not Apoſtles, as the paſtors of Ephesus, Acts 20. 18. Wherefore now he hath ſaid nothing: in ſeeking to aduance Peter, he hath diſgraced him, in pulling him downe from his high Apoſtleſhip to the chaire of a Biſhop. See alſo your owne decrees, part. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. c. 18. in gloſſ. Vnde cum omnibus Diſcipulis &c. Seeing that Chriſt gave to all his Diſciples the like power of binding, and looſing, &c. Yee your owne maſter alloweth that ſaying of S. Hierome: Habent videntes iudicium potestatem alij, &c. The other Apoſtles had the ſame iudicarie power, lib. 4. diſt. 19. c. 2. Peter had no ſuperioritie ouer Paul for they ioynd right hands of fellowſhip: and this allowment was made betweene them, that Paul ſhould be the prince of the Gentiles, and Peter of the circumciſion, Galath. 2. 9. Ergo.

Beſermine answereth. First, they were ioyned as fellow-laborers in the preaching of the Gospel: but Peter might for all this be greater in the office and power of gouerning. We answer: yea, but the text saith, that Paul only was not appointed to preach to the Gentiles, but he had the chiefe Apostleship. Now to the Apostleship belongeth, not onely the function of preaching, but the whole vse of the keyes, and power of iurisdiction. Ergo: in all respects S. Paul ouer the Gentiles had the chiefe Apostleship.

But least any man say, that this was a humane compact amongst themselves, and Paul had his lot at Peters assignement: the text sheweth, that the Lord himselfe had made this distribution. For when they saw, saith S. Paul, that the Gospell ouer the vncircumcision was committed to me, vers. 7. So then the Apostles did but confirme by their consent, that distribution, which they sawe the Lord himselfe had appointed.

Further saith the Iesuite, the diuision was not so made, but that it was lawfull for Peter also to preach to the Gentiles. We answer, we grant it; and for Paul to preach to the Iewes; yet that distinction remained still, that Peter was chiefe of the circumcision, Paul of the vncircumcision.

Againe saith he: but Peter had the more excellent lot, for Christ himselfe first preached to the Iewes. We answer, wee deny not but that he had the first lot in order; for to the Iewes was the Gospell first offered: but Paul had the larger and more glorious lot: the Church of the Iewes now decaying, and the Gentiles beginning to be planted in their roome. But howsoeuer it was, it cannot bee denied, but that Paul was chiefe towards the Gentiles: And therefore the Church of Rome might with better right haue deriued their authoritie from S. Paul, then from Peter: both of them they cannot make patrons of their See: seeing by their owne rules the Pope cannot be successor to them both.

Heare also how notable to our purpose S. Ambrose expoundeth this place, writing vpon this verse, Galath. 2. 9. Petrum solum nominat, &c. He nameth onely Peter, and compareth him with himselfe; because he had received the primacie to found the Church, and himselfe was likewise elected to haue the primacie in founding the Churches of the Gentiles: yet so that both Peter might preach to the Gentiles, and Paul to the Iewes, if there were cause: for both of them is found to haue done both: and yet it is knowne that full authoritie was giuen to Peter in preaching to the Iewes, and full authoritie to Paul in preaching to the Gentiles.

Further, out of the same place, Galath. 2. 11. another thing cometh to be obserued: that Peter was rebuked of Paul, and in such sort, that it appeareth there was no great inequalitye between them: for he doth it to his face openly, before all men, and at Antioch, in Peters owne Bishoprick; as they say: Can it be now thought that Paul was any thing inferiour to Peter?

Beſermine and the Iesuites answer, that the Pope may bee rebuked of an inferiour, and ought to take it patiently, if it be done in zeale and loue. Cap. 15.

Aus. First, we doe not simply thus conclude, because Paul reprehended Peter, therefore he was not his superiour, but because of the manner, as we shewed: it was done in such sort, so plainly, so openly, without any submission or crauing of pardon, that there can appeare no inequalitye at all betweene them. Secondly, although they seeme here to graunt, that the Pope may bee rebuked, yet is it otherwise in their Canon law, which saith, that though the Pope doe leade innumerable soules to hell, no mortal man may presume to reprove his faults, par. 1. dist. 4. c. Si Papa. Fals. accusat. in Galath. 2. vers. 8. And howsoeuer the Iesuite counteth this a light argument, both Hierome and Ambrose doe enforce it, and your owne decrees allow it, par. 2. can. 2. quest. 7. c. 35. Hierome saith: Paul doth reprehend Peter, because he knew himselfe not to be vnequall. And in the glosse Saine Ambrose is thus alleaged: Which of them durst resist Peter, to whom the Lord gaue the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, nisi alius talis, but such an other that knew himselfe, by the confidence of his election, not to be vnequall.

This place in the second to the Galathians is much vrged by some of the Papists themselves against Peters supremacie: for S. Paul saying, that as the Apostleship of the Circumcision was committed to Peter, so the Apostleship of the Gentiles was giuen to him: hereby sheweth, that he knew no primacie of Peter ouer the Apostles, or the whole world, but only among the Iewes. This also manifestly appeareth, for that Peter, being sent for by Corinthians a Gentile, durst not goe to him without a speciall vision from God, Act. 10. thereby declaring, that he had no such primacie giuen him ouer the Gentiles: Hac Toustall. in Concilio. p. 1062.

Master Lambert Martyr groundeth diuers arguments out of this chapter 2. to the Galathians, that Paul was not superiour to S. Paul: first, they ioyned with him the right hand of fellowship: Ergo, he was their equall and fellow. Secondly, James is named before Peter, which S. Paul would not haue done, who loued order, if there had been any such preeminence in Peter. Thirdly, Saine Paul reprooued Saine Peter to his face, which he would not haue done, except he had knowne himselfe equall to Peter. And as Peter was here reprooued by his fellow Apostle, so was he blamed generally of them of the Circumcision, who contended against him, Act. 11. 2. And yet Peter did not allege any preeminence or authoritie, or charge them with disobedience, for rebuking him: Lambert pag. 1120.

Master Tindal holy Martyr goeth further, and sheweth, that if there were any oddes or inequality at all, Saint Paul rather was of higher authoritie, then Saint Peter; because he laboured and preached more than the rest, 1. Corinth. 15. 10. and suffered more for the testimonie of Christ, 2. Cor. 11. 23.

Master Bradford holy Martyr disproueth the supremacie of Peter ouer the Apostles by this argument: The Apostles at Ierusalem sent Peter and Iohn to Samaria, to confirme them in the Gospel, Act. 8. 14. Ergo, he was not their chiefe or head: for it had been an vnmanly part for the members, to send their head in Embassage: Brad. in epistol. ad Domin. Vanamp. 1647.

Iohannes Patriarch of Antioch, opuscul. in appendice Concil. Basiliens. enforceth the same argument: Apostoli miserrunt ad Samaritanos Petrum & Iohannem; at maior est qui mittit, minor, qui mittitur. The Apostles sent Peter and Iohn to the Samaritanes: but he that sendeth is the greater, he that is sent the lesse. Ergo. It may bee objected, Petrus missus est consilio, non auctoritate: Peter was sent by their counsaile and aduice, not commaundement or authoritie: he answereth, that not Peter alone was sent, but Iohn also. So then, as Iohn was sent, in like manner was Peter: the one had no greater preeminence then the other in this Embassage.

Argum. 4. Lastly, what reason was there, why Christ should giue the supremacie to Peter ouer the rest? Christ was no acceptor of persons: if he had been, Iohn should haue been preferred, whom he loued most. If defects bee weighed, I thinke Peter deserued no more then the rest of his fellows: Nay I thinke the wisdom of the spirit, foreseeing the questions that should afterward arise in the Church about Peter, hath so disposed, that this Apostles infirmities both in number more and weight greater then any of the rest, should be evidently set forth in Scripture. We will briefly runne them ouer, not to derogate from the blessed memorie of so excellent an Apostle; but a little to stay and bridle the preposterous zeale of our aduersaries, who doe ascribe more vnto him, then euer he would haue challenged to himselfe.

To let passe the smaller slips and scapes of this Apostle, as his rashnesse in aduenturing beyond his strength, to walke vpon the sea, Matth. 14. Secondly, his vnaduised speech in the mountaine, Matth. 17. Let vs make three Tabernacles. Thirdly, his ignorance, Matth. 19. in saying to Christ, hymenion shall I forgive my brother? till seven times? Fourthly, his impatience, as in drawing out his sword and cutting off Malchus eare. Fifthly, his timorousnesse in flying from Christ at his apprehension. Sixtly, his curiositie, John. 21. in asking concerning Iohn, What shall this man doe? To let passe these as common infirmities: there are foure great faults which Peter fell into, much amplified, and stood vpon by the fathers.

1. He dehorted our Sauour from his passion with these words, Master, saue thy selfe. Mat. 16. and was therefore called Sathan, an aduersarie to the death of Christ, and so to the redemption of man. Augustine chargeth him with great forgetfulness, hauing made so notable a confession of Christ before, and noteth him for some sparkes of distrust and infidelitie: Ille Petrus, qui iam cum confessus fuerat filium Dei, timuit, ne sicut filius hominis moreretur, in Psal. 138. The same Peter (saith he) which a little before had confessed him to be the Sonne of God, feared least he should die and perish as a man.

2. In promising rashly not to denie Christ, yea vnto death, whereas Christ had foretolde him of his fall before, Augustine noteth great presumption: Petrus ex egregio presumptore creber negator effectus, Epist. 120. cap. 14. Peter of a great presumer, is become a desperate denier. And heretofore thus your owne decrees, par. 3. caus. 6. quast. 1. cap. 10. Petrus lapsus est, &c. Peter did fall, because he presumed of himselfe, saying, Though other bee offended in thee, yet not I. But Origen goeth further, Non solum inconsiderate, sed peni etiam impie, &c. Peter said not onely vnaduisedly, but almost impiously, Though all men be offended, &c.

3. The third great sinne was committed by Peter, in denying of Christ, and that thrice, yea with an oath, at the instance of a maiden, and in a very short while, before the cocke crew twice, Mark. 14. 72. The Iesuite answereth, that this was no hinderance to Peter's primacie, but a furtherance and a confirmation of it. But whether it were a let to his primacie or not, let all men iudge, seeing it had been sufficient to haue hindered his saluation, and destroyed his faith, without the great mercie of God.

Let vs heare Augustines iudgement of Peter's fall. Some man may excuse Peter, and say, that he did nothing, but as Christ forewarned him. What then (saith he) if Peter therefore did not amisse, because his fall was foretold by Christ: Regit etiam facis Iudas, qui tradidit dominum, quia & hoc pradixerat dominus? Then Iudas did well too (saith he) in betraying of Christ, for this also Christ shewed afore? But some againe may say: he denied not Christ, for he said he knew not the man: Quasi vero (saith he) qui hominem Christum negat, non Christum negat: As though he that denieth the man Christ, doth not flatly denie Christ. Christ also taketh away all doubts (saith he) when he thus said to Peter, The cocke shall crow till thou hast denied me thrice: he saith not, till thou hast denied the man, but me. Againe, Ipse potius redarguit defensores suos: Peter himselfe doth confute his maintainers and defenders: Agnovit pluri peccatum suum infirmitas Petri: Peters owne conscience gaue him that he had sinned, for he went out and wept bitterly. But if by this meanes his primacie was confirmed, he had occasion to reioyce, and not to weepe. Yea he wept bitterly, his sinne was very great: how then dare one of your sect say with a blasphemous mouth, Petrus non fidem Christi, sed Christum salua fide negauit: Peter denied not the faith of Christ, but his faith remaining safe and sound, he denied Christ? The ancient writers durst not so extenuate Peters fall, nor Peter himselfe, that wept full sore, as these men presume to doe. For first Origen thus amplifieth Peters fall, Non ad modicum derelictus, &c. Peter was not a little forsaken, to denie once, but he was abundantly forsaken, to denie thrice: first he denied him before all; and againe he denied him not simply, but with an oth: thirdly, not onely with an oth, but with a speciall denotation, I know not the man: Tract. 35. in Matb.

S. Ambrose goeth further, Hexamer. lib. 3. c. 24. Peter before the cocke crew falleth; yea the third time he falleth, that you may know that it was not a slip only of his speech, but that he was troubled in minde.

S. Hierome also thus writeth: de Vincul. Petri ad Enitoch. What shall I doe, I haue denied my Lord and master? neither, as some thinke, haue I onely denied the man: I haue denied him to whom I said, thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God: I haue denied him whom I saw walking vpon the waters; whom I heard with his call raising vp the dead; whom I saw with Moses and Eliu, &c.

And your owne decrees: Decret. part. 2. c. 13. quæst. 3. cap. 85. The Lord said not to Peter, thou shalt denie thee to my disciple, but thou shalt denie me: wherefore he denied him, when he denied himselfe to bee his disciple: and what did he else but denie himselfe to bee a Christian? Such then and of this nature and qualitie was the fall and deniall of Peter, howsoever our aduersaries goe about to seeke colours and defence for it.

4 The last fault noted in Peter was that, for the which he is reprooued of Paul, Galath. 2. Tush (saith Bellarmino) it was a very small and light offence. Yea, was it so small a fault to constrain the Gentiles to doe like the Iewes? for this was the point, as S. Paul writeth, Galath. 2. 14. And Augustine saith, Petrus non obiurgatus à Paulo fuit, quid seruabat consuetudinem Iudeorum, in qua natus & educatus fuit, sed quid eam gentibus imponere volebat: Exposit. ad Galat. Peter was not rebuked of Paul, because he kept the custome of the Iewes, wherein he was brought vp, but because he would lay it vpon the Gentiles. Was this leuissimum peccatum, a small transgression? Saint Paul should greatly haue been to blame, for rebuking Peter openly, and so plainly for so small an offence, and should haue done against his owne rule, Galath. 6. 1. But Peter did it of a good minde (saith Bellarmino.) Yea did? then he was worthe to bee excused, not worthe of blame, as S. Paul writeth. He might also doe it ignorantly and vnnitingly (saith he.) How can that be, seeing he was one that made the decree, Act. 15. That no yoke should be layd vpon the Gentiles, other then there expressed; and now contrarie to that decree, he constraineth the Gentiles, Iudaizare, to play the Iewes. These things doe not hang together.

The Rhemists say, that it was not an error in doctrine or iudgement here reproued in Peter, but a default onely in conseruation: annus. Galat. 2. vers. 11. sect. 9.

Contra. 1. One of your owne Bishops Gelasius, tom. de Anathemat. Vinculo, is of a contrarie opinion, Sacrosanctus Petrus primus, &c. Holy Peter, the first of the Apostles, thinking that the grace of the new testament should be so preached, that he depart not from the institutions of the old law, did something dissemblingly, &c. and therefore his fellow Apostle doth worthily rebuke him. It was then an error in Peters thought and iudgement.

S. Ambrose in 2. ad Galat. If Peter had dissembled onely, it had been no error, &c. But this was the cause of the reprehension: Peter did not onely separate himselfe from those with whom he had liued Gentile like, but he compelled them to play the Iewes also; so that the Gentiles were ignorant which was the truest way. And your owne glosse saith, Deer. p. 2. c. 2. quæst. 7. c. 39. Par est à fide exorbitare, &c. It is all one to goe aside from the faith, and by example or word to turne others from the faith: Ergo, this in Peter was an error in faith.

I will now conclude out of Augustine, as he alleageth out of Cyprian: Nec Petrus, cum secum Paulus de circumcisione disceptaret, postmodum vindicanti sibi aliquid insolenter, ut diceret se primum totius: de Baptis. 2. 2. Howsoever it was, Peter, when Paul reasoned thus with him, did not stand vpon his pantofoles, and chalenge any primacie to himselfe. But it is very like, if there had been any such primacie in Peter of power and iurisdiction, (a primacie of order we grant, as Cyprian in that place calleth Peter, primus, the first) that this sharpe reprehension of Paul should either haue bin spared, or else not done in that vehement manner.

It shall not be out of the way in this place, to see the iudgement of certaine Papists of great account in their time, contrary to the opinion now receiued in the Popes Church.

Thus the Bishop of Winchester reasoneth in his booke de vera obedientia: The scholler ought not to be aboue the master: how could then Peter take that vpon him to bee chiefe, which Christ his master did so constantly refuse?

That Peter was primus, that is, first and chiefe in number of them which confessed Christ, it can not be denied: for first he confessed, first he taught the Iewes: first he stood in defence of the veritie, and was the first prolocutor among them. A primacie of order wee graunt, but not a primacie of rule and dominion: he was first in order, but it followeth not therefore that he was the chiefe in dignitie: As it is no good reason, Paris is nominate the first of all Vniuersities: Ergo, they are subiect to it.

Bishop Tunstal also in a certaine sermon, vseth these and such like arguments against the supremacie of Peter. Peter's person (saith he) could not bee the rocke of the Church: for then wee should put another foundation of the Church, than Christ; which were contrarie to Saint Paul: No man may put any other foundation, then that which is put already, which is Christ Iesus, 1. Cor. 3.

So saith he, in the one and twentie chapter of the Apocalypse, the new citie and heauenly Ierusalem, is described by the holy Ghost, not with one foundation of Peter, but with twelue foundations after the number of the Apostles, plur. Fox. p. 1062.

THE THIRD QUESTION, CONCERNING Peter his being at Rome.

This question hath two parts: first, whether Peter were at all at Rome or not. Secondly, whether he were Bishop of Rome.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER PETER were at Rome.

38. Error.

OVr aduersaries would seeme to prooue it by these and such like arguments.

Argum. 1. Out of that place of S. Peter 1. 5. 13. The Church that is as Babylon salutesh you: Babylon here (say they) is taken for Rome, from whence Peter wrote his Epistle, Bellar. lib. 2. cap. 2. de pontif. R. romens. argum. in. 1. Epist. Petri.

We answer: First, it is a fillie argument for them hereby to prooue Peter's being at Rome: for thus much they haue gained by it, that Rome is Babylon, and so the seate of Antichrist, Reuel. 18. Secondly, there were two Babylons, one in Syria, the other in Egypt, from either of which Saint Peter might date his epistle: and it is most like that he would keepe the common and knowne name of the place, that it might bee out of doubt what Church he meant. As for the name of Babylon, to bee ascribed to Rome, though it were so mystically, yet was it not so called: for why might not Paul as well haue written his epistle to the Romanes vnder that name, the Church of Babylon, as Peter wrote from thence?

Argum. 2. Again, they alleage that storie, how Peter ouercame Simon Magnus at Rome, when he would haue taken his flight into the ayre, hauing made himselfe wings, and by the prayer of Peter was brought downe againe and brake his legges, and so dyed: whereupon Nero being offended with Peter, would haue apprehended him; who being counsailed by the Church, would haue fled from Rome: but meeting Christ at one of the gates, and saying vnto him, Which goest thou Lord? And he answered, I come againe to be crucified. Peter vpon those words returned backe againe, and was crucified for the testimonie of Iesus, Bellar. cap. 2. 3.

We answer: First, wee denie not that Peter was at Rome, but shew onely the insufficiencie of their arguments: and againe, we moue such doubt, as by them are yet vnanswered, as after ward shall bee shewed. Secondly, concerning this storie of the victorie ouer Simon Magnus, they that doubt of Peter's being at Rome, may also doubt of this, neither of them being necessarie to bee beleueed as articles of faith, but probable and coniecturall, as matters of storie. For some part of the storie is denied by Augustine, as how Peter fasted vpon the Saturday, the combat betweene him and Simon Magnus, following vpon the Lords day after: and thereupon rose the custome of the Saturday fast among the Romanes: Est quidem (saith he) hac opinio plurimorum, quamuis cum perhibeant esse falsam plerique Romani: This is (saith he) a probable opinion of many, (concerning Peter's fast) yet the Romanes themselues thinke it to be false.

3 That concerning Christs apparition to Peter, seemeth to bee most vnlke of all, and saoureth somewhat of the popish Legends. Like vnto this are the tales of S. Christopher, how he carried Christ, and how S. Gregorie had him for one of his guests at his table of hospitalitie: Such visions and apparitions of Christ are contrarie to the Scriptures, which say, that the heauens must containe him till his comming againe. Bellar. mine answereth: first, by this meanes, wee doe compelle

Christo

Christo in quibus wee fetter Christ in heaven. We answer, beleeve then heaven is a prison, with the Jesuite: God sent all that are his such a prison at the length. Again, Christ is no otherwise concluded and shut up in heaven, then as it pleaseth himselfe, and as he hath appointed for to be. 1. 2. He obiecteth: that Christ appeared neere vnto the earth to Paul. We answer, first, there is no such thing proued out of the text, but rather the contrarie, that the voyce was heard from heauen; not neere the earth, but aboue, Act. 9. 7. 8. Secondly, Paul heard a voyce only, he saw no man, neither he nor the companie with him, Act. 9. 7. 8. but onely a great light they saw shining from heauen, Act. 9. 16. 9. Therefore out of this place they cannot proue any such apparition of Christ neere vnto the earth.

Your owne decrees also here are against you: Dei p. 3. diff. 2. cap. 1. Corpus domini in quodam loco uno loco esse oportet: The bodie of our Lord, wherein he rose, must bee in one place. And againe, Dum seculum finitur sum est dominus: As long as the world endureth, our Lord is aboue, that is, in the heauen. Ergo, not beneath in the earth.

We answer: First, it followeth not, if Peter were buried at Rome, that therefore he died there: for the translation of the bones and bodies of Martyrs is no vnusall thing in your Church: As it followeth not, because Iohn Baptists head, as you say, is to bee seene at S. Siluesters at Rome; that therefore he died there; so neither doth it follow of S. Peter.

2. Againe, how shall wee beleue you that it is S. Peters sepulchre, which is shewed at Rome; seeing you haue made so many mockeries alreadie, making the world beleue, that Peters bodie is sometime in one place, sometime in another: Halfe his bodie (you say) is at S. Pauls in Rome, halfe at S. Pauls; his head at S. Iohn Laterans, his neather iaw with the beard at Poitiers in France, many of his bones at Triers, at Geneua part of his braine. You see that wee may as well double whether Peters bodie bee at Rome, as in any of these places. And such as you see are our aduersaries arguments for Peters being at Rome.

The Protestants.

Concerning Peters being at Rome: first, we doe not vtterly denie it, but onely affirme that he could not come thither so soone, as in the second yeere of Claudius, and sit there so long, namely, fixe and twentie yeeres, as they hold. Secondly, it may bee graunted that he was there, as a matter of storie, not an article of faith. Thirdly, wee haue certaine doubts and arguments about some circumstances of his being there, which our aduersaries are not able to answer.

Argum. 1. There is great disagreeing amongst the writers, concerning the time of Peters coming to Rome: Origen saith, he came thither in the beginning of Claudius raigne: Hieronymus saith, the second yeere of his taigne: other say, the fourth yeere: other, the thirteenth yeere: Damasus would haue him come thither in Nero his raigne. This dissention of writers sheweth that the matter may be iustly doubted of, Falk. in Rom. 16. 2.

Bellarminus and the Iesuites answer: No more doe all agree concerning the time when the world was created, nor for the storie of Christs life, in what time euery thing was done when he suffered, and such like: yet it followeth not, that those things were hypocrite, because there is some dissention about the time, Rom. 1. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30.

We replye: First, most of these things concerning the chronologie of Scripture, though in be not necessarie to saluation, yet by diligent search may bee found in Scripture. Secondly, they can shew any Scripture for Peters being at Rome, as we haue for the other stories, we will beleue it, though the time perfectly be not knowne: But seeing the Scripture maketh no mention at all of his being there, and the time is vncertaine, we may worchable doubt of it, much lesse are bound necessarily to beleue it.

Argum. 2. The storie of Peters coming to Rome in the second yeere of Claudius, his abiding at Rome fixe and twentie yeeres, his death and martyrdome in the 14. yeere of Nero, and the 28. yeere after Christs ascension: we proue out of the Scriptures to be false. For Peter was at Jerusalem and in those quarters round about eill 18. yeeres after Christ: For Paul saw him there three yeeres after his calling, and againe 14. yeeres after that, Galat. 2. there is 17. yeeres, and one yeere was past before Pauls conversion: in all 38. yeeres yafte vnto these 38. yeeres of Peters being at Rome, that maketh 45. yeeres: and so Peter should suffer in Nero his raigne, and not at the time of Nero.

Bellarminus and the Iesuites answer: that Peter was at Rome seven yeeres before the Councell held at Jerusalem, Act. 15. which was in the 18. yeere after Christ: and thus being expelled the citie by Claudius, with the rest of the Iewes, he returned to Jerusalem, and there spake with Paul, and after that went to Rome againe, and there ended his life. Act. 15. 2. It appeareth that there was, as it were, a standing and set Councell of the Apostles at Jerusalem, of the which Peter was one: for the Church

Church thought good to ſend vnto the Apoſtles and Elders, which were at Ieruſalem. Secondly, till the 18. yeere when this Councell was held; it ſeemeth that Peter had laboured onely or eſpecially amongſt the Iewes; of whom there were then but few at Rome: For (ſaith the Apoſtle) be thou was mightie in Peter in the Apoſtleſhip over the circumciſion, moſt able mightie in me, Galath. 2. 8. Therefore Peter was not knowne ſo haſte laboured vntill this time but in the circumciſion. Thirdly, afterward it is more like, he went to Antioch then to Rome: for after this, Paul rebuked Peter at Antioch, Gal. 2. Fourthly, theſe are but bare coniectures of our aduerſaries, and craftie evaſions without Scripture; but ſeeing we appoſe them out of Scripture, it is great reaſon they ſhould like wiſe anſwere vs out of Scripture.

Laſtly, it is but Bellarmines coniecture, & a very fable that Peter went from Rome to Ieruſalem to ſpeak with Paul, like ſo that tale, which Chriſtianus Maſſeus hath, Chronicar. lib. 8. of one Trophimus converted by Mary Magdalene, who going to Rome to ſee Peter, as he ſailed, his wife being great with childe died in trauell, and was buried with her childe in a rocke: whom S. Peter caried to Ieruſalem, and ſhewed him the holy places, and after two yeeres returning to Rome, found his childe playing at his mothers breaſt, who being raiſed as it were out of ſleepe, told her husband, how that Mary Magdalene had ſhewed her the ſame holy places, which ſhe had ſcene. I marueile the Ieſuite did not ground his conceite of Peters going to Ieruſalem from Rome vpon this fable: which of the better ſort amongſt them is reiected, as Effens. in 1. Tim. c. 4. p. 183. a.

Argum. 3. We haue diuers other obiections alſo out of the Scriptures: as firſt, that if Peter were at Rome, it is not like that Paul would leaue him out in his ſalutation in the end of his epiſtle, Rom. 16. ſent to the brethren. Our aduerſaries anſwere but very ſumply, that at that time, when S. Paul wrote his epiſtle, either Peter was not at Rome, or elſe Paul might write ſome eſpecial letters to him by himſelfe, and this epiſtle enclosed in them: ſuch goodly coniectures they haue. But I pray you what needed S. Paul to haue written vnto the Romanes, if S. Peter ſo faithfull and vigilant a paſtor, were continually amongſt them?

S. Ambroſe hereof thus writeth in his Commentaries vpon the 16. to the Romanes, Ad confirmationem Romanorum, &c. For the confirmation of the Romanes, all theſe, whom he ſaluteth, are vnderſtoode to haue been there: but it would haue made more for their confirmation, if Peter had been ſaluted amongſt them, if he had been there. Again, Ariſtobulus iſta congregator &c. This Ariſtobulus, whom the Apoſtle maketh mention of, is vnderſtoode to haue been a gatherer together of the brethren: but Peter was a more principall congregator of them; therefore it is like the Apoſtle would haue remembred him, as well as Ariſtobulus.

Other places alſo of Scripture wee haue: as Philip. 2. 20. ſpeaking of Timotheus he ſaith, I haue ſent him ſounded in him ſuch fully care for your matters, Colof. 4. 11. Theſe onely are my work-fellowes, Timoth. 4. 11. my hope is with me, Ergo Peter all this while was not at Rome, for Paul would not haue left him out of the number of his fellow-helpers: at the leaſt he would not haue commended Timotheus, though he were a worthy young man, before him. That which Bellarmin anſwereth, is juſt nothing: that S. Paul ſpeaketh in thoſe places onely of his domeſticall helpers, which did miniſter vnto him; when S. Paul ſpeaketh plainly of his fellow labourers; Theſe onely are my work-fellowes in the kingdom of God, Colof. 4. 11.

Another argument doth ariſe out of S. Pauls words, 1. Tim. 2. 6. As my firſt anſwering men afflict them, Ergo, it is like that Peter was not then at Rome, for he would not haue forſaken Paul. Bellarmin anſwereth, that he ſpeaketh onely of ſuch fauourers as he had in Caeſars court, that they would ſurely make ſute for him to the Emperour. But this is a weak ſolution. Firſt, it appeareth by that which followeth, that they left him without helpe in his open Apologie or defence: they did not aſſiſt him (ſaith he) but the Lord aſſiſted me: that is, gaue me ſtrength to defend my cauſe: So that the word, aſſiſting, muſt be taken in the ſame ſenſe before, that they failed him in that, where in God aſſiſted him; that is, in ſpeaking boldly in the defence of the truth. Secondly, it is proved by the diuers ſucceſſe that he had at his firſt and ſecond anſwering: at the firſt all left him, but as the ſecond were emboldened through his words: What to doe? More frankly to ſpeake the words, Philip. 1. 14. Ergo, at the firſt they forſooke him, becauſe they were afraid to ſpeake the word, and hee, 1. Tim. 2. 6. As my firſt anſwering men afflict them, Ergo, Paul was not then at Rome, for he would not haue forſaken Paul. I will ſay the ſenſe of this place be tried by your owne interpreters: as Effens ſaith writeth, No man aſſiſted me, that is, as an helper both to defend me before the Prince, and ſo helpe the Chriſtian cauſe. And againe he complaineth, that he was forſaken of thoſe which might haue helped him: as there was a great number at that time at Rome of Chriſtians converted from among the Iewes, that might haue helped him. And againe, it was occaſion of great heauineſſe to the Apoſtle, to be oppreſſed of ſtrangers, and not propounded by his domeſticall, but to bee bereft of all comfort, yea betrayed: in 2. Tim. 1. 16. cap. 4. pag. 183. So ſaith the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the domeſticall of Caeſars familie, but the domeſticall of the ſame faith; neither of not ſuing for him in Court, but the forſaking of the defence of the faith.

Theſe

These arguments, which we haue here opposed, are much vrged by Master Bradford holy Martyr, against Peter being at Rome: As because, while Paul was prisoner at Rome, there is no mention made, that Peter all that while visited him, who at that time, they say, was at Rome. Again, S. Paul in his epistle to the Romanes saluteth many meaner persons, then Peter was: and therefore it is not like that Peter was then at Rome; for he among the rest should not haue been omitted, but especially remembered. These and other such places are vrged by that holy Martyr: epistol. ad Rom. Janum. pag. 1648.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER PETER were Bishop of Rome.

Ov<sup>r</sup> aduerſaries would gladly bring it about that Peter was Biſhop of Rome, there enthroniſed, and ſate in the Biſhoplike chaire many yeeres, and after left it to his ſucceſſors.

1 The Roman faith was first planted by Peter, for he first preached to the Gentiles, Act. 13. 7.
Ergo, he was the first Bishop.

Anſ. Firſt, that Peter firſt preached to the Gentiles, it is contrary to the ſtory of the Acts: for Paul was conuerted before Peter ſaw the viſion from heauen, Act. 10. before which time Peter made a great queſtion, whether it were lawfull to preach to the Gentiles. But Paul immediatly after his conuerſion preached to the Gentiles, Galath. 2. therefore before Peter. Neither is there any thing to the contrarie, Act. 15. 7. the Gentiles beleueed by S. Peters mouth, as he ſaith, but not firſt. Secondly, that Peter firſt preached not at Rome, it is thus gathered: becauſe it is not like that the Chriſtian faith being ſpread farre abroad, could be kept from Rome the ſpace of 12. yeeres: for ſo long it was by their account, before Peter came to Rome. Again, there were diuers that dwelled at Rome, which heard the Apoſtles ſpeake diuers tongues, Act. 2. being ſtrangers then and ſo- iourners at Ieruſalem: and Rom. 16. 7. he maketh mention of Andronicus and Iunia, which were in Chriſt before him. By theſe it is moſt like that the Chriſtian faith was firſt ſowed at Rome. Thirdly, it is more like that Paul preached at Rome before Peter: for when he came to Rome, he called the Iewes together, who ſaid vnto him, that they had heard nothing concerning him by let- ters, or from the brethren out of Iudea, Act. 28. 22. But if Peter had been there, Paul no doubt ſhould haue bin knowne at the leaſt by name. The Iewes alſo ſay vnto him, We will heare of thee what thou thinkeſt: and ſome of them were perſwaded by Paul, ſome beleueed not. It ſeemeth by this place that y Iewes in Rome had not heard of the Goſpell before. But if Peter had bin amongſt them, who had an eſpeciall charge of the circumciſion, he would haue had the greateſt care of the Iewes to win them to Chriſt. Fourthly, though Peter had firſt preached to the Romanes, it would not follow that therefore he was Biſhop there: for Paul firſt founded the Church of Epheſus, yet they ſay Iohn was firſt Biſhop there: wherefore they ſhould gaine nothing by this argument, if it were true, but that Peter was the firſt preacher, and conuerter of the Romanes to the faith. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Quia Paulus maſter, &c. Becauſe Paul was appointed the maſter of the Gentiles, it became him to take care, to teach there where Chriſt had not been preached: in 15. ad Rom. Ergo, S. Paul preached firſt to the Romanes.

IF we take the name of Bishop generally for that office which hath the publike cure and charge of soules: in that sense we deny not but Peter and the rest of the Apostles may be called Episcopi, Bishops, as Christ is called the shepheard and Bishop of our soules, 1. Pet. 2. 25. But taking it strictly for a Bishop of this or that place, which is called Episcopatus institutus, a Bishop instituted, we denie that either Peter or Paul were Bishops, For pag. 15.

Argument. Paul was Apostolus Gentium, the Apostle of the Gentiles, and Peter of the Circumcision: therefore it is more like that Paul was chiefe pastor of the Romanes, because they were of the Gentiles, and part of his charge: and vnlesse they can prooue that Paul resigned ouer his lot vnto Peter, that he also should be the chiefe Apostle of the Gentiles, as he was of the Iewes; Peter should haue intruded himselfe into Pauls charge, not in preaching to the Gentiles, (for both Paul might preach to the Iewes, and Peter to the Gentiles) but in taking vpon him to bee the chiefe Apostle of the Gentiles, which was giuen before to S. Paul.

Argum. 1. The Rheimists themselves grant, that the Church of Rome was founded both by Peter and Paul: Answer in 2. Gales sect. 6. Bishop Tanfield a strong champion of theirs, but varying from them in this opinion, shewed in a letter of his to Cardinal Poole, how in times past, both Peter and Paul were counted patrones of the Church of Rome, and principes Apostolorum, the chiefs of the Apostles. Enshrine faith, that Clement was the third Bishop after Peter and Paul; Alexander succeeded in the fifth place after Peter and Paul.

suo Martyris coronarunt: The blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, did crowne the Romane Church by their

their Martyrdome. Gelasius also, Decret. de scripturis. Petro data est societas. beatissimi Pauli. & pariter sanctam Romanam Ecclesiam Deo consecrantes: Vnto Peter blessed Paul was ioyned in societie, and they together did consecrate vnto God the Romane Church. If therefore the Bishops of Rome challenge any preeminence of authoritie from Peter, they may doe it as well from Paul: for they both founded that Church, preached there, and both there suffered, Fox pag. 1066.

Argum. 3. No Apostles were Bishops: for they were diuers offices, Ephel. 4. 11. he gaue some to be Apostles, some to be Pastors and Doctors: Ergo, they were diuers offices, and the same were not Apostles and Pastors or Bishops, for both are all one. The offices were much different: Apostles were immediatly called of God, Bishops and Pastors were ordained by the Apostles: the Apostles calling was generall ouer the whole world, the Pastors were obliged to their dioceses and parishes and particular Churches: the office of the Apostles was extraordinarie, and but for a time; the calling of Pastors was to endure euer in the Church. Wherefore it can in no wise bee, that the Apostles were Bishops of any certaine places. Irenaeus saith, that Fundata Ecclesia beati Apostoli Lino officium Episcopatus iniungunt: The Church of Rome once founded, the holy Apostles laid the charge of the Bishopricke vpon Linus. Whereby it appeareth, that they onely retained their Apostleship inioyned them of Christ, Tanhal. ex Fox p. 1066. It had therefore been contrarie to the commandement of Christ, who said, Ita in uniuersum mundum, Go into all the world: if they should haue left their calling, and bound themselues to any peculiar Church: Ergo, we conclude, that neither Peter nor Paul were Bishops of Rome.

One of their owne writers hereunto beareth witnesse, and sheweth out of S. Chrysostome a treble difference betweene an Apostle and a Bishop: Hic scilicet Episcopus per hominem vocatur, &c. A Bishop is called by men, is set ouer a certaine place, he is not alway certaine that he hath the spirit, &c. Hom. 19. in Math. But an Apostle is immediatly called of God, Galat. 1. 1. he is sent to preach, not to any one place, but to all Churches, as 1. Timoth. 2. 7. S. Paul saith, he was ordained an Apostle, that is, a teacher of the Gentiles. Thirdly, he is sure he hath the spirit, not to erre: as in the same place, I speak the truth in Christ, I lie not. And 1. Cor. 7. 40. I think that I have the spirit of God. Wherefore it is euident, that the Apostles were no Bishops properly so called: yet wee denie not, in a larger signification and vse of the word, but that many which were but Bishops were called Apostles: as Theodore witnesseth, They which are now called Bishops, were in times past named Apostles: so Epaphroditus was the Apostle of the Philippians, Titus of the Cretensians, &c. Sed praecedente tempore, &c. But afterward the name of Apostleship was left to those which were the true Apostles, &c. Therefore taking the name of an Apostle properly, and so likewise of a Bishop; we must of necessitie vnderstand two distinct offices, not coincident, or compatible together: otherwise, as I haue shewed concerning the name of an Apostle, so the name of a Bishop was diuersly taken: for in one sense Christ onely is called our Bishop, 1. Pet. 2. 23. As Origen also noteth, Proprie Episcopus Dominus Iesus, Our Lord Christ is properly our Bishop. So the Apostles in a larger vse of this name may bee called Bishops: but as it is taken commonly for the ruler or ouerseer of some particular Church, it can no way agree to the Apostles.

Let vs see the iudgement of the holy Martyrs: Julianus Lenile Martyr at Santerre in France, anno 1554. denieth that Peter was euer Pope or Bishop of Rome.

Malter Bradford holy Martyr saith, It doth no more follow, Peter dyed at Rome, or Peter chaire was at Rome: Ergo, he was Bishop there, and the seate of the primacie must needs therefore be at Rome; then this followeth, Moses and Aaron first exercised their offices vnto their death in the wilderness: Ergo, the wilderness was the place of their priesthood: or therefore the principallest place of the Iewish Church should be in the wilderness, Epist. ad Dom. Yanam. 1647.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, WHETHER THE Bishop of Rome be the true successor of S. Peter.

40. Error.

The Papists. They doe generally hold, that the Bishops of Rome being lineally descended by succession from Peter, haue the same primacie, Apostolike authoritie, and iurisdiction ouer the whole Church, which Peter had, Belarm. lib. 2. de pot. c. 10.

Belarm. c. 11.

They are very barren and scant of arguments in this place to maintaine and vphold this succession by, and in the end the Iesuite runneth to tradition: and at the length he thus concludeth; that it is not, de iure diuino, it is not necessarie by the law of God, that the Romane Bishop should be Peter's successor: but it dependeth onely vpon the ordinance of Peter, and is prooued by tradition, not diduced out of Scripture. That it was necessarie for Peter to haue a successor, they say, it is prooued out of Scripture: which we also graunt, that all faithfull Pastors and Ministers are the Apostles successors, though they haue not their plenarie and Apostolike power: but that the Pope ought to be and is his successor, it standeth vpon tradition.

We see then the grounds of their opinion: Scripture they haue none but blinde tradition: vnlesse therefore they could bring better stuffe for the Papall succession, we will not spend any time in confuting nothing.

Yet Ballarmine seemeth thus to reason: A succession in the Church is now necessarie in the new Testament, as Aaron had his succession in the old Testament: but there can bee no certaine succession now shewed, but in the chaire of Peter at Rome: Ergo, the Bishops of Rome are the true successors of Peter. For either at Antioch must the succession of Peter bee, or at Rome; but not at Antioch, because S. Peter remoued from thence to Rome, and there dyed, Ballar. cap. 12.

Ans. First, a locall, personall, and lineall succession is not now needfull, as before vnder the law: the true worship of God is not now tied to person or place, as our Sauour sheweth, Ioh. 4. 21. God will be worshipped, neither in this mountaine, nor at Ierusalem: and by the same reason, neither at Rome, &c. Secondly, yet a succession of doctrine, and of faithfull pastors wee graunt, and the Church was neuer without: such as the Prophet speaketh of, Esay 59. 21. My spirit, that is upon thee, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy seede, &c. and in this sense all faithfull Bishops doe succede the Apostles. Council. Aquisgr. c. 10. Isidor. Apostolici decedentibus, &c. The Apostles deceasing, Bishops haue succeeded, being appointed thorough the world in the seates of the Apostles. Yea S. Hierome doubteth not to say, that not onely Bishops, but all other faithfull Ministers are the Apostles successors: ad Heliodor. Absit ut de his, &c. God forbid I should iudge sinisterly of them, qui Apostolico gradu succedentes, which succeeding the degree of the Apostles, doe consecrate the bodie of Christ, &c. Thirdly, there may be shewed a succession to this day in Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, Ephesus, as afterward shal appeare, and not only at Rome. Fourthly, the death of Christ the chiefe Bishop is more forcible to priuledge Ierusalem for the chiefe seate, than the death of Peter at Rome maketh for the preeminence of that See before Antioch.

The Protestants.

THAT the Pope or Bishop of Rome neither can, is, or ought to be S. Peters successor, in his high and Apostolike authoritie, primacie, and iurisdiction ouer the whole Church, which Peter himselfe neuer had: thus we declare it.

Argum. 1. The Pope, though he were Peters successor, yet can he not receiue that from him, which he neuer had: but Peter had neuer any such primacie of power, as wee haue shewed before, Quest. 1. 2. Ergo, he is not herein his successor.

Argum. 2. That primacie which Peter had, could not bee conueied to any other: namely, his primacie of confession, which he first of all the Apostles did vtter concerning Christ, proceeding from faith, did adhere so to his person, that it could not be deuied to any successor of his: for Peters faith was a proper adiunct to himselfe, Argument. Tonsalli, Fox p. 1066.

Againe, how can he haue the Apostolike authoritie being not an Apostle: but an Apostle he is not: for Christ only made Apostles, the Apostles did not ordaine other Apostles, Argum. Nili.

To this Ballarmine answereth, first by a distinction, that whereas three things are to be considered in an Apostle: first, that he be immediatly called of God, and inspired to write Scripture: the second, to be a founder of the Churches, where none were before: thirdly, that he haue authoritie ouer the whole Church. The first (saith he) agreeth not to the Pope, but the two other doe: for by the Pope many Churches haue beene planted, and he hath authoritie ouer the whole Church, as Peters successor, &c. Ballar. cap. 12. resp. ad obiecl. 2. Nili.

Ans. First, there bee other properties required in an Apostle beside these, as I shewed before out of Chrysostome, whereof none agree to the Pope. Secondly, to admit these three conditions named by the Iesuite, if they bee all necessarie to make an Apostle, then the Pope wanting one of them, by his confession, can be no Apostle. Thirdly, wee denie, that either the Pope hath founded any Churches since the Apostles times, he hath peruered many nations, conuerted none; neither are the Popes much giuen to preaching, whereby nations are begotten vnto the faith: either that he hath such vniuersall authoritie ouer the whole Church, which is the thing in question. For he calling himselfe Bishop of Rome, and so fixing his chaire in a certaine place, can bee no Apostle: for the Apostles were no Bishops of one place more then another, as I haue shewed, but were sent to preach to all the world.

Secondly he answereth, that not the Apostles, but Christ did constitute the Bishop of Rome, to be the Apostolike and vniuersall Bishop of the whole Church.

Contra. First, the Apostles were immediatly called of Christ; then if the Pope be of Christs making an Apostle, he must shew his immediate calling in Scripture. Secondly, Ballarmine forgetteth himselfe: for a little before he said that the Bishop of Rome is Peters successor; by Peters fact, not by the institution of Christ.

3 He succeedeth not Peter rightly in place: for seeing Peter sate at Antioch; why may not that Church challenge succession, as well as Rome? Why might not also other Churches haue Apostolike like ſucceſſion, as Alexandria from Peter and Marke, Ieruſalem from Iames, Conſtantinople from Androw.

Further, they haue no certaine ſucceſſion from Peter: Tertullian maketh Clement the next ſucceſſor to Peter. Optatus firſt nameth Linus, then Clement: Irenaeus after Peter, placed Linus, and Clement in the fourth. What certaintie therefore can they haue of ſo vncertaine ſucceſſion? Fulk. annos in Romi: 16. ſect. 4.

4. It ſkillett not who cometh in the place and rounne of the Apoſtles: They that will be their true ſucceſſors, muſt follow their example, and walke in their ſteps, teaching their doctrine and embracing their holy vertues. Wherefore the Pope is not Peters right ſucceſſor, ſuaring both from his doctrine and example. Non ſanctorum filij ſunt, qui tenent loca ſanctorum, ſed qui exercent opera eorum: They are not the children of the Saints, which occupie the ſame places, but they which doe their workes, Lambert.

Fox. pag. 1110.

So Bernard writing to Eugenius, chargeth him, that in reſpect of his pompe and pride, he did rather ſucceede Conſtantine, then Peter, Iohann. Huſſ. pag. 610.

5. All good Biſhops and Paſtors are as well the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, as the Pope; nay rather then he, being a wicked man; Iohann Huſſ articl. 4. Fox. pag. 590: Lambert pag. 1120. Nay, they haue greater and more excellent titles, then to be called the Apoſtles ſucceſſors: for thoſe that walke in obedience vnto Gods commandements, our Sauour calleth them, his ſiſters, kinsfolkes and brethren, Matthi. 23. 30. Ergo, the Pope is not the right ſucceſſor of Peter.

Laſtly, of this matter Auguſtine thus writeth: Cathedra tibi quid ſecit eccleſia Romana; in qua Petrus ſedit; & in qua bodie Anaſtaſius ſedet: vel eccleſia Hieroſolymitana, in qua Iacobus ſedit; & in qua bodie Iohannes ſedet? What hath the See of Rome done vnto thee, wherein ſometime Peter ſate, and where Anaſtaſius now ſitteth? or what hath the Church or chaire of Ieruſalem committed, wherein ſometime Iames ſate, and Iohn now ſitteth? In thoſe words Auguſtine aſcribeth as much to the ſucceſſion of other Apoſtolicall Churches, as he doth to the ſucceſſion of the Biſhops of Rome. And therefore Canisius craftily leaueth out the one halfe of the ſentence, concerning the Church of Ieruſalem. Neither is it true, which our aduerſaries ſay, that Peters See remaineth ſtill at Rome, when all other Apoſtolicall Sees are gone: for euen to this day the See of Antioch ſtandeth and hath a Patriarch: likewiſe the See of Alexandria. The See of Conſtantinople neuer wanted ſucceſſors to this day: nor the Church of Epheſus: In India and Ethiopia, there hath been alwayes ſucceſſion in thoſe Churches planted by the Apoſtles, and is at this day, Fulk 2. Theſſ. 2. ſect. 3. Wherefore they haue no cauſe to bragge of their ſucceſſion, which is found in other places, as well as at Rome.

Cap. de precept. ecclef. artic. 9. B.

Let vs ſee the conſent of antiquitie: Clement. Epistol. 1. Peter is brought in ſpeaking thus, Huius Episcopum vobis ordino, cui ſolis mea predicatio & doctrina cathedram trade: I ordaine this man (namely Clement) to be your Biſhop, to whom only I deliuer my chaire of preaching and doctrine. Allo in the ſame Epistle, Post me non imperium aliquis aut indolens, aut ignorans verbi domini mysterium, ſuſcipiat cathedram meam: After me, let no vnſkilfull or vnlearned man, or ignorant in the word, take my chaire. In this Clementine Epistle, (which though it force not vs, becauſe we holde it forged, yet it preſſeth our aduerſaries, being of them receiued) we ſee that he onely is Peters ſucceſſor, who ſucceedeth him in doctrine.

Pope Felix alſo thus writeth ad Petrum Antiochen. Qui participes Apoſtoliſſe volunt, ducuntur & doctrina ipſius: They that will be partakers of the Apoſtleſhip, muſt follow the Apoſtles doctrine. But the Pope doth not embrace the Apoſtles doctrine: Ergo, he is not Apoſtolike. So alſo Symmachus, as he is alleaged in the decrees, decr. p. 1. diſt. 40. cap. 1. Petrus hereditatem innocentia miſit ad poſteros: Peter did leaue the inheritance of innocencie to his poſteritie: the Biſhops of Rome then, hauing loſt Peters innocencie, are not the rightfull heires of Peter.

Iohn Huſſ dyed for this article with others, for ſaying, Papa non eſt verus Petri ſucceſſor, ſed moribus contrarijs Petro: The Pope is noothe true ſucceſſor of Peter, if he be of contrarie manners in his life to Peter. Articul. 14. obiect. Concil. Conſtantiens.

THE FIFT QUESTION CONCERNING the primacie of the See of Rome.

THIS queſtion hath diuers parts, which muſt be handled in their order. Firſt, whether the Biſhop of Rome haue authoritie ouer other Biſhops. Secondly, whether appeales ought to be made to Rome from other countries. Thirdly, whether the Pope be ſubiect to the iudgement of any. Fourthly, whether he may be depoſed. Fifthly, what primacie he hath ouer other Churches, and how it began. Sixtly, of the titles and names giuen to the Biſhops of Rome.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE BISHOP OF ROME hath authoritie over other Bishops.

The Popes.

The first doubt is to say, that the Bishop of Rome hath authoritie and ought so to have, to ordain and constitute Bishops, to depose and depose them, to restore them likewise to their former dignities, and this power he exerciseth over the vniuersall Church. 41. Error.

The Iesuite principal argument is drawn from certaine examples: how the Bishops of Rome haue in times past constituted, deposed, and restored some Bishops in the Greeke Church, as in the Patriarchall Sees of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch: Ergo, he hath power over all Bishops. Bellarm. lib. 2. de Rom. pont. cap. 18.

We answer, First, it was not done by the absolute authoritie of the Romane Bishops, any such constitution, or deposition, though perhaps their consent and allowance were required, as Leo writeth thus to Marcellian the Emperour, about the ordaining of Anasthus Bishop of Constantinople: Sed si quod vestre paternae auctoritatis et dei fauoris adiutus Episcopatus tam a vobis ob- Epistol. 54.
auit: It is sufficient, that by your godly helpe and my fauourable assent, he hath obtained so famous Bishopricke: Whether was greater now, the helpe and withstanding of the Emperour, or the bare assent of Leo? Secondly, we denie not but that the Pope sometimes, what by sufferance of others, what by his owne intrusion, hath vsurped this power over other Bishops: but this ought not to make a lawe: that which is once or twice done by a false title, cannot proue the iustnes of the title: Thirdly, that the Bishop of Rome hath no such authoritie, it appeareth by this, that he doth not; neither of many yeares hath constituted or ordained the Patriarches of the Greeke Church: they came not vp to Rome, nor yet sent thither for their pale as other Archbishops here in the West parts haue done, and payed full dearly for them, being made slaves to the beast of Rome.

This appeareth notably in the Countell of Florence, Sess. 2. for it so falling out, that Isidore Patriarch of Constantinople, who was there personally present, being an aged man, and wearied with long trauell, suddenly dyed: whereupon the Pope Eugenius the fourth, dealt with the Grecians very earnestly, Et vult in fide Patriarcham eligere: That they would chuse them a Patriarch now in the Synode: ut quoniam suffraganeis, hoc consueuerunt: that whom you appoynt, we may confirme, saith the Pope. The Grecians made him this answer: So bre Patriarcham eligere non possunt, cum Græci mos semper fuerit, in sua ecclesia Patriarcham sufficere, simul quoque conferre: They could not chuse their Patriarch here, seeing it alwayes hath been the Grecians manner to chuse the Patriarch in his owne Church, and there to consecrate him. See then, it was denyed to the Popes face, that he had any thing to doe with electing, consecrating, or confirming the Patriarch of Constantinople.

The Pope indeed doth take vpon him to this day, to make Patriarches: assigning to one the title of Constantinople, to another, the Patriarchship of Antioch, and so of the rest; but they haue onely the bare names, without either the dignitie or iurisdiction of those places: not much unlike to a certaine Bastone in the Emperours Court at Constantinople; the wanton Courtiers to make themselves sport, vpon solemne dayes were accustomed, aliquando liberos in pectus patris palatio comparente, quos postea Patriarcham eligere solent: To take some lay man, and arraye him like a Bishop, who should counterfeite the Patriarch: which abuse was reformed, Synod. 8. Constantinensis. 16. The like disorder was corrected in the Countell of Basle Sess. 21. Turpissimum abusu remouendum censuimus, quo certis anni celebrantibus nonnulli cardines, baculis, ac vestibus pontificalibus muniti episcopatus bene dicuntur: We thinke good that abuse be remoued, that some at certaine solemnities of the yeare, doe take vpon them with a Miter, a staffe, and other pontificall vestures, as Bishops to giue blessing. Much like to these counterfeite Patriarches and Bishops, are the Popes Patriarches, who haue nothing beside the name and habite of Patriarches.

Argum. 2. The Iesuite with the rest doe very much vrg a certaine place of Cyprian. Epistol. 3. ad Corinthios: Non aliquid obest a suis hæreses, aut nata schismata; quod inde; quod sacerdos Dei non ob- From hence spring heresies and schismes, that Gods priest is not obeyed, and that one Priest or Pastor at once in the Church in Christs stead is not acknowledged. Whereupon they would conclude, that the Pope ought to be this one chiefe Priest, and Pastor in the Church: for Cyprian thus speaking writeth to Corinthius Bishop of Rome.

Argum. 3. We must vnderstand that Cyprian at this time had to deale with the Nouancians, who both at Rome where Cordulus was, and at Carthage where Cyprian was Bishop, diuiding themselves from the Church, erected schismaticall Bishops of their owne against the Catholike Bishops: Vpon this occasion Cyprian sheweth, that there ought to be but one Bishop, not ouer the whole vnuerfall, but in euery particular Church: for he complaineth, that this vnite of the Priesthood was not kept in Carthage, as well as in Rome: for thus he writeth in the said Epistle, Epistola. Caterum dico dico doleo, dico promoveo, quando Episcopus in locum defuncti substituitur, &c. plebs in Episcopatu quadrimis iam probatus, series ad leonem petrum, &c. 91. q. 1. diebus quibus ad se haurire feci, ad leonem deueni postulat, cum talis frater a quibusdam desertis & perditis extra Ecclesiam inuenitur impugnat, videtur: But I speake it with griefe, I speake it being prouoked, when a Bishop is substituted in the place of the dead, &c. for the space of foure yeares knowne and appoynted to his people, so often sought for to be throwen to the Lyons, yea and at that instant, when I wrote these letters to you, againe called for to the Lyons: when such a brother shall be impugned of certaine desperate and damnable persons, managates from the Church, &c. Who seeth not that Cyrian here speaketh of himselfe, and not of Cornelius, who was Bishop of Rome but two yeares and an halfe: and complaineth that euen in Carthage the right Pastor and Bishop was so abused: This place therefore serueth not at all for the primatie of the Bishop of Rome.

That the Pope neither hath, nor yet ought to haue any such authoritie over other Bishops: but that euery one in his owne precinct and iurisdiction, hath the chiefe charge: It is thus proued.

Argum. 1. Peter was not chiefe, neither did he exercise iurisdiction ouer the rest: Ergo neither the Pope ought to doe ouer other Bishops. The antecedent or first part is thus confirmed. The heavenly Ierusalem, which is the Church of God, is described Apocal. 2. not with one foundation onely of Peter, but with syleue foundations after the number of the Apostles: argum. 2. I shall. To this purpose also he alleageth a saying out of Hieronimus contra Iovinianum. All the Apostles received the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: and vpon them all indifferently and equally, is the strength of the Church grounded and established, Fox pag. 1066.

Argum. 3. Till the yeare of the Lord 340. there was no respect had to the Church of Rome, but euery Church was ruled by their owne government: afterward followed the Councell of Nice, wherein was decreed, that the whole Church should be diuided into foure circumscriptions or precincts, ouer the which there were foure Metropolitanes or Patriarches set: first the Bishop of Rome: next the Bishop of Alexandria: the third was the Bishop of Antioch: the fourth the Bishop of Ierusalem: and not long after came in the Bishop of Constantinople in the room of the Bishop of Antioch. All these had equall authoritie in their prouinces, and one was not to doe within anothers charge: Ergo, the Bishop of Rome had not then the iurisdiction ouer the whole Church, argum. 4. Nisi plura Fox pag. 9.

Argum. 5. We will adioyne the testimonie of the fathers of Basile, which were all of the Popish sect: what haue the Bishops been in our dayes, say they, but onely shadowes might they not haue been called shepheards without sheepe? what had they more then their Mixers and their Staffs, when they could determine nothing ouer their subiects? Verely in the primitive Church, the Bishops had the greatest power and authoritie: but now it was come to that poynt that they exceeded the common sort of priests onely in their habite and reuerence. What plainer testimonie can we haue, then from the Papists themselves?

We haue also the consents of all antiquitie, the decrees of the eight generall Councells, that the Bishop of Rome hath no such preeminence or predominant power ouer his fellow Bishops.

Council. Nicen. can. 6. Honori sunt cuique seruatur ecclesie, &c. To euery Church be referred the honor and dignitie thereof, let the old custome in Lybia, Egypt, Pentapolis, take place, scilicet Alexandrius Episcopus horum regionum habuit potestatem, quia & vrbis Roma Episcopo pariter mori solet. So that the Bishop of Alexandria haue the iurisdiction ouer all these Prouinces, because the like vse or manner remained to the Bishop of Rome; that is, the Bishop of Alexandria shall haue authoritie ouer his confines; as the Bishop of Rome ouer his: not as Barbaricus doth, only compound it, let the Bishop of Alexandria rule his prouince, because the Bishop of Rome hath the like custome ouer the same prouince of Egypt, Libia, &c. for this were, id est per idem, to proue the same by the same: and the Canon saith, pariter mori solet, the like vse: Ergo, Alexandria hath the like authoritie. But if Rome were about the See of Alexandria, their iurisdiction should not be like, but vnlike. And againe, let euery Church haue it owne honor. But if Rome were the commander of the rest, the honor should be onely referred to it, and to no Church beside.

Constantinopol. 1. the 2. general. Can. 2. the former Canon of Nice is ratified.

Ephe. 3. general. Can. 8. it was decreed, after that Zenon Bishop of Cyprus had complained of the vsurpation of the Patriarch of Antioch, affirming, that they within the Iland did alwayes chuse their owne Metropolitan, and that neither the Bishop of Antioch, nor alius quissim, nor any other did euer ordaine there: it was decreed, that Cyprus should be exempt from the iurisdiction of Antioch, or of any other Sea; and should chuse their Metropolitan themselves: Ergo, much lesse was Cyprus subiect to the See of Rome.

Chalcedon.

Chalcedonens. the 4. generall, action. 16. they determine, the Archbishop of Constantinople, Eisdem primatibus honoris dignum: To be worthie of the same primacie of honor, which the Bishop of Rome hath: This was decreed, though Paschasius, and Lucius the Popes Legates earnestly withstood it. And further in the same place, the matter was thus in that Councell discussed: Sedi senioris Romae, propter imperium civitatis illius, &c. Vnto the See of the older Rome, because it was the imperiall Citie, the Fathers did give priuiledges: And by the same reason the 150. Fathers assembled in Constantinople being moued, Aequa sanctissima sedi nouae Romae, &c. Did ascribe equall priuiledges to the most holy See of new Rome; thinking it reasonable, that the Citie, which was adorned both with the imperiall seate, and Senate, should enioy equall priuiledges with olde Rome, and in Ecclesiasticall affaires to haue maiestie as well as the other, and to be second after the other. Out of the actes of this Councell three things may be gathered: First, that both in this Synode, and in the second generall Councell of Constantinople equall priuiledges were given to the See of Constantinople, with Rome. Secondly, that notwithstanding, Rome for antiquitie sake had the first place. Thirdly, that these two Patriarchall Sees had those priuiledges by reason of the imperiall dignitie; contrarie to that, which Bellarmino beareth vs in hand, that Rome had the primacie ouer other Churches from Christ, and not from Cesar. 17. And yet beside the authoritie of this Councell, in the Trullane the sixt generall, Can. 38. it was thus decreed: Signa civitas a regia potestate innouata &c. If any Citie in respect of the ciuill state be innouated and exalted by the princely power, that the order also of Ecclesiasticall matters should follow, that is, it should be chiefe also in Ecclesiasticall affaires, as in ciuill: wherefore it is euident, that olde Rome enioyed her priuiledges by the benefite of the Empire.

Constantinop. the 5. generall, action. 1. the synode speaking of Leo Bishop of Rome, and Cyrillus of Alexandria, saith thus, Qui aequaliter ab hac synodo, pro statu orthodoxae fidei honorati sunt: Whom this synode honoreth alike, because of the right faith: the synode giueth like honour to the Bishops of Rome and Alexandria.

Constantinop. 3. the 6. generall, which is also the Trullane. Can. 36. Decernimus ut thronus Constantinopol. aequalia privilegia cum antiqua Roma throno obtineat: We decree that the See of Constantinople enioy equall priuiledges with the ancient See of Rome.

Council. the 7. generall, action 2. Adrianus the Bishop of Rome writeth to Tharasius Bishop of Constantinople, giuing him this stile, Dilecto fratri Tharasio, vniuersali Patriarcha: To my beloued brother Tharasius, vniuersall Patriarch. We see then that the Bishop of Constantinople had both the like stile and authoritie, which the Bishop of Rome had.

Constantinop. 4. the 8. generall, Can. 21. Definimus, qui patriarchalibus sedibus praesunt, omni honore dignos indicandos: We define, that the presidents of the patriarchall Sees are worthie all honor: and then are reckoned vp, first Rome, then Constantinople; after these Alexandria, Antioch, Ierusalem: so that the See of Rome is but patriarchall, as the rest: a primacie onely of order it hath, to be named before the rest.

Thus we haue the consent of the 8. generall Councils, to the which Augustine agreeth, Habet omnis Episcopus, saith he, pro licentia libertatis & potestatis sua arbitrium proprium, tanquam iudicari ab alio non possit, quomodo nec ipse potest alium iudicare, sed expectemus vniuersi iudicium domini nostri Iesu Christi: Euery Bishop is priuiledged by his owne authoritie to follow his owne iudgement, neither is subiect to the iudgement of other Bishops, as he is not to iudge them, but they all must be referred to the iudgement of Christ. See then in this place Augustine setteth Bishops in the highest roume in the Church, and saith, they haue no iudge aboue them but Christ.

Of this iudgement also were the holy Martyrs: that the Bishop of Rome had no such souerainty ouer other Bishops. Thomas Becket Martyr affirmed, that the Pope of Rome was but Bishop ouer his owne diocese, and that he had no further power, Fox pag. 1039.

M. Philips telleth Bourr. that by the word of God, the Pope hath no more authoritie, then the Bishop of London hath, Fox pag. 1811. And he sheweth further, how that Cyprian called the Bishop of Rome his fellow Bishop. p. 1804.

The sentence of these holy Martyrs sealed with their blood, is of greater waight then many arguments: and by those that loue the truth, ought much to be reuerenced, and had in great regard.

Now lastly we will obiect against them the Imperiall constitutions, together with their owne Canons: for the first, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. l. 6. Honor. Theodos. Vrbis Constantinopolitanae. veteris Romae prerogativa laudatur: The Citie of Constantinople hath the prerogative of old Rome. And leg. 15. Leo, Anthem. Constantinop. Ecclesia mater nostra pietatis, &c. The Church of Constantinople the mother of our faith, and of all right beleeuing Christians: And in the same place, the priuiledge of that Church, ante alios residendi, to haue the first seate, is ratified and confirmed. And wheras Bellarmino vrgeth the epistle of Iustinian written to Iohannes Bishop of Rome, where he acknowledgeth Rome to be the head of all Churches: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 4. the same Iustinian the 20. h. 1.

thus expoundeth himself, hauing given the same title of headship vnto Rome, Romanus intelligitur, non solum veterum, sed hanc regionem nostram: By Rome we vnderstand, not onely olde Rome, but this princely Citie also, Qua multis rebus condita est auguria: Which was first founded and built with more happie and prosperous beginnings. Thus we see that the Imperiall Citie of Constantinople by the lawes Imperiall was made equall to Rome. And their owne decrees also doe ratifie the Canon of the Chalcedon Councell, that Constantinople should haue familia privilegia, like priuiledges to the Citie of Rome, decr. p. 1. dist. 22. cap. 6.

THE SECOND PART CONCERNING AP- peales to be made to Rome.

The Papists.

S<sup>V</sup>ch, say they, is the preeminent authoritie of the Bishop of Rome, that appeales may be made vnto him from all Churches in the world, and that all ought to stand to his sentence and determination. For the prooffe hereof they bring no Scripture, nor any sound argument, but stand chiefly vpon certaine odde examples of some that haue appealed to Rome: which we deny not to haue been done: but our answer more at large is this, Bellar. lib. 2. de pontif. cap. 21.

1. One cause of these appeales, was both for that they which were iustly condemned of other Churches, found greater libertie and fauour at Rome, as Apianus did, who being condemned in the sixth Africane Councell for his detestable conditions, found fauour with Zosimus Bishop of Rome, who wrote for him to the Councell to be receiued againe. No meruaile then, if licentious fellows, hoping to finde more fauour at Rome, did appeale thither: As also the ambition of the Bishops of Rome did somewhat helpe forward this matter, who were as readie to receiue such appeales, as others were to make them.

2. Bishop Tunstall doth answer very fully to this poynt, that, although appeales were made to Rome, yet was it not for any iurisdiction that the See had: but this was the cause, partly for that there were many diuisions and part-takings in the Orientall Churches, as also because many were infected with heresies, from the which the West and Occidentall Churches were more free; they were content to referre the cause many times to the Bishop of Rome, as being a more indifferent Iudge, and not like to be partiall, being no partie in the cause. Neither was their suit to the Bishop of Rome singularly, but to the whole congregation of the Bishops of Italie and France, or of the whole West, as it appeareth by the Epistles of Basile, Tunstall apud Fox. 1067.

The Iesuite alleageth the fourth & seuenth Canons of the Councell of Sardis, which he saith was a generall Councell consisting of 300. Bishops: which said Canons doe allow and authorise appeales made to the See of Rome, and there the causes to be determined, or by direction from the Bishop of Rome.

Ans. 1. That such Canons are to be found in the Councell which beareth the name of Sardis, we graunt: but that small credite is to be giuen vnto those Canons, which goe vnder the name of this Councell; we are led by these coniectures and likelihoods so to thinke. 1. Hosius Bishop of Corduba in Spayne was the author of these two Canons, who both might be partiall in behalfe of the Occidentall Patriarch of Rome; neither is much to be attributed to him, for his inconstancie, because he subscribed to the Arimine Councell of the Arrians. 2. Whereas it is affirmed that there were present 300. Bishops of the West, and 76. of the East, Can. 21. we finde that there were of this number but 121. that subscribed: for the Greeke went apart by themselves, and it should seeme that many Bishops of the Latin Church departed also: this Canon therefore had not the consent of the Greeke Church. 3. That there are diuers Canons forged vnder the name of this Councell, of the which it is like those are, it appeareth by the preface to this Councell, when we reade thus: Sunt alia 40. regulae, quae per Osium Episcopum Cordubensem currunt, quae titulatur inquam 20. Episcoporum apud Sardicam, &c. There be beside these 40. other rules, which passe vnder the name of Osii Cordubensis, which are entituled, as decreed by the Bishops in Sardis, which the Grecians haue not, but are found onely among the Latines.

Ans. 2. We haue many decrees and Canons of better Councils, to oppose against this tumultuous conuenticle of Sardis.

Fabian Bishop of Rome Epistol. 3. Semper ibi causa agatur, ubi crimen admittitur: Let alwayes the cause be heard there, where the crime is committed.

Council. Constantinopol. 1. Can. 4. Manifestum est, quod per singulas prouincias, prouincialis synodus administrare & gubernare omnia debeat: It is manifest, that in euery Prouince, a prouinciall Synode ought to rule and determine euery matter. Then what neede appeales to be made to Rome?

Carthagenens. 3. Can. 28. Placuit ut Episcopi trans mare non proficiantur: We thinke it good, that Bishops should not trauell ouer the sea: that is, to make or prosecute appeales.

Alexandrian. Council. Can. 22. Ad transmarina qui putauerit appellandum à multis a Africam in compo-

non suscipiatur: He that thinketh to appeale beyond the sea, let him not be receiued to the communion within any part of Africa.

Leo. Epistol. 83. ad Anastasium, Bishop of Theſſalonica: he reprobeth the said Bishop, for citing peremptorily one Atticus a Bishop to come before him, and compelling him, iter asperum et periculū plenū per inuicem agere, to take a bitter iourney, and dangerous, through snow, and vnknewne wayes, in so much that some of his companie perished by the way: As this was a fault in him; so hath it been in diuers Popes, that haue caused many in the depth of winter, with perill, yea losse of life, to obey their citations.

Constantinopol. general. 8. can. 26. Licetis Episcopis promouere ad Patriarcham, si crediderint se iniustū pati à Metropolitano, à quo litibus suis imponatur: It shall be lawfull for the Bishops to appeale to their Patriarch, if they be wronged by their Metropolitan, and the Patriarch shall end the strife. There neede not then any further appeale to Rome.

That appeales ought not to be made to Rome, but that all matters and controuersies may best be ended and determined at home, where they doe arise: It is thus confirmed.

1. This matter was notably handled, anno 420. in the first Councell of Carthage, where Augustine was present, with Proper and Orosius: To this Councell Pope Zozimus sent his Legate with certaine requests, of the which this was one, that it might be lawfull for Bishops and priests to appeale from the sentence of their Metropolitans, and also of the Councell to Rome: alleaging for himselfe a decree of the Nicene Councell. The Councell of Carthage sent forthwith to the Patriarches of Constantinople, Antioch and Alexandria, for a copie of the Councell of Nice, wherein no such Canon was found, that appeales should be made to Rome: but the contrary; for in the first Canon of that Councell, it was found how all matters, and all persons Ecclesiasticall, both Bishops and others were committed to their Metropolitans. Vpon this decree the Councell of Carthage drew out certaine reasons why appeales should not be made to Rome: First, it is not otherwise to be thought, but that the grace of God is as readie at hand in one prouince as in another. Secondly, there is no need to seeke any outlandish helpe: for the partie grieved may appeale to a prouinciall or generall Councell. Thirdly, it were not equall nor right to appeale from the Councell to the Bishop of Rome: for it is not like that God will inspire his truth vnto the Bishop, and deny it to a multitude congregated in his name.

Fourthly, no forraigne or outlandish iudgement can be so vpright or iust: because the witnesses cannot be present, being hindred by infirmities of sexe, age, sickness, by whom the truth should be discussed.

Vpon these reasons the Councell concluded, that neither any appeales should be made to Rome: neither that Legates should be sent from Rome for deciding of matters: And this answer they made to Zozimus first, then to Bonifacius and Celestinus, that in short time one succeeded another. And for all the Bishop of Rome his absolution, Apinaris was againe called coram, and brought to confesse his fault.

Now out of the Acts of this Councell, and their reasons alleaged we conclude, that it is not fit, conuenient nor reasonable, that appeales should be made to Rome.

The Iesuite answereth, that appeales were forbidden to be made by priests to Rome, not by Bishops. This is but a vaine shift, for the reasons of the Councell are generall against all appeales. And one of Pope Zozimus his requests, which the Councell iudged to be vnreasonable, and therefore would not yeeld to it, was generall, that it might be lawfull for Bishops and priests to appeale from the sentence of their Metropolitans, and also from the Councell to the See of Rome: the Iesuites surmise therefore is false, that the Councell onely provided against the appellation of priests to Rome, and not of Bishops, Concilio. sum. 1. Concil. Carth. 6.

But whereas Pope Zozimus is charged with forgerie, for corrupting of the Canons of the Nicene Councell: Bellarmino doth busilie bestirre himselfe to preferre the credite of his great master, and so the rest of that side, but all to little purpose.

First, in the 20. Session of the Florentine Councell, where the Bishops of the Greeke Church were present with their Emperor, Marcus Bishop of Ephesus affirmed that Zozimus had corrupted the Nicene Councell; for the copies sent from Cyrillus of Alexandria, and Proclus Patriarch of Constantinople contained no such thing, as was alleaged by Zozimus, that the Bishop of Rome should be called vniuersall, or Oecumenicall Bishop; and so concludeth that the Bishop of Rome did send falsum decretum, a false decree vnto the Synode. Against him rose vp Iohannes the Prouinciall, affirming that to be false that was reported of Zozimus, and that the Greeke copies were corrupted rather, for Athanasius did write to Marcus Bishop of Rome for the true copie of the Nicene Councell, which the Arrians had burned at Alexandria. But Bellarmino himselfe reiecteth this answer, as vnttrue, for that Marcus was not then liuing, when the Arrians (Athanasius being expelled) burned the bookes; and therefore Athanasius could not write to a dead man.

And againe, if Mareus (ſaith he) had ſent the true copies to Albanus, then the copies kept at Alexandria, would not have varied from that, which Zozimus ſent afterward. Thus Bellarmin confuteſh the allegation of the Provinciall, cap. 25. therefore he hath deuifed two other eſpeciall answers beſide. Firſt, he ſaith, that many Canons of the Nicene Councell are wanting, and theſe cited by Zozimus might be ſome of them. Contra. It is very like, that more Canons, then are now extant, were agreed vpon in the Nicene Councell, as Gregorius 10. ſent to the King of Armenia for a true copie of the Nicene Councell, which was thought to be all extant in that tongue: yet the Church of Rome neuer receiued but 20. Canons, amongſt the which, that of Zozimus cannot be found, ſo ſaith Stephanus one of your Popes, diſtinct. 16. can. 13.

Secondly, theſe Canons cited by Zozimus were not extant in the Councell of Nice, but of Sardis, which were both taken for one Councell, and of like authoritie; and therefore the Canons of the one might be taken for the other.

Contra. Firſt, theſe two Councels could not be taken for one, there being at the leaſt twentie yeares betwene; nor of like authoritie, the Councell of Sardis not hauing the conſent of the Greeke Church, as I haue ſhewed. Secondly, the Canons of the Nicene which are wanting, are thought to haue been inſerted into the Councell of Antioch, not this of Sardis, as Stephanus thinkeſh, lib. 16. c. 13. And therefore they had better reaſon to miſtake that Councell, rather then the other for the Nicene. Thirdly, all that the leſuite hath ſaid, if it were as he affirmeth, doth but excuſe the Pope from wilfull corruption of the Councell, and imputeth it to his ignorance: but I will ſpend no longer time about this matter.

Argum. 2. We can bring the decrees of a latter Councell, then this of Carthage: for in the Councell of Baſile it was decreed, that no actions or controverſies ſhould be brought from other countries to be pleaded at Rome, which were more then foure daies iourney diſtant from the ſaid court of Rome, a few principall matters onely excepted, apud Fox p. 697.

Lateranenſ. Concil. ſub Innocent. 3. cap. 37. Statuimus, ne quis ultra duas diſtas extra ſuam dioceſim per litteras apoſtolicas ad iudicium trahi poſſit: We ordaine; that no man ſhould be drawne by letters Apoſtolicall (he meaneth Citations from Rome) about two daies iourney out of his owne diocelle.

Argum. 3. This alſo is flatly contrarie to the rule of the Apoſtle, that appellations ſhould be made out of the Church a farre off. Is it ſo, ſaith he, that there is not a wiſe man amongſt you, no not one that can iudge amongſt his brethren? 1. Cor. 6. 5. Ergo, euery Church hath wiſe men ſufficient in it, whereby their controverſies may be ended.

4. Auguſtine alſo thus writeth concerning this matter, Miltiades Episcopus Romanus, non ſi uſurpauit iudicium de cauſa Cecilian, ſed rogatus imperator indices miſit Episcopos, qui cum eo ſederent, epiſt. 162. Miltiades Biſhop of Rome did not uſurpe or take vpon himſelfe to iudge the cauſe of Cecilian, but the Emperour being requested, ſent other Biſhops, that ſhould ſit and determine the cauſe together with him. Out of theſe words firſt we note, that it had been uſurpation and preſumption for the Biſhop of Rome to haue taken vpon him the iudgement of this matter, not belonging vnto him, vnleſſe the Emperour had committed it. Secondly, that Miltiades did not ſuffer other Biſhops to ſit with him, as Bellarmin imagineth: but he could not otherwiſe chuſe, for they were ioyned in commiſſion by the Emperour, to be iudges as well as he. Thus we ſee what ſmall ſhew or colour of title the Pope hath, to heare or receiue appeales from other countries.

Laſtly, concerning the vnlawfulnes of appeales to Rome, we haue the full conſent and determination of the Clergie of England, in King Henry the 8. his daies, aſſembled then in the Conuocation houſe: in the which number of them which conſented and ſubſcribed, were Stephen Gardener, Tonſhal, Stokeſly, Boner, Heth, and other, which were Archbiſhops in thoſe dayes, with many other: In a certaine inſtrument therefore, whereunto they ſubſcribe, they proteſt againſt the Pope, for receiuing of forraine appellations in this maner: The Popes, ſay they, doe tranſgreſſe their owne profeſſion made in their creation: for they in their creation doe make a ſolemne vow and promiſe, inuiolably to obſerue and keepe all the ordinances made in the firſt eight generall Councils: among the which it is eſpecially provided and enacted, that all cauſes ſhall be determined in the ſame prouince where they began, vid. plur. Fox p. 1064.

Let vs ſee both the Imperiall and pontificall conſtitutions concerning the inhibiting of appeales to be made a farre off.

Cod. lib. 3. tit. 23. leg. 3. Diocletianus: Aliter debet ſequi forum rei, That the plaintife muſt ſue in the court of the defendant; that is, where he dwelleth. And lib. 2. tit. 47. l. 2. the ſame Dioclet. Quamcunque cauſam agendum, &c. What cauſe ſoeuer a man hath in hand, he muſt goe to the Preſident of that prouince, where they haue their dwelling, whom he impleadeth. Thus euen by the light of nature, this Heathen Emperour could ſee what was right and reaſonable in this caſe.

The Chriſtian Emperours alſo haue decreed the ſame, as Conſtantine. Cod. lib. 3. tit. 14. leg. 1. Terminis prouinciarum non cogantur excedere: That widowes, pupils, impotent, and ſicke perſons ſhould the end of the Council, it is certaine that Marcellinus Bishop of Rome, for sacrificing to Idols, was iudged and condemned of the Council, as may appeare by these circumstances: First, Marcellinus was brought before the Council, and appeared foure times, twice denying his fault, and casting it vpon others, the third time he excuseth his fault, that he did not sacrifice; Sed tamen grauius iniquitas super premissis dimittit: I did onely lifting vp my hands, cast incense into the fire: the fourth time, he falleth flat vpon the ground confessing his fault, and saying, Poenitentiam habeo I haue sinned before you all. Secondly, there were 72 witnesses produced against him, for the Council saith, In 72 comparsibus hunc delinquentem producit: A Prelate must bee condemned by 72 witnesses. Whereto then is added this straight reasoning, the oftrecappling of Marcellinus, and the producing of witnesses, if he were not iudged: Thirdly, and yet the thing is made more manifest, in that one Quintus a Bishop standing vp in the Council, said thus: Insuper cor meum possit malitia: Thou hast O Bishop filled thy heart with malice: propterea ego non recedam de synodo, donec purgatus cor tuum monstraueris: therefore I will not rise from the Synode, before thy staine be made manifest. And then it followeth, Idcirco lacrimis et uocibus facientibus decessit: They condemned Marcellinus lying vpon the ground. How can it be denied now, but that Marcellinus was both rebuked and condemned in this Council?

Argum. 2. The Rhemists thus argue, out of this place of the Apostle, 1. Corint. 8. 7. They put themselves first to the Lord, then to us: therefore (say they) the principall respect next after God, is to be had of the Ministers of religion, in all temporall and spirituall duties, Amor nobis habet.

Ans. It is true that the Ministers of God, teaching according to his will, as the Apostle saith, ought of all men principally to be heard: yet this excludeth not the soueraine authoritie of the Prince ouer all persons, to whom the Apostle elsewhere exhorteth every soule to be subiect, Rom. 13. 1. The Apostle then in this place speaketh of spirituall instruction, not of ciuill administration.

The Protestants

That the Pope, as well as other ecclesiasticall persons, ought to be, and is by right subiect to the iudgement and authoritie of the Emperour, King, Prince, or other supreme Magistrat, and may also by generall Councils be corrected and censured, thus it is proved:

Argum. 1. Peter was iudged of Paul, Galat. 2. and of him iustly reprobued: Ergo, the doings of the Pope may be iudged and censured.

Bellarmino answereth, that it was not iudicialis censura, but fraterna correctio, it was no iudiciall censure, but a brotherly reprehension.

We replye: First, publike censure and reprehension is a part of ecclesiasticall iudgement and discipline, therefore Peter being publicly rebuked, was thereby iudged also of Paul. Secondly, the question is not onely concerning publike and open iudgement, but whether it be lawfull to call the Popes doings into question; and whether his decrees are absolutely to be received without any scanning or discolling, or making any doubt thereof: for this we hold, that it is the due of all Christians to examine and trie the truth of all things, which they are to receive and to beleeue, though they be not formally and iudicially, as in Consistories, to iudge their spirituall pastors: so the Decrees iudged of the Apostles doctrine; so may the Popes decrees be examined and iudged: Thirdly, the Iesuite graunteth that the Pope may be rebuked and brotherly reprobued: but the Extravagant denieth it, Nemo est, qui audens dicere, dominus esse factus sit: None dare by vnto him, sir why doest thou say so?

Argum. 2. Every soule must be subiect to the higher powers: Ergo, the Pope, Rom. 13. 1. Bellarmino answereth, that the Apostle here speaketh of all superiours both spirituall and temporall and therefore it cannot be concluded, that the Pope ought to obey, but he must be obeyed, because he is also a spirituall power.

We replye: S. Paul in this place speaketh onely of the Ciuill Magistrat. First, he calleth them Princes, which is not meant of Ecclesiasticall or Church gouernours, nor so taken in any place of Scripture. Secondly, they are said to beare the sword. Thirdly, tribute is paid to them: those things agree not to Ecclesiasticall gouernours: so the Iesuite is answered.

Thus Master Bradford holy Martyr sometime answered to this place: Let every soule (saith the Apostle) be subiect to the superiour power: and he sheweth what power, quia & laicum est, which beareth the sword: which is not the spirituall, but the temporall power. And in the same place he declarreth out of Chrysostomus, how that Bishops, Prophets, Apostles, ought to be obedient to temporall Magistrates, Par. p. 1607.

Saint Cyprian out of this place inferreth, that all men both Priests and Monkes, as well as temporall men, Whether thou be an Apostle, saith he, an Euangelist, or Prophet, see, ought to be subiect to the highest power.

Their owne Master of the Sentences expoundeth this place of the secular power, Solomonus of Apollonius legum de seculari potestate, c. 1. lib. 1. dist. 44.

Argum. S. Peter also exhorteth, as the Apostle doth here, that they should be subiect to euerie humane creature, 1. Pet. 2. 13. that is, to the temporall gouernour.

To this place, inueniuntur 3. first thus answereth, as he is alleged Decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 3. c. 6. that spirituall persons are not here vnderstood: for by the same reason (the Apostle naming euerie humane creature, to whom they should bee subiect) they should submit themselves to euerie seruant.

Contra. Who seeth not how wilfully blinde this Pope is: for the Apostle speaketh not of euerie man simply, but of men in authoritie: as Bellarmino confesseth, Humana creatura potentium habenti: For by that reason, not onely spirituall persons, but temporall should bee subiect to euerie meane person.

Secondly, Bellarmino vnderstandeth, by euerie humane creature, as well the power spirituall, as temporall, though a speciall instance be giuen of the King, cap. 2. q. 2. ad argum.

Contra. I will here oppose against Bellarmino the contrarie iudgement of the Rhemists, who vpon that place Rom. 13. 1. thus write: S. Paul here (as S. Peter doth 1. chap. 2.) expressly chargeth euerie man to bee subiect to his temporall Prince. And againe, by humana creatura, 1. Pet. 2. 13. they vnderstand the temporall Magistrate elected by the people, in their Annotations vpon that place.

Thirdly, our Rhemists yielding this place to be vnderstood onely of the temporall Magistrate, yet denie that this commaundement is giuen to spirituall men, but affirme that the King is called most excellently in respect of other his inferiour ministers and officers, not in respect of Popes, Bishops, Priests, &c.

Contra. First, the Rhemists affirme S. Paul, Rom. 13. and S. Peter in this place to haue both one meaning: but there by euerie soule, all persons as well spirituall as temporall are vnderstood: Ergo, it must bee so taken here: Secondly, S. Peter would haue all them to bee subiect, to whom he writeth: but he writeth to spirituall Pastors and Elders, chap. 1. Ergo, they also must bee subiect, and in respect of them also is the King most excellently. Thirdly, they haue power ouer all: euen doers to punish them, verf. 17. but there are such in the Clergie. Ergo.

See also the consent of antiquitie. Marcellinus, as we heard before, was condemned in the Synod of Neustane Councell: Sixtus 3. being accused of one Bassus, a Councell thereupon being assembled at the commaundement of Valentinianus the Emperour, Constitutio excommunicatio per indicium synodalem 4. 6. Episcopis purgatur: After great examination, is purged by 76. Bishops, by the iudgement of the Synode: ex libr. pontifical.

Symmachus being accused of Festus and Probinus, two Senators of Rome, assembled 115. Bishops, Et facta synodo purgatur a crimine: And by the Synode is purged of the crime, ex pontifical.

Council. Heredes. decret. 3. ex Gratiano: Mention is made how Leo Bishop of Rome in the Church of S. Peter, in the presence of the Emperour Charles, the Clergie and the people, did purge himselfe by his oath.

Pelagius being accused that he was accessarie to the death of Vigilius the Pope, did purge himselfe vpon his oath, ex pontifical. So Leo 3. Paschalis 1. Leo 4. were also purged by their oath.

The Councell of Constance iudged and deposed Pope John 23. The Councell of Basil Augustinus the 4. If Popes then haue been examined in Councels, accused, and brought to their purification, and condemned: then is there no question, but that they are subiect to iudgement.

See also your owne decrees, part. 2. caus. 2. quest. 7. cap. 41. Leo 4. doth submit himselfe in these words to the Emperour Lodouicus: If we haue done any thing incompetently, &c. Vestra & missorum, &c. we will amend it according to your iudgement, and of those whom you send.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER THE Pope may be deposed from his Papacie.

The Papists.

Some of them hold that the Pope ought not, neither can bee deposed for heresie; because it is not possible for the Pope to fall into heresie: Sic Pighius. The Iesuite confesseth this to be a probable opinion: but himselfe defendeth it not. He allegeth also the opinion of Cusanus, that the Pope may bee deposed for manifest and apparant heresie: *Bellarmino*s opinion is this: that the Pope cannot be deposed for any cause but heresie: and not for all heresie, but that which is manifest and apparant: neither is he then deposed by any act of the Church, but is of himselfe deposed, and ceaseth any more to bee Pope: So the Church may afterward punish him, but he is then no Pope, for as soone as he is become an heretike, his Popedom in the very act is gone from him, Bellarmino, cap. 30.

He reasoneth thus: A manifest heretike is not so much as a member of the Church, much lesse can he be Pope, who, they say, is the head of the Church: and therefore in such a case the Pope is deposed depoſed without any ſentence : and if afterwarde the Church proceede againſt him, they doe not iudge the Pope; for he had loſt his Papacie before.

We anſwere: Firſt, if a manifeſt heretike be actually depoſed, it is by the ſecret iudgement and ſentence of God: for by no other authoritie can he bee depoſed, as they hold: but before God manifeſt hereſie, and cloſe and ſecret hereſie is all one: therefore the Pope is alſo actually depoſed for ſecret hereſie, and not onely for manifeſt. And ſo ſome of the Papiſts thinke, as Iohann de Turris cremata. Secondly, what call you manifeſt hereſie? or how is he knowne to bee a manifeſt heretike? Can he be an heretike before he bee convinced? ſhall iudgement paſſe againſt him vncondemned? A murder is a dead man by law, yet he liueth till iudgement paſſe vpon him: ſo is the Pope being an heretike, yet Pope, till he be iudicially proceeded againſt; as a murder dead by right is in act yet liuing, till by law he is deprived of his life. An heretike, ſaith S. Paul, after two or three admonitions auoyd: that is, ſaith the Ieſuite, he is now ipſo facto excommunicate, before the ſentence of the Iudge. Be it ſo, but he muſt firſt be admoniſhed, and if he ſtill continue obſtinate, then he is a manifeſt heretike: ſo before the Pope can be knowne to bee a manifeſt heretike, he muſt be found obſtinate; he cannot be obſtinate, vnleſſe he reſuſe to bee admoniſhed; if he bee admoniſhed, then is he iudged. Thirdly, an heretike ceaſeth not to bee a prieſt, (as they ſpeake) no not after hereſie is knowne, for manifeſt heretikes may baptiſe. The Donatiſts in Auguſtine time were manifeſt heretikes, and yet the Church did not baptiſe againe after them: If a manifeſt heretike ceaſe not to bee a prieſt, neither ceaſeth he to bee Pope; there is like reaſon of both; for if an heretike, becauſe he is not a member of the Church, cannot be a Pope, neither alſo can he retain the prieſthood.

Caſetan.

Laſtly, who ſeech not what bare and friuolous ſhifts thoſe are one ſaith, the Church may iudge the Pope, not as he is Pope, but in reſpect of his perſon: another ſaith, that they may iudge the man which was Pope, but he is then no Pope, becauſe his hereſie tooke from him the Papacie. Why maſters what iugling is here? is the Pope one thing, and the Popes perſon another? By the ſame reaſon you may ſay, that the Pope neither eateth, nor drinketh, nor ſleepeth, nor dyeth, and ſo make a God of him, becauſe it is the Popes perſon that doth all this, and not the Pope. And by this ſhift you make no difference betweene an heretike Biſhop, or heretike Prieſt, and heretike Pope: for by the ſame reaſon, none of them all ſhall be ſubieſt to the iudgement of the Church: for wee may ſay, that a manifeſt heretike, whether Biſhop or Prieſt, hath loſt by that very act of falling into hereſie, his Prieſthood and Biſhopricke, and then is neither Biſhop nor Prieſt. And ſo you may conclude altogether, that neither Pope, Biſhop, nor Prieſt can bee depoſed for hereſie.

The Proteſtants.

WE doubt not to ſay, that the Pope both lawfully hath been deprived ſometime by the Emperour, ſometime by generall Councils, not onely for hereſie, but for other notable crimes; and may ſtill bee proceeded againſt by the ſame right, as well as any other Biſhop or Prelate.

1. Diuers examples we are able to bring forth, how the Pope hath been depoſed for other crimes, beſide hereſie. Pope Iohn the 13. was depoſed in a generall Council by the conſent of Otho the Emperour, for other matters beſide hereſie: as that he ordained Deacons in a ſtable, that he committed inceſt with two of his ſiſters, that playing at dice, he called to the diuell for helpe; that he deſloured virgins, that he lay with Stephana his fathers concubine, likewise with Rainerus and Anna, and her Neece: for theſe beaſtly parts and ſuch like, he was depoſed: there was no hereſie objected againſt him. And thinke you not he was worthily vnpoſed? yet the Papiſts think ſo: for they admit no cauſe of deprivation but hereſie. This diuellish Pope, through the harlots of Rome (for he was well beloued of them) recouered his Popedom againe; but at the length the Lord himſelfe diſplaced him: for in the tenth yeere of his Popedom, being found without the citie with another mans wife, he was ſo wounded of her husband, that within eight daies after he dyed, Fax p. 159.

Boniface the 7. tooke Pope Iohn the 15. who was made Pope a little before, and he expelled, yet recouering the Papacie by force, he tooke him, put out his eyes, and threw him in priſon where he was famiſhed. Likewise was Iohn the 18. ſerued by Gregorie the 5. his eyes were thruſt out firſt, and he afterwarde ſlaine. I marueile how our Catholikes can excuſe theſe furious outrages of their ghottly fathers of Rome!

In the Council of Brixia, Gregorie the 7. was depoſed, not for hereſie, but for other abominable vices: as maintaining of periurie and murders: for following Diuinations and Dreames, Sorceries and Necromancie, Fax p. 181. Pope Iohn the 23. depoſed in the Council of Conſtance: Eugenius in the Council at Baſil: yet neither of them for hereſie. And yet our aduerſaries would ſtill make vs beleue, that Popes cannot be depoſed for any crime but hereſie.

2. We can haue no better argument, then from our aduerſaries themſelues. It is a ſport to ſee what what diuers opinions they hold, and doe runne as it were in a maze; not knowing which way to get out. Pighius thinketh, that the Pope cannot possibly fall into heresie, and therefore for no cause may be depofed. Some other thinke, that the Pope for secret and close heresie is actually depofed of God, and may also be depofed and iudged of the Church: thus holdeth Iohan. de Turre cremat. Cuietanus is of opinion, that for manifest and open heresie the Pope is both already by right depofed, and may also actually be depofed of the Church. But Bellarmine confuteth all these. There is a fourth opinion most grosse: that the Pope neither for secret nor open heresie, is either already of right depofed, or may be actually depriued of the Church. Lastly, commeth in the nice and daintie Iesuite with his quirkcs and quiddities, who saith, that the Pope in case of manifest heresie, ceaseth to bee Pope, and is euen now depofed: and if after the Church proceede against him, they iudge not the Pope, for now he is no Pope. Which opinion how absurd it is, I haue declared before.

That the Pope may be depofed for other crimes then heresie, beside the practise of former times, as wee haue shewed before; wee haue also the decrees of Councils. The fathers of Basil alleaged these places of Scripture: If thy eye, hand or foot offend thee, cut it off. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruite is cast downe, &c. Also our Sauour saith, Every branch that bringeth not forth good fruite, my father will cut off. Ioh. 15. Vnprofitable salt is good for nothing, but to be cast forth, &c. Hence they conclude, that an offensive and wicked Pope, may bee depofed and cast forth as an vnprofitable branch: ex Aeneas Syluio.

Againe, the same Council saith, Epistola synodali. Concilium Constantiense Benedictum propter schisma: Iohannem 23. propter deformitatem vitæ depofuit. The Council of Constance depofed Benedictum for schisme: Iohn 23. for the deformitie of life.

But if they answer as they do, that this Council of Basil was schismaticall: (which I marueile how they can say, seeing it was congregated by the Popes authoritie) what will they say to the Council of Lateran. sub Iulio 2. sess. 5. where it was decreed, that if the Pope were chosen by Simonie, ut huiusmodi electio nulla existat, that his election should stand voyd as none at all, and he holden for no Pope: and that it should bee lawfull for his subiects, sub obedientia eius discedere, to cast off all obedience.

So then, the Pope may be depofed for Simonie, which though it be there termed simoniacal heresie, the simoniacall heresie, yet it is not so properly, but rather a fault in manners, then an error in faith.

They haue also this rule in their owne law, Extra. commun. lib. 5. tit. 8. cap. 1. The Pope thus writeth against a certaine Bishop whom he depofed for his enormous life, Illud solum asserimus salubre remedium, &c. We count that an holesome remedie, that where we cannot take away, vellet, a mans euill will, we should take away his, posse, his power to doe euill. Why should not this rule as well take place in a wicked Pope, as in an impious Bishop?

THE FIFT PART, CONCERNING THE ORIGINAL and beginning of the primacie of Rome.

The Popists.

They doe boldly affirme without any ground, that the primacie of that See hath his beginning from no other but Christ: they are the Iesuites owne words, Romani pontificis ecclesiasticum principatum, antequam Christo, principium accepisset. That the princely dignitie of the Bishop of Rome, acknowledgeth no other author or beginner thereof, but Christ, Bellar. cap. 17. lib. 2.

Argum. 1. They would build the primacie of the Romane Church vpon certaine places of Scripture: as Matth. 16. Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my Church. Luk. 22. I haue prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith should not faile. Ioh. 21. Christ said to Peter, Feede my sheepe: Ergo, Peter and Peters successors haue their primacie from Christ, Bellar.

To these places Tunstal and Stokesly, two popish Bishops, yet in this poynt holding the truth, did properly make answer in their epistle sent to Cardinall Poole.

To the first: They affirme out of the ancient expositors, that it is meant of the faith which was then first confessed by the mouth of Peter, and not of Peters person. Further, confirming out of S. Paul, that neither Peter, nor no creature beside, could bee the foundation of the Church: for no other foundation can any man lay (saith the Apostle) besides that which is laid, Iesus Christ, 1. Cor. 3.

To the second they answer: That Christ speaketh onely of the fall of Peter, which he knew in his godly prescience, giuing an inkling vnto him, that after his fall he should bee conuerted and strengthen his brethren: for if it were meant also of Peters successors, they must first faile in faith, and after confirme their brethren.

To the third: The whole flocke of Christ was not committed to Peter to feede: for he himselfe

testifieth the contrary, exhorting all Pastors to feede the flocke of Christ, which was giuen them in charge by Christ, as it followeth in that place: when the thiefe shepheard shall appeare, ye shall receiue the incorruptible Crowne of eternall glory. He calleth not himselfe the chiefe shepheard, but onely Christ. It is euident therefore (say they) that your 3. Scriptures meht nothing lesse, then such a primacie ouer all, Fox pag. 1067.

Argum. 2. There can be no time assigned since Christ (say they) when this primacie should begin, nor no author named that brought it in: Ergo, it must needes be attributed to Christ, he must of necessitie be found the author thereof.

We answer: the time may be assigned, the authors named, when, and by whom this pretended and vsurped authoritie was brought in, as euen now we will shew.

The Protestants.

That the vsurped iurisdiction of Rome tooke not the beginning from Christ, nor his Apostles, neither was heard of for many yeeres after: we thus are able to proue it.

1. Before the Nicene Councell, which first deuided the regiment of the Church into foure Patriarchall seates: Rome had small or no preeminence. So Aeneas Sylvius witnesseth, who afterward was Pope of Rome, and called Pius the second: Ante Nicenum concilium sibi quisque uidebat, et al Romam ecclesiam parum habebatur respectum, Epist. 101. Before the Nicene Councell, euery Bishop liued to himselfe; there was no great respect had to the Church of Rome. What more euident testimonie can we haue then of a Pope himselfe? Yet the Iesuite saith, that it is false in part, which he writeth. He is somewhat mannerly, in making him but halfe a lyer: yet I wonder that he will confesse any vntruth at all in his ghostlie fathers words, Bellarmin. cap. 17. lib. 2.

Secondly, in the Councell of Nice there was no primacie of power giuen to Rome ouer the whole Church: but the other Patriarches of Alexandria, Antioch, Ierusalem, were priuiledged in like manner in their confines, as the Bishop of Rome was in his: They had all equall authoritie giuen them in their owne protinues: Sic Tonsall. Stokes. ad Paulum.

Fox pag. 9.

Thirdly, afterward there was a certaine primacie of order graunted vnto the Patriarch of Rome aboue other Patriarches; as to haue the first place, to sit first, to giue his sentence first. One cause hereof was, for that Rome was then the Imperiall and chiefe citie in all the world: this reason was rendered in the Councell of Chalcedon, Can. 28. Another cause thereof was, the ample priuiledges and immunities, whith the Emperours endowed it withall, as Constantine the Great, and Gratianus the Emperour made a lawe, that all men should retayne that religion, which Damasus of Rome, and Peter Bishop of Alexandria did hold.

Fox pag. 18.

A third cause was, the vnquiet estate of the Greeke Church, who often voluntarily referred their matters to the Bishop of Rome, as being lesse partiall and a more indifferent iudge, they themselves being diuided and rent into sectes. And hereupon, and other like causes it came about, that the Bishop of Rome a little stepped aboue his fellow Patriarches; but yet had no such preeminent authoritie, as to command them.

Fox pag. 130.

Fourthly, the Popes of Rome being thus tickled with vaine glorie, because they were reuerenced of other Churches, many matters were committed vnto them, and their consent required vnto the decrees of Councils, when they were absent. Hereupon they labored euery day more and more to aduance that See, taking euery small occasion that might helpe forward their ambitious desire, till Anno. 606. or somewhat after, Boniface the third obtained of wicked Phocas the Emperour (who murdered his Master the Emperour Mauritius and his children, to come to the Empire, and was after slaine himselfe of Heracius that succeeded him) of him, I say, Boniface for himselfe and his successors obtained, to be called vniuersall Bishops ouer the whole Church: and the See of Rome to haue the preeminence aboue all other Churches in the world.

Afterward in Pope Zachary his time, the proud and insolent iurisdiction of Rome was established by Peppin King of France, who aspired to the Crowne, and obtayned it by the said Popes meanes, first deposing Childericus the rightfull King, and dispensing with the oath which the French men had made before to Childericus, Caluin. Institut. 4. cap. 7. sect. 17.

Thus then it sufficiently appeareth, that the primacie of Rome, which it now vniustly challengeth ouer other Churches, is not of any such antiquitie, as they would beare the world in hand, neither that it had the beginning from Christ: but both the time when, and the authors by whom it began, may be easily assigned.

Argum. 3. We neede no better argument, to proue that the primacie of Rome hath not his originall from Christ, then the Iesuites owne confession. First he saith, that it doth not depend of Christs institution, but ex Petri fultu, of Peteri fact, that the Bishop of Rome should be rather Peteri successor, then the Bishop of Antioch, or any other; It is not intra dinino, saith he, by Gods law: neither is it, ex prima institutione pontificatus, qua in Euangelio legitur, of the first institution whereof we reade in the Gospell. And againe, Romanum pontificem succedere Petro, non habetur expresse in scripturis: It is not expresse set downe in Scripture, the Bishop of Rome should succede

Peter.

Peter: but it is grounded only vpon that tradition of Peter. Nay he saith further, that Peter needed not to haue chosen any particular place for succession, and he might as well haue chosen Antioch as Rome: Ergo, neither is the succession of Rome grounded vpon Scripture, neither any commandement of Christ: for then Peter could not haue had free choice to appoint his successor where he would himselfe, as the Iesuite saith, if he had had any especiall direction or commandement from Christ. So then, marke I pray you, they cannot proue out of Scripture, that the Bishop of Rome ought to succeed Peter in the chiefe Bishopricke, but onely that Peter had the chiefe Bishopricke committed to him and his successors in generall, whosoever they should appoint: Ergo, the Bishops of Rome by their owne confession can alleadge no Scripture, institution, or commandement of Christ, for the primacie of the Church to be annexed to the See of Rome: and yet against their knowledge they will alleadge Scripture to colour the matter withall, Bellarm. lib. 2. de pontif. cap. 17.

That the iurisdiction and primacie of Rome is not grounded vpon Scripture, but rather vpon custome and continuance of time, it is thus proued by consent of antiquitie, Nicom. 1. can. 6. Quia episcopo Romana urbis paritatis mos est: Let the Patriarch of Alexandria bee chiefe in his prouinces, &c. because the Bishop of Rome hath the like custome or manner. And it is not to be thought, that those two generall Councils of Constantinople, and Chalcedon, would haue made the See of Constantinople equall in authoritie to Rome, if the primacy of Rome had been grounded vpon Scripture.

Againe, what the cause is that some cities haue had spirituall iurisdiction ouer others, we finde Trullan. synod. can. 3. Si qua ciuitas à regia potestate innouata est, quoad civilem et publicam formam, ecclesiasticam quoque remum ordo consequatur: If any citie be changed or aduanced in respect of the ciuill estate, the ecclesiasticall order or gouernment must follow: that is, be aduanced together with it. This reason was rendred, Concil. Chalcedonens. sessio. 16. why they aduanced the See of Constantinople, Rationabiliter indicantes imperio et Senatui urbem ornatiorem, a qua senioris regia Roma priuilegijs fruitur, et in ecclesiasticis, sicut illa, maiestatem habere negotijs: We thinke it reasonable, that the citie which is adorned with the Senate and Empire should haue the like priuiledges to the elder princely citie Rome, and of the like maiestie in ecclesiasticall busines. By the same reason also was Rome aduanced at the first, because it was the seat of the Empire: the beginning then of the primacie therefore was not from any commandement of Christ; but by the constitution of men.

Augustine saith: Secundum bonorum vocabula, quia iam ecclesiasticus obtinuit, episcopatus presbyterio maior est. The office of a Bishop is about the office of a Priest; according to the names of honour, which the Church by custome hath obtained. If then the difference of those two offices, both named in Scripture, did arise rather, and spring of the custome of the Church, which thought it good to distinguish them for auoyding of schisme, and is not grounded vpon the authoritie of Scripture: much lesse can the Pope (whose neither name, nor office is expressed in Scripture) fetch from thence any shew of prooffe, for his vsurped primacie.

M. Tindal holy Martyr, condemned for this and such other articles, for saying that the Pope had no other authoritie from Christ but to preach onely: articl. 22. Fox. pag. 1251. Sir Iohn Bortwick Knight, condemned for the Gospell, thus witnesseth: Peter could not giue that which he had not, as any lordly dominion, or such like; but he gaue vnto his successors that which he had, that is, carefullnes ouer the congregation, Fox. pag. 1263. articl. 6.

The Popes lordly supremacie then hath not the beginning from Christ, neither is warranted by Scripture.

And here will I put them in minde of their owne rule: as Iuueninus the third hath set it downe: decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 7. cap. 12. Ostendat pro uocatione operationem miraculi, &c. Let him shew for his calling the operation of a miracle, or some speciall testimonie of Scripture. So then, if the Pope can shew any miracle, or speciall warrant out of Scripture, for his primacie and superiortie, we will beleue him.

THE SIXT PART OF THIS QUESTION, CONCERNING the proud names, and vainglorious titles of the Pope.

The Papists.

Bellarmine setteth downe to the number of fiftene glorious names which haue been of olde 46. Error. Beguen (as he saith) to the bishop of Rome; whereby his primacie ouer other Bishops is notoriously knowne; but the principall are these: He is called the Pope and chiefe father, the prince of Priests, or high Bishop; the Vicar of Christ; the head of the Church; the Prelate of the Apostolike See; vniuersall Bishop. These fixe names or titles they do appropriate to the See of Rome. Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib. 2. cap. 31.

The Protestants.

WE will shew by Gods grace, that these fixe seuerall titles and names aforesaid, are either such, as ought not in their sense to be attributed to any Bishop, nor any mortall man; or els were common in ancient times as well to other Bishops as to him of Rome.

Fox pag. 8.

1 For the first name of Pope, it is deriued from the Greeke word papas, which in the Syracusan language, is as much as, Father; which name was indifferently giuen to other Bishops, which were famous in the Church for their vertue and learning: As Cyprian, Epiphanius, Athanasius, were called Papa, Popes: Augustine saluteth Aurelius President of the sixte Councell of Carthage, by the name of Pope, Epist. 77.

Sophronius Bishop of Ierusalem writing to Sergius Patriarch of Constantinople, calleth him, Papam beatissimum, & Papam deo honorabilem, Most blessed and honorable Pope, Constantinopol. 6. act. 11. So in the sixte Councel of Carthage, chap. 4. the Synod calleth Aurelius Bishop of Carthage, Sanctum Papam, holy Pope. Eniches, who was but a Priest and an Abbot, is called Pappa, Pope, synod. Constantinopol. sub Flavianus.

Bellarmine cannot deny, neither dare he for shame, that this name Pope hath been giuen to other Bishops; but he hath deuised three shifts to helpe him at a pinch: first, saith he, the Bishop of Rome onely hath vsed to be called the Pope absolutely, and without any addition, but others with adding of their name.

Contra. The absolute title of Pope hath been giuen also to others, and therefore Bellarmines surmise is false: as Hierome writing to Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria saith thus, Admirare Papam tantissime & beatissime: Doe your endeavour, most blessed Pope, &c. he saith not Pope Theophilus, but absolutely most blessed Pope. tom. 3.

Secondly, the Bishop of Rome onely hath been called vniuersall Pope, and no other Bishop, Bellarm.

Contra. First, neither hath this proude name in the better times, and purer ages of the Church, been attributed to the Bishops of Rome, but rather by them condemned: as Gregorius calleth it a proude title to be named vniuersall Pope, and reprobeth Enlogius Bishop of Alexandria, for so writing vnto him, dist. 99. cap. 5. Secondly, yet it may be shewed, that after ambition set foote into the Church, other Patriarches haue been called by this name: as Council. Constantin. 6. act. 13. Cyrus Patriarch of Alexandria calleth Sergius Patriarch of Constantinople, thrice blessed pastor of pastors, and father of fathers, the vniuersall Patriarch: and yet Bellarmines without all shame saith, that this title of Pater Patrum, Father of Fathers was neuer giuen to any but the Pope.

Thirdly, saith he, the Bishop of Rome hath been alwaies called Pope of others; but he himselfe neuer called any other by that name.

Contra. First, therein appeareth the pride of that See, that disdained to giue vnto other Bishops those titles, which others thought them worthie of, because they would appropriate them to themselves. Secondly, yet I find, though not the Pope, yet the Church of Rome, which is the Popes See, hath giuen this title to other Bishops: as after the death of Fabianus, the Presbyterie of Rome thus write to Cyprianus, calling him most blessed, and glorious Pope, as may be seene in their epistle.

Likewise, those two epithetes of the Pope, as to be called, Beatissimus & sanctissimus pater: Most holy and blessed father, were vsed in the stile of other Bishops: Prasfer in his Epistle to Augustine, twise calleth him Dominum beatissimum Papam: Lord, most blessed Pope, Tom. 7. Hierome calleth Epiphanius, Beatum Papam, Blessed Pope, Ad Eustach Fabiol.

This also was the stile of the Patriarch of Constantinople, Sanctissimo atque beatissimo Oecumenico Patriarcha Iohanni Constantinopol. &c. To the most holy and blessed vniuersall Patriarch, Iohannes of Constantinople: Constantinopol. 5. act. 1. Cornelius Bishop of Rome, writing to one Rufus a Bishop, Epist. 2. saith thus, Hac & alia, qua necessaria fore cognouimus tuae sanctitati volumus denegari. These and other things which we knew to be necessarie, we would not denie to your holines: at this time it is a cleare case, that the Bishop of Rome did not appropriate to himselfe this title of holines.

Augustine writing to Petrus the Presbyter, or Priest, being no Bishop, yet thus saluteth him: Ad sanctitatem tuam scripta: He hath written to your holines. Nay, in his booke dedicated to Romanus a lay man, neither Priest nor Bishop, thus he writeth, Hinc angor, quod sanctitati tuae minus quam vellem cognitus sum: This grieueth me, that I am not so well knowne to your holines as I desire. If then these titles of holines and blessednes were not onely giuen to Bishops, but Priests also, yea vnto lay men of vertuous and holy life; what colour or shew of reason can our aduersaries haue, to make them proper to the Bishop of Rome?

But if the Bishop of Rome will haue this title of holines truly giuen vnto him, let him follow that wholsome saying, ascribed to Clement epist. 2. Nemo vult dici sanctus, antequam sit, sed prius ut verius dicatur: Let no man desire to be called holy, before he be indeed, but let him first be holy, that he may more truly so be called: the same sentence also is found, Constantinop. 6. cap. 6.

See also the iudgement of Iohn Hulse holy Martyr: artical. 23. Papa non debet dici sanctissimus secundum officium quia sic & Rex diceretur sanctissimus &c. The Pope ought no more to be called most holy because of his office, then the King in respect of his office.

2. The second name is Prince of Priests, or high and chiefe Bishop: which title, if it be taken for a chiefe power, dominion, and soueraigntie, is proper onely to Christ the chiefe shepheard, 1. Pet. 5. 4. and cannot in that sense agree to any man.

It was also decreed Carthaginens. 3. can. 26. in this maner, Prima sedis Episcopus non appelletur princeps sacerdotum aut summus sacerdos, sed tantum prima sedis Episcopus: Let not the Bishop of the first See be called the prince of Priests, or chiefe Priest, but onely Bishop of the first See.

Bellarmine answereth, that this Canon did onely binde the Bishops of Africa, it doth not extend to the Bishop of Rome.

Ans. It appeareth Can. 47. that the Canons of this Councell were confirmed by Boniface Bishop of Rome. For to that end the Councell determineth to write vnto him, and the rest of the Bishops of the west Church: but it is certaine, that this Councell was receiued and authorized in the sixth generall Trullane Synode, Can. 12. how then can the Bishop of Rome be exempted from the decrees of generall Councils, which binde the whole Church, and every part thereof? And againe, this Canon is approued in their owne decrees, dist. 99. c. 3. how then can they refuse it?

But if this name be vied onely as a title of excellencie and commendation, so was it in times past ascribed to other excellent and famous Bishops, as Ruffinus lib. 2. cap. 26. calleth Athanasius, Pontificem maximum, chiefe Bishop; yea it was in common giuen to all Bishops; as Anastatius Bishop of Rome in his second Epistle writeth thus: Summi sacerdotes, id est, Episcopi, a Deo indicandi sunt: The high Priests, that is, Bishops (saith he) are to be iudged of God. If it be taken further for the excellencie of the ministerie of the Gospell, and the worthy calling of Christians, in this sense the title of summus sacerdotum, of the high Priesthood, is attributed to all Ministers Ecclesiasticall, both Bishops and others: so Fabianus Bishop of Rome vseth this name. Yea, the holy Apostle calleth all the people of God sanctum imperium, a princely, royall, or chiefe priesthood: Ergo, the Bishop of Rome hath no especiall or proper interest in this name.

3. The third name is, to be called the Vicar of Christ vpon earth. Where we are to vnderstand, that in respect of the spirituall regiment and Kingdome of Christ, he needeth no Vicegerent vpon earth: for, I am with you (saith he) to the end of the world: he himselfe is alway present in power, and needeth not in that respect, that any man should supplie his roume. Petrus scriba Martyr. Fax pag. 906. If we doe take it for a word of office and publike administration, so the Magistrate may be called the Vicar of Christ, in gouerning the people according to the word of God: in which sense Eleutherius Bishop of Rome, writing to Lucius King of the Brittaines, calleth him the Vicar of Christ; and therefore in his owne Kingdome had power out of the word of God to establish lawes, for the gouernment of the people.

Fox pag. 107.

Thus also writeth Anastatius Bishop of Rome, to Anastatius the Emperor, titul. 6. Præstantiam vestram velus vicarium, Deus præsidere iussit in terris: God hath commaunded or appointed your worthines, as his Vicar, to be president in earth. So all Bishops, Pastors and Ministers in ancient time were called the Vicars of Christ in preaching, praying, binding and loosing in the name and power of Christ. So Augustine saith, or whose worke else it is, that Omnes antistes est Christi vicarii: Every pastor and prelate (and not the Pope onely) is the Vicar of Christ.

Quest. ex ynoque. 127.

Eusebius Bishop of Rome testifieth the same, Epistol. 3. Caput Ecclesia Christus est; Christi autem vicarii sacerdotes sunt, qui vice Christi legatione funguntur in Ecclesia: The head of the Church is Christ, and the Priests or Ministers are Christs Vicars, who in Christs stead doe performe his embassage in the Church. This is also confessed by our Rhemists, anap. in 2. Cor. 5. 18. that the Bishops and priests of the Church are for Christ, and as his ministers, that is, his Vicars. Nay, Augustine maketh yet a more generall vse of this word: he saith that, Homo imperium Dei habens, quasi vicarius eius est: That man by creation being made Lord of the creatures, doth therein represent God, and is as his Vicar vpon earth. So then, all ministers are the Vicars of Christ; the ciuill Magistrate likewise, in some good sense, may be so called: yea in respect of the creatures, man generally is vpon earth in Gods stead: Ergo, this name cannot be appropriate to the Pope of Rome.

Quest. 196.

Iohn Hulse holy Martyr saith, artical. 12. Nemo gerit vicem Petri vel Christi nisi sequatur eum in moribus: No man can be Peters or Christs Vicar vnlesse he follow him in life and maners. The Pope therefore is not Christs Vicar vnlesse he imitate Christs holy life, which I would he did. One of your owne Popes also saith, Iohann. 22. Extran. lib. 3. tit. 2. c. 3. Vicarius Christi ipius actibus se tenetur conformare: Christs Vicar must conforme himselfe to Christs actes and example: Which seeing the Pope doth not, he cannot be Christs Vicar, or Vicegerent.

4. It is also too huge a name for the Pope or any mortall man to beare, to be called the head of the vniuersall Church: this is a name onely due vnto Christ, neither doe the Scriptures acknowledge any other head, but him, Ephes. 1. 22. 4. 15. But (say they) we doe not make the Pope such an head, as Christ is, but onely a ministeriall head ouer the militant Church vpon earth, Rhemist. 1. Ephe. 22.

We answer: First, Ergo, the Pope by your owne confession is not head of the vniuersall Church, whereof the triumphant Church in heauen is a part; nor yet of Purgatorie, but onely of that part which is in the earth. Secondly, the Rhemists confesse that the Church in no sense can be called the bodie of the Pope: Ergo, the Pope cannot be any waies the head of the vniuersall Church, Annot. in 1. Ephe. 22. Thirdly, the Fathers of Basile vsed this argument: The head of the body being dead, the whole bodie also dieth; but the whole Church doth not perishe with the Pope: Ergo, he is not properly the head of the Church, Fax pag. 67.

Further, in the same Councell, Iohannes Patriarch. Antiochen. in appendice concil. thus reasoneth, Nec dici potest caput Ministeriale vniuersalis ecclesie, nam caput esse denotat preminentiam, quam minister non habet supra dominum: Neither can the Pope be said to be the ministeriall head of the vniuersall Church: for to be an head argueth a preeminence, which the Minister hath not ouer his Mistresse.

Concil. Aquisgranens. lib. 2. cap. 9. Ecclesiam cum capite suo Christo vnam constare esse personam: The Church and Christ the head thereof make but one person. But so doe not the Pope and the Church: therefore he cannot be the head thereof.

Add vnto these the witness of the holy Martyr, Iohn Hulse articul. 20. The Pope if he be wicked man, cannot be the head of the Church, seeing he is not so much as a member thereof: the same reason vseth that blessed Bishop and Martyr, M. Hooper, examination Fax pag. 157.

Master Rogers holy Martyr: Christ onely doth all in vs all, which is the true property of the head, which is a thing, that all the Bishops of Rome shall neuer doe, pag. 1486.

Vpon these reasons, which I haue produced, being fixe in number, it may be strongly concluded, that the Pope in no sense can be the head of Christs Church: which proude title seemeth to haue misliked some of your Popes: as Clement the fift, in the Councell of Vienna thus writeth, Clementin. lib. 2. tit. 9. c. 1. Sacrosancta Romana ecclesia caput Christi redemptor, &c. Christ our redeemer is the head of the sacred Romane Church, and the Romane Bishop our Redeemers Vicar. So then he is onely the head of the Church that redeemed it; the Pope is but the heads Vicar, not the head it selfe.

If it shall be further objected, that the Bishop of Rome hath been called in times past, caput Episcoporum, the head of all other Bishops: we answer, that it was but a title of excellencie and commendation, not of dominion and power: as London is called the head or chiefe Citie of England, yet are not other cities of the land subiect vnto it, or vnder the iurisdiction thereof. But we shall haue occasion more fully to discusse this matter afterward.

They would haue the Pope called the Prelate of the Apostolike See: the Rhemists say further, that the Papall dignitie is a continuall Apostleship, Annot. 4. Ephe. sect. 4.

We answer: First, if they call those Churches Apostolicall, whose first founders were the Apostles, then the See of Antioch, Alexandria, Constantinople, are as well Apostolicall as Rome.

Concil. Nicen. 2. actio. 1. Reuerentes locum Apostolicum thronorum Orientalis diocesis: They which occupie the roume of the Apostolike thrones of the East diocesse.

And this the Iesuite denieth not, lib. 2. de pontifice cap. 31. But he maketh this difference: first, saith he, when we say the Apostolike See absolutely, not adding either of Ephesus, or Antioch, the See of Rome is vnderstoode: but the other Apostolike Sees are so called with restraint to the place. Answ. That this is false which the Iesuite saith, it is proued thus: Siricius Bishop of Rome, epistol. 4. can. 1. decreeth thus, Extra conscientiam sedis Apostolica, hoc est, primatis, nemo audeat ordinare: Let no man ordaine (Bishops he meaneth) without the knowledge of the Apostolike See, that is, saith he, expounding himselfe, of the Primate of the Prouince, not vnderstanding thereby the Bishop of Rome, but the Primate or Metropolitan.

Concil. Aurelianens. cap. 1. Cloduanus the King writeth thus to the Bishops, which were 33. in number, there assembled, Dominus sanctis & Apostolica sede dignissimis: To my holy Lords, most worthy of the Apostolike See. He calleth all their Sees Apostolicall according to the decree Concil. Aquisgranens. cap. 9. ex Isidor. Apostolicis decedentibus successerunt Episcopi, &c. The Bishops succeed the Apostles, and are placed through the world in sedibus Apostolorum, in the Apostles Sees. In these places which I haue cited, the Apostolike See is named absolutely, and yet the See of Rome not vnderstood thereby. *Bellarmine*s second exception is this, that the Pope is not onely called Prelate of the Apostolike See, Sed et vniuersalis Apostolatus, His office an Apostleship: so are not other. Answ. This is one of *Bellarmine*s toyces, for seeing Apostolicus, and Apostolatus, are coningata, and where the one is, there must be the other; if other Bishops be as well Apostolicall as he, they haue also an Apostleship as well as he.

Secondly,

Secondly, those Churches are Apostolicall, which hold the Apostolike faith: so is not the See of Rome Apostolicall, being departed and gone backe from the auncient Catholike faith: but those Churches where the Gospell of Iesus Christ is truly preached, are indeed Apostolike.

Bishop Ridley holy Martyr thus witnesseth: it was neither for the priuiledge of the See or person, that the See and Bishop of Rome were called Apostolike, but for the true trade of Christs religion taught and maintayned in that See, Fox. pa. 1775. Thus also writeth Agatho Bishop of Rome to Constantine the Emperour, Placuit igitur si ueritatem Domini uideat, quam Apostoli predicauerunt, predicare neglexero: Woe is vnto me, if I neglect to preach the truth of my Lord, which the Apostles preached.

Thirdly, how can the Pope be an Apostle, or haue Apostolike authority, seeing he preacheth not at all, much lesse to the whole world, wherein consisted the office of an Apostle? Neither can he shew his immediate calling from Christ, as all the Apostles could: for seeing he challengeth the Apostolike office by tradition from S. Peter, and not by commandement from Christ; he can in no wise be counted an Apostle, or his office an Apostleship: for the Apostles ordayned onely Evangelists and Pastors, they had not authoritie to consecrate and constitute new Apostles. Our aduersaries for this their Apostleship, can finde nothing in Scripture, nor for a thousand yeares after Christ in the ancient writers, Enk. anst. in Epist. 4. fol. 4. c. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.

6. Concerning the title of vniuersall Bishop, it was thus decreed in the sixte Councell of Carthage, as it is alleaged by Gratian: Vniuersalis autem nec Romanus pontifex appellatur: No not the Bishop of Rome is to be called vniuersall. In Gregory the first his time, Iohn Patriarch of Constantinople, obtayned of the Emperour Mauritius to be called vniuersall Patriarch: but Gregory would not agree thereunto, calling him the forerunner of Antichrist, that would challeng so proud a name, Gregor. lib. 4. Epistol. 3. 2.

Bellarmino and other of that sect doe answere, that Gregory found fault with this title, because Iohn of Constantinople would haue been Bishop alone, and none other to be beside him, but all other onely to be his deputies and Vicars. Lib. 2. de point. cap. 3. 1.

To this we reply: First, Iohn did onely challenge a superioritie ouer other Bishops, not to be Bishop alone; for this had been a thing impossible. Secondly, if Iohn had fought any such thing, it is not like that the Chalcedon Councell and the Emperour would haue yeilded to so vnreasonable a matter as they did. Thirdly, Eulogius Patriarch of Alexandria doth call the said Gregory vniuersall Pope, which name he vtterly refuleth: and yet Eulogius had no such meaning to make him Bishop or Patriarch alone, but onely to giue him a preeminence aboue the rest.

Fourthly, this may appeare to be so by that which Lea writeth Epistol. 53. concerning Anatolius Patriarch of Constantinople: to whom this preeminence was granted in the Chalcedon Councell. Nimum superbum est, ut unus crescat dignitas, et metropolitano impugnetur primatus: It is too proud an enterprise, to impugne the primacie of so many Metropolitans, to increase the dignitie of one. Pelagius the second thus writeth also against Iohn of Constantinople, who challenged to be called vniuersall Bishop: Si summus patriarcha vniuersalis dicitur, patriarchatum nomen ceteris derogatur: epistol. 1. decretal. If the chiefe Patriarch be called vniuersall, then the title of patriarchship is taken from the rest. By these testimonies it appeareth, that these ambitious prelates had no meaning to spoyle the rest of their Episcopall dignitie, but onely to haue the primacie and preeminence before them. For the title of vniuersalitie doth onely derogate to the dignitie of Patriarches, and primacie of Metropolitans.

This modest and humble Bishop of Rome Gregory, of whom we spake before, in steade of the title, Vniuersall, brought it into the Popes stile to be called seruus seruorum Dei, seruant to Gods seruants: Ergo, we conclude with Gregory, that this title, Vniuersall, is an Antichristian name, and that it hath milliked the auncient Bishops of Rome themselves; and how other Patriarches and Bishops haue challenged that ambitious name and title, as well as the Popes of Rome. And it hath been acknowledged and yeilded vnto them, as Constantinop. general. 5. actio. 1. Iohn Bishop of Constantinople is called Oecumenicus Patriarcha, Oecumenicall, or vniuersall Patriarch. Constantinop. general. 6. actio. 13. Cyrrus Bishop of Alexandria writeth thus to Sergius Bishop of Constantinople: Ter haussimo benigno pastori pastorum, patri patrum, vniuersali patriarcha Sergio: To the thrise blessed pastor of pastors, and Father of Fathers, the vniuersall Patriarch Sergius. And least it might be said that these Patriarches doe but dally and glose one with another, we finde that Pope Adrian writeth thus to Therasius Bishop of Constantinople, Dilecto fratri vniuersali Patriarcha: To my beloued brother the vniuersall Patriarch, Sec. Nicen. 2. actio. 2.

We conclude therefore, that this title to be called vniuersall Bishop or Patriarch, neither was in times past, nor is now properly or of right belonging to the See of Rome.

Lastly, see the iudgement of some Papiists themselves of this poynt: Eckius a stout popish champion saith thus disputing against Luther, that the Bishop of Rome ought not to be called vniuersall Bishop, but Bishop of the vniuersall Church: Fox. pag. 848.

Council. Bafilienſ. ſynodal. 8. Romanus pontifex eſt vniuſal. Eccleſia miniſter non dominus: The Biſhop of Rome is a ſervant or Miniſter of the vniuſall Church not a Lord or Biſhop. They graunt not ſo much as Eckius doth. Biſhop Longland cutteth him yet ſhorter, ſaying, There is no vniuſall Biſhop but Chriſt: the Biſhop of Rome and all other Biſhops, are but vnderlings and vniuſal ſuffraganes to this Biſhop Chriſt. Fax. pag. 1100.

THE SIXTH QUESTION, WHETHER THE Pope may erre, or not.

47. Error.

They deny not but that both the Pope by himſelfe, and together with a whole Councell, may be deceiued in matters of fact, that is, in hitoricall poynts, and the truth of things that are done, becauſe it dependeth of the teſtimonie and information of men; but in matters of faith and doctrine, the Pope determining with the Councell, is not ſubiect to error: yea, the Pope by himſelfe alone decreeing any thing concerning faith cannot be deceiued; Bellarmin. lib. 4. de pontifice. cap. 13. No nor yet in precepts of manners preſcribed to the Church by the Pope, is there any feare or danger of error, cap. 5. Yea, it is probable (ſaith he) that the Pope, not onely as Pope, cannot erre, but not as a priuate perſon, is it like he ſhould fall into heretie, or holde any obſtinate opinion contrary to the faith? cap. 6.

Argum. 1. Luk. 22. 31. Simon, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not. Chriſt here praieth for Peter, and his ſucceſſors, that they might not at any time erre, or bee deceiued in matters of faith, Bellarmin. cap. 3. R. Rom. annot. in Luk. 22. ſect. 11.

We anſwere: Firſt, this was a particular prayer for Peter, that his faith ſhould not faile in that great and dangerous tentation, into the which our Sauour foreſaw he ſhould fall: For if it were to be vnderſtood of Peters ſucceſſors, they alſo muſt firſt be ſifted by Sathan as Peter was, and denie Chriſt, and ſo being conuerted ſtrengthen their brethren: if they will vnderſtand one part of Peters ſucceſſors, I pray you, why not all? Secondly, our Sauour praieth likewise for all his Apoſtles, that they might be ſanctified in the truth; yea for all, that ſhould beleue by their preaching: yet is not euery Chriſtian priuiledged from all error of faith. Thirdly, after this Peter himſelfe erred, and was rephended of S. Paul.

Argum. 2. The high Priests that ſate in Moses chaire were priuiledged not to erre: as Caiphas though a wicked man, and in ſome ſort an vſurper, had ſome aſſiſtance of God for vtterance of the truth, Ioh. 11. 51. Ergo, much more now are the chiefe paſtors of the Church free from error, Bellarmin. cap. 3. R. Rom. Luc. 22. ſect. 11.

We anſwere: the high priests had no ſuch priuledge, for ſome of them fell into ſtrange errors: Vriab the high prieſt ſet vp an Idolatrous Altar at the Kings commandement, 2. King. 16. Eliſh was ioyned in affinity with Tobiah the Ammonite, contrarie to the law of God, Nehem. 13. 4. And concerning Caiphas, though at this time he ignorantly ſpake the truth, yet was he a Sadducee, and condemned Chriſt. And if Caiphas example proue any thing, being (as you ſay) but an vſurper of the Prieſthood, it maketh as well for vſurpers of the Papall See, that they alſo ſhould be priuiledged from error.

Bellarmin and the reſt doe much vrge that place of Cyprian epiſtol. 1. ad Cornelium: Non cogitant eſſe Romanos, quorum fides Apoſtolo predicante landata eſt, ad quas perſidias habere non poſſit accuſum: They remember not that they are Romanes, whoſe faith is ſo commended euen by the Apoſtle himſelfe, vnto whom falſehood or vntruth can haue no acceſſe. Alſo Eusebius B. of Rome ſaith, In Eccleſia Catholica extra maculam ſemper eſt Catholica ſeruata religio: In the Catholike Church, the Catholike Religion hath alwaies been kept without ſpot.

Lucius B. of Rome alſo thus writeth, ſic in exordio ueritatis Apoſtolica ab authoribus ſuis percepta, ſic illibata ſine tunc manet: As in the beginning it receiued the Apoſtolike faith from the authors thereof, ſo it remaineth vncorrupted to the end, Epistol decretal.

Anſw. Firſt, as for the teſtimonies of the Biſhops of Rome, they doe not greatly moue vs: for who ſeeth not that they might be partiall, in iudging of their owne Church? Cyprian teſtimonie, a welwiller of the Romane Church, though not of that Church, carrieth greater waight with it. Secondly, they all here alleaged, haue eſpeciall relation to former times, and commend the conſtancie of the Romane faith: for vntill Cyprian and Lucius time, and ſomewhat after, the Biſhops of Rome were faithfull men, impugners of heresies, holy Martyrs: for as yet Marcellinus had not fallen: and therefore they could doe no leſſe, then commend their continuance in the Apoſtolike faith, during ſo many yeeres of perſecution. And for the time to come, they ſpeake not definitely as Prophets, but iudge charitably as brethren, that they hope well, that the Church of Rome, which had held out ſo long, would haue held out to the end. Thirdly, Eusebius ſaith, that in the Catholike Church the Catholike faith ſhall alwaies remaine: ſo then as long as the Church of Rome

Rome was Catholike, not departing from the doctrine of the Apostles, they were sure to haue the Apostolike faith: and thus Cyprian also and Lucius, with the rest that so speake, must bee vnderstood. So a popish champion himselfe teacheth vs to vnderstand them: Quod dicitur, Ecclesia Romana semper immaculata permansit, & permanebit, intelligi debet verum, quoadmodum ligabit & soluet iussu, clauis non errante: Where it is said, the Church of Rome hath remained and shall continue vnspotted, to make it true, we must vnderstand, so long as it bindeth and looseth iustly, the key not erring: Iohan. Patriarch. Antiochen. apud. in appendic. Concil. Basiliens.

The Protestants.

That the Popes and Bishops of Rome haue not onely erred in manners, but euen in faith; and not onely priuately and personally as men, but publikely and iudicially as Popes; that they haue by their publike and open preaching, defence, allowance, and consent approoued and established erroneous, and some hereticall opinions: thus wee trust to make it plaine and euident to all men.

1 Peter erred: Ergo, the Pope may, though he were Peters successor. First, Peter erred in denying of Christ. The Iesuite answereth: first, he began not yet to be the chiefe Bishop, which he entered not into till after the resurrection, when Christ said vnto him, Feede my sheepe, Ioh. 21. therefore all this while he might erre. A goodly answer: I pray you tell me, was not the Church before Christs passion, and after, built vpon the same rocke? I trow they cannot denie it: but Peter was not the rocke before, therefore not after.

If he were therefore called a rocke because of his confession of Christ, why should he not then rather, straight after his confession, take possession of his office, then immediately after his deniall of Christ? Surely this is but a silly shift. Secondly, saith the Iesuite, Peter failed in charitie when he denied Christ, not in faith, cap. 3. and if he failed in faith, he lost the confession of faith, and not faith it selfe.

We answer: First, can a true faith, then bee separated from loue by your doctrine? The Apostles knew no such faith: Saint James saith, it is a dead faith that is without the workes of loue, and the faith of diuels, that is, no faith, James 2. 17. 19. If then Peters loue failed, his faith also failed. Secondly, we do not say that Peters faith was lost and vtterly extinguished, for Christ praised for him, but whether it were an error in faith which Peter fell into: for it is not all one to erre in faith, or cleane to lose faith. Thirdly, he lost the confession of faith, he denied Christ in word: Ergo, he denied the faith, howsoeuer he thought in heart: for these two are the principall fruites of faith, to beleue with the hart, and Confesse with the mouth, Rom. 10. and where either of these is wanting, there cannot bee a right faith: for he that putteth away a good conscience, maketh shipwracke also of faith, 1. Tim. 1. 19. But the Iesuite I see hath a queazie stomacke, let him cough vp lustily, and say with one of his fellowes, Petrus non fidem Christi, sed Christum salua fide negauit: Peter denied not the faith of Christ, but his faith remaining sound and whole, he onely denied Christ. Loe, here is new popish diuinitie, that a man may denie Christ, and yet not denie the faith.

Alan. Cop.

Secondly, Peter erred in constraining the Gentiles to doe as the Iewes. Belarmine saith, it was an error in example and conuersation, not in faith or doctrine, cap. 7.

We answer: First, in this example of Peter there was also included an error in faith: for how should the Gentiles better know Peters iudgement, then by his example, by the which they fell into an error of faith, and were constrained to conforme themselves like to the Iewes: thinking that the Iewish ceremonies were necessarie to be retained? Secondly, S. Paul himselfe saith, they went not the right way to the truth of the Gospell: Ergo, they erred from the truth of the Gospell, and so in faith. Thirdly, the Diuines of Paris doe attribute to Peter an error in faith, Falk. ann. 4. Galat. sect. 9.

Thus testifieth also Gelasius, Tom. de anathemat. vinculo. S. Petrus sic existimans noni testamenti gratiam pradicandam, ut a legis veteris non recederet institutis, quodam per simulationem legitur gessisse: S. Peter thinking that the grace of the new Testament was so to bee preached, that he should not notwithstanding leaue the institution of the old law, is read to haue committed somewhat by dissimulation. It was therefore an error in opinion, which afterward the same Gelasius calleth, imbecillu infirmita, his impotent vnskilfulnes: Saint Peter therefore failed not onely in his examples, but in his knowledge and iudgement.

2 We can produce many examples of the Popes, which haue erred iudicially, namely, openly haue maintained errors: To let passe Marcellinus, who sacrificed to Idols, as a slippe of his person, and he afterward repented him of his fall: yet by the way the Iesuite is deceiued, that thinketh it probable, that the Popes particular person cannot fall into heresie: here you see Marcellinus fell into Idolatrie.

Belarmine answereth, that Marcellinus was no heretike, Nisi aliu externo ob metum mortis: But onely in an externall act for feare of death.

Contra,

Contra. That Marcellinus failed not only in committing of an valawful act, but erred in iudgement, it appeareth in the processe against him in the Sinuelfane Councell: for thus Marcellinus at the first excused himselfe, Nam Deus sacrificant, sed tantum prima lenatis manibus super prunas combustus: I did not sacrifice (saith he) to the Gods, but onely lifting vp my hands, burnt incense ouer the coales. But what is this else, I pray you, then to offer sacrifice to Idols?

Liberius subscribed to the Arrians, consented to the condemnation of Arianus: as testifieth Hierome, confessed by Nicholaus Casanus, and Alphonsus de castro, both Papiſts, Incl. pag. 164. de sens. Apolog.

Lib. 6. de loc.
cap. vii.

Honorius 1. consented to the heresie of Sergius Bishop of Constantinople, who was a Monothelite, and held, that there were not two wils or operations in Christ, and so destroyed the two natures. That Honorius was a Monothelite, Melchior Canus a Papiſt confesseth: he was condemned for an heretike in the 6. 7. and 8. generall Synodes. Bellarmino answereth, that the Councils are corrupted, or they might be deceived in iudgement, as in a matter of fact: or that Honorius onely misliked the speech, to say there were two wiles in Christ, and not the thing. See what poore shifts here be to make Honorius no heretike, and yet all will not be: for one of your owne Popes Leo 2. writing to Constantinus the Emperour, accused Honorius amongst other Monothelite heretikes: We accuſe (saith he) the inuentors of this new error, Theodorus, Cyrus, &c. and Honorius, which did not lighten the Apostolike Church, with the doctrine of Apostolike tradition, but by prophane treason endeouored to subuert the immaculate faith. Thus Honorius in a principal article of the faith erred, not in his priuate opinion onely, but in his publike defence.

Adrianus 2. Bishop of Rome, whatſoeuer the Iesuite faith to the contrarie, putteth all out of doubt: as it may appeare Constantinop. general. 8. actio. 7. for he writeth thus: Licet Honorio ab Orientalibus post mortem anathema sit dictum, sciendum tamen est, quia super haec si fuerat accusatus, propter quam solum licitum est inferioribus maiorum suorum motibus resistere: Although Honorius were accused or condemned of the East Church after his death, you must vnderstand that he was accused of heresie, for the which onely it is lawfull for the inferiours to resist the doings of their superiours. Here a Pope himselfe plainly confesseth, that Honorius his predecessor was an heretike.

Pope Stephen the 6. tooke vp Formosus bodie, and cut off two fingers of his right hand, and buried him againe in a lay-mans Sepulchre. Then followed Romanus the 1. Theodorus the 2. Iohannes the 9. and restored Formosus with his decrees, iudging him to be lawfull Bishop. After them cometh Sergius the 3. who tooke vp the bodie againe, cut off the head, and cast it into Tyber. The Iesuite answereth, that Stephanus and Sergius erred onely in a matter of fact. A goodly cloake to euer the filthinesse of their ghostly fathers withall.

But by your leaue a little: doe you not hold it to be an article of faith to beleue the Pope to bee the head of Christs Church? Then was it an article of faith to hold that Formosus was right Pope, for at that time there was no other: Ergo, Stephanus and Sergius erred in faith, defining the contrarie.

All that you can say, is this: that it was not yet determined and decreed for an article of faith, so to beleue: see, I pray you, these mens faith is pinned vpon Popes sleeues. Why masters, the rule of faith is certaine, you cannot make new articles of faith now, but onely declare and explaine those that are: as one of your owne Popes well saith, Articuli fides habens probari ex scripturis: The articles of faith must be proued out of Scripture, and are contained in the Symbols, Ioh. 2. 2. Extra. tit. 1. 4. cap. 5. But doe you not thinke that these iolly Popes, that would rake the dead out of their graues, for their holinesse might deserue at Gods hand, to haue a priuiledge not to erre in faith?

Gregorius 3. epistol. ad Bonifacium thus determineth, Virum uxore infirmitate correpta, & non valente ei debitum reddere, aliam ducere, &c. The husband if his wife be taken with any infirmitie, so that she cannot performe her due vnto him, may marrie another. Pope Nicholas 1. de matrimon. can. 6. decreed cleane contrarie: They that were found when they married, and afterward fall into any infirmitie: ob hanc infirmitatem coniugia talium dissolui non possunt: because of this infirmitie their mariage must not be dissolued. One of these must needs be in error: for one faith, that because of the infirmitie of the wife, mariage may bee dissolued: the other faith contrarie. Neither doth Bellarmino helpe the matter, in saying, that Gregorius speaketh of a continuall impotencie and weakenes of nature, and so the mariage was, ex errore contractum, contracted of error and ignorance: and such kinde of mariages may lawfully bee loosed, being indeede no mariages: Hac illi. Contra. But it is plaine that Gregorius speaketh of infirmitie or sicknes, that the wife is taken withall, correpta, not that was continually vpon her: and howſoeuer it is, both these Popes vsing the same word, Infirmitie, and so meaning the same thing, cannot be excused from contrarietie.

Nicholaus 1. de baptismo decret. 1. alloweth baptisme made onely in the name of Christ, without expresse mention of the Trinitie: which is a manifest error, and contrarie to the Scripture, Math. 28. 19. Bellarmino answereth, Eum non desinendo se dixisse, sed ut particularem docerem: That he spake take this not definitively, but as a particular Doctor. Contra. A weak defence: for where else is the Popes definite sentence to be found, but in his decrees published to the whole world, as this is: and it is placed amongst your owne Canons, Decret. par. 3. dist. 4. cap. 24.

Alexander 3. Lateranens. council. par. 6. cap. 8. forbiddeth mariage to be made, cum sorore sponsa defuncta, with her sister that was espoused and betrothed, and is now dead.

Benedictus par. 6. cap. 27. determineth cleane contrarie: Qui unam sororem desponsauerit, si eam non cognouerit, potest aliam sororem sibi matrimonio copulari: He that hath espoused to himselfe one sister, if he haue not knowne her, may marrie the other sister.

Alexand. ibid. cap. 8. Matrimonium contractum per verba de presenti cum alio initum dissolendum indicet: He iudgeth matrimonie contracted with one by words of the present tence, and yet made with another, to be void. Benedictus determineth contrarie, cap. 28. for the case is put of one R. that was contracted with one Mary, by words of the present tence, and nothing wanted but solemnization of the mariage: afterward the said R. marieth another: If there be no other let (saith he) beside this mutuall consent and contract, Secunda matrimonia inuolubiliter obseruanda indicamus: We giue sentence that the second mariage hold. Now one of these Popes, the one being so contrarie to the other, must needs be in an error.

Syluester the second was a Necromancer and a Coniurer, and therefore fallen from the faith. Bellarmino saith, he was a good man, and all are fables and lyes that are tolde of him: and because he was cunning in Geometrie, that ignorant age straightwaies iudged him to bee giuen to Necromancie.

Thus we may take the Iesuites word, if we will. But the storie is reported by authors of better credit then Bellarmino: as Iohannes Stella, Platina, Petrus Premonstratens. Nauclerus, Antoninus, Fox pag. 167.

Anastasiu was a Nestorian heretike, whose heresie was this, that there are, as two natures, so also two persons in Christ, Alphonsus de castro lib. 1. de heresib. cap. 4.

Celsinus is reported by Laurentius Valla a Canon of Rome, to haue been a Nestorian heretike, de donation. Constantin.

Now commeth in Pope Hildebrand, or rather Heldebrand, for he was a very brand of hell fire; called Gregory the seventh: Of whome Beuno writeth thus: that he poysoned sixe Popes his predecessors to make himselfe a way to the Popedom: that he was a Coniurer, a rayser of Diuels, and in his rage he cast the sacrament into the fier. But saith Harding our countrey man, though vnworthily, Beuno was his enemy, and wrote of displeasure: and Bellarmino thinketh that some Lutherans was the author of the booke, which goeth vnder the name of Beuno, who was Cardinal in this *Hildebrand*s time. But Beuno onely doth not thus report of him: he was openly twise for the same crimes condemned in Councell: first at Wormes: then after deposed in the Councell at Brixia in Italie, and Pope Clement the third elected to succede him. And the said Gregory died in exile, of whome Antoninus reporteth, that before his death, he repented him of his insolency shewed toward the Emperor Henry the fourth; whom with his wife and young child bare foote, and bare legd, he had caused three dayes together, in extreame frost and colde, to waite at his palace gates at Cannusum, before he could speake with him. Yet this Hildebrand for all these insolent, cruell, and dishonest parts, is commended by our papists, Harding, Bellarmino and other, for a deuout Catholike man, who did all things of a zeale to the Church. By this you may iudge, whom our aduersaries count a Catholike man.

Defen. Aplog.

Pope Iohn the 22. affirmed, that the soules lye in a trauince till the day of iudgement, and feeles neither payne nor ioye. Harding, and likewise Bellarmino answere, that this was an error, but no heresie. Yet in the vniuersitie of Paris, it was condemned for heresie, as Gersow writeth. Againe saith Harding, he held it onely as a priuate opinion. But Massaw saith, that Pope Iohn preached this heresie and sent out preachers to maintaine it. He was condemned (saith he) with his error by the diuines of Paris in the presence of Philip the French King, before he was Pope, when he was yet but a priuate Doctor. But the contrary is proued by Bishop Iewel, that he was Pope 13. yeares before Philip was King, Iuel. defens. Apolog. pag. 667.

Pope Iohn the 23. denied the life to come, and the resurrection of the bodie: And this heresie was openly objected against him in the Councell of Constance. Bellarmino and Harding before him, answere, that he was not the rightfull Pope, for there were three at that time, and therefore might erre. But Platina saith, that he was chosen at Bononia, by the consent of all the Cardinals, ex Iuel. pag. 671.

I lastly, Pope Eugenius the fourth was condemned and deposed as an heretike in the Councell of Basile. Where the Iesuite hath no other answere, then by condemning the Coucull as schismaticall, so acquite the Pope, Iub. 3. de pontif. cap. 14.

By these examples it may appeare to the indifferent reader, that it is no rare nor impossible thing, for the Popes of Rome to erre, yea become playne heretikes. And as for that shifte of the Iesuite,

Iesuite,

suite, that they are no longer Popes, when they openly begin to teach heresie, this is as Athenasius saith, In re seria uerbu uelle locari, to dally with words in a serious and earnest matter. And so every Bishop shall be as well priuiledged as the Pope, and cannot fall into heresie: for why may we not say that a Bishop, when he is knowne to be an heretike, ceaseth to be Bishop any longer, as the Pope is no longer Pope; and so as long as he remaineth Bishop, cannot possiblie be an heretike. Surely this is but paltrie and beggarly stuffe.

Neither haue we named all the Popes, that are found to haue erred publicly, and iudicially: as Lucius doth allow marriages made without consent of parents; de raptorib. cap. cum causa: Eudisistius before him defineth such not to be lawfull marriages, but rather, supra & adulteria, whoredomes and adulteries, epist. 1. One of these two decreeing thus contrarie each to other, must needs be in an error. Oldendorpius, and Quarenus doe thinke that Lucius is in an error, and they thinke right: but Antonius Delphinus to iustifie the practise herein of the Popish Church, doth impute the error to Eudisistius.

Innocentius the 1. did definitiue hold, that it was necessarie for infants to receiue the Communion, which is a manifest error: Augustine so writeth of him, who was in the same error himselfe, cont. Iulian. lib. 1. cap. 2.

Innocentius againe writing to Decentius, affirmeth that none of the Apostles did preach in Italie, France, Spaine, Africa, but Peter, and whom he sent, decr. p. 1. dist. 11. c. 11. which one of your owne writers saith is contrarie to Saint Pauls epistles, and the storie of the Actes, Effem. 2. Timoth. p. 177.

Nicholas the 4. did define publicly, that neither Christ or his Apostles had any thing in property, Sext. decret. lib. 5. tit. 12. c. 3.

Iohn the 22. defineth this assertion to be heresie, for any man to say, that Christ and his Apostles had nothing, Extr. tit. 14. cap. 4.

And to conclude, it is a rule in their owne law: Error cui non resistitur approbatur uidetur: Error, that is not resisted, is approued, Extr. Iohann. tit. 5. c. 3. And by these reasons, few of the Popes shall be free from error, who haue suffered, thorough their idle and voluptuous life, many errors and heresies to grow vp vnder their nose without checke.

Let vs see what a generall Councell hath determined of this matter, Council. Basiliens. epistol. fund. 8. This priuiledge, say they, not to erre, hath not been granted, communi lege, by a common or perpetuall law to any, not to the Angels, for many of them fell; not to our first parents, for they were deceived: Non sanctis pontificibus, quorum nonnulli in hereses & errores lapsi esse dicuntur, & leguntur, Not vnto the chiefe Bishops, for many of them are read to haue fallen into error and heresie.

The testimonie of the glorious Martyrs is this: Master Bilney holy Martyr, accused and condemned for this article with others, that he should say, That these five hundred yeeres there hath bin no good Pope, nor in all the time past we can finde but fiftie; for they haue neither preached, nor lived well. But till now haue borne the keyes of Simon, &c. Fox. pag. 1001.

Master Tindall holy Martyr: I thinke verely that so long as the successors of the Apostles were persecuted and martyred (he meaneth the 30. Bishops of Rome, that were put to death for Christ,) there were good Christen men, and no longer: pag. 1252. If the Popes haue hardly been good Christen men this long time, much lesse haue they been freed from error.

Lastly, Augustine is not a whit afraid to say, Episcoporum licet ut per sermonem sapienterum cōsilio in ea re peritioris, & per aliorum episcoporum grauiorem auctoritatem, & per concilia licet reprehensibilis eis à ueritate demiatum sit. That the decrees of all Bishops whatsoever (not excluding Popes) may be corrected either by the sentence of wiser men in that point, wherein they erred, or by the better aduised sentence of other Bishops, or by Councils may bee reuerfed, where they doe erre. Ergo, it is possible for Popes, by his iudgement, to erre.

A PART OR APPENDIX OF THIS QUESTION, whether the Church of Rome may erre or not.

The Papists.

They doe not onely affirme that the Pope cannot erre, but that the Church of Rome also cannot be deceived in matters of faith, so long as the Apostolike See remaineth there, which, they say, is like there to remaine to the end of the world. Bellarmin. lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 4. Hereupon Panormitane doubteth not to say, that he would preferre the iudgement of the Cardinals of Rome, before the iudgement of the whole world: this he said, standing vp in the Councell of Basile, Pat. pag. 669. ex Aene Syluo.

Argum. 1. The Rhemists vpon those words of S. Paul, Rom. 1. 5. your faith is published through the whole world, doe thus inferre: See (say they) the great prouidence of God in the preferuation of the Roman common faith. In times past the Romane faith and Catholike all one: Ergo, that See cannot erre in faith.

We

We answer: they must proue their Romish faith and Popish religion, to be the same which was prayed and commended by the Apostle, or else they gaine nothing: but that shall they neuer doe.

Argum. 1. So long as the Apostolike See remaineth at Rome, it shall be preserved from error, but that is like there to remaine till the worlds end: for it onely remaineth, when all other Apostolike Sees are gone: and it is very probable, that if this See could haue been ouerthrowen, it should haue been done by the incursion and inuasion of the Gothes, Vandals, Turkes, the emulation of Princes, diuisions and schismes of Popes themselues: yet for all this it standeth still, and hath so continued almost 1600. yeeres, and shall so continue still. Ergo, the Romane Church cannot erre. Beherm. lib. 2. cap. 4. Rhemist. annu. in 2. Thessal. 2. sect. 7.

We answer: First, it is a great vntruth, that all other Apostolike Sees are gone, for there is a succession at Antioch, Alexandria, Constantinople, Ephesus, euen at this day. Secondly, it is false, that the See of Rome hath continued in that religion it now professeth, which indeede is no religion, but superstition and heresie, these 1600. yeeres: for first till Gregories time, which was 600. yeeres after Christ, none of the Popes would be called vniuersall Bishops: and it was more then 300. yeeres, from Gregory the first to Syluester the second, when Saithan is thought fully to be let loose: for he by the diuell was aduanced to the papacie: All these yeeres therefore you must strike off in your account. Thirdly, that the See of Rome, which is the seate of Antichrist, hath continued many yeeres, we grant: for it is the iust iudgement of God vpon the world, because they loued not the truth, that they should be deluded a long time, and deceived by Antichrist, and beleue lies: so did S. Paul prophesie, 2. Thess. 2. 10. 11. And we grant also that that Antichristian See shall in some sort remaine till the coming of Christ, whom he shall destroy with the brightnes of his appearing, as S. Paul saith. You haue gained therefore nothing by this, but that Rome is the seate of Antichrist.

The Protestants.

It is euident and plaine, and neede not much prooffe, that the Romane Church, as also any particular visible Church, may not onely erre in faith, but fall cleane away into heresie and Idolatrie, as we see it come to passe in the Church of Rome.

Argum. 1. The Church of Rome hath no better assurance of their continuance, then the Church of the Iewes had before Christ, no nor yet so great, for they were a peculiar and chosen nation. But Isaiah fell and transgressed, and committed idolatrie in the raigne of Ahas, and therefore the prophet Esay complaineth and saith, from the sole of the foote to the head, there is nothing found chap. 1. vers. 6.

Neither are they better then the Church of Ephesus was in S. Iohns time, who was as able (I thinke) to keepe that Church from error, as the Pope is to keepe Rome: yet the Lord threatnieth to remoue his candlestick from amongst them, vlesse they did amend, Reu. 2. 5. Ergo, the Church of Rome may erre.

Argum. 2. The Pope may erre, as we haue before shewed: Ergo, the Church of Rome: for the Apostolike See, as they say, is the cause that no error can approach or come neere them. Therefore (me thinketh) the Iesuite committeth a foule absurdity, in saying, the Church of Rome cannot so much as erre personally, and yet they grant that the Pope may erre personally. So by this reason the body should haue a greater priuiledge then the head: the Church of Rome should be freer from error then the Pope, who should preserve it from error: this sure is a great absurditie in Popish diuinity, Beherm. cap. 4.

3 It is confessed by our aduersaries themselues, that the Church of Rome may erre: as the Councell at Rome vnder Adrian the second erred, saith the Iesuite, in determining Honorius to be an heretike, one of his predecessors, chap. 11.

The Councell of the Italian Bishops at Brixia erred in condemning Gregory the seventh, who was, if you will beleue Haring, a vertuous and an holy man: Nay Paulus Iouinus a popish Bishop Lib. 10. fine. confesseth, that Adrianus the sixte was made Pope, mira & pudenda Senatorum factioforum suffragatione, through the strange and shamefull suffrages of factious Cardinals, because they preferred a stranger before their owne order.

But our aduersaries haue a trick, to shift off all this that hath been said: They erred in a matter of fact, not in any poynt of faith. Yet they cannot so closely conuey the matter away: for Panormitanus euen in such questions also preferreth the iudgement of the Cardinals before the whole world, speaking in the defence of Eugenius, who was chalenged in the Councell of Basile, for the dissolution of the Councell, which he did (saith Panormitanus) with the aduice of the Cardinals: whose iudgement he so much esteemeth in this matter, which concerned not faith, namely, for the dissolving of the Councell.

claus non errante. Whereas it is ſaid, the Church of Rome hath alwayes remained vnſpotted, and ſhall ſo continue ſtill, it muſt bee vnderſtood to make it true, ſo long as ſhee bindeth iuſtly, the key not erring. Their ſentence is therefore, that the Church of Rome may erre in diſpenſing of the keyes, &c.

Saint Hierome writing againſt Vigilantius ſaith, Galliam ſolum hereſem moniſtra non habuiſſe: That onely France of all Churches was free from hereſie. In ſaying onely France, the Church of Rome is not excepted: and this ſaying of S. Hierome is approved by one of your owne writers, Eſperus in 1. ad Timoth. p. 383.

The ſame father alſo miſliketh a certaine cuſtome, or abuſe rather of the Romane Church, that Deacons were preferred before Priests, and ſaith, they did not, reſti facere, doe that which was right, they were therefore in an error. And this ſentence is inſerted into their owne decrees, deſ. 93. cap. legimus.

Againe, Deer. part. 2. cauſ. 35. queſt. 9. cap. 6. Nicholauſ. ſententia Romana ſedis, &c. The ſentence of the See of Rome may be changed into a better: Ergo, that See may erre and be deceived.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION, OF THE SPIRITUAL IURISDICTION AND POWER OF THE BISHOP OF ROME.

THis queſtion hath two parts: the firſt, whether the Biſhop of Rome haue a coactive and conſtraining power to make lawes to binde the conſcience, and to puniſh the tranſgreſſors. Secondly, whether other Paſtors and Biſhops haue their iuriſdiction immediatly from God, or from the Pope.

Other queſtions alſo there are, which belong to this matter, as whether the Pope bee the chief Iudge in controverſies of faith, which we haue alreadie handled, entreating of the perfection and authoritie of the Scriptures: as alſo whether it be in the Pope to ſummon, diſſolve, and confirme Councils, which hath been ſufficiently declared before, in the controverſie concerning Councils. Concerning other queſtions, as the canonizing of Saints, which they ſay appertaineth to the Pope, the election and confirmation of Biſhops, pardons and indulgences, we ſhall haue ſitter occasion to deale in them, in their ſeverall places and controverſies. At this time we purpoſe onely to touch theſe two poynts aforeſaid, of the Popes eccleſiaſtical iuriſdiction.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE POPE may make lawes to binde the conſcience, and puniſh the tranſgreſſors thereof iudicially.

The Popiſts.

That the Pope hath ſuch authoritie, to make lawes for the whole Church, which ſhall binde vnder paine of damnation, as well as the lawes of God, it is the generall opinion of the Popiſts, Fox 981. artic. 13. & pag. 1101. artic. cont. Lambert. 29. But they put in this claufe, ſo they bee not vniuſt lawes nor contrarie to the diuine law, Bellarmin. cap. 15. And yet they ſay that the Pope may make lawes, hauing not the authoritie nor warrant of Scripture, neither is it neceſſary for theſe lawes to be expreſſed or deduced out of Scripture. And theſe lawes are not onely of eternall rites and orders of the Church, but euen of things neceſſary to ſaluation, Bellarmin. cap. 15. in reprehens. Caluini. Yea he addeth further, that in matters not neceſſary to ſaluation, he cannot be diſobeyed without deadly finne, and offence of conſcience, cap. 16. loc. 1. Bulla Leonis 10. aduerſus Lutherum, Fox pag. 3281. col. 1.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtles preſcribed a law concerning the abſtaining from blood, things ſtrangled, and offered to Idols, concerning the which Chriſt gaue them no precept. But this law did binde the people in conſcience: for euery where the Apoſtles gaue ſtraight charge, for the keeping of the decrees, Bellarmin.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtles commanded no new thing, but the ſame which they themſelues were taught of Chriſt, that they ſhould take heede of offence: the Chriſtians therefore were not bound in conſcience any further to keep the decrees concerning ſuch things, then for auoyding of ſcandall and offence. Secondly, for afterward the offence being taken away, the law alſo ceaſed: and Saint Paul giueth libertie, notwithstanding this law, to eate things offered to Idols, if it might be done without offence, asking no queſtion (ſaith he) for conſcience ſake, 1. Cor. 10. 27. which Epiſtle it is certaine was written after that decree of the Apoſtles, Act. 15. 29. Ergo, their conſciences were not hereby obliged and bound.

1. Bellarmin. replieth to the firſt, that though the end of the Apoſtles precept was to auoid offence, yet the precept it ſelfe was as touching the not eating of things offered to Idols, ſtrangled and blood: as the end of the Morall law, as not to ſteale, not to kill, is charitie: yet the law bindeth bindeth vs not onely to that end, but to abstaine also from killing and stealing: cap. 16. respons. ad Caluic. lib. 4.

Contra. Bellarmine here sheweth either his wilfull ignorance, or rash oversight, making no difference betweene things indifferent, and euill of their owne nature: for to kill, to steale, are euill in themselves and simply forbidden, and not onely for offence: to eate or not to eate, this or that, are indifferent in themselves, and not vnlawfull but in respect of the offence, which followeth.

2. Bellarmine to the second point answereth, that this law of the Apostles, is now abrogated, not because the offence ceaseth, but because the law vniuersally is determined: as for example, the end of fasting is to tame the flesh rebelling against the spirit, which reason shall cease after the resurrection, and then also the law of fasting shall no more be needfull.

Contra. Father Robert Bellarmine maketh here a long discourse, and would seeme to say somewhat, and yet it proueth iust nothing: and if he say any thing, it maketh for vs: for as the law of fasting shall then cease, when the reason and end thereof shall cease: so this law of the Apostles is vniuersally abrogate, because there is no more feare or flange of offence, which was the reason of the making of this decree.

3. To the place alleaged out of S. Paul to the Corinthians, he hath these answers: first, that when S. Paul did so write to the Corinthians, that decree of the Apostles began then to bee abrogated. But he himselfe misliketh this answer, and therefore it neede no further confirmation: and his reason is good, that the law did yet hold, because the reason of the law, that is to auoid offence, was not yet remoued. Secondly, it may be thought, saith he, that as yet the decree of the Apostles was not come to the Corinthians, and therefore the Apostle so writeth.

Contra. First, the decree was generally prescribed to all the Gentiles conuerred to God, and not to them of Antioch onely, as Iames determineth, Act. 15. 19. And therefore seeing it concerned the Corinthians as well as other Churches, he speaketh without ground, to say, that it was not yet deliuered to the Church of the Corinthians. Secondly, admit the Corinthians knew it not, S. Paul yet did know it, and therefore he would not haue written any thing contrarie to the decree which he knew, though they knew it not.

Argum. 2. It is necessarie to haue some lawes, beside the diuine law, for the government of the Church: for the word of God is too vniuersall, neither is sufficient to direct every particular action: therefore other ecclesiasticall lawes must bee added: but every good and necessarie law hath a coactive and constraining power, and bindeth the conscience to obedience: Ergo the constitutions of the Popes and Councels, which are the onely ecclesiasticall lawes, do binde the conscience, Bellarm. cap. 16. lib. 4.

Answe. First, the word of God containeth all necessarie rules to saluation: therefore all lawes of the Church concerning matters of faith, are but explanations, and interpretations of the rules: of faith set forth in Scripture, if they be godly lawes, and so are not the lawes of men but of God, and doe binde the conscience to the obseruation thereof: as the lawes of the Church, which commaund Christians to resort to the congregation to heare Gods word, and reverently to receiue the Sacraments, are the very ordinances and commandements of Christ, who enioyned his Apostles to preach, and baptize, and his faithfull people to heare and to be baptized, and therefore in conscience wee are bound to the obedience hereof. Secondly, there are other ecclesiasticall lawes appointed for the publike order of the Church, concerning externall rites and circumstances of persons and place, as the houres of prayer, the forme of the Leiturgie and publike service, the times fittest for the celebration of the Sacraments, and such like. These and such like constitutions doe not binde in conscience absolutely, in respect of the things themselves, which are indifferent, but in regard of that contempt, and offence which might follow in the not keeping of them: contempt to our superiours, whom we ought in all lawfull things to obey: offence, in grieving the conscience of our weake brethren. So that even these constitutions also which are made according to the rules of the Gospell, that is, vnto edification, to the glorie of God, and for auoiding of offence, doe necessarily binde vs in conscience, not conscience of the things themselves, which are but external, but conscience of obedience to our Christian Magistrates, and conscience in taking heede of all iust offence: sic Calvin. Institut. lib. 4. cap. 19. 11.

3. But we are not, God be thanked, driuen to any such strait, that if there be neede of any such ecclesiasticall lawes, we should runne for succour to the Popes beggerly decretals. (And yet such Canons, as were in force amongst them, agreeable to the rules of the Gospell, we doe not refuse.) But if there bee want and penurie of good lawes, every Church hath as full authoritie, to make decrees and ordinances for the peace and order, and quiet government thereof, not as the Pope of Rome hath over the vniuersall Church (for that by right is none, or if it bee, it is but an usurped power) but as the Bishop of Rome hath in his owne Bishoprick and diocess.

What our ſentence is of this matter, it doth paſſely appeare by that which wee have already ſaid: that the Pope hath no power over the whole Church, and therefore can make no lawes to binde the conſcience or otherwiſe for the ſame, for it belongeth not to his charge. Secondly, wee ſay, that neither he, nor any eccleſiaſticall government beſide, can make lawes of things neceſſarie to ſalvation, other then thoſe which are in Scripture contained. Thirdly, all ec-cleſiaſticall lawes made concerning externall rites, and publike order, doe not otherwiſe binde the conſcience, then in regard of our obedience due to Chriſtian Magiſtrates in lawfull things, and for avoyding of ſcandall and offence: But in reſpect of the things commaunded, ſuch lawes doe not binde: Calvin. loc. prædiſto.

Argum. 1. Saint James ſaith, There is one law-giver which is able to ſave and to deſtroy, chap. 4. 12.
He therefore onely maketh lawes to binde the conſcience, that is able to ſave and to deſtroy:
but that cannot the Pope doe: Ergo, Calvin. Argum.

Calvin. inſwereth, that the lawes of men doe binde under paine of damnation, in as much as God is offended and diſpleaſed with their diſobedience, and ſo iudgeth them worthe of puniſhment, cap. 20. All this we graunt, that the lawes of men being good lawes, doe binde in ob-ſervance in reſpect of the contempt and diſobedience to higher powers, but not in reſpect of the things commaunded, which in their nature are indifferent: The Jeſuite ſhould have ſaid, that God is offended not onely for their diſobedience, but ſimply for not doing the things commaunded, which he doth not ſay: As when the Magiſtrate for ſome profitable and politike end commaundeth vpon ſome daies abſtinenſe from fleſh, it is not the eating or not eating of fleſh, that ſimply diſpleaſeth and offendeth God, but the contempt of the law, and wilfull and obſtinate diſobe-dience to the Magiſtrate: for otherwiſe the uſe of the creature is free and indifferent.

Cap. 15. lib. 4.
de pontif.

We will beare the Jeſuite with his own ſtaffe: he ſaith not, that all lawes do binde the conſcience, but onely ſuch lawes, in the which foure conditions are required. Firſt, that they be made for ſome profitable end: ſo are not popiſh lawes which nourish ſuperſtition, and haue no edifying, and ſome of them doe commaund plaine idolatries and open impietie, as the worſhip-ping of Images, the adoration of the Maſſe, and ſuch like. Secondly, ſaith he, they muſt not be contraire to Gods law, but ſuch are many of their ordinances, yea the moſt of them. Thirdly, they muſt be made by him that hath authoritie: therefore none of the Popes lawes binde the univerſall Church, for it is not ſubiekt to him. Fourthly, the forme and manner of imponing ſuch lawes muſt be orderly: but their lawes are moſt diſordered, imponed vpon the Church violently, without their conſent, or any good proceeding. Thus you ſee, euen by their owne confeſſion, their lawes cannot binde.

One thing more I muſt needs tell them of. If they would needs haue their lawes to bind men in conſcience, they ſhould haue made fewer of them: now they are ſo many, that if the breach them were an offence of conſcience, do men what they could, they ſhould daily make ſhipwrack of their conſcience. It is a true ſaying that is reported of one Thomas Arthar, a good Chriſtian, & is an homely ſpeech, becauſe the matter was ſomewhat homely, yet he did hit the marke. Liken (ſaith he) croſſes were ſet vp againſt the walles of London, that no man ſhould piſſe there; and while there were but a few, men for reverence of the croſſes, would not piſſe againſt the wall: but when in euery corner they ſet vp croſſes, men of neceſſitie were faine to piſſe vpon the wall and croſſes too. So ſaith he, if there had been fewer lawes of the Church, they would haue been better kept: but now they are ſo many, that men cannot chuſe but breake them.

Fox pag. 999.

Argum. 3. The Pope hath no power to correct the tranſgreſſors of his lawes over the whole Church: Ergo, he cannot make lawes to binde the whole Church. The argument followeth, for he that hath abſolute power to make lawes, hath alſo power to command obedience to the lawes ſo made. And your owne law ſaith, Iuriſdictio nullius uideretur momenti, ſi correſpondens aliquam uia haberet: That iuriſdiction is nothing worth, that hath no conſtraining power, *Innocen. 3. de cr. Gerg.
lib. 1. tit. 29. cap. 28.*

The firſt is thus proued: the Pope indeede hath taken vpon him many times to thunder out his excommunications againſt other Churches: but it was an uſurped and tyrannicall power, and many times reſiſted, and contradicted.

Fox pag. 41.

Pope Viſtor, anno 1500. would haue excommunicate the Eaſt Churches about the keeping of Eaſter, but he was ſtaied by ſtrenuam. The Councell of Conſtance did ſend out excommunications againſt Pope Benedit. ſiſſ. 36.

In the Councell of Baſil, Pope Eugene cited Cardinall Julian, with the reſt of the fathers there aſſembled, to come to Bononia, vnder great penaltie: they likewiſe cited Eugene vnder the like penaltie, either to come or ſend to Baſil. Fox pag. 668.

Pope Leo the 10. in his ſummiſh Antichriſtian Bull, excommunicated and condemned Luther.
Luther with better right pronounceth ſentence of excommunication againſt him, being an aduerſarie

verarie to Christ, in these words: According to the power and might, that the spirit of Christ, and efficacy of our faith can doe in these our writings, if you shall persist still in your curie, wee candemne you together with this Bull and all the decretall, and giue you to Satan, as the destruction of the flesh, that your spirit in the day of the Lord may be deliuered: in the name, which you persecute, of Iesus Christ our Lord. Far pag. 1286.

Thus you see what small force there is of these popish leaden Bulls, and presumptuous excom-munications: for it falleth out iustly by them, as the Wiseman saith, As the Sparrow and Swallow by flying escape, so the curse causelesse shall not come. Now seeing therefore the Pope faileth of power and strength to see his lawes executed in the vniuersall Church, it cannot be that his lawes should vniuersally binde.

Lastly, let Augustine speake: he thus deſcribeth sinne, Peccatum est delictum, scilicet, vel contrarium contra legem eternam Dei: Sinne is any thing, done, said, or cotected against the law of God: therefore the transgression simply of the law of man is not sinne: but as thereby, also the law of God is transgressed: Ergo, simply it bindeeth not the conscience: for sinne onely bindeeth and toucheth the conscience.

We haue also a most cleere testimonie of a prouinciall Councell, synodus Augustina cap. 48. which I will set downe whole as it standeth, as very pertinent to this place: Episcopi in preceptis diuinis non contemnit, quod maiorum nostrorum constitutiones inueniunt: namque vi maioribus obediuntus (saltem in his que legi diuinae non aduersantur) deserti iniuri diuini est: unde per occasionem talium constitutionum trans- gressores grandis peccati rei sunt, dum ex contemptu, aut cum scandalo charitatem violant, quorum vitio- que per se peccatum mortale operatur: aliqui ecclesie constitutiones suas charitatis necessitati libenter submittit: Although it be not expressely contained in the word of God, which the constitutions of our fathers doe commaund: yet that wee should obey our Elders, especially wherein they are not contrarie to the law of God, it is the expresse word of God: whereupon they, which are transgressors of such constitutions, are guiltie of a great sinne, in so much as doing it of contempt, and by giuing of offence, they violate charitie: for the lawes of the Church must submit themselves to the rules of charitie and necessitie. This decree sheweth, that the Church, or the gouernours ther-of, are not to commaund lawes not warranted by Gods word: and that they binde vs to obedience no otherwise, then in respect of contempt, and offence which may be giuen: which is all one, with that, which we affirmed before.

We haue also witnesse of both the lawes: first Institian the Emperour thus writeth: Leges con- dere soli imperatori concessum est, &c. It is onely lawfull for the Emperour to make lawes: Cod. lib. 1.
tit. 17. leg. 11. If onely for the Emperour, then the Pope hath no authoritie to make lawes.

Their owne law also conseneth with vs: Vrbani in his decrees as it standeth in Gratiu par. 2. caus. 19. quest. 2. cap. 2. alleageth the same place of Scripture, which wee produce for this matter;
1. Cor. 3. Where the spirit of God is, there is libertie; and if you be led by the spirit, you are no more under the law, &c. Ergo, we are not bound in conscience to obey humane lawes, which infringe the libertie of the spirit, as the superstitious pontificall lawes doe.

Bellarmine answereth, that wee are freed from Moses ceremoniall lawes, but not from the obedience of Prelates, resp. ad argum. 5.

Contra. First, if we be freed from the yoke of Iewish ceremonies, which were instituted of God, and were profitable for the time, much more are we deliuered from popish ceremonies, which are meere humane inuentions, and had neuer any good vse. Secondly, Vrbani in the former decree inferreth the contrarie, that the libertie of the spirit doth exempt men from the obedience of Prelates: for he thus concludeth, after he had alleaged a certaine distinction, of publike law, and pri-uate, calling that publike, which is ordained by the gouernours of the Church: that priuate, which is written in the heart of man by the spirit out of the word, which is of more force then the other: and the publike (saith he) ought to giue place to the priuate. Then he thus resolueth, Whosoeuer is led by this spirit, though his Bishop do giue law, est liber nostra auctoritate is pronounced free by our authoritie.

Again, there is another decree of Vrbani caus. 19. quest. 1. cap. 6. Inde nouas leges condere potest, &c.
The Bishop of Rome may make lawes, where the Euangelists and Prophets haue said nothing:
but where our Lord or the Apostles, &c. haue defined any thing, there the Romane Bishop cannot make new law, &c. But now many of the Popes lawes are found to commaund many things directly contrarie to the Scriptures.

Let vs adde the seale of the Martyrs, master Bilsey Martyr: As touching the multitude of lawes
S. Augustine in his time did much complaine: and Gerson also who marueiled, that wee could by any meanes lue in safetie among so many snares of constitutions, when as our forefathers being pure before their fall, could not obserue one onely precept. Far pag. 1000.

Master Lambert Martyr: If it be true, which is written in the decrees, that lawes bee neuer confirmed, till they be approued by the common manners of them that shall vse them, then cannot the Popes lawes binde all Chriſtian men; for the Greekes and Bohemians will neuer admit them; pag. 1116. reſp. ad artic. 19. Whereupon we conclude, that the Pope cannot make lawes to binde the whole Church.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QUESTION,

whether all Biſhops doe receiue their eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction from the Pope.

The Popiſts.

ſo. Error.

They denie not but that the power of order, as they call it, which conſiſteth in the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, is equally diſtributed to all Biſhops; and that they, as well as the Pope, doe receiue it immediatly by their conſecration; of God: but the power both of externall iuriſdiction, which ſtandeth vpon eccleſiaſticall cenſures, conſtitutions and decrees, and internall iuriſdiction, which is exerciſed in binding and looſing, is deriued, ſay they, from the Pope to all other Biſhops.

Numb. 11. 16.

Argum. 1. God tooke of the ſpirit that was in Mofes, and diſtributed it among the ſeuentie Elders, that were choſen to beare the burthen of gouernment with Mofes, and to be his helpen: the Lord tooke of his ſpirit, not by diminiſhing it, but by deriuing of his vertue to the reſt: but the Pope is now in the rounge and place of Mofes in the Church: Ergo, from him to the reſt is this authoritie deriued.

Anſw. Firſt, Mofes example was extraordinarie, he was a figure of Chriſt, not of the Pope, Deut. 18. verſ. 15. The Pope might with better right ſtand vpon Aarons example, who was high Prieſt, not lay claime to Mofes office, who was the Prince and Captaine of the people: for the Pope, I trow, would bee chiefe Biſhop, and not Emperour too. Secondly, the meaning is not that God deriued Mofes ſpirit to the reſt: but beſtowed the like gift of propheſying vpon them, as Mofes had: ſurely neuer any mortall man had the ſpirit in ſuch abundance, that it could bee deuided into ſeuentie portions, and one Prophet to make many. The like phraſe is vſed, 2. King. 2. 15. where the Prophets ſaid, that the ſpirit of Eliab did reſt on Eliſha, that is, God endued him with an excellent ſpirit of propheſying, as Eliab had. If they will vnderſtand this place alſo of deriuing of ſpirits; how then ſhall that bee taken in the ninth verſe where Eliſha praith, that his ſpirit might be doubled vpon him? If his ſpirit were deriued from Eliab, how could it bee doubled vpon him? how could it be multiplied and increaſed? how could he haue more then was in the fountaine or originall, ſeeing he receiued all from thence?

3. What maketh this place, I pray you, for the power of externall iuriſdiction? Here it is ſaid that God gaue of his ſpirit to ſeuentie Elders and rulers of the people, and enabled them for their office; endued them with wiſedome, and knowledge, and dexteritie in iudging of the people: this maketh nothing for their purpoſe, vnleſſe they will alſo ſay, that there is a ſecret influence of knowledge and wiſedome deriued from the Pope to al other Biſhops, whereby they are made able to execute their office. But (I trow) they will not ſay ſo: for Alphouſus de caſtro truly ſaith of the Popes of Rome, Conſtat plures eorum adeo eſſe illiteratos, vt grammaticam penitus ignorent: It is certaine that many of them were ſo vnlearned, that they hard and ſcant knew their grammar.

4. The argument followeth not from one particular cuntry, as this was of the Iewes, to the vniuerſall Church: that becauſe the ſeuentie Elders receiued iuriſdiction from Mofes (yet that cannot be prooued out of this place; for they were Rulers before, and commanders of the people, they were now but inwardly furniſhed, and further enabled) yet it were no good reaſon, that therefore the Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters ouer the whole Church, ſhould receiue their power from one.

5. Neither doth it follow, that becauſe the Prince and ciuill Magiſtrate may beſtow ciuill offices, create Dukes, Earles, Lords, conſtitute Iudges, Deputies, Lieutenants, by his ſole authoritie; that by the ſame reaſon Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters ſhould receiue their power and office from their ſuperiours: for although the Church from ancienttime hath thought it good, to make ſome inequality & difference in eccleſiaſticall offices for the peace of the Church; yet the ſuperiours haue not ſuch a ſoueraigne and commanding power ouer the reſt, as the Prince hath ouer his ſubiects.

Argum. 2. If Biſhops and paſtors ſhould haue their iuriſdiction immediatly from God, and not from man, all Biſhops ſhould haue an equall iuriſdiction: but now we ſee it to be otherwiſe, that one Biſhop is ſet ouer one towne, another ouer twentie: therefore it is moſt like they haue their iuriſdiction from men, not immediatly from God: Bellarmin. argum. 4.

Anſw. 1. We doe not affirme, that the Biſhops, Paſtors and Miniſters of the Church haue their iuriſdiction, office or calling immediatly from God, as the Apoſtles, Prophets and Euangeliſts had; for ſuch callings were extraordinarie, and are now ceaſed in the Church: but that by right of their conſecration and receiuing of orders, according to the godly cuſtome & praſtiſe of that that Church where they live, mediately by the hands of those, to whom in the name of the whole Church that care is committed: yet by the commandment of God, they are appointed to their severall offices and functions.

2 It followeth not, if they all have their authoritie and power from God, that they should be all of an equall degree: for we see that there are divers degrees in the civill state, there be Emperours, Kings, Dukes, all chiefe in their owne seignories, and all have their calling from God; as S. Paul teacheth, Rom. 13. 7. to some tribute, to some custome, to some feare, to some honor belongeth. Here are divers degrees, yet they are all ordained of God, vers. 1. Yea in the same kingdom, immediately by the hands of the Prince, some are created Earles, some Lords, some Knights, yet are their degrees unequal. In the natural bodie the head immediately conveyeth a sensitive power to the organs of the sight, the hearing, the tast, and of the other senses; yet are they not all of the same excellencie. And yet to make it more plaine; the Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists were immediately called of God, yet were the Apostles in degree before the rest; the Iesuites argument then is not well knit together.

3 One Bishop (saith he) hath one towne, another hath twentie, &c. But this is nothing to the purpose; we speake of the calling of Bishops, and he of their provinces and circuits: the largenes of their iurisdiction, maketh not their degree higher; a Bishop may have a larger diocesse than an Archbishop, as the Bishop of Lincolne hath then the Archbishop of Canturburie: yet, I trow, an Archbishop is before a Bishop. We must distinguish then betwene Episcopatum, or diocessu, the office of a Bishop, and his diocesse; his calling, and his title or dignitie: there may be a Bishop without a diocesse, as a Minister without a charge; though neither of them be fit or convenient: for it is contrarie to the Canon, that any man should be absolutely ordained without a title. Chalced. concil. can. 6. But I speake of that which is practised, not which ought to be. S. Paul saith, he that desireth Episcopatum, the office of a Bishop, &c. there was then Episcopatus, the calling of a Bishop, though as yet no diocesse assigned, no title or dignitie annexed. So then we conclude thus: as touching the titles, dignities, honors belonging to the calling of Bishops, as to be set over this Citie or that, this diocesse or another, they have it by the donation of the Prince: as that good Emperour Frederike telleth Pope Adrian the fourth, Quicquid regaliu papatu vestre habere dignoscitur, largitione principum donatur: whatsoever princely dignitie your papacie hath, it is given by the liberality of princes.

And as for the office and iurisdiction it selfe, it is not derived from Rome, but in every Church the spirituall pastors thereof have as full authoritie from God to ordaine and appoint Bishops, Pastors, Doctors, teachers, necessarie for the government thereof, as the Bishop of Rome hath, if he were a good Bishop in his owne diocesse: therefore though we should graunt the Iesuites conclusion, that the calling of Bishops is from men, which in our meaning we deny not; yet he hath gained nothing: for it followeth not, if from men, then from the Pope, as we have shewed: and better arguments the Iesuite hath none, then we have scene.

The Protestants.

THAT Bishops have not their Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction from Rome, but doe as well enjoy it by right of their consecration, election, institution, in their owne precincts, circuits, provinces, cities, townes; yea, as the Pope doth in his Bishopricke, and by much better right, if they be good Bishops, and lovers of the truth: thus briefly it is proved.

Argum. 1. The Apostles had not their iurisdiction from Peter, but all received it indifferently from Christ: this the Iesuite doth not barely acknowledge, but proueth it by argument, against the iudgement of other Papists, chap. 23. Ergo, neither Bishops are authorized from the Pope, though he were Peters successor: for if he were (to grant it for disputations sake) he is no more to the Bishops of the Church, then Peter was to the Apostles. If he gave not the keyes to the Apostles; neither doth the Pope S. Peters successor, to the Bishops, the Apostles successors: for they may with as great right challenge to be the Apostles successors, as he can to be S. Peters.

Belarmine answereth, there is great difference betwene the succeeding of Peter by the Pope, and the succession of the other Apostles in Bishops: the Pope succeedeth Peter, not as Apostle, but as the ordinarie pastor of the whole Church: the other Apostles were not ordinarie pastors; and therefore the Bishops cannot properly succede them, for the Apostles had iurisdiction over the whole Church, they had power to found Churches, to write Canonically bookes of Scripture, they had the gift of tongues, and of miracles, but Bishops have none of these. Againe, one is said succedere praedecessori, to succede one that goeth before: the Bishops then cannot be the Apostles successors, because they were in the Apostles times.

Answer, to the first part concerning Peters succession: first, let this be remembred, that the Iesuite confesseth, that the Pope doth not succede Peter, ut Apostolo, as an Apostle: then how cometh it aboute, that the Sea of Rome is called Apostolicall, and the Pope challengeth to be called Apostolike, and saith his office is. Apostolatus, a very Apostleship: from whence hath he this, seeing he hath nothing to doe with Peters Apostleship? Bellarmino, I thinke, will here bestrengthen himselfe. Secondly, hee cannot succcede Peter, as ordinarie pastor of the whole Church, forso was hee neuer; and that power which he had ouer the whole Church, as other Apostles had, in the Iesuite himselfe confesseth, was Apostolike, not pastorall: for that commission, Contra ad nationes, Matth. 28. 19. And ye shall be witnesses vnto me, vnto the uttermost parts of the earth, Act. 1. 8. was giuen to all the Apostles, and was therefore Apostolicall: of any other such large and generall commission giuen to Peter alone, we reade not. Wherefore, if the Pope neither succcede Peter in Apostle, which Bellarmino graunteth, nor as generall pastor, as we haue proued: it will be found, that he is not Peters right successor at all, as in deede he is not.

To the second part we answer: first, that the Apostles were not properly ordinarie pastors, we easily graunt; for they had charge of the whole Church, and were not tyed and limited to any one certaine place: yet Bellarmino against himselfe in this place els where confesseth it, that Iames was pater & Episcopus, pastor and Bishop of Ierusalem, lib. 1. de pontifice cap. 26. Yet the argument followeth not, the Apostles calling was extraordinarie, and they had extraordinarie giftes; therefore they could haue no successors: for it is not necessarie that the successor should haue all which his predecessor had: the Apostles succceeded the auncient Prophets, Ioh. 4. 38. You are sent into their labours, yet was their calling diuers: yea the Apostles were in Christs stead, 1. Cor. 5. 20: yet was there more in Christ, then in his Apostles. Secondly, we say then, that as the Apostles had extraordinarie giftes, as to pen Scripture, to worke miracles, and so had an extraordinarie calling; so had they ordinarie giftes, as of teaching, exhorting, admonishing, yet after a more excellent manner: the Bishops then and pastors of the Church, though they succcede them not in their extraordinarie giftes, yet are properly their successors in feeding, teaching, and instructing, which giftes were not so extraordinarie in the Apostles, but that they were to continue vnto their posteritie, as the Lord saith by his Prophet, My spirit that is vpon thee, and my words, which I haue put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy seede, nor of thy seedes seed, from hence forth for ever, Isay. 59. 21.

Thirdly, to *Bellarmino*s last argument we answer: first, that it cannot be shewed, that there were any such Bishops, as he speaketh of in the Apostles time, seeing the names of Episcopus and Presbyter, of Bishop and Elder are confounded in the Apostles writings, as the Iesuite els where confesseth: Again, the successor and predecessor may be both at one time, as Valerius Bishop of Hippo yet liuing, appointed Augustine his successor, and Augustine appointed Eradianus. And if we were not so, that the successor might be assigned in the predecessors life, the Pope were like to haue a colde suite of it: for S. Peter, if there be any credit in those records, Clement. epistol. 1. 6. dayned Clement his successor, while he liued. Clementem hunc Episcopum vobis ordino, cui saluam predicationis & doctrina cathedram trado: I ordaine this Clement to be your Bishop, to whom I leaue my chayre of doctrine; Notwithstanding then, any thing which the Iesuite hath said, or is able to say, the Bishops and Pastors of Christs Church, doe as properly succcede the Apostles, as the Bishop of Rome succceedeth Peter; yea with better right, vnlesse he did embrace S. Peters doctrine.

Argum. 2. The Apostles gaue no power or iurisdiction to the Elders and Pastors, whom they ordained, Act. 20. 28. Take heed to the flocke, ouer the which the holy Ghost hath made you Bishops and ouerscers: and Ephes. 4. 11. He hath giuen some to be Apostles, some Prophets, some Pastors and teachers. So then the pastors and teachers, though ordained by the Apostles, yet had their calling and office from God and not from the Apostles: much lesse now can they receiue their power from any, no not from the Pope: for he is no Apostle, no nor Apostolike man, hauing left the Apostolike faith.

To these places Bellarmino answereth, that the spirit of God did appoint Bishops and pastors, but yet immediatly by the hands of the Apostles: And so God now also constituteth and ordaineth Bishops, but immediatly from the Pope, or his assignes.

Contra: in the giuing of orders two things are to be considered, the externall rite and ceremony outwardly vsed in the admittance of those that are consecrated and set apart for the holy functions, and the office and function it selfe whereto they are ordained. Concerning the externall rite and outward act, it is done and performed by men; such was the imposition of hands vsed by the Apostles: but if we respect the power and efficacy of the office it selfe, it is not conferred by men; but God concurrereth with the Churches externall act, in enabling those men to their spirituall office, whom the Church hath set apart. The Apostles layed on their hands in the ordaining of Bishops or Pastors, but their office they receiued of God: that externall rite was onely an outward testimonie of the Church, that such men were marked and sealed of God, for that office, as 1. Tim. 4. 14. Timothy his gift was giuen by prophesie, that is, by the reuelation of the spirit speaking by the prophets, but with laying on of the hands: this was the outward signe and testimonie of the Church, that the spirit had set such men apart. A liuely example hereof we haue hanc, ad. 1. q. 1. Appear me faith the holy Ghost, Barnabas and Saul to the works, whereunto I have called them. Here they laid their office and every part thereof immediately from God: then it followeth, verſe. they laid on their hands. This is the outward approbation and consent of the Church, which giueth them not their office, but onely sealeth and confirmeth it outwardly vnto them. Solus Paul. 1. Tim. 1. 14. that worthy thing, which was committed vnto thee, keepe through the holy Ghost &c. Hence we reason thus, that whereby men are kept, maintayned and vpheld in their ecclesiasticall office, is the beginner and author thereof: but by the spirit of God are ecclesiasticall officers prescribed in their office and ministration. Ergo. The argument still remaineth sound and good, that if the Apostles gaue no power or iurisdiction to Pastors or Elders, but it was the ordinance of God, much lesse hath the Pope right to doe it. Let vs see what antiquitie saith, Augustine thus writeth, Salua Christi habet auctoritatem, & prapouendi in ecclesia sua gubernatione, & de aeterna iudicandi, de baptis. 2. 3. Onely Christ hath authoritie (saith he) to preferre vs to the gouernement of the Church, and to iudge of our doings: The pastors then of the Church haue the keyes of the spirituall regiment from Christ himselfe, not from the Pope, or any other.

Council. Aquisgranens. cap. 9. ex Isidoro: Apostolis decedentibus successorum Episcopi, qui sunt constituti per totum mundum in sedibus Apostolorum: The Apostles being departed, Bishops succeeded them, and were placed throughout the world in the Apostolike Sees.

Council. Senones. decret. morum. 8. It is affirmed, Apostolorum solos Episcopos successores, & ideo illis solum impositionem manuum reservatam: That Bishops are the onely successors of the Apostles: and therefore to them onely is the imposition of hands reserved. Hereupon we inferre, that whatsoever Bishops haue, they doe receiue it not from the Pope, but by reason of their succession from the Apostles.

We want not here the testimonie of their owne writers: as Franciscus Victoria in Relict. 2. de potestate Ecclesie. quest. 2. Alphonsus de castro lib. 2. cap. 24. These Popish writers are of this iudgement, that both the Apostles, and likewise Bishops haue their iurisdiction immediately from God.

Their owne Canons also for this matter are against them: Anacletus saith, that Bishops succede the Apostles; dist. 22. 2. Urbanus, Apostolorum locum tenens: They are in the place of the Apostles, dist. 68. cap. 6. Innocentius, They are the Apostles Vicars: decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 15. cap. 1. and Clement the 5. saith, They are Christs Legates, Clementin. lib. 5. tit. 32. 1. If Bishops then be the successors, and vicegerents of Christ and his Apostles; then it followeth, that from them, and not from the Pope, they haue their iurisdiction.

This doctrine hath been sealed by the blood of holy Martyrs. Master Philpot saith, by the word of God the Pope hath no more authoritie then the Bishop of London hath; as Peter had no more authoritie, then euery one of the Apostles had, Fox pag. 1811.

THE EIGHT QUESTION, OF THE TEMPORALL IURISDICTION AND POWER OF THE BISHOP OF ROME.

THIS question hath two parts: first, whether the Pope in respect of any spirituall iurisdiction, haue also the chiefe soueraigntie in temporall and ciuill matters; and so to be aboue Kings and Emperors. Secondly, whether the Pope, or any Bishop, may be the chiefe Lord and Prince ouer any Countie, Citie, or Prouince.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE POPE DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY HAUE AUTHORITIE ABOUE KINGS AND PRINCES.

The Papists.

THE Papists of former times were not ashamed to say, that the Pope is the Lord of the whole Church: as Panormitanus in the Councell of Basile, Fox pag. 670. Yea; Pope Innocentius the third said, writing to the Emperor of Constantinople, that as the Moone receiued her light from the Sonne, so the imperiall dignitie did spring from the Pope: and that the Papall dignitie was ten and fortie times greater then the imperiall: yea, Kings and Emperors are more inferior to the Pope then lead is to golde, Gelasius dist. 12. 96. And Clement 5. likewise saith, Nos regis ordinarius iudex: That he was the ordinarie iudge of the King of Sicile: Et temporalia sua à nobis & sub nobis tenet: And he holdeth his temporals of vs and vnder vs, not of the Emperor, Clement. lib. 5. tit. 11. Thus in times past the arrogant Popes did challenge power directly and ordinarilie ouer Kings and Emperors. But our later Papists ashamed of their forefathers arrogancie, in words seeme to abate somewhat of their proud sentences, but in effect say the same thing: For they confesse that the Emperor hath his office and calling of God, and not from the Pope: neither that the Pope directly rectly hath any temporall iurisdiction: but indirectly he may depose Kings and Princes, through the lawes of Emperours, and establish his owne: hee may take vnto himselfe the iudgement of temporall causes, and cite Kings to appeare before him: Yet not directly (saith the Iesuite) as he is ordinarie Iudge over the Bishops and whole Clergie: yet indirectly, as hee is the chiefe spirituall Prince, he may do all this, if hee see it necessarie for the health of mens soules. And so in effect, by their popish indirect meanes, they giue him as great authoritie, as ther hee vsurped or challenged, Bellarmine lib. 3. cap. 6.

31. Error.

Argum. 1. The Ecclesiasticall and ciuill power do make but one bodie and societie, as the spirit and the flesh in man: Now the ecclesiasticall power, which is as the soule and spirit, is the chiefe part, because it is referred to a more principal end, namely the safetie and good of the soule: the other is as the flesh to the spirit, and respecteth but a temporall end, as the outward peace and prosperitie of the common-wealth: Ergo, the spirituall power is chiefe, and may command the other. Bellarmino cap. 7.

Answ. First, it is a very vnic and vnproper similitude, to compare these two regiments to the soule and the bodie: for by this meanes, as the spirit giueth life to the bodie, and euery part thereof, so the ciuill and temporall state should receiue their office and calling from the Ecclesiasticall, which the Iesuite himselfe denieth, and so directly the one should rule the other: for the soule directly I trow, not indirectly moueth the bodie and governeth it. But if we will speake as the Scripture doth, we make all but one bodie: and it is the spirit of Christ, who is the head, that giueth effectuall power to euery part. Ephes. 4. 15. 16.

2. It is false, that the ciuill magistracie concerneth the outward and temporall commoditie only: for vnto Princes also is committed the chiefe care of religion and the worship of God: They are to see true religion aduanced, yea to watch ouer Ecclesiasticall ministers, and to charge them to looke to their offices: the Prince is Gods minister, for the wealth both of the soules and bodies of his subiects: And therefore S. Paul exhorteth to pray for Kings and gouernours, that we may liue (not onely) a peaceable life, but in all godlinesse and honestie, 1. Tim. 2. 2. Ergo, it is part of the Magistrates office, as to procure the peace of the people, so to haue a care of their godly life. Wherefore it is false, as the Iesuite supposeth, that the chiefe end of the ciuill gouernment, is onely outward and temporall: Ergo, his argument is nothing worth.

Argum. 2. Azariah the high Priest drove Vasab the King out of the temple, when he would haue burned incense, and caused him to goe out of the citie and dwell apart, 2. Chron. 26. Iehoiash likewise deposed Ataliah, 3. King. 11. Ergo, the Pope may depose wicked and vngodly Printes, Bellarmino cap. 8.

Answ. First, we deny, that there is now, or ought to be any such high priest in the Church of God, to haue the chiefe authoritie in spirituall matters, as there was in the law: for he was the type and figure of Christ, who is our high Priest, and chiefe Bishop. Secondly, these examples do not excuse the Popes tyrannie, who hath deposed rightfull Kings and Emperours, and better than himselfe: as Pope Zacharie deposed Childericus the French King, and set vp Pipinus: Gregorius the seventh set vp Rodolphus against Henricus the fourth, the Emperour. Pope Paschalis the seconde vp the sonne of the said Henricus against his father. But we will answere more particularly to the examples.

To the first. First, it was not the sole act of Azariah the high Priest, but there were 80. priests that ioyned with him beside, and they all spake to the King: this example therefore maketh nothing for the sole authoritie of the Pope, who saith, that he may depose the Emperour himselfe, without any Councell, Innocent. 4. Secondly, they did not depose Vasab: they onely withstood him according to the law of God, because he vsurped the Priests office: so ought faithfull Bishops and pastors euen to reprove the greatest Magistrates, for the manifest contempt, and open breach of Gods law: neither did they constrain the King to goe forth, before they saw the iudgement of God vpon him: for the text saith, they compelled him to goe forth, because the Lord had smitten him, they saw the leprosie to rise vp in his face, vers. 10. This therefore was the extraordinary iudgement of God, and not of the high Priest. Thirdly, he was not deposed from the kingdom, though he dwelt alone: his sonne did execute the office onely for him, and reigned after him: he being a leper, by the law he was to dwell apart, Leuit. 13. 46. Here was nothing done (we see) by the sole authoritie of the high Priest, but they had the manifest and direct law of God, vnto which their Kings also were subiect.

To the second example, we answere. First, Ataliah was a tyrant and an vsurper, and ought not to raigne, and therefore was iustly deposed. Secondly, Iehoiada did it not by his owne power, but assembled the Fathers and Princes of the land, 2. Chron. 23. 2. He shewed them the young King, and they made a covenant with him. Iehoiada onely gaue directions (the King being now knowne vnto them) vnto the Captaines and gouernours. Thirdly, they had the flat word of God for that action, The kings sonne must raigne, as the Lord hath said, concerning the sonnes of Dauid.

and, vers. 3. So when the Pope hath any such warrant from God, he may doe as Iehoiada did.

Argum. 3. I must not here forget the goodly arguments vsed by Boniface 8. in his decretall, for the superiority of Popes aboue Kings and Emperours: Extran. commun. lib. 1. tit. 8. First, Christ said to Peter, Pasce oues meas, Feede my sheepe: but the Emperour is one of his sheepe: Ergo, he is committed to Peter.

Ans. First, here is a manifest begging of the thing in question: for whatsoever was said to Peter, belongeth not to the Pope. Secondly, here is a new exposition of these words, Feede my flocke, that is, the Pope may depose Emperours, and excommunicate them, tread vpon their neckes, exempt their subiects from their fealtie, and all by vertue of these words. Thirdly, as Christ said to Peter, Feede my sheepe: so Peter saith to all pastors, Feede the flocke of Christ, 1. Pet. 5. Then by the same reason all pastors should haue superiority to Kings.

2 The Apostles said to Christ, behold two swords, it is enough saith Christ, not too much: Ergo, there are two swords in the Church, the temporall and spirituall, Bonif. ibid.

Ans. First, who seeth not how absurdly that place is abused, whereas both Christ answered, and the Apostles made the question of two materiall swords, which were found in the companie. Secondly, S. Peter was reproofed for handling the sword: Ergo, wee may better conclude, that the Pope (his supposed successor) hath nothing to doe with the sword. Thirdly, if these two swords prouee any thing, they make no more for the Church of Rome, then for any other Church.

3 The Apostle saith, Rom. 13. 1. The powers that be, are, ordinata, ordained of God: but there can bee no order, vnlesse one sword were vnder another: the temporall vnder the spirituall: Bonif. ibid.

Ans. First, he cauilth about the word, Ordained: for the Apostle speaketh not of any order, that the powers haue one vnder another, but of the ordinance which they haue from God. Secondly, but if they will enforce this exposition, it maketh for the superiority of the Ciuill Magistrate, that beareth the temporall sword, as the Apostle speaketh plainly, vers. 4.

4 The Apostle saith, The spirituall man indgeth all things, 1. Cor. 2. 15. Ergo, the Pope iudgeth the Emperour, Bonif. ibid.

Ans. First, the Papists themselues are ashamed of this grosse exposition: for the Rhemists in their Annotations dare not so expound the spirituall man: but he is the spirituall man, that is led by the spirit of God, which the Pope is not led by: and therefore is not spirituall according to the Apostles meaning. Secondly, Kings and Emperours, that are faithfull, and beleeu in Christ, are as well spirituall men in the Apostles sense, as beleeuing Bishops. These and such like arguments not worth rehearsing, much lesse confutation, their stout champion Boniface vseth in that place.

The Protestants.

THat the Pope, or any other person ecclesiasticall, hath no manner of temporall iurisdiction either directly or indirectly ouer Kings, Princes, Emperours, but ought of right to be subiect to them and their lawes: it is thus proued.

Argum. 1. By the same reason whereby the Iesuite proueth, that the Pope directly hath no temporall iurisdiction, we will conclude, that neither indirectly can he haue any, and so none at all. Christ, while he liued vpon earth, tooke vpon him no temporall iurisdiction, either directly or indirectly: he refused to be a King, Ioh. 6. Nay he would not be a Iudge in ciuill matters, as in deuiding the inheritance, being thereto required, Luk. 12. 13. He paid poll money, Math. 17. he did submit himselfe to the iudgement of Pilate an heathen Iudge. Therefore seeing Christ vsed no such temporall iurisdiction, neither can any Minister of Christ: For the seruant is not aboue the master; onely Antichrist dare presume beyond the example of Christ.

This argument drawne from our Sauour Christ his example, is notably vrged by that good Emperour, Fredericke, writing thus to that proud Pope Adrian the 4. Cum ille noster & vester institutor nihil ab homine rege accipiens, tamen pro se & Petro censum Casari persoluit, exemplum vobis dedit, vt vniuersi faciatis: Seeing Christ, both our founder and yours, did take nothing of the King, but paid tribute to Cesar for himselfe and Peter, he gaue you an example to doe the like.

Barlaamites best answere in this place is, that Christ in refusing to deuide the inheritance, signified, Ne pontifices ministerij & vilibus officijs occupentur: That Prelates ought not to occupie themselves in base and inferiour offices.

Contra. First, I pray you is it so base a place to bee Iudge of inheritance? I appeale to Westminster Hall, what subiect can haue a more honourable place, then to bee called to the seate of iudgement? Or if this were somewhat base, Christ also refused to bee a King, I trow the Iesuite thinketh that to bee no vile or beggerly calling. Secondly, more then this, Christ did not onely refuse these ciuill honours, but paid tribute, whereby he acknowledged his obedience, as man, to the Ciuill state. We may iudge the weakness of their cause, by the feeblenes of their answeres.

Argum. 2. The fathers of Basil doe vrge that place of S. Peter, 1. Epist. 5. 2. against Panormitane, who had vnaduisedly said, that the Pope was Lord of the Church. But the Apostle saith, Feede the flocke flocke of Christ; not by constraint, but willingly; not as lords over the Lords inheritance, vers. 3. But the Pope contrariwise vseth all forcible, constraining, and tyrannicall meanes, killing, slaying, imprisoning, deposing those that will not obey him: who calleth himselfe chiefe Lord and Magistrate of the whole world: Surely this is Antichrist, and not the Minister of Christ, or successor of Saint Peter, whose counsell he refuseth to follow and obey.

Argum. 3. Let but the stories of former times be searched: there we shall finde how wickedly and insolently the Popes behaued themselves towards Kings and Emperours: Pope Alexander caused Henry the second to doe penance for Becketts death, and to bee disploed of the Monkes. Innocent the third caused King John to kisse the feete of the Bishop of Canturburie his owne subiect. Alexander the third did tread vpon Emperour Fredericke his necke. Pope Innocent spoyled Fredericke the second of his Empire, caused him to bee poysoned, and his sonne Conradus to be beheaded: and these Emperours were deposed by the Popes in order, Henricus 4. Henricus 5. Frederick 1. Philippus Otto the 4. Frederick 2. and Conradus his sonne.

It is not good, they say, to put a sword into a mad mans hand: and thinke you not, that these Popes vsed the temporall sword very discretely, which they thus vsurped, making fooles and slaues of Emperours, as Pope Adrian did, that rebuked Frederick the first, because he held his stirrup on the wrong side, and did excommunicate him, for setting his name before the Popes in writing? The very insolent, diuellish, and Antichristian practise of this their temporall power, sheweth from what originall it cometh, euen from the father of pride.

Lastly, Augustine saith, writing vpon those words, Rom. 13. Let every soule be subiect to the higher powers: Si quis putat, quia Christianus est, non sibi esse vestigal reddendum aut tributum, aut non esse exhibendum honorem debitum eis, qui hac curant potestatibus; in magno errore est: If any man thinke, because he is a Christian, that he is not bound to pay tribute and taxe, and yeeld due honour to the temporall powers (for of such Augustine speaketh) he is in a great error. If all then are subiect to the temporall Magistrate that are Christians, then all Bishops and Ecclesiasticall persons, yea the Pope himselfe, if he be a Christian: Ergo, the Emperour is not subiect to him.

Epistol. Leodienf. contra Paschal. 2. Omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita, qui hoc omni anima precipit, quem a subiectione terrena potestatis excepit? Let every soule (saith the Apostle) be subiect to the higher powers: he that inioyneth this to every soule, whom doth he exempt from the subiection of the earthly power? Ergo, the Pope also is subiect.

Agabo Bishop of Rome writeth thus to Constantinus the Emperour: Secundum piissimam imperii mansuetudinis vestra, pro obedientia, quam debemus, dirigimus presentes consanguineos nostros: As your clemencie hath most godly commaunded vs, according to the obedience which we owe, wee haue sent these our fellowe seruants. And againe, Omnem nos exigui ecclesiarum presule, vestri Christiani imperij famuli: We all the poore prelates of Churches, seruants of your most Christian Empire. Here the Pope himselfe doth confesse himselfe to be the Emperours seruant, and to owe him homage: what more euident testimonie can we haue?

Further, we haue testimonie of their owne law: dist. 8. cap. 1. Per inra regum, &c. Temporall possessions are enioyed by the lawes of Princes: Ergo, the Pope holdeth his temporals of Kings, not they their kingdomes of him. Distinct. 10. cap. 9. Leo 4. thus writeth to Lotharius the Emperour, Preceptis vestris imperialibus, &c. We promise and professe for euer to keepe and obserue your imperiall precepts, &c. And if any man tell you otherwise, scilicet eum pro certo mendacem, hold him for a lyer.

Likewise Gelasius ibid. 11. Quis autem leges principum, &c. Who will say that the lawes of princes ought to be contemned? &c.

Distinct. 97. Bonifac. 1. thus writeth to Honorius the Emperour: Augeretur pluribus, &c. The Mother Church would bee much grieved, if she were not secure and assured of your helpe in all her causes, and had not preuailed in suppressing of Idols, correcting of Heretikes by your faithfulness, &c. This Boniface writing with a better spirit, then Boniface 8. whose goodly arguments wee saw before, calleth for assistance of the Emperour, euen for the redresse of Ecclesiasticall matters. Thus wee see, that of ancient times Popes did not commaund, but were commaunded rather of Emperours; that they did not prescribe lawes to them, but rather yeelded obedience to imperiall lawes. And a later Extrauagant decreeth, Ut non sint regnata amplius ecclesia Romana subiecta, quam antea, &c. That Kings (should be no otherwise subiect to the Church of Rome, then they haue been in times past: Clemens 5. Extrauag. commun. lib. 5. tit. 7. cap. 2. Wherefore the Pope doth contrary to his owne law, in challenging such superiortie ouer the Emperour, which of ancient time hath not been due.

Let Bishop Cranmer holy Martyr put to his scale: By the Scripture the King is chiefe, and no forraigne person in his owne realme about him: there is no subiect but to a King: I am a subiect, I owe my fidelitie to the Crowne; the Pope is contrarie to the Crowne; I cannot obey both, &c. Fox pag. 1874.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, WHETHER the Pope haue power to excommunicate Em- perours and Kings, &c.

The Papists.

WE neede not seeke farre to know their opinion for this matter, for the continuall practise of Popes and popish Bishops, in taking vpon them most arrogantly to excommunicate Emperours and Kings, doth evidently shew what their iudgement is. Gregorie 3. did excommunicate Leo Isaurus Emperour of Constantinople, because he pulled downe Images: so did his predecessor Gregorie 2. before him. Gregorie 7. did thunder out his mercilesse curses against Henricus 4. Emperour. Adrian 4. and after him Alexander 3. most wicked and insolent Popes, did persecute the good Emperour Frederick, with their cruell excommunications. Innocent 3. did excommunicate King Iohn, and interdict the whole Realme of England. And according to the Antichristian practises of their predecessors, the Popes that haue been of late, haue breathed out, as a vaine blast and bladder crack, their vniust excommunications against our renowned Soueraigne, and most blessed of God, Queene Elizabeth.

Yea not onely the Popes haue thus farre presumed, but their inferiour Bishops haue malepartly pricked forth, by their excommunications, to buffet Princes, and pull them by the eares: As Odo Archbishop of Canturburie did suspend Edwine the King from the Church, and Dunstan afterward did inioyne King Edgar feuen yeeres penance, For pag. 156. So the Bishops threatened to excommunicate King Henric the 3. vnlesse he would expell the straungers out of the land, For pag. 280. Let vs see how these iolly stirring Prelates can iustifie their doings.

Argum. 1. Azariab is brought forth for an example, who being chiefe Priest, when King Vzziah offered to burne incense in the temple vpon the Altar, constrained him hastily to depart, 2. Chron. 26. 20. The like power why may not the Pope Bishops haue now to excommunicate Kings?

Ans. First, it was not Azariab his act onely, whatsoeuer was done at this time, but there were 80. Priests ioyned with him, sufficient to make a lawfull Synode or Councell. Secondly, their intent was not by violence to thrust Vzziah out of the temple, but onely to admonish him, and reprove him for his presumption, ver. 18. they said vnto him, it pertaineth not to thee Vzziah to burne incense, &c. And this they might lawfully doe, as Iohn Baptist rebuked Herod for his incest: And as it is the part of all faithfull Bishops, not to spare, in dutie and reuerence, to tell Kings and Princes their faults: so did Ambrose deale with Valentinian the Emperour, Theodoret. lib. 3. cap. 11. Britannio a Scythian Bishop with the Emperour Valens who was an Arrian, Theodoret. lib. 4. cap. 35. Isaacus Monachus also thus said to y same Emperour going in warfare against the Barbarians, Quo proficere, bello suscepto aduersus Deum? Whither goest thou, seeing thou hast waged battell with God? Theodoret. 4. 34. He said also further to him, Redde Ecclesiis orthodoxis: Restore the Churches which thou hast taken from them of the right faith. The Emperour thereupon bid him be apprehended, dealing with him, as Ahab plaied with Micaiab the Prophet: but he answered, Non es reversurus, nisi ecclesias reddideris: Thou shalt not returne, vnlesse thou doe restore them: And so indeede it came to passe. This zeale and boldnes in good Bishops is not to be disliked, but much to be commended, and wished in the Bishops of our time.

3. Azariab constraineth not Vzziah to depart, before the leprosie appeared in his face, then was he thrust out, for they had the expresse word of God so to do, Numb. 5. 2. So if the Pope had the expresse commaundement of God to excommunicate Kinges, and if it might appeare that they are first excommunicate of God, as the Lord set a marke of leprosie in Vzziah: it might be as lawfull for him so to do, as it was then for Azariab: but such commaundement we are sure the Pope hath none, nor yet is he so acquainted with Gods secrets, as to know who are reiected before him.

Argum. 2. S. Ambrose example is much vrged in this case, who inioyned Theodosius the Emperour penance, for a certaine murder and slaughter of the people made at his commandement, and would not admit him to receiue the Lords Supper, saying thus vnto him, Isaia ubi hic stillant in ista cadis cruore manus extendas, et sanctissimi Domini corpus prebendes? Dost thou stretch out these thy bloody hands, to apprehend the most holy body of our Lord? Theodoret. lib. 3. 17.

Ans. 1. Ambrose, in not admitting the Emperour without repentance of that bloody act to the Lords Supper, and in refusing himselfe to minister to him in that case, did not amisse if he had stayed there, hauing so farre the word of GOD. Ierem. 15. 19. Separate mee the precious from the vile: and 1. Timoch. 5. 22. Be not partaker of other mens sinnes. 2. But in that he tooke vpon him by his sole authoritie to censure the Emperour, and to inioyne him penance, he somewhat exceeded his limits: and yet, though this act might proceed (in Ambrose so holy a Bishop) from an extraordinary ordinary spirit, which I denie not; yet the Emperour is rather to be commended for his humilitie, in submitting himselfe to his order, (for it is written of him, that Lachrymas effudit coram Ecclesia, & tempus penitentiae praescriptum impleuit: He shed teares before the Church, and fulfilled the time set for his penance. Ruffin. lib. 2. cap. 33.) Such also was Theodosius modestie, that at another time being excommunicate, à leni homuncione, of a light cock-braine fellow, because he graunted him not that thing, which he requested, he would not enter into the Church, before he had bin of the same partie absolved; Theodoret. lib. 5. cap. 37. Theodosius lowlinesse therefore, and submission to Ambrose censure, doth not proue the lawfulness thereof, no more then his modestie here doth allow the insolent fact of a saucie malapert priest. 3. Though we admit Ambrose aft to be lawfull, yet doth it not authorise the Popes vniust proceedings: for that censure was laid vpon the Emperour vpon iust cause, a haynous murther committed; but the Pope doth excommunicate Kings for well doing, as Gregorie the 3. did to Leo the Emperour, for pulling downe of images; and for the most part of stomacke, for Gregory the 7. had no other cause against Henry the 4. nor Alexander the 3. against Fredericke. 4. If Ambrose example proue any thing, it doth authorise other Bishops as well as him of Rome, to excommunicate Emperours of themselves.

The Protestants.

Although wee do not altogether exempt Princes from Ecclesiasticall censures, for they are, though chiefe and principall, yet parts and members of the Church: yet we thinke, that against all other persons, beside the supreme and soueraigne Magistrate, though of neuer so high place, the censures of the Church may more safely and with better right be extended, and applied: as B. Grosthead that good Bishop of Lincolne, hauing excommunicated a priest for incontinencie, because after 40. dayes the Sheriffe refused to apprehend him, as it was his dutie, excommunicated him likewise, Fox. p. 285. But as concerning excommunicating of Kings and Princes, we thinke that neither the Pope, nor any Bishop in the world by their sole authoritie haue power to do it.

Argum. 1. Paulus orauit vult pro regibus malis. 1. Timoth. 2. S. Paul would haue vs pray for euill kings. This is our onely remedie that we haue against such: Nec talis à nobis repellendus est armis contra eum sumptis, sed precibus ad Deum sumptis: Neither is such an one to be restrained by weapons taken vp against him, but prayers made vnto God for him: Epistol. Leodiens. cont. Paschal. 1. As Ambrose said well, if he could there haue kept him, Arma nostra preces & lachryma: Our weapons are onely teares and prayers. Against the soueraigne power no violent meane is to be vsed: Ergo, not excommunication.

Argum. 2. The wise man saith, Prou. 26. 2. Maledictio immerita non aduentura est: A curse carelessse or vnderferued shall not come. Malach. 2. Maledictionibus vestris benedicam: I will blesse thee you curse. And their owne law saith, Neminem ligare debet sententia iniusta: An vniust sentence bindeth not: Et excommunicatus non potest excommunicare: An excommunicate person cannot excommunicate. Therefore we feare not the Popes curse or excommunication, because it is vniust: and he excommunicateth vs, as the Pharises did the Apostles, because wee speake in the name of Christ: and he himselfe standeth as an excommunicate person before God, being an Apostata and slidebacke from the trueth.

Argum. 3. Concil. Toletan. 4. cau. 74. It was decreed, that the Kings of that countrie which should exercise crueltie against the people, Anathematizati sententia condemnantur: Should be anathematized, or held accursed. Concil. Toletan. 6. cau. 3. If the King should violate his faith which he gaue, nor to suffer the Iewes to infringe the Catholike faith, Sit anathema in conspectu Dei: Let him bee accursed in the sight of God. These decrees of anathematizing Kings were not made by any one or two, but in the first were assembled all the Bishops of the prouinces of Hispania, and Gallia, the King Sisenandus also himselfe was present, with the chiefe of his Nobles and gaue consent: In the second there were assembled 52. Bishops, the King Chintillanus and his Nobles. Hereby then may appeare what was the practise of those times, that nothing should bee attempted by any singular authoritie against the highest powers, but by consent of all the states, and in the generall Session of Parliament, as it were.

Master Lambert holy Martyr, thus also giueth his opinion of this matter: The Pope ought not to denounce excommunications of his owne proper head and affection onely, but with the consent of other gathered with him in Christs name: forso vnto Saint Paul when hee did excommunicate the man of Corinth, &c. And the same forme declareth the Gospell, Matth. 18. Die Ecclesia, Tell it to the Church or congregation: so that such excommunication ought to be done, as we thinke, by the congregation assembled together with their Pastors, whose aduise they ought principally to esteeme and follow, if it be vertuous and godly: Fox. pag. 1113. respons. ad articul. 24. Hence we conclude, that neither Pope nor any Bishop by their sole authoritie can excommunicate Princes.

qui residerit, patienter iument, quod aut minime aut difficile possint reges excommunicari: admodum quidem possunt, in eorum iurisdictione, in discretis viris: quia quia Christus in servitorem regum vice sua constituit, dammandos & salvandos suo iudicio relinquit: If any man will take paines to looke over the old and new Testament, and the acts thereof, shall readily finde, that Kings either hardly or not at all ought to be excommunicate: they may be admonished, rebuked, aduised discretely, and wisely, and not else: for those whom Christ the King of Kings hath set in his stead in the earth, to bee saved or damned, he hath reserved it for his owne iudgement. And these, which did thus write, were of the popish Church, though herein they miliked the practise of the Popes. And one of their late writers approueth the foresaid epistle, and alleageth out of the same, how that Gregorie 7. called Hildebrand, was the first, contrarie to all antiquitie, that did, sacerdotalem lanceam contra Imperatoris diadema levare, lift vp the spirituall launce against the Crowne of the Emperour: Esperenc. 1. Timoth. pag. 275. A. The same author hath these words, Magistratus colla non bello, patientia, non violentia, patiendo non agendo resistendum est: The Magistrate must bee resisted, not by stroke, but yeelding the necke; by patience, not violence; by suffering, not practising: Ibid. pag. 276. f. Whereby he insinuateth, that nothing ought to be attempted against Princes, no not by excommunicating of them, for that were to practise, not to be patient.

I thinke also, their owne Extrauagant condemneth the cruell practise of popish Prelates in enterding of Kings and their kingdomes, as Bonifacio 8. thus decreed: Extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 10. cap. 2. Provide attendentes. &c. Wee considering, that many are too forward in denouncing of interdictions, whereupon it cometh to passe, that the Ecclesiasticall Sacraments are not administered, the seruice of God suspended, &c. Wee doe provide by this edict, that no province, citie, castle, territorie, goe vnder the interdict, for any quantitie or summe of money, by the Lord thereof vnpaid, &c. Wee haue then their owne testimonie against them.

THE SECOND PART OF THE QUESTION,

concerning S. Peters patrimonie, whether the Pope may be a temporall Prince.

They say that it is not against the word of God, that the Pope should be both a temporall and Ecclesiasticall Prince; and that both the swords of spirituall and ecclesiasticall iurisdiction doe belong vnto him: and that he is the right heire of S. Peters patrimonie to him belongeth as chiefe Lord the Imperiall citie of Rome; the pallace of Laterane, Capua also and Apulia archies: 1. Error. Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 9. Fox. pag. 93.

Moses (saith the Iesuite) was both Priest and Prince: so was Heb. 1. Sam. 4. He iudged Israel fortie yeeres: so were also the Macchabees, Iudas, Ionathan, Simon: yea Melchisedech long before Moses, was Priest and King: Ergo, the Pope is lawfully both chiefe Bishop, and chiefe Prince also, and Lord of that which he now possesseth, Bellarmin. cap. 9. Auf. Concerning Melchisedech; who knoweth not, that he being King and Priest, was a liuely figure of our Sauour Christs spirituall kingdome and priesthood: Heb. 7. And as yet the offices of the spirituall and temporall government were not distinguished: for all the Patriarches, Abraham, Isaac, Isaac; and the rest were sacrificers, therefore wee cannot borrow any examples from them for this matter.

Moses also did offer sacrifice to God, and was chiefe iudge both in spirituall and temporall affaires vnto the people, vntill such time, as when by Gods commaundement, Aaron was chosen to the priesthood, vnto whom the charge of sacrifices and vnto his sonnes was committed: so Moses remained still prince of the people, whom Iosua succeeded, and Aaron was inuested to the Priesthood, and so the offices were distinct. This example therefore of Moses is extraordinarye, and proueth not.

Concerning the time when Ely iudged Israel, which was in the daies of the Iudges, we must vnderstand, that the government of Israel was very dissolute, and men were left to themselves to doe almost what themselves listed: as Iudg. 17. we reade that Micah set vp an Idoll in his house, and the reason is rendered, there was no King in Israel, but every man did that which seemed good in his owne eyes. Likewise the tribe of Dan offered violence to Micah, and robbed him, Iudg. 18. For there was no King in Israel, vers. 1. The Leuites wife was most shamefully abused by the Gibeonites: for there was no King; chap. 19. 1. The men of Beniamin tooke them wiues by force: for they had no King, chap. 21. 25. So you see that both religion was corrupted, and the manners of the people grew to be outrageous; and all because there was no perfect distinct government, there was no King in Israel.

In Ely his time, the word of God was precious, 1. Sam. 3. 1. Great was the ignorance of the whole land: the licentiousnesse also of his sonnes was a great offence to all Israel, and brought a great decay of godlines with it, 1. Sam. 2. 17. 23. Yea they caused the people through their euill example to sinne, vers. 24. Wherefore Ely his house was iudged of God for his remissnes in gouernment, in not correcting his sonnes, chap. 3. 13. And he that cannot rule his owne house, how should he care for the Church, 1. Tim. 3. 5. It cannot now be proued by the example of Ely, that the ciuill gouernment was annexed to the priesthood by the Lords appoyntment: but it is rather to be ascribed to the corruption of those times: for hauing no King nor Captaine ouer them, they were driuen of necessitie to come to the high Priest, vnto whom the iudgement of many matters was committed by the law of God, Deut. 17. 8. Leuit. 13. 2. But the priesthood, and the ciuill Magistracie were two distinct things alwayes from the time of the law established.

It is then no good argument, which is drawne from the practise and example of those corrupt times: And yet we say not, that these offices were so distinct, but that the Lord might raise vp some extraordinary Prophet, as he did Samuel, who to restore iustice and religion decayed, might for a time both iudge the people and offer sacrifice, as we see he did.

As for the examples of the Macchabees, they moue vs not, you must bring better scripture for your purpose: y<sup>e</sup> authority of those bookes bind vs not: and againe we see they did contrary to the law, in taking vpon them both offices: for the priesthood was annexed to the posteritie of Aaron for euer, Num. 3. 10. and the scepter was not to depart from Isaiah till Christ came, Gen. 49. 10. As the Lord also had promised to David, that the kingdom should remaine in his seede, 2. Chro. 22. 3.

Lastly, Gelasius that famous Bishop of Rome shall answer the Iesuities argument, whose authoritie I trust he will not deny. Thus he writeth, Tom. Anathematiz. Ante aduentum Christi quidam figuratim adhuc in carnalibus altibus constituti, &c. Before the comming of Christ, some figuratiuely in carnall and earthly actes were both Kings and Priests: such an one was Milchisadech: which the diuell also imitated in his members, so that the Pagane Emperors would also be called chiefe priests: But after that Christ was come, both the true King and Priest, neither was the Emperour any more called by the Priests name, neither did the Priest challenge the kingly state. So Christ hath distinguished both offices by their proper actes, and dignities, that both Christian Emperors, as touching eternall life should neede the helpe of priests, and they in temporall things should vse the benefite of Imperiall decrees.

Thus then according to this fathers sentence, it followeth not, that because before Christs comming, both powers were vnited in some figuratiuely, therefore it should be so now: he saith, that since Christs comming, this confusion of the priestly and Kingly office, is in Sathans members onely to be found: an hard sentence against the Bishop of Rome, by a former Bishop of Rome, which maketh him challenging the vse of both swordes, no better then a limme of the diuell.

Argum. 2. Constantine the Great gaue vnto the Pope the chiefe gouernment of the Citie of Rome, and other Lordships in Italie, yea the foueraigntie ouer the West parts: why then is it not lawfull for him to enioy his gift? Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 9.

Ans. First, the donation of Constantine seemeth to be forged: for if Constantine resigned to Siluester the politicall dominion of the West parts, how could he then haue distributed his Empire amongst his sonnes, as the West part to one, the East to the second, the middle part to the third? Againe, the Donation saith, that Constantine was baptised at Rome by Siluester before the battaile against Maximinus, and that then the patrimonie was giuen: but it is certaine by stories that he was baptised at Nicomedia, by Eusebius Bishop there, in the 31. yeere of his raigne: wherefore it seemeth to be a forged and deuised thing. plur. apud. Fox. pag. 105.

Fox. protesta.
ad Angl.

2. Aeneas Silvius saith, that Matthias, a noble Dutches in Italie, gaue those lands to the Pope, which are called S. Peters patrimonie: how then can it be true, that they were giuen by Constantine? Thirdly, the popish doctors and Canonists confesse, that Constantines grant is not so much to be counted a donation, as a restitution of that which tyrannously was taken from him: but he hath his power spirituall and temporall immediatly from Christ. You see then that they themselves make no great reckoning of Constantines donation. Antoni. summa, maior. 3. part.

Ambrosius Bishop of Rome, long after Constantines time the Great, thus writeth to Constantine another Emperour of that name, Hanc Romanam urbem seruilem vestri Christianissimi imperij: This Roman citie seruile or subiect to your most Christian Empire, &c. Ergo, it was not exempted from subiection to the Empire, as Constantine forged donation granteth.

Yet if Constantine that good Emperour had bin so minded, to haue bestowed the imperiall dignitie vpon the Bishop of Rome; there remaineth a great questio, whether he ought to haue accepted of it or not; nay he should haue refused it: for the temporall sword belongeth not to spirituall gouernors: At the least it had been a charitable part, not to haue suffered the Emperour to disinherit his owne sonnes, for to enrich the See of Rome; as Augustine very well saith, Qui vult, exheredare filio, ecclesiam heredem facere, querat alterum, qui suscipiat, non Augustinum, immo Deo propitio nullum inueniat. He that would make the Church his heire, and defeat his own children, let him seeke some bodie else, to accept of his gift: surely Augustine will not, nor I trust any honest man beside.

The Protestants.

Firstly, we willingly grant, that the Church may enjoy those temporall possessions, which haue been of old granted vnto it for the better maintenance thereof, so they be not abused to riot and excess; as the Leuites beside their tithes, had their cities and fieldes. Numb. 35. Secondly, the iudgement of Ecclesiasticall matters doth of right appertaine to the Church, as Amariah the Priest was the chiefe in all matters of the Lord, 2. Chron. 19. 11. Thirdly, we doe not vterly exclude spirituall persons from temporall causes: but as the ciuill Magistrate hath his interest in ordaining of Ecclesiasticall lawes, so spirituall persons ought not to be strangers from the ciuill state; being meete men for their knowledge and conscience to be consulted withall, and conferred with; and to be ioyned in Councell with the Magistrate in difficult matters: as we reade, Deut. 17. 8. How the high Priest, and chiefe iudge, did ioyne in mutuall helpe and assistance. But that any spirituall person may be a temporall prince, and haue the chiefe gouernment of both states, and handle both swordes, we say it is contrarie to the word of God: for in these three pointes standeth chiefly the office of the prince, In making and ordaining ciuill lawes, in hauing power of life and death, in proclaiming of warre, and waging of battaile: with none of these ought Ecclesiasticall persons to deale, as we will now shew in order.

Argum. 1. Concerning the making of ciuill lawes and statutes, though the Ecclesiasticall bodie, according to the ancient custome of this land, haue their suffrage and voyce, and doe giue consent: yet the chiefe stroke, in allowing, confirming, and enacting of such lawes is in the prince, and cannot agree or be matched with any spirituall office.

S. Paul saith, Who is sufficient for these things? that is, for the worke of the Ministerie, 2. Cor. 2. 16. If therefore spirituall persons suffice not to execute to the full, their spirituall charge, though they should bend all their studie and care that way, much more insufficient shall they be, if they be entangled in temporall affayres, for the well guiding and ordering whereof a whole man likewise is scarce sufficient.

Againe (saith he) No man that warreth, entangleth himselfe with the affaires of this life, 2. Tim. 2. 4. By affaires secular here are not only vnderstoode (as the Iesuite imagineth) merchandise, traffick, buying, selling, and such like, but the care and charge also of ciuill gouernment, of making lawes and orders for the ciuill state, which must needs be a great let to the spirituall busines, and require greater studie and labor, then the other baser workes which are named. To this Augustine agreeth: Quo iure (saith he) defendit villas? Unde quisque possidet quod habet? Iure humano, iure imperatorum: quare? quia ipsa iura humana per imperatores & reges seculi Deus distribuit generi humano, traict. in Iohann. 6. By what law doest thou defend thy possessions? by the law of man, the law of the Emperors: for these humane lawes, by Gods ordinance are giuen vnto men by the Emperors and Kings of the world. See then, ciuill lawes, and humane constitutions are giuen and made, not by the Pope, Priest, or any other Prelate, but onely by Kings and Princes, and the ciuill magistrates.

So also saith the Ciuill law, Cod lib. 1 tit. 20. leg. 2. Imperatori soli leges condere concessum est: It is onely lawfull for the Emperour to make lawes: Iustinian. Likewise their owne Canons affirme the same, decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 17. cap. 7. Alexand. 3. ad Regem pertinere non ad Ecclesiam de talibus possessionibus indicare: It belongeth to the King not to the Church to iudge of such possessions.

Argum. 2. It were a monstrous and an vnnatural thing, that any Ecclesiasticall gouernour, should haue power of life and death: for hee hath no better right to the ciuill sword, then the Prince to the Ecclesiasticall sword; and if it be not lawfull for the ciuill Magistrate to excommunicate, which is as the spirituall sword, and the greatest censure of the Church; no more is it to be suffered, that by the authoritie or commaundement of any Ecclesiasticall person, any man should be put to death.

The high Priest was not to deale with matters of blood, which touched the life: but the offenders were brought to the gates of the Citie; where the Magistrates sate, Deut. 17. 5. Not to the Temple, where the Priest ministred. Nay, wee see, that in the most corrupt times of the Iewish Common-wealth, namely, when they put our blessed Sauour to death, the priests did not challenge any such power: It is not lawfull (say they) for vs, to put any to death, Ioh. 18. 31. But that power was in the temporall Magistrate; as Pilate said to Christ: Knowest thou not, that I haue power to crucifie thee, and power to loose thee? Ioh. 19. 10. Ergo, the Pope cannot be a temporall Prince, to haue power of life and death. And it is contrary to your owne Canons: decret. p. 2. caus. 23. qu. 8. c. 20. Gregor. Quia Deum timeo, in mortem cuiuslibet hominis me miscere formido: because I feare God, I dare not enternedle with the death of any. Likewise caus. 33. q. 2. c. 6. Nicolans, Ecclesia gladium non habet, nisi spirituale; non occidit, sed viuificat: The Church hath no sword but the spiritual; it killeth not, but giueth life. Now, whereas the examples of Phineas, that killed the adulterer and adulteresse; and of Samuel, that hewed Agag in pieces with his owne handes, might be vregd; their owne glosse thus answereth: Miracula veteris Testamenti sunt admiranda: The mi-rales of the old Testament are worthie rather of admiration, then fit for our imitation: for many things were permitted then, which are prohibited now. And a little before: Nathan, when he reproved the King, did execute his owne office, he did not vsurpe the Kings office, he did admonish him to repent, he did not giue sentence of death against him, as an adulterer, &c. Caus. 3. qu. 7. cap. 41. gloss.

But it will here be answered, as Bonifacius 8. hath decreed, Sext. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 24. c. 3. That a Cleargie man hauing temporall iurisdiction, may without feare of irregularitie, commit the iudgement of death to his Bailiffe and Minister &c. To the which reple, that this notwithstanding is contrary to the ancient Canons alledged before, that a Cleargie man ought not to meddle, or intermingle himselfe with matters of blood: but now he must meddle, giuing authoritie to others to do it. For the authoritie of him that commaundeth, is greater, then of the Minister.

Argum. 1. If the Pope be a temporall Prince, then he may wage battell, which although the Iesuite dare not plainely affirme, yet it followeth necessarily vpon his assertion: for it is lawfull for any temporall Prince to make warre: And it hath been the common practise of Popes and popish Prelates so to do.

Fox.p.446.

There were great and bitter battailes fought betweene Vrbano the sixth, and the Antipope Clement, in the which on the one side there were 5000. slaine. Fox. pag. 434. Henry Spenser a lustie yong blood, Bishop of Norwich, was the Popes Captaine generall in France: where hee sacked the towne of Grauenidge, and put man, woman, and child to the sword.

Fox.p.798.

So Pope Inulin cast his keyes into the Riuer Tybris, and tooke himselfe to his sword: waged many battels, and at the last was encountred withall by Louis the French King, vpon Easter day: where there was of his armie slaine, to the number of 16000. But these warlike affaires of the Pope misliked the Papists themselves: for he was therefore condemned in the Councell of Torone in France, Anno. 1510. We may see how well these furious Popes do follow the rule of Christ, who commanded Peter to put vp his sword into his sheath: If it were not lawfull for Peter to strike with the sword, how is it lawfull for the Popes, that, I am sure, dare not challenge more to themselves, then was lawfull for Peter? Thus wee see how absurd a thing it is, that the Pope should be a temporall Prince.

Let vs examine antiquitie for this poynt, Concil. Constantin. 5. sessio. 1. Antimus the Bishop of Trapezuntium was complained of to the Councell, that he should affirme, Magnitudinem & dignitatem sacerdotij non spiritualem esse animarum curam, sed quendam ciuilem principatum: That the dignitie of the Priesthood consisteth not in the spirituall care of soules, but in a ciuill kinde of Princedome. Of this heretical iudgement seemeth the Bishop of Rome to be, which then misliked the whole generall Councell.

Concil. Toletan. 11. can. 6. Hic à quibus domini sacramenta tractanda sunt, iudicium sanguinis aptare non licet: They by whom the Sacraments of our Lord ought to be handled, ought not to meddle with the iudgement of blood: Ergo, they can be no temporall Princes, for to such belongeth the iudgement of death and life.

This truth haue the holy Martyrs sealed, William Swinerdby condemned for Gods truth, I say of the Pope holde men of armes, &c. to venge himselfe on them that offend him, and giues remission of sinnes to them that fight, and slay them that contrarie him, as men said hee did by the Bishop of Norwich, not putting his sword into his sheath, as God commanded Peter, he is Antichristus: for he doth contrarie to the commandement of Iesus, that had Peter forgive his brother seauentie six times, &c. Fox. pag. 470.

I thinke it not amisse in the last place to adioyne the sentence of a popish Bishop, Aegidius Albertius, vttered in an oration which he made before Inulin the second. The foresaid warlike Pope in the Councell of Laterane, beginning thus, To the reformation of the Church as many other things, so especially the late losse of our armie ought to stirre vs vp: which I thinke hath fallen out by the diuine providence, Quò armis ecclesia alienis freti cederemus, ut ad nostra redeuntes viatores euaderemus: nostra arma sunt pietas, religio, supplicationes, To the end that while we vse strange and forreine weapons we should giue place, and taking our owne should returne victors: our proper armour is godlines, religion, prayer: Remember, saith he, the warre that Moses had with Amalech, Videlicet populum armis fidentem, deo charum, vinci semper: contra semper vincere precibus supplicantiem, You shall see the people euen beloued of God, while they trust to their weapons, alwayes to be overcome: but while they are in their prayers, to be themselves ouercomers. Thus he is bold to reprove the Pope euen to his nose (and he doth it without checke) for his warlike humour and disposition.

And indeede herein they doe contrarie to their owne Canons, as dist. 36. 3. Moses ad bella non vadit, &c. Moses goeth not to warre, he fighteth not against the enemies: but what doth he? he prayeth: and the people overcome. Wherefore it is a Bishops part to pray, &c.

Againe, can. 23. c. 1. Ioann. 8. Terram defendere, &c. To defend the countrey, to deale with warre, belongeth to the terrene power. Ibid. c. 3. Innocentius, Christ being taken of the Iewes, when Peter had had striken off ones eare, he forbiddeth him to smite; giuing an example to all Bishops, not to use carnall weapons, &c.

Ibid. cap. 19. Pope Nicholas findeth fault with certaine Bishops, which kept watch and ward vpon the Sea coasts against the Pirates: Aditum Christi est Christo seruire: It is the part of Christs souldiours to serue Christ, &c.

Thus wee see how vniustly the Popes of Rome, and contrarie to their owne Canons, challenge to be temporall princes; which their ambition hath much muliked some of their owne writers: as a sober and graue author of their side giueth an instance in the Bishop of Wirceburge, who euer since Charles the great, hath borne both the chiefe ecclesiasticall, and temporall office there; and vpon festiuall daies hath the sword carried before him: and the Bishops there lie buried, with a naked sword in the one hand, and a pastorall staffe in the other. The same author sheweth the iust iudgement of God vpon that See, how as they gouerned by the sword contrarie to their calling, so diuers of them perished by the sword.

I cannot here omit to rehearse two merrie conceits vttered vpon this occasion, one by a countie fellow, of the Bishop of Colone bearing the person both of a Bishop and a Captaine: Velim discere, &c. I would faine know, saith he, when the diuell shall carrie this Captaine to hell, whom you represent, whither then the Bishop shall goe? The other by a souldiour of the Cardinall Balue sent by Lewis the 11. to take muster of the souldiours at Paris: O prudent King, saith he, you haue sent this Cardinall, Bishop of Ebrouke, to muster your souldiours, send me also to his diocess to make priests: for I can doe that as well, as he the other. Thus wee see that this popish ambition was derided euen of the common and simple people. And thus I conclude this place with that saying of S. Ambrose: Non conuenit vnum hominem duplicem professionem habere: It is not fit for one man to haue a double profession or calling.

THE NINTH QUESTION, OF THE PREROGATIVES OF THE POPE.

BEside these priuiledges and immunities of the See of Rome, which hitherto we haue spoken of both in spirituall and temporall matters, there are other prerogatiues, which haue been in times past giuen to the Bishops of Rome, most blasphemous and wicked, which the Papists of this age are ashamed of, and therefore passe them ouer with silence: for Beleturinus saith nothing of them: We will therefore spare our labour in confuting of them, they are so grosse and absurd, but onely bring them forth, that the godly reader may vnderstand the abomination of the whorde of Babylon.

There are three monstrous and shamefull prerogatiues, which the Canonists ascribed to the Pope in times past: and they are these; his power dispensatiue, his power exemptiue, his power transcendent, so we will call them at this time.

1 His prerogatiue in dispensing was wonderfull: it would offend a Christian eare, to heare what his grosse Canonists are nothing ashamed to say, Papa potest dispensare contra ius diuinum: The Pope may dispenſe against the law of God, contra ius natura, against the law of nature: contra Apostolum, against the Apostle, contra nouum testamentum, against the new Testament: Nay, Papa potest dispensare de omnibus praeceptis veteris & noui testamenti: The Pope may dispenſe with all the Commandements both of the old and new law. What intollerable blasphemies are here? The practises also of Popes are agreeable hereunto: for did not the Court of Rome dispenſe with King Henry the eightes marriage with his brothers wife? but that vngodly dispensation at the last was ouerthrowne: and it was well concluded by act of Parliament, anno 1533. That no man had authoritie to dispenſe with Gods lawes.

Symmachus Bishop of Rome hereunto agreeth, concluding thus: Roman. synod. 6. Non licet Imperatori vel cuiquam pietatem inuadentis aliquid contra mandata diuina presumere, nec quicquam quod Euangelicis prophetisque & Apostolicis obuiat agere: It is not lawfull for the Emperour, or any other that holdeth the true religion, to presume any thing against Gods commandements, or to doe that, which doth contrarie the writings of the Prophets or Apostles.

Likewise Fabianus: He that feareth God will not attempt any thing against the Gospel, Apostles, or Prophets, caus. 11. quast. 3. cap. 65. Marcellin. caus. 25. quast. 1. cap. 8. Scire non valet, &c. It cannot stand, which is done against the Euangelicall or Apostolicall doctrine.

Adde the iudgement of Bishop Latimer holy Martyr: If it be of God, Quis potest dissuadere, nisi qui videbitur deo repugnare? Who can dissolue it, wileſe he will seeme to resist God? Fox p. 1750.

Bishop Criemer holy Martyr: That the Bishop of Rome had no authoritie to dispenſe with the word of God, and Scripture, Fox pag. 1861.

2 Concerning his power exemptiue: the Pope (say they) is not bound to any law. No man is to iudge or accuse him of any crime, either of adulterie, murder, simonie, or such like. If he fall into adulterie, or homicide, he cannot be accused; but rather excused, by the murders of Sampson, thefts of the Hebrewes, the adulterie of Jacob: As Ozab was stricken for putting his hand to the Arke inclining, no more must subjects rebuke their Prelates going awry: by the inclination of the Arke, the fall of Prelates is vnderstood. This generally is the opinion of the Canonists: but the Iesuites doe holde the contrarie, that it is lawfull, euen for an inferiour Priest to rebuke the Pope, Rhemist. Annot. in 2. Galath. sect. 8. Wherefore, seeing they confute themselves, they need not any other refutation.

Reade antiquitie, you shall finde, that the Popes doings haue been called in question: When Bonifacius 1. was chosen Pope, and one Enlalin by his confederates was set vp against him, Valentinianus and Honorius the Emperours, the better to haue their right and title examined, commanded, ut ambo exirent ciuitate, that both of them should void the citie. Afterward Symmachus and Laurentius contended about the Popedom, the Senators made relation to King Theodoricus, desiring him, ut visitationem daret sedi Apostolica: tunc rex dedit Albina ciuitatis Episcopum, to send a visitation to the Apostolike See: and the King sent the Bishop of Albin, as visitor thither. By these and such other examples it appeareth, that the Bishops of Rome in times past haue not been without check and controulment.

3 Concerning the third power, which we call Transcendent: one saith, that, Non minor hunc Papa debetur, quam Angelis: That there is no lesse honour due to the Pope, then to Angels. Another saith, Papatus est summa virtus creata. The Popedom is the highest power that was created of God, aboue Angels, or Archangels. Againe, those words of the Psalme, Thou hast put all things vnder his feete, as sheepe and oxen, fowles of the ayre, fishes of the sea: they thus blasphemously applie to the Pope; by sheepe and oxen, vnderstanding men liuing vpon the earth; by the fowles of the ayre, the Angels in heauen, whom they say, the Pope may commaund; by the fishes, the foules in purgatorie: Ouer all these the Pope (say they) hath absolute power, who may, if it please him, release all purgatorie at once. What horrible blasphemies are here? Yet our Rhemists and other Iesuites are somewhat more modest, which confesse that the Pope is but Christs Vicar in the regiment of that part which is on the earth, Annot. 1. Ephe. sect. 5. Seeing then they confute themselves, we will not further trauaile herein, but proceede.

Zozimus decret. Contra statuta patrum condere aliquid, vel mutare, nec huius quidem sedis potest authoritas: To make or change any thing against the decrees of the fathers, not this seate hath authoritie: Ergo, the Pope is not higher then Angels, being inferiour vnto men his predecessors.

The like iudgement the ancient Bishops of Rome were of, that it was not lawfull to depart from the decrees of their predecessors: Dist. 11. cap. 3. Iulius calleth it, Satis indignum, a very vnworthie thing so to doe. Nicholaus: Ridiculum & abominabile dedecus: A ridiculous and abominable shame, dist. 12. 5. Damasus saith, That the violaters of the Canons, blasphemi sunt in spiritum, doe commit blasphemie against the spirit: caus. 25. quest. 1. cap. 5. Gregor. Euseb. non constrator, He is a destroyer, not a builder, caus. 25. quest. 2. cap. 4. Iulius calleth it presumption, ibid. cap. 11. And lest that other might seeme to bee tied by these Canons to the obseruation of the ancient decrees, and the Pope to be exempted: Pelagius saith peremptorily, Ne pontifex ab his descendendi licentiam, &c. That not the Pope, though he would, should be suffered to depart from the statutes of his predecessors, ibid. 21. Now then from hence we conclude: first, that seeing the Pope hath no power to change the former decrees, much lesse can he dispense against the word of God. Secondly, seeing he must obserue the rules of his predecessors, he is not exempted from all iudgement. Thirdly, seeing that he is inferiour to the ancient Bishops, in that he must be ruled by their orders, he is much lesse inferiour to the Angels.

THE TENTH QUESTION, CONCERNING

Antichrist, and whether the Pope be that great aduersarie vnto Christ.

This question is diuided into many parts. First, whether Antichrist shall be some one singular man, Secondly, of the time of his coming and continuing. Thirdly, of his name. Fourthly, of what nation or kinred he shall come. Fifthly, where his place and seate shall be. Sixthly, of his doctrine and manners. Seuenthly, of his miracles. Eightly, of his kingdome and warres. Ninthly, whether the Pope bee the very Antichrist. This then is a most famous question, and worthe thoroughly to be discussed, euery point therefore must be handled in order.

56. Error.

They hold that Antichrist, whose coming is foretold in the Scripture, shal be one particular man, not a whole bodie, tyrannie, or kingdome, as the truth is, Belarm. cap. 2. lib. 3. They vse the words of our Saviour, Ioh. 5. 43. I come in my Fathers name, and ye re- reine me not, if another come in his owne name, him will ye receive. Here Christ, say they, speaketh of another that shall come, namely Antichrist: for here one is opposed to one, namely, Antichrist to Christ, not a Kingdome to a Kingdome, or sect vnto sect, but one person to another, Bellarmine cap. 2. lib. 3.

Answ. First, here is not so much an opposition of persons, as there is of doctrine, as to preach in the name of God, and to preach in the name of men: and though Christ be the chiefe doctor and teacher, that came in the name of his Father; yet all true preachers beside, doe come in the same name: for so our Saviour saith of his Apostles, He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me. Matth. 10. 40. Therefore, he that receiveth the Apostles, receiveth God: they also then do come in the name of Christ: and so Christ and all the faithfull make but one, Iohn 17. 21.

Neither doth Christ here speake of one speciall enemy, but of all false prophets; for it is not vnsuall in the Scripture, in the singular number to expresse a multitude being of the same kinde, as Iohn 10. 1. 12. There is a comparison betweene Christ the true shepheard, and the hireling: where, by the name of hireling, all false shepherds, and spirituall theeves are vnderstood, and so is it in this place: therefore they cannot conclude out of this place, that Antichrist shall be but one man.

Argum. 2. An other prooffe is out of 1. Ioh. 2. 18. the Antichrist shall come, 1. Ioh. 2. 18. the Greeke article, ἐκ, expresseth some singular notable person, Bellarmine ibid.

Answ. It is false. The Greeke article doth not alwaies in Scripture assigne some particular person: as Matth. 4. 4. Man shall not live by bread onely: the Greeke text hath ἐκ, the man, and yet is it vnderstood not of any one man, but of all in generall, so 2. Tim. 2. 17. The man of God, that is, every faithfull Minister, or good Christian, yet is it expressed with the article. Fulke Annot. 2. Thess. 2. sect. 8.

Argum. 3. Apocal. 13. 18. It is the number of a man: the proper name of Antichrist is set downe: Ergo, but one man, Bezar. ibid. Rhemius. 2. Thess. 2. sect. 8.

Answ. The name here mystically described, which shall containe 666 in number; for so the Greeke letters χ. ρ. ς. do signifie being numbered, doth not expresse any particular name of one man, but rather of the whole societie and bodie of Antichrist: for it is said to be the number of the beast. Now by the beast is vnderstood the Romane Empire, the name wherof is Λατίνος, Latini, which letters do arise in computation to the whole number of 666. And this name Irmaus thinketh to agree best to this place. Further, seeing the Rhemists themselves by the beast do vnderstand the vniuersall companie of the wicked, Revel. 13. vers. 1. And this is the name or number of the beast: it must be vnderstood, by their owne confession, of a company and congregation, and not of one singular person.

The Protestants.

That Antichrist, which is interpreted an aduersary, or against Christ, shall not be one man, (as the Papists imagine, that the Popes might be disburdened and discharged of this name, who are many) but that it is a whole body, company and synagoge, and a succession of heretikes, we do thus proue it.

1 The mysterie of iniquitie wrought in Paulus time, then was there a way in preparing for Antichrist, 2. Thess. 2. But it is vnpowable for one man to continue from Paulus time to the end of the world: Ergo, Antichrist is not one man, but a succession of heretikes.

First Bellarmine answereth, that as Christ is said to haue come since the beginning of the world in his forerunners the Prophets and Patriarches, but yet came not in person, till he tooke flesh: so Antichrist straight after Christs ascension began to worke in his forerunners also, but shall not come in person till toward the end of the world. cap. 2. resp. ad. 1. argument. Beza.

Con. 1 The comparison betweene Christ, and Antichrist in this behalfe, is not good: for Christ is said to haue come in the Prophets, because vnto them Christ did communicate his spirit; and therefore Christ is said in his spirit to haue preached by Noah. 1. Pet. 3. 19. But Antichrist being but a mortall man, can not giue of his malignant spirit to his forerunners: for this is not faire from the phrensie of the Manichees, to make Antichrist the beginning of euil, as Christ is the author of good; that as Christ the head doth giue influence to his body, so Antichrist an other head should also inspire his members. Secondly, but if they will make a good comparison, as Christ is the head of his Church, and the Prophets and Apostles his Ministers; so the Diuell is the ring-leader of the wicked, and the Antichrists and false prophets his chiefe worke-men: and in this sense Apocal. 13. 7. Michael, that is Christ, and his Angels are said to fight against the Dragon, that is, the diuell and his angels: And as Christ since the beginning of the world did speake in his seruants the Prophets, so the diuell also from the beginning ceased not to worke in his ministers; and so he began to worke the mysterie of iniquitie against the Gospel in the Apostles time. But to say, that as he which ruled the true Prophets by his spirit was incarnate afterward, and came in his owne owne person; so he that mislead the false prophets, shall also come in his person, were to make Antichrist a diuell incarnate: for it was the diuell that wrought in heretikes and false teachers.

Belarmine answereth againe: if the mysterie of iniquitie began in Pauls time, that is, the kingdome of Antichrist; and you will needs make Rome the seate of Antichrist: belike Saint Paul and Saint Peter were the Antichrists, for there were no Bishops of Rome beside at that time.

Answ. First, that Antichrist began then to worke euen in Rome, it cannot be denied, seeing the Papists confesse, that Simon Magus first broched his heresie there, and that Peter calleth Rome Babylon. It is not necessarie, that the mysterie of iniquitie should so soone creepe into the very chaire of the Pastors, and Bishops: that should come to passe in the full reuelation of Antichrist: it is sufficient that it wrought closely amongst the false Apostles: wherefore the lawsuits obiection concerning Peter and Paul, is ridiculous.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith, that there must come a departing or Apostasie and general falling from the faith: for so an apostasie signifieth, a relinquishing of the faith, not a departure from the Romane Empire, or Antichrist himselfe, as Belarmine would haue it: so the word is vsed by S. Paul else where, 1. Tim. 4. 1. some, saith he, shall fall away, or play the apostates from the faith: and so one of your owne writers expoundeth it, veritate in errorem deseciscunt; they shall fall from the truth into error: Essent in hunc locum. Common vse also of speech to taketh it: Iulian the Emperour is knowne by the name of Apostata, for forsaking of the Christian faith: Antiquitie also hath so vsed the word. Alexander patriarch of Alexandria, thus writeth in his Epistle touching the Arrians: Egressi sunt viri à nostra parochia, docentes apostasiam, quam recte quilibet precantur sufficere Antichristum: There be certaine fellows gone forth out of our precincts, teaching apostasie (that is, corrupting the right faith) which any man would thinke did fore-run Antichrist. Whereas then the Rhemists affirme, that most of the ancient fathers do so vnderstand Apostasie for a defection from the Empire: it is certaine, that Tertullian, Chrysostome, Augustine, Primasius with others do expound it for a defection from the faith. Fulge annot. 5. in 1. Thess. 2. Yea and the Rhemists so take it. ibid. annot. 6.

Now this generall falling away from the faith cannot be accomplished in one man, but it sheweth a whole bodie or companie, whereof Antichrist is the head, one man of sinne succeeding another by succession: and this apostasie cannot be wrought at one time, but it shall come to passe in severall ages: for how is it possible, that at once such a generall Apostasie should be? Ergo, Antichrist shall not be one particular man, Argum. Caluini. Neither can the Iesuite thus shift off the argument, to say, that this generall Apostasie is but a preparation to the kingdome of Antichrist; nor that he shall then be presently come: for S. Paul ioyneth both these together: Therè must come a departing first, that the man of sinne be disclosed, ver. 3. So that this very apostasie and departing shall be a disclosing and manifest declaration of Antichrist.

Argum. 3. 1. Joh. 3. 7. The Apostle saith: Many deceiuers are come into the world, which confesse not that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh: the same is the deceiuer and the Antichrist. Mark then, one deceiuer is many deceiuers: one Antichrist many Antichrists, 1. Joh. 2. 18. Ergo, Antichrist shall not be one man, but many, Argument. Ful. Annot. 2. Thess. 2. sect. 8.

Augustine sheweth, how that in his time this place of S. Paul was not expounded of any one man, but of a whole bodie: Nonnulli non ipsum principem sed uniuersum quodammodo corpus eius suum cum suo principe hoc loco intelligi Antichristum volunt: Some (saith he) doe take Antichrist not for the head alone, but for the whole bodie and multitude together with their prince. And their coniecture is this: because these words ver. 7. He which withholdeth, are vnderstood of the Empire and Emperours of Rome, which were many: so the man of sinne, which is described as in the person of one, may fitly be vnderstood of a succession of many.

Bernard saith, 2. In conuersion. Paul. serm. 1. Iniqui agunt & ceteri contra Christum, multi sunt nostris temporibus Antichristi: There be diuers other that doe wickedly against Christ, and in our times there be many Antichrists. Again, Cantic. serm. 33. Ministri sunt Christi, & seruius Antichristi, They are the Ministers of Christ, and serue Antichrist: how could Antichrist be in Bernards dayes, some hundred yeeres since, yea many Antichrists, if Antichrist should be one man? So also one of your later writers: Bruno thus witnesseth writing upon the 4. of the 1. to Tim. ver. 1. Apostolum de Antichristo insinuat em. &c.: That the Apostle giuing instruction concerning Antichrist, doth insinuate that the members a long time goe before the head: but if Antichrist were one singular man, his head and members must go together.

Likewile out of your owne Canons: distinct. 23. sup. 1. Nicholam defineth him to be Antichrist, that is elected to the Papacie by Symonie. He noteth not any particular Pope, but any whosoever, that should be so elected.

Cons. 16. qu. 7. c. 3. Gregor. 7. He that granteth tithes to lay persons, inter maximos hereticos, et Antichristos non minimus habetur: shall be counted among the greatest Heretikes, and not the least among the Antichrists: Ergo by your owne Canons there is not one onely Antichrist, but many Antichrists:

Antichrists. Yea, here I will oppose the iudgement of the Rhemists, who therein are contrary to themselves: yet thus they write, annot. 7. in 17. Apocal. that the seven heads are seven Kings, or Kingdoms, five were then past, the sixth was the state of the Empire then present, the seventh should be Antichrists state, &c. As then they take the sixth head not for any particular person, but for the State of the Emperours, who were many; so by their exposition the seventh head must be taken not for a particular person, but for a State and Gouvernement.

Let vs adde the seale of the holy Confessors and Martyrs, Iohn Wickliff. articul. 37. Ecclesia Romana, saith he est synagoga Satanae: The Church of Rome is the synagogue of Sathan. Iohn Husse Concil. Const. sess. 11. Papa est patronus Antichristi, non solum illa simplex persona sed multitudo Paparum &c. est Antichristi persona composita monstrosa: The Pope is the patron of Antichrist, not any one single person, but the multitude of wicked Popes, &c. is the monstrous compound bodie of Antichrist. If it should bee objected, that there haue been some good Popes since the time there assigned; namely, from the dotation or endowment of the Church: he answereth, Non repugnat quod Gregorius & alij Papa finaliter penitebant: Notwithstanding this Gregorius, and other tolerable Popes might finally repent them.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER ANTICHRIST be yet come, and how long he shall continue.

The Papists.

THE Romish Iesuites doe hold that Antichrist is not yet come; neither can they tell when he shall come: But this they say boldly, that Hensch and Elias, who liue all this while in Paradise, shall come immediately before Antichrist; and that Antichrist, when he is come, shall raigne but three yeeres and an halfe, and then shall the world end, Bellar. cap 4. lib. 3. de papijs. Rhemist. 11. Apocal sess. 2. 4.

Argum. 1. The Romane Empire must vtterly be destroyed and layd waste before Antichrist come: as S. Paul saith, That which withholdeth must first be taken away, 2. Thes. 2. 7. that is, the Roman Empire. But the Empire yet remaineth: for the Emperor is known by name, and there are also prince electors of the Empire: Ergo, Antichrist is not yet come. Bellar. cap. 5.

Ans. It is true that the Romane Empire, while it retained and kept the ancient dignitie, maiestie and power thereof, was an hinderance and let to the tyrannie of Antichrist; but when it began to decay, then Antichrist set in his foote. First, it was not necessary therefore that the Empire should vtterly be extinguished, but so much only taken away, namely, the ancient honor and imperiall maiestie thereof, as hindered Antichrist: and so we find, that the Romane Empire was more then halfe decayed, when Antichrist crept into Rome.

As first when Constantine the great, an. 312. left the citie of Rome, and fixed his imperiall seate at Constantinople, in the East, the maiestie of the Empire was much impayred, the Bishop of Rome taking occasion by the absence of the Emperor to rule ouer the west Churches. The next pul from the Empire was betweene the yeere 700. and 800. Constantinus 1. Bishop of Rome first offered his seate to be kissed of the Emperor Iustinian, and most insolently tooke vpon him to excommunicate Philippicus Bardanes Emperor after Iustinian, because he could not away with Idols, anno 715.

Gregorius the third likewise for the same cause did excommunicate Leo the Emperor, and translated the custodie of the Church from the Grecians to the French nation, anno 740. Zacharius first tooke vpon him to depose and set vp Kings: as he depriued Childericus King of France of his kingdome, and set Carolus Martellus in his steade, anno 750. Stephanus the second first presumed to be carried vpon mens shoulders: vnto him Pipinus King of France yeelded the exarchate or soueraignty of Rauenna, held his stirrop, and led his horse by the bridle, anno 752. Afterward Carolus King Charlemaines sonne, confirmed vnto Adrianus 1. the former graunt of Pipinus, and besides gaue vnto him, the dutchie of Forotulium, Beneuentum, and Spoleum, anno 796. Leo 3. proclaimed Charles the great Emperor, and so spoyled the Emperor of the West of the better halfe of his kingdome, anno 800.

From this time forth the maiestie and ancient dignitie of the Empire began daylie to decrease: Iohn 13. made a decree that the Emperor should be crowned of the Pope, anno 964. Otho the Emperor confirmed to Leo the eight whatsoever before graunted by Pipinus or Carolus, anno 966. Iohn 14. brought vnder his papall regiment the kingdome of Poole, anno 973. Strenus the ninth obtrayned Mullaine: Vrbannus the second set foote into Spaine, anno 1090. Vnder Innocentius the second the Kingdome of Sicilie was made part of S. Peters patrimonie, anno 1140. Eugenius the third subdued Norway to the papall profession, anno 1152. Alexander the third decreed that none should be King of England, vnles he were first nominated and called of the Pope, anno 1180. Sub Lurio the third the Armenians submitted themselves to the papall iurisdiction, anno 1185. Vnder Vrbannus the third, Linonia came vnder their yoke, anno 1187. Vnder Innocentius the the third, the kingdome of Arragon was made tributarie to the Pope, anno. 1216. Vnder Nicola the third, the countrey of Romandiola and Bononia, was brought vnder the Popes subiection, anno. 1280.

And to put the matter out of all doubt: Bonifacius the eight did one day shew himselfe in his pontificals, as a Pope; another, in his imperiall robes, as an Emperor by vsurpation, anno. 1300. Clement the fift made a decree that the Emperor should receiue the name and right of the Empire from the Pope, and the Emperor being dead, till a new elect, the imperiall power to remaine in the Popes hand, anno. 1314. Clement the sixt crowned Charles the fourth vpon this condition, that he should neither stay in Rome, nor in any part of Italie: the same Charles to procure the succession of the Empire to his sonne, did mortgage to the Prince-Electors the chiefe reuenues of the Empire, and surrendred the free cities, which were neuer since redeemed, anno. 1350. And thus by degrees was the Empire weakened: and as Antichrist daylie gathered strength, so the imperiall dignity fayled, and was empayred.

Secondly, the imperiall power must in some sort be restored by Antichrist: for the Pope vsurped the same authority which the Emperors had, yea greater: for the whore is described sitting vpon the beast, Apocal. 17. which is the Empire: and therefore it is said, vers. 8. The beast that was, and is not, and yet is: for the ancient Empire both is, and is not: It is, because the power thereof is translated to the Pope: it is not, that is, not in that kingly manner, as it was in times past. Apocal. 13. 12. The beast that rose out of the earth with two hornes like a lambe, did all that the first beast could doe before him: that is, the power of the Empire was in the Pope. Thirdly, Apocal. 13. 15. It is said, that the image of the beast remaind, and that the other beast gaue a spirit vnto the image of the beast: So is it at this day, the name and image of the Empire remaineth, but the maiestie and power is gone: And who giueth life to the image but the Pope? he confirmeth and ratifieth the election of the Emperour. Wherefore, this rather is an argument that Antichrist is already come, because nothing but the image of the beast remaineth.

Argum. 2. Antichrist shall raigne three yeeres and an halfe: but if he were already come, he must needs haue raigned diuers hundred yeeres already, Belarm. cap 8.

They proue this raigne of Antichrist for this short season, out of those places of Dan. 7. 25. A time, times, and halfe a time: and Apocal. 12. 14. also it is described by dayes 1260. dayes, and by moneths 11. 2. two and fortie moneths: which all come to one reckoning, and make three yeeres and an halfe.

Ans. First, the time is also set downe by the name of three dayes and an halfe, Apocal. 11. 11. How then is it likely, that 1260. dayes and three dayes and an halfe, should signifie the same time? And seeing the Rhemists themselves, by the thousand yeeres Apocal. 20. 1. do vnderstand all the time of the new Testament till Antichrists raigne, and so take it for an vncertaine and indefinite number, they can not in any reason so strictly expound this account of dayes. And as they take the other number indefinitely, so diuers of the fathers expound this number of dayes, as Beza vnderstandeth all the time of Christianitie: Rupertus, so long as the Church endureth persecution: Haymo, for all the time from the ascension of Christ, till the end of the world. Fulger. annot. 11.

Apoc. 2. Secondly, with much better sense are these times applied by our learned and painefull countryman Master Fox, to the great persecution vnder the Emperors, which continued 194 yeeres, which time is mystically signified by 42. moneths, taking euery moneth for a sabboth of yeeres. And the rest of the numbers agree hereunto: for 1260. dayes make three yeeres and an halfe, that is, moneths 42. and three dayes and an halfe make houres 42. So taking euery houre in the dayes, and euery moneth in the yeeres for a sabboth of yeeres, there arise 194 yeeres, which was the iust time of the persecution from the death of Iohn Baptist, vnto the end of Licinius the tyrant and persecutor. This account, I say, better agreeth with the truth of the historie, then their imagined computation. Thirdly, if it should be taken, as they expound it, for so short a time, then very little of the prophecie in the Apocalyps is yet fulfilled: for the reuelation, for the most part, consisteth in setting downe the reigne and Kingdome of Antichrist with the circumstances thereof: as of the time of his tyrannizing ouer the Church chap. 11. 12. of his marke and myracles chap. 13. of the plagues, which should be powred out vpon the world vnder his kingdome chap. 16. the description of the whore, which is Antichrist chap. 17. the overthrow of Babylon, prophesied of in chap. 14. fulfilled and accomplished, chap. 18. So that if we take our aduersaries strict exposition, the whole prophecie of the Reuelation almost shall be brought within the compasse of three yeeres and an halfe, which is not to be admitted: for so little of the Apocalyps should be yet fulfilled seeing their precise three yeeres and an halfe are not yet come. And againe, it is certaine that the Apocalyps is a generall prophecie of the state of the Church from Christs leauing the earth to his comming againe: and it tooke beginning even from Iohns time: for things are shewed to him shortly to be done, chap. 1. vers. 1. and the time is at hand, vers. 3. So that we doubt not but the most part of that propheticall reuelation is already accomplished, accomplished, as it may appeare in comparing the visions revealed in that booke together, and in applying the histories done to the prophesies therein contained.

And againe, there is no prophesie beside this of 42. moneths, which can be applied to the great persecution in the primitive Church: wherefore it is not like that the Lord would leane his Church without some comfort, in forewarning them of those great troubles which immediately ensued. But if these prophesies, which are wrested by the Papists, did not foretell of those persecutions, then are they utterly forgotten in that booke: which is not like, it being the greatest trial that ever the Church had.

4. The 1260. daies mentioned, Apocal. 12. 6. cannot be taken precisely for so many naturall daies, but we are to vnderstand so many prophetically daies, that is, a day for a yeere: for this both agreeth to the phrase of Scripture, and the prophetically custome and practise: as Num. 14. 34. As for the number of forty daies wherein you searched out the land, now forty daies, every day for a yeere, shall you beare your iniquities. Likewise, Ezech. 4. 5, 6. Thou shalt beare the iniquities of the house of Israel forty daies, in day for a yeere: I have given thee. Also the current of time and course of historie agree with the same: that 1260. yeeres are determined for Antichrists raigne vntill his overthrow: for whether wee begin the account from the yeere 261. when Papal Rome returned that foule heresie, in denying Christ to bee God, and so was a forerunner of Antichrist; adding hereunto 1260. yeeres, we come to the yeere 1521. when Luther began to impugn the Antichristian doctrine: Sic Balam in vna Lora, 10. Or whether we count from the yeere 500. when Constantine the great left the imperiall citie of Rome to the Popes discretion, which made an open way to Antichrist, adding here also 1260. yeeres, we fall into the yeere 1760. when according to the prophesie, Reuel. 11. 2, 3. the tenth part of the Antichristian citie, as of Abbeyes, Nunries, Monasteries was destroyed, as in England, Scotland, Germanie, and other countries. The Iesuites liberall wrestling then of this number of daies, is not any way to be admitted.

5. We say lastly, that we are not curiously to search into times and seasons, which the Lord hath not revealed: Onely thus we learne, that the time of affliction being set downe by daies and moneths, the faithfull should heartily be comforted, knowing that the time of their trouble is limited of God, and is but short, in respect of the kingdome of Christ.

Argum. 3. The Lord saith, Matth. 24. that those daies shall be shortened, lest no flesh should be quenched. But how can the time bee short, if it should last some hundreds, or a thousand of yeeres?

Ans. First, that place ver. 2. is properly vnderstood of the calamitie of the Iewes, which if it had continued any longer, the nation of the Iewes had been utterly destroyed. Secondly, yet notwithstanding the raigne of Antichrist is short, in respect of the eternall kingdome of Christ: yet the whole time from his ascension vntill his coming againe, is counted but short. Apocal. 22. 30. I come quickly: And S. Peter saith, That a thousand yeeres before God is as one day, and one day as a thousand yeeres. Pet. 3.

Argum. 4. Christ preached but three yeeres and an halfe: therefore Antichrist shall be suffered to preach no longer.

Ans. First, yet Christ was thirtie yeeres old when he began to preach, and shewed himselfe before, though not so openly; as when he was twelue yeere old he disputed with the Doctors in the temple: he was also acknowledged for the Messiah in his naturie. If Antichrist then must in this respect be correspondent to Christ, he must also be knowne to bee thirtie yeeres vpon earth, before he be fully manifested. Secondly, though Christ himselfe preached no longer, yet he sent his Apostles, who preached many yeeres after: we doe not therefore oppose the person of Antichrist, whom we denie to be a singular man, to Christ; but the kingdome of the one to the other. Now by their owne reason, it followeth; that because the kingdome of Christ endured many yeeres, and yet durst, that therefore Antichrists kingdome must likewise.

Other demonstrations the Iesuite hath to proue that Antichrist is not yet come: as because the Gospel is not yet preached to all the world, cap. 4. Balam. Haba and Hemah are not yet come, who are certainly looked for, cap. 6. There shall bee a most grievous and terrible persecution vnder Antichrist, which is not yet past, cap. 7. But these arguments shall be answered in another place towards the end of this worke, when we come to speake of the appearing of Christ to iudgement.

The Protestants.

That Antichrist shall raigne but three yeeres and a halfe, wee take it for a meere fable, and a very popish dreame: whereas on the contrarie side, we are able to shew both that Antichrist is already come, and hath tyrannized in the world these many yeeres.

Argum. 1. We will make it plaine by demonstration, that Antichrist hath been in the world many yeeres agoe, by the prophetically places of Scripture. First, it is said, the number of Antichrist christ is 666. Apocal. 13. 18. So, anno 606. or thereabout, Boniface the 3. obtained of Phocas the Emperour to be called vniuersall Bishop. Thus saith Hyricus Cyprianus.

conus lib. 18.

And if wee take our account from that time when Pompeius the great tooke the Scepter from the Iewes, according to Iacobus prophetic, that before the Scepter went from Iuda, the Sonnes of Iud should not come, Genes. 49. 10. which fell out in Caius his Consulship, fixtie yeeres before Christs natiuitie: Then ioyning to this number, 606. wee finde Bonifacius in the yeere 666. at which time many strange and prodigious sights appeared, diuers Sea-monsters were seene, and a terrible blazing starre was descried. Also Gregorius 1. the immediate predecessor of this Bonifacius, doubted not to call him Antichrist, that tooke vpon him to be called vniuersall Bishop, as this Bonifacius did. All these signes did foreshew, that Antichrist was euen now borne into the world.

Further, if we begin at the yeere of the Lord 97. at which time Iohn wrote the Apocalypse, and counting 666. yeeres, we shall come to the time of Papianus, whom the Pope made King of France, and he againe much enlarged the iurisdiction and authoritie of the Pope. And yet more euidently, about the yeere of the Lord 666. the Latin seruice was commanded to be vsed in all common subiect to the See of Rome, by Pope Vitalianus: and about the same time, Constantinus the Emperour remoued the ancient monuments of the Empire to Constantinople, and left the citie to the Popes pleasure, Polianus in 13. Reuel. sed. 10.

Another prophetic wee haue, Reuel. 12. 3. that after one thousand yeeres Sathan must bee loofe. Euen so, a thousand yeeres after Christ, Pope Siluester a great coniuurer, hauing made a compact with the diuell, obtained the Papacie: and not long after him came in Gregorius the 7. a great Sorcerer also and Necromancer: Sic Lamberus.

But because it is not to bee thought, that Sathan was bound during that great and long persecution vnder the Romane Emperours, wee must begin the account of the thousand yeeres from the end of the persecution, which continued 194. yeeres: vnto that adde a thousand, Iohn we the yeere of our Lord 1294. about which yeere Bonifacius the 8. made the sixt booke of the Decretals, confirmed the orders of Priests, and gaue them great freedoms: with this number againe Daniel his 1290. daies, Dan. 12. 11. Also somewhat before this time, anno 1260. the orders of Dominicke and Franciscane Friars began first to be set vp by Honorius the 7. and Gregorius the 9. And so haue we the 1260. daies, which are set downe, Apocal. 12. plurimop For. pag. 198.

Argum. 2. If Antichrist should raigne but three yeeres and an halfe, as our aduersarij thinke, and then immediately that time being expired, the world should end: then it is possible to assigne the time of our Lord Christ his coming to iudgement, so soone as Antichrist is reuelled. But the Gospell saith, that of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels in heauen, Matth. 24. 36. If these good fellowes take vpon them to be wiser then the Angels: for they dare set downe the very day of Christs coming; which shall bee, as Bellarminus presumptuously imagineth, 1294. daies after the destruction of Antichrist. And to this purpose he abuseth that place of Dan. 12. 11. where mention is made of 1290. daies, that is, as he fondly interpreteth, three yeeres and an halfe, the iust time of Antichrists raigne: But blessed is he that commeth (saith the Prophet) in 1335. that is, saith Bellarminus, to 45. daies after the destruction of Antichrist; and then Christ cometh, cap. 9. What intolerable boldnes and presumption is this, contrarie to the saying of Christ, attempt to declare the very houre of his coming?

Again, the prophetic of Daniel had no such meaning: for he onely speaketh of the affliction of the Church, before the coming of Christ, as Iohn prophesieth of the troubles that came vnto Daniel therefore in that place receiveth instructions concerning the cruell persecution of the Iewes vnder Antiochus Epiphanes, the beginning, and the end thereof: There are three times reuealed vnto him.

The first is of a time, two times, and halfe a time, or rather the diuiding of times, or as Thommas more agreeable to the Hebrue, a part or parcell of times: so long should the temple bee desolat, and the abomination set vp in the temple, that is, three yeeres and certaine daies: And so it came to passe, for this desolation began in the temple the 145. yeere of the raigne of the Greekes, the 3. day of the moneth Cassien, 1. Macchab. 1. 57. when Antiochus caused the daily sacrifice to cease, and incense to be burnt to Idols: And iust three yeeres and ten daies after, which is to be reckoned for the od parcell of times, anno 148. the 25. day of Cassien, they began to offer sacrifice in the temple according to the law, 1. Macchab. 4. 52.

The second time reuealed, is of 1290. daies, Dan. 12. 11. which maketh three yeeres, seuen moneths and odde daies: which is the time counting from the desolation, when as the sacrifice should be restored, and confirmed by the Kings graunt, and letters Patentes: which accordingly came to passe, anno 148. the 17. of the moneth Xanthicus, which was the last moneth but one, as it is recorded, 2. Macchab. 11. 33.

The third time is described by daies, 1335. Dan. 12. 10. Blessed is he that should liue to see that time: namely, when the Church of the Iewes should fully be deliuered by the death of Antiochus, which which was in the beginning of the next yeere, which was 149. 1. Machab. 6. 16. Thus wee see these times were fully accomplished vnder the tyrannie of Antiochus: wherefore these prophecies being once fulfilled, they cannot bee drawne to signifie any other time, but by way of similitude and comparison.

Neither is that any thing worth, which the Iesuite objecteth out of S. Paul, 1. Thess. 2. 8. Thin shall the wicked man be reuealed, whom Christ shall consume with the spirit of his mouth: As though presently after the reuelation of Antichrist Christ should conue. And therefore Antichrist must not be expected or looked for before the end of the world: for the whole time from the first coming of Christ to his second, is in the Scripture called nouissima. hora, the last times, 1. Ioh. 2. 18. And therefore Antichrist, at what time soeuer he is reuealed after the ascension of Christ, he cometh in the last times: whose vtter ruine and destruction shall be reserved for the glorious appearing of Christ, as the Apostle there speaketh.

Argum. 3. Whereas the Scripture saith, that Sathan must be bound for a thousand yeeres, and after let loose againe, Apocal. 20. 2. And it is plaine, that the thousand yeeres since Christ are expired more then five hundred yeeres ago: It followeth hereupon that Antichrist is already come: for he must be reuealed with the loosing of Sathan. Our aduersaries haue nothing to answer but this, that by this 1000. yeeres, a certaine time is not meant, but the whole space during the time of the new Testament, till the coming of Antichrist, Rhemist. Renel. 20. sect. 1. To whom we answere, that by the same reason, neither shall their 42. moneths shew any certaine time, but the whole space so long as Antichrist shall raigne. And this number of moneths, as of daies, weekes, houres, the Scripture euery where taketh mystically in prophecies: but when thousands or hundred yeeres are mentioned, they are alwaies taken literally: as Isai. 7. 8. it is prophesied that Ephraim, that is, Israel, should vtterly cease to bee a people within 67. yeeres, which euen so came to passe, counting from the fourth yeere of the raigne of Ahaz King of Iuda, to the 23. yeere of Manassas, when the remnant of Israel was carried away.

Isai. 16. 14. In three yeeres as the yeeres of an hireling, that is, precisely so many, the glorie of Moab shall be destroyed. Isai. 21. 16. Yet a yeere according to the yeeres of an hireling, and all the glorie of Kedar shall faile. In all these places hirelings yeeres are vnderstood, that is, so many common yeeres, as seruants doe vse to be hired for.

Let vs adioyne the testimonie of antiquitie: Cyprian epistol. 3. ad Cornelium: Antichristi iam propinquantis aduentum conantur inquiri: They, speaking of the Nouatian heretikes, doe imitate Antichrist, who is now appoaching and drawing neere.

Paschal. 2. anno 1100. held a Councell at Rome against the Bishop of Florence, who affirmed Antichrist then to be borne: Epistol. Leodius. contra Paschal. 2. Ecco solutus est Sathanas habens iram magnam: Behold Sathan is broke loose, hauing great wrath. Anno 1390. Pope Urban the 6. and Clement 7. being both Popes at once, did thunder out one against another, calling each other schismaticke, heretike, Antichrist.

Whom now may wee belecue rather for this matter then the Popes: for Antichrist may best iudge of himselfe?

We haue also the iudgement of one Hentenius a Papist, against their dreame of three yeeres and an halfe, who thus writeth in his preface to his translation of Arctas: It is not possible that Antichrist, in so short a time of three common yeeres and an halfe, should obtaine so many kingdomes and prouinces.

Adde the seale of holy Martyrs: Master Bilney, Sathan, as the Scripture witnesseth, hath been now let loose these 500. yeeres, as it is written in the Apocalypse, After a thousand yeeres Sathan shall be let loose, Fax pag. 1003. Master Tindall holy Martyr, saith, That since the first 30. Bishops of Rome that died Martyrs, there haue been 204. Popes, and hardly foure to bee found among them good Christian men. pag. 1252.

All these agree together, that Antichrist hath bin many yeeres already reuealed to the world: and therefore this new deuice of three yeeres and an halfe, is but a meere forgery.

THE THIRD PART, CONCERNING THE name, character, and signe of Antichrist.

The Papists.

They stoutly affirme, that Antichrist shal be one particular man; consequently they also hold, that he shal haue a certaine name, as Christ is called Iesus, so Antichrist must also haue a proper name: but what that name shall be, no man can tell, vntill he come: but it shall consist of certaine letters, that in number make fixe hundred sixtie fixe, Bellar. exp. 10. Rhemist. anno. Apocal. 13. sect. 10.

1. Apocal. 13. 18. Conus the number of the beast for it is the number of a man, and his number is 666.

Hereupon they conclude, that Antichrist shall have a certaine name, which containeth that number, Belshazzar.

Ans. First, it is the number of the beast, and yet of a man: Ergo, it cannot be the name of any one man: for by the beast, the Iesuites themselves vnderstand a companie or multitude, Rom. 16. 18. Apocal. 13. 1. Wherefore it must be such a name as agreeth to a companie or succession of men, and such is the name Latinus, as afterward we will shew. Secondly, it must be a name by number, shewing the time, not an idle number signifying nothing; the time of his coming is set downe to be 666. But the name of their Antichrist cannot shew any such time, seeing there are yeeres more then twice 666. gone already, and yet they say, their Antichrist is not yet come.

Argum. 2. Antichrist shall have a name, as Christ had: but it is not necessary to be knowne, otherwise then Christ his name was: which was described by Sibyl by the number of 888. as Antichrists is by 666. yet was not his name, Iesus, perfectly knowne before his coming, neither is it necessary that Antichrists should before that time, Iesus, in Greek letters thus, Ιησους, maketh as you see 888.

Belshazzar cap. 10. Ans. First, you must prooue Antichrist to be one singular man as Christ was, and then strive for his name. Secondly, you doe euill to match *Sibyl*s prophetic, and *Iohn*s reuelation together, as though her conjecture of the name of Christ, by the number of 888. were of like authoritie with *Iohn*s prophetic, of 666. Thirdly, that the name of Iesus is described by one of the *Sibyl*s by the number 888. it is euident. And Augustine also maketh mention of others verses, which goe vnder the name of Sibyl, the first letters whereof doe makethis title or name both in the Greeke and Latine, Iesus Christus filius Dei saluator: Iesus Christ the sonne of God our Saviour, August. cont. Iudas & Pagan. cap. 6. But these prophecies of Christ, which goe vnder the name of Sibyl, may be doubted of: for it is not like that out of the Church among the Gentiles there could be found more euident predictions of the Messiah, then in the Church of the Iewes in the true Prophets writings: and if the Prophets of God, speaking by the spirit of God, did not foretell or foretell the name of Iesus, how could the Sibyl, speaking by a spirit of diuination, be able so to declare it? But because the testimonie of the Sibyl is alleged by graue authors against the Iewes and Pagans, I spare to speake of the vncertaintie of them. Fourthly, if Antichrists name were as well knowne, as Christs name was before his coming, no man could be ignorant of him: for the names of Christ were particularly expressed by the Prophets, as euen now shall be shewed.

The Protestants. W E affirme by the warrant of Scripture, that as it is a meere fable, that Antichrist shall be one singular man: so of the like truth is it, that he shall be knowne by some notorious name: neither can any such thing be gathered, Apocal. 13. 18.

Argum. 1. If there should come such a notorious wicked person into the world, who only should deserve to be called Antichrist, it is not vnlike, but that the spirit of God speaking of his name, both could and would also haue expressed it: As Iesus was described by name, 1. King. 1. 34. and Gen. Esai 44. 28. 45. 1. long before either of them came into the world. And why, I pray you, might not this propheticall Euangelist, haue named Antichrist, as well as Sibyl foretold the name of our Saviour Iesus Christ?

Againe, Christs names were propheticd of and knowne before: One name of his is to be called Nazarene, so the people call him, Math. 21. 11. 2. prophet of Nazareth. This name the Prophet Ishai Isai 11. 1. he calleth him, Nerfer, in Hebrue it signifieth a branch. Another name of his is King of Israel, Ioh. 12. 13. propheticd of by Zach. 9. 9. Christ also was saluted by the name of the sonne of Dauid, Mat. 21. 9. Mark. 11. 48. for the Iewes did generally hold, that the Messiah should be called by the name of Dauid, according to the saying of the Prophets: as Ezech. 34. 24. My seruant Dauid shall be their prince. And 37. 35. My seruant Dauid shall be their prince for ever. And againe, Ierem. 30. 9. They shall serue the Lord their God, and Dauid their King: which place Rabbi Iohannas doth thus translate, Obedient Dauid's Messiah regis sui: They shall obey Dauid the Messiah their King.

Further, he was knowne by the name Messiah, or Christ, before he came, Ioh. 4. The woman of Samaria said, I know well that Messiah shall come, which is called Christ, verf. 25. This name was reuealed to Daniel, 9. 25. he is called Messiah the prince.

But will our aduersaries say, his name Iesus was not knowne before his coming? Yes, euen that name also hath some euidence out of the Prophets: for Iesus, or Iesua, is all one, and signifieth a Saviour: of the which name we reade Zach. 3. where mention is made of Iesua the high Priest, who was a type of our Saviour Christ, and bare his name, for verf. 5. a Diademe is set vpon his head: which must needs be vnderstood of Iesus Christ, our high Priest. Againe, he is called Hosanna, Ioh. 12. 13. which signifieth the same that Iesus, and both are deriued from the same roote:

preferred the name Titan before others, as were like to be the name of Antichrist: yet such is approved the name Latine saying Vade in inferum It is very like to be this name, because Latines now doe raigle and inferum might be deuised in the other name Titan because Antichrist was not yett deuised: but since the reuelation of Antichrist it is now easie to discern which of these two names doth best agree to the propheticall signification. Now further for these two points, what the same prophesied of in the Apocalypse, is so a name, as that it deciphereth also a certaine number of yeeres: and that it is not a special or proper name of any one man, we haue three testimonies of some of their owne writers.

For the first, Lycanus vpon this place is a witnesse, that although he take not Mahomet for Antichrist, yett thinketh his death falling out in the yeere 666: to be signified in this number for the other, frimofus and many other of their side, thinke that 666, that signifieth, contrarie shall be the name of Antichrist, which is no proper, but a generall name of opposition to Christ, as Antichrist is. Likewise Rupertus thinketh, that the name of Antichrist (that is, of that one singular man) is not contained in this number: whi hadrian other mysticall interpretation of the same, which is nothing to the purpose: and therefore I omit it. And to shew that this number is not the name of Antichrist, the holy Martyrs thought that Antichrist should not be set forth by any such notorious name as Wicli, or Iohan. Haff. That there were diuers disciples of Antichrist, Popes, Cardinals, Patriarches, Monkes, Chanons, Priests, &c. as in the 13. All these make but one Antichrist, hauing severall names and places.

OF THE CHARACTER OR SIGNE and badge of Antichrist.

The Papists.

59. Error.

They doe hold that Antichrist shall haue a certaine outward marke or character, which shall cause to be printed in the right hand, and forehead of all both small and great, that belong to his kingdome, Apocal. 13. 16. But this marke is not yett knowne, no more then his name is: onely this they are sure of, that the Pope hath not Antichrists character, but rather the character of Christ, the signe of the crosse which he causeth to be signed in the forehead, Bellerose cap. 11.

Arguer. Antichrist must in all respects be contrarie to Christ: for as he seeth his Image and Crucifix adored, so shall he set vp his owne image to be worshipped: and therefore as Christians now doe beare in their foreheads the signe of the Crosse which is Christs marke, so he shall haue another marke contrarie to Christs: and he will make his name and the letters thereof sacred.

now the name of Iesus is worshipped among Christians, Reu. 19. 13. Apocal. 13. 17. As first, where haue you learned, that roodes and images are to be adored and worshipped? or doth not the word of God teach the plaine contrarie? Psal. 115. 8. 9. O Israel trust in the Lord: but they that worship images are like vnto them: he therefore that trusteth in an image cannot trust in God. Again, where learne you to make an Idol of the letters or fillables of Christs name, to cause men to carrie it in their caps, and bowe their knee vnto it? thinke you that S. Paul when he saith, that all things doe bowe the knee to the name of Iesus, yea of things in heauen, Philip. 2. that he meant, that euen the Angels doe stoup and make obeisance, when they see the name of Iesus written in a glasse window? Or who taught you that the signe of the Crosse is to be borne vpon mens foreheads, and that with crossing of the forehead, we are preserved from danger? S. Paul, you know, hath no such meaning, when he saith, He bare in his bodie the marks of the Lord Iesus, which were nothing else, but the signes and tokens of his persecutions, as whipping, stoning, and such like in his flesh: Galat. 6. 17. Neither, when he saith, He reioyced in being crucified, whereby he was crucified to the world, vers. 14. hath he any relation to the Crosse in the forehead? for it were a miracle, that a man by crossing his forehead, should straightway crucifie and mortifie his affections. Nor yett did our Sauour speake of this marke, where he saith, that they which will follow him must take vp his crosse, Mark. 8. 34. for in that place by taking vp the crosse, he meant, nothing else but the forsaking and denying of our selves. So it is plain, that in the Scripture you finde not this superstitious signe of the crosse in your foreheads.

Where you say, that you doe honour the Character of Christ, as his name; and the signe of the Crosse: You doe euen to honour Christ, as the souldiers did that gaue him a reede for a Scepter, and thornes for a Crowne; and bowed themselves in mockage: So you doe leaue Christ certaine badges and signes of his kingdome; but indeede you spoyle him of it, and of his priuiledge too, making other mediators beside him, and other sacrifices propitiatorie beside him. What doe you else now, in bowing the knee to the name and fillables of Iesus, and spoiling him of his honour; but with the souldiers in mockage to bow vnto Christ? And I pray you, how do you honor the name of Christ, when you make a iest of the name of Christian? for in Italie it is a word of reproch, taken for an illote or foole.

We are so farre from thinking, that the characters of Christs name, and the signes of the Crosse so superstitiously vsed among Papists are the markes of Christ, that we take them rather to be the visible markes of Antichrist: for besides the invisible characters of Antichrist, whereof we are to speake afterward, that he shall vse also some visible markes, and what those markes are we doe learne where the text saith, The markes of the beasts name, Apocal. 14. 11. and the markes of the number of his name, Apocal. 17. 3. as it is in the original: Now the number of the beasts name, is expressed by these three Greeke letters,  $\alpha \cdot \beta \cdot \gamma$ . Apocal. 17. 3. Hence are deriued the abused characters of Christs name,  $\alpha \cdot \beta \cdot \gamma$ . for  $\alpha$  is the first letter and the last in the beasts name  $\alpha \cdot \beta \cdot \gamma$  and in these abused characters  $\alpha \cdot \beta \cdot \gamma$  are all one; and the middle character, with his crowne thus,  $\beta$  cannot more fitly be expressed by any letter, then the middle in the beasts name,  $\beta$ . Thus we see that these characters  $\alpha \cdot \beta \cdot \gamma$  so superstitiously abused by the Papists, which they vsed in their rings, amulets, tablets, in their caps and garments, doe issue out of the beasts name, and so are markes of Antichrist.

In like manner did they abuse the signe of the crosse, attributing vnto it the power, efficacie, and merite of Christs death, as though the very signe of the crosse were able to sanctifie those that were crosed, and to preserue them from spirituall danger.

And these superstitious markes of the crosse, had their beginning from the beasts name: for the first letter  $\alpha$  is a crosse, the middle letter  $\beta$  in Latin  $X$ , is also a sideling crosse, the last letter  $\gamma$  containeth both  $\alpha$  and  $\beta$ , two Greeke letters, whereof the latter is called an headlesse crosse: and thus it appeareth plainly, that the markes whereby they say, they honor Christ, are rather a dishonour to him, and are in very deede the cognizance of Antichrist.

We answer, that the signe whereby Christians are marked, are not externall, but internall: We are sealed by the spirit of God, Ephes. 4. 30. The outward signes are none other, but the two Sacraments of baptisme and the Lords supper: by the right administration whereof the congregations of the faithfull are known. But of this, more shall be spoken in the Antichrist, or Antichristian, in the declaration of our opinion.

The Protestants.

BY the character or marke of Antichrist, we doe not so much vnderstand any visible signe or badge to be printed in the right hand or the forehead, as the Iesuite imagineth: as though he should brand all his subiects in the hande or forehead: as that hereby is meant and signified chiefly the society and communion, whereby they shall be joyned to Antichrist, by giuing vnto him their fidelitie, oth, and obedience, agreeing together in the same corruption of faith, and doctrine. This is Antichrists badge or cognizance, Fals. Apocal. 13. sect. 7. There are also outward markes of their coniunction with Antichrist: as the shauing of priests, and greazing them with oyle: such are the receiuing of holy bread, the wearing of beades, the annoynting with Chrisme, the crossing of themselves, as we haue before shewed. But the proper note and character, is the oth and profession of fealty and obedience.

Antichrist, say they, shall bring in another contrary character, to disgrace the signe and character of Christ, namely the crosse in the foreheads: But Christ hath appoynted no such visible character, neither are true Christians knowne by any such: therefore also the character of Antichrist is no such thing: the antecedent is proued thus.

The people of the Iewes had no such outward badge, who were more charged with outward obseruations, then Christians are: Circumcision was the only signe of the covenant to them, Genes. 17. 11. which was one of their chiefe Sacraments, in place whereof Baptisme is enioyned vs: Ergo, much lesse are we to be knowne by any other outward badge.

This place Apocal. 13. is taken out of Ezech. 9. where the Angell is commaunded to set a marke vpon the foreheads of them that mourne: but that was no visible externall marke, for it was shewed the Prophet in vision: Ergo, neither is it to be taken so in this place.

We grant the Sacraments are badges and markes of our profession: which markes the Pope, the onely Antichrist hath defaced, by bringing in five other Sacraments, and cleane changing, polluting and altering, the right Sacraments which Christ instituted: for they haue brought into baptisme, chrisme, salt, oyle, spittle, and such trash: into the Eucharist, adoration, transubstantiation, sacrifice, with such like: so that herein he sheweth himselfe Antichrist, and hath altered the true markes of Religion.

It appeareth by the effect what is the Character of Antichrist: The text saith, It was not lawfull for any to buy or sell, but he that had the marke or the name of the beast: No more was it lawfull for any to haue trafficke amongst the papists, but he that acknowledged the Popes crosse keyes, or made himselfe a member of the Romish Italian Church: Nay they say, he is not of the Church, that acknowledgeth not the Pope to be head of Christs Church, Fals. Apocal. 13. sect. 7.

The Iesuite objecteth: First, this oth of fidelitie and coniunction cannot be that character: for it must be in the right hand or forehead. Ans. We haue already declared, that it is too childish to take these words literally, as though all Antichrists subiects should carie brands in their forehead or hands. Secondly, saith he, many doe both buy and sell amongst them, that haue made profession of their fealtie to Rome, as the Iewes. Bellarm. cap. 11. Ans. Yea, it is maruile for Antichrist is an enemie onely to Christ: all other people he can brooke well enough beside good Christians; tell me I pray you, whether our Merchants be admitted to trafficke safely in Spain, if their religion be knowne? The seruantes of God amongst you, can neither enioy, houses, lands, libertie, or life: which yoke also was laid a long time vpon this land, till it pleased God to haue mercy on vs: for the which his name be blessed.

Thirdly, Againe, many yeeres agoe, euen in Augustines and Ambrose his time, all Churches were ioyned to Rome, before Antichrist was yet reuealed. Ergo, This is not the Character of Antichrist. Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, they were ioyned then in common consent of religion, not as subiects by compulsion, but voluntarie; because at that time, Rome in the chiefest pointes of Religion, was in the right faith. Secondly, but of late dayes in the Councell of Constance, not yet two hundred yeeres agoe, it was made an article of faith, to belecue, that the Pope was the head of the Vniuersall Church: yea about the yeere 600. the title of vniuersall Bishop first began to be appropriate to Rome: whereby was insinuated, that all Churches in the worlde should be vnder the obedience thereof.

Lastly, we haue the testimonie of one of their Popes themselves, who saith plainly, that he is the forerunner of Antichrist, which would be called Vniuersall Bishop. lib. 4. epistol. 32. and writing to Eulogius of Constantinople he calleth this title of Vniuersalitie, superba appellationis verbum, a proude name. And Paladius 2. 1. de scriptis contra Iohannem Constantino saith thus, Nulum Patriarchum iam profano utatur vocabulo, he termeth it a prophane name. See then by his testimonie, the title of Vniuersalitie, and exacting of obedience of other Churches, is a prophane and proud title, and in very deede the character and marke of Antichrist.

Bishop Cranmer holy Martyr, maketh this an infallible signe of Antichrist, Because he aduanceth himselfe above all other creatures: Fox. pag. 1874. and would haue all to depend vpon him. Matur Bradford calleth him Antichrist, that arrogated to himselfe, to be called the supreme head of the vniuersall Church. pag. 1626. epistol. ad Londinens.

THE FOURTH PART, CONCERNING the generation and originall of Antichrist.

The Papists.

They do reiect those old fancies concerning Antichrist, as that he should be borne of a Virgin by helpe of the diuell, that he should haue the diuell to his father: that he should be well incarnate: or that he should be Nero raised from the dead. Refusing these fables, they haue found out one as foolish: Our Rhemists hold, that Antichrist shall be borne of the tribe of Dan. Bellarmine dare not say so, but he thinketh that he shall come of the Iewes stocke, and be circumcised, and be taken of the Iewes for their Messiah. cap. 12.

Argum. 1. That he shall come of the tribe of Dan: thus they would proue it, Gen. 49. 17. Dan shall be a serpent by the way, biting the horse heeles: Ierem. 8. 16. The neying of his hofe is heard from Dan. And Apocal. 7. where 12 thousand of euery tribe are reckoned, onely Dan is left out, because (belike) Antichrist should come of that tribe, Rhem. 2. Thes. 2. sect. 8.

Ans. Bellarmine confuteth all these reasons: the first he saith with Hierome to be vnderstood of Sampsan, who came of the tribe of Dan: the second place is of Nabuchadnezzars comming to destroy Ierusalem, as Hierome also expoundeth it: to the third he saith, that Ephraim is left out as well as Dan: yea and so is Manasse too: because the tribe of Ioseph is named for his two sonnes: but Dan is left out because Leui is reckoned in his place. We may see now, how well they agree, when one Iesuite confuteth another. Bellarm. cap. 12.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine standeth much vpon that place, Ioh. 5. 43. If another come in his name, him will ye receiue: but saith he, the Iewes will receiue none but of their owne kinned, and whom they looke for to be their Messiah. Ergo, Antichrist must come of the Iewes. ibid.

He also vrgeth that place of the Apostle 2. Thess. 2. 11. God shall send them strong delusions, to beleue lies: which he vnderstandeth of the Iewes, that shall be readie to receiue Antichrist for their Messiah: and indeed saith, Antichrist shall come especially for the Iewes, to delude and deceiue them.

Ans. 1. This place we haue shewed before, part. 1. of this question, to be vnderstood of false prophets amongst the Iewes, such as mention is made of, Act. 5. as Theudas and Judas, and not of any one false prophet: so Iohn 10. where Christ compareth himselfe, which is the true shepherd, with with the hireling, he vnderstandeth all hirelings, though he speake in the singular number. Secondly, and if it should be vnderstood onely or specially of their imagined Antichrist, then it would follow, that the Iewes as yet haue receiued none conuersion in their owne name, but haue as it were, kept themselves in suspence, refusing Christ, and yet hearing none other. Which were verily absurd, that this saying of Christ hath not been verified vpon the Iewes these 16 hundred yeeres. Thirdly, and Christs speech is especially directed to that generation, that seeing they refused Christ, yet they followed other ringleaders, or sectmasters, that deceived them.

And concerning the other place, we answer. First, that it is not spoken onely or specially of the Iewes, but of all vnbelievers, who through the hardness of their heart should be readie to receiue Antichrist: and so the Rhemists expound it, in their annotations vpon this place: and the Apostle doth giue instructions as touching Antichrist, not to the Iewes, but to the beleuing Gentiles, to whom he writeth, saying in the 3. vers. Let no man deceiue you &c. Secondly, that Antichrist shall come chiefly to seduce the Iewes in the end of the world, is contrary to the Apostle Rom. 11. which prophesieth of the generall calling of the Iewes, not of their generall seducing: and this assertion of the Papists, that the Iewes Messiah is yet to come, doth harden their hearts, and nourish them in their blind hope and foolish conceit.

That it is a very fable and confounding deuise of heretikes, to make men beleue that Antichrist shall come of the tribe of Dan, or of the stocke of the Iewes, thus we shew it) Argum. 1. It is out of doubt, that the nation of the Iewes shall be conuerted vnto God, and mercy shall be shewed againe to the remnant of Israel, Rom. 11: 25. confessed also by the Papists. And heretofore Origen so many yeeres since, hath written very confidently, though doubtful and vncertaine in many things beside. First, Homil. 6. in Numer. speaking of the marriage of Moses with a woman of Ethiopia, how Miriam his sister for murmuring against it became leprous, and was shut 7. dayes out of the Campe: he thus applieth the storie by the marriage with the Ethiopians, vnderstanding the calling of the Gentiles: and by the excluding of Miriam, the reiectiō of the Iewes: Verumtamen hac lepra &c. But this their spirituall leprosie shall not remaine euer, but when as the weeke of the world is accomplished, she shall be brought againe to the tents: that is, the Iewes shall returne to the Church.

Againe homil. 18. vpon those words of Balaam. c. 24. 17. I shall see him, but not now: visum est temporibus cum plenitudo gentium intueretur: That is, in the last times, when the fullness of the Gentiles is come in, and all Israel beginneth to be saved. Thus he writeth of the generall calling of the Iewes toward the end of the world: But if one come, which shall redifie the temple, and restore the sacrifices and circumcision, such an one, as the Iewes shall take for their Messiah: who seeth not, that by this meanes the Iewes will be more hardened, hauing now their owne hearts desire, their temple, Messiah, circumcision: and their conuersion would be greatly hindered, nay quite and cleane ouerthrowne?

Argum. 2. If Antichrist should come of the Iewes, it is like that his seat should be at Ierusalem, and that the Temple should be built againe by him: but that cannot be, for the Temple, as Daniel prophesieth, shall lie desolate euen vnto the end, Dan. 9. 27. Ergo, he shal not come of the Iewes: More of this in the next part.

Beside the Prophecie of Daniel, we haue the warrant of our Sauour Christ, that the temple of Ierusalem shall not be reedified. Matth. 24. 2. a stone shall not be left vpon a stone: Which Prophecie was not onely accomplished in the destruction of the old temple, but then also, when in Iustus the Apostata his time, the Iewes being by him encouraged to build the temple, what was built in the day, was cast downe in the night; and beside a fire fell from heauen, that consumed the worke and workemens instruments: which Cyrillus Bishop of Ierusalem then seeing, applied vnto that euēt, this prediction of our Sauour. see Socrates lib. 7. c. 17. The like successe let them looke for, that shal attempt the like againe. Further there is an imperiall law made by Theodosius, that the Iewes should not attempt to build any Synagogue vnder the paine of confiscation of all their goods and losse of their life: and the lawe beginneth thus: Hec constituta in omni annu lege sancimus: They make it an eternal law, to hold as long as the world standeth. Cod. lib. 12. tit. 1. 17. How then is it like that the temple should be built, there being such restraint against Synagogues? And in the same law it is forbidden, that the Iewes should haue any honour, or beare any office, or execute any place of Iudgement. Wherefore seeing the Nation of the Iewes is despised and contemptible, and by a perpetuall law kept from rising to any honor: it is vnlike, that from them should spring such a mightie Monarch, as they imagine Antichrist to be.

Bernard witnesseth with vs: Bestia illa in Apocalypsi, cui datum est ut loquatur blasphemias, & bellum gerere cum sanctis, Petri cathedram occupat, tanquam Leo paratus ad pradam. The beast in the Apocalypse, to whom a mouth was giuen to speake blasphemies, and to make warre with the Saints, doth occupie Peters chaire, readie as a Lyon to his pray: Epistol. 126. But we reade not, that euer any Jew was Pope of Rome to sit in Pisys chayre. Concil. Toletan. 4. ann. 65. The Jewes are there called, Ministri Antichristi. The Ministers and seruants of Antichrist: and so in deede the Popes haue vsed them in diuers seruices: And therefore Gregory the ninth, in despite of all Christian Princes did giue the Jewes great immunities, anno. 1240. And who knoweth not that the papists haue begged many of the Iewish ceremonies: as the yeere of Iubile was instituted by Bonifacius 8. anno. 1300. and many other beside.

Fox pag. 177.

Bishop Ridley holy Martyr saith, that the See of Rome for the contrarie of Religion and diuersitie of doctrine from the Apostles, is the seate of Antichrist, and the Bishop of the same, that maintaineth the abominations thereof, is Antichrist himselfe in deede. But none of the Jewes were euer Bishops of Rome.

THE FIFT PART, CONCERNING THE seate and place of Antichrist.

The Papist.

61. Error.

Bellarmine holdeth opinion, that Antichrist shall haue his imperiall seate at Ierusalem, and Breedise and build againe the temple, yea for a while commaund circumcision to be vsed and obserued, Bellarm. cap. 13. lib. 3. de pontif. Rhemist. 2. Thes. 2. sect. 11.

Argum. 1. Apocal. 17. 8. The Citie of Antichrist is called the great Citie where our Lord was crucified. But Christ was crucified at Ierusalem, Ergo.

Ans. First, it cannot be so vnderstood, for ver. 2. Ierusalem is called the holy Citie, ver. 8. This great Citie is called Sodome and Egypt: how can the same Citie be capable of such contrarie names? How can that be called an holy Citie, where the abomination of desolation shall be and the seate of Antichrist?

Secondly, Augustine in Apoc. homil. 8. vnderstandeth by the great Citie and the streetes thereof, the middelt of the Church: And by the great citie very fitly is vnderstood the large iurisdiction of the Pope, who saith, he is head of the great citie and Catholike Church: Whose seate we see is at Rome, by authoritie of which citie Christ was put to death: and by Antichrist the Pope, Christ is persecuted in his members, Fulk. annotat. Apocalyp. 1. 1. sect. 2. S. Hierome also doubteth not to call Rome, Maledicam ciuitatem: The cursed citie: ad Principium: and Sodome, in his Epistle to Lucius.

Argum. 2. Apocal. 17. 16. The ten hornes, that is, ten Kings, amongst whom the Romane Empire shall be deuided, shall hate the scarlet whore, that is, Rome, and burne it with fire: how then shall it be the seate of Antichrist? Bellarm.

Ans. The text is plaine, that the same kingdomes, that before had giuen their power to the beast, and were subiect to the whore of Babilon, shall after make her desolate, and eate her flesh: which thing we see in part to be accomplished already, that many princes haue redeemed their necks from Antichrist his yoke, Fulk. Apocal. 17. sect. 3. It is not necessarie therefore to be done all at one time, but one after another.

Arg. 3. 2. Thess. 2. He shal sit in the temple of God: but at that time the Jewes only had a temple, the Christians yet had none, and y<sup>e</sup> Apostle speaking of the Church of God, did of purpose reframe this name, least the Church of Christians should be thought like the Jewes Synagogue, Bellarm.

Ans. First, the Iewish temple shall not be built againe, as Daniel prophesieth, 9. 27. And how can it be built in so short a space, seeing Antichrist, as they say, must raigne but three yeeres and an halfe: and to what purpose, seeing he will abolish all sacrifices? Secondly, though it should be built againe, nay if it were standing now, for the exercise of Iewish sacrifices, it could not be called the temple of God. Thirdly, by the temple therefore is meant the visible Church, that which sometimes was a true visible one, as the Church of Rome, and after should be so taken, reputed and challenged, as it is at this day by the papists: So saith Master Bradford holy Martyr, That wicked man sitteth in the Temple of God, that is, the Church, for it cannot be vnderstood of Mahomet, or any out of the Church, but of such as beare rule in the Church, pag. 1616. disputat. cum Cocceius. Neither haue the Papists hereby any aduantage, as though the Pope sate in the very true Church: for it is not the true Church indeede, but so reputed and taken by them. But he is said to sit in the temple, that is the Church of God, both because there sometime hath been a visible Church, and as yet they doe retaine the name and shadow of the Church, and because he challengeth to be the head of the Church, and his office to be chiefly ecclesiasticall and of the Church. Fourthly, though there were no materiall temples of the Christians in Pauls time, what of that? Fifthly, he speaketh not here of any such materiall temple, but of the Church of God: neither doth S. Paul in this sense refuse to vse the name of temple, as 1. Corinth. 3. ver. 16. and 6. ver. 19. and in other places. Sixthly, the Rhemists doe allow the interpretation of S. Augustine and S. Hierome, who expound the temple spoken of by the Apostle, not for the temple of the Jewes, but for the Church of God: from the which Antichrist (say they) shall reuolt and become an Apostata: sect. 12. de 2. Thess. 2. But whereas in the same place they would hereupon conclude that the Pope is not Antichrist, christ, because he is in the Church, and so shall not Antichrist. To this we answer, that the Pope though he remaine in some outward shew of the Church, yet is departed from the true doctrine of the Church, and so become an Apostate.

The Protestants.

That Rome is the seat and place of Antichrist, beside that the Rhemists confesse so much that Antichrist shall raignd there, Annus. Apocal. 17. scilicet 4. we proue it thus.

Argum. 1. Babylon is the seat of Antichrist, who is called the great whore of Babylon, Apocal. 17. 5. Rome is Babylon: Ergo, the seat of Antichrist.

Obiect. It was Babylon, while it was gouerned and ruled by heathen Emperors; but the Church was not then called Babylon, Bellarmin.

Ans. First, Ergo by your owne confession, Rome shall be the seat of Antichrist, seeing by Saint Iohn it was called Babylon: for that cite, which then did beare rule ouer the earth, Apoc. 17. 18. was Rome, and the same is Babylon, ver. 5. and Babylon is the cite of the great whore: Ergo, Rome is the cite or seat of Antichrist who is that great whore. Secondly, it was not onely called Babylon in the time of the Heathen, but euen of Christian Emperors: Augustinus saith, it is Occidentalis Babylon, the Babylon in the West parts, & prius fuit Babylonis and daughter to the first Babylon. And S. Hieronimus saith, Dum in Babylone versarer: While I liued in Babylon, and was a tenant to the scarlet whore: Præfat. ad Paulinum. He thus speaketh in the time of Christian Emperours; not doubting euen then also to call Rome Babylon. Thirdly, Saint Iohn doth not onely prophesie of the estate of the terrene state, but of the false prophet Antichrist, he should also vnturpe an ecclesiasticall gouernment there. For as the terrene state of the Emperours for their crueltie is compared to a Leopard and a Lion, Apocal. 13. 2. so the ecclesiasticall state of the Popes is resembled to a Lambe with two hornes speaking in hypocrisie, pretending holines, yet practising tyrannie, ver. 11.

Obiect. Secondly, they obiect that by the damnation of the great whore, is vnderstood the small destruction of all the companie of the reprobate, Rhemist. Apocal. 17. 11.

Ans. The damnation vniuersally of the wicked is described chap. 20. and therefore this place must be vnderstood of Antichrist, and his adherents: and very fitly doth the name of whore agree with that See, for once a whore indeede was Pope there, called Iunio the eighth. Which so tyringeth the Papists, that they haue no other shift but impudently to denie it.

Argum. 2. That cite, which hath names of blasphemies, and is full of abominations, is the seat of Antichrist the great whore, Apocal. 17. 3. but this is the cite of Rome. Ergo.

First, that Rome is the cite full of names of blasphemie, being called eternall, and yet but temporall, Hieronimus testifieth, Iob. 2. 2001. Iouan. 1. Scriptum in fronte blasphemiam: Thou hast raised out, by the confession of faith, the blasphemie written in thy forehead. Here it is answered, that Rome was the place of blasphemie, while it was heathenish: but since the profession of the Christian faith it is not, as Hieronimus here saith, Bellarmin.

Contra. First, it is sufficient for this matter, that Hieronimus affirmeth Rome to be that cite which is full of blasphemie. Secondly, as he here affirmeth that for that present Rome was cleared from blasphemie, because of the faith of Christ: so elsewhere he sheweth, that the damnation of the great whore, that is the cite of Rome, is yet behinde, according to the prophesie, Reuel. 17. 1. as it followeth in the same place, That curie, which our Sauour hath threatned thee in the Apocalypse, thou maist escape by repentance. So then in his iudgement, seeing the damnation of the whore was not then fulfilled, at that time the whore had not shewed her selfe.

Secondly, that Rome also is the cite of abominations, the same author beareth witness: He calleth it the cite, in qua palam videntur, that may beare the bell for all kinde of vice: ad Præfatum. And againe, The cite of pompe, lecherie, delicacie, ubi humilitas effrenata est: where humilitie is counted miserie: ad Marcellum. Thus he spake of Rome being at that time Christian: but who seeth not how much more it is degenerate now?

Argum. 3. Wee haue another argument out of the same chapter, ver. 9. The seuen heads are seuen mountaines, on which the woman sitteth. But there is no cite in the world notoriously knowne to stand vpon seuen hills but Rome: Ergo, it is the seat of Antichrist.

Obiect. The text is, They are also seuen Kings: so the seuen heads, or seuen hills, signifie seuen Kings: for there shall be so many chiefe Empires which shall persecute the Church, there are five past: Egypt, Canaan, Babylon, the Persians, Grecians, the sixth, the Romes, which in part standeth yet, the seuenth shall be Antichrist, Rhemist. Apocal. 17. scilicet 7.

Ans. First, the seuen heads are expounded to be both seuen hills and seuen Kings: the Scripture voucheth not to expound one hard and obscure thing by an harder and more obscure, as to say, seuen heads are seuen mountaines, that is, seuen Kings: for wee were neuer the lesse before: and the terme of heads doth more fitly resemble Kings, then mountaines. Secondly, the seuen kings are more fitly taken for seuen principall gouernours of the Romans, as Kings, Tribunes, Consuls, Decemviri, Decemviri, Dictators, Emperours, Popes: for by these seuen orders hath the common-wealth bin gouerned first and last, Eccl. 10. 16.

Ans. First, you haue then no right to Peter's Chayre, for when he sat at Rome; the citie stood vpon seuen hills. Secondly, though the Pope now hath remoued his palace to the Vaticane, in the other side of the riuer; yet he did sit for many yeeres in Laterane, vntill the time of Pope Nicholas the second, who was almost 1100. yeeres after Christ. Thirdly, though the Pope hath remoued his palace vpon pleasure beyond the riuer, yet his See is not remoued; for vpon every one of those hills there are Monasteries, and Chappels, and such like monuments to be seene this day. In mount Caluaria there is the Monastery of Gregorie the first, the Cathedrall Church of Laterane. In mount Auentino the Monasteries of Sabine and Bonifacio. In the mount Esquilina the Minister of S. Maria maior, the ruines of S. Gordiano Church, which is yet a title of a Cardinal. The mount Viminalis hath the Church of S. Laurence. The mount Capitoline hath an house of Friars, called Ara celi. The mount Palatine the Church of S. Nicholas. The mount Quirinalis the Church of S. Mariade populo. Wherefore though the Popes person be remoued a little aside, yet the papish religion is exercised, and reliques of superstition are to be found in euery one of those hills. Wherefore we need no doubt to conclude, but that Rome is that citie vpon seuen hills, and the principall seat of Antichrist.

Let vs see antiquitie: Epist. Lond. contra Paph. 2. anno 1107. An. Petrus in Epistola, fides vna ecclesia qua est Babylone collata, &c. Peter saith in his epistle, the Church, which is at Babylon, salueth you: Hitherto I vnderstood Babylon to signifie Rome, because of the idolatrie thereof in those times; but now my wofull experience teacheth me so to expound it, that Peter sayeth the Church at Babylon, &c. did foresee the horrible confusion and dissension, which is there this day. So then Rome was not onely Babylon then, but it is also Babylon now.

We haue also here the euident testimonie of our aduersaries themselves: It may well beleeued they, that as the persecuting Emperours did principally sit in Rome; so Antichrist shall haue his principall seat there, though others thinke, that Ierusalem rather shall be his principall seat. Rhemist. annot. in 17. Apocal. sect. 4. And againe, wher as they confesse that the great citie, which is the whore, is old Rome, ibid. sect. 9. and that the seuenth head of the beast, whereupon the whore sitteth, is Antichrists state, ibid. sect. 7. it must of necessitie follow, that Antichrist is one of the heads of the Romane state. Their only euasion here is; that even then, when Antichrist shall sit in Rome, the Church there shall not be Antichrist, Rhemist. sect. 4.

Contra. Antichrists state shall either be the Imperiall Romane state, or Ecclesiasticall: but not the Imperiall for these reasons: First, they themselves confesse that Antichrist shall not come so long as the Romane Empire standeth, sect. 7. Secondly, the Romane Empire is now weakened, and nothing remaineth but the name and image thereof: so that it is not like to bee that which shall trouble and vex the world. Thirdly, even when Nero and Domitian and other persecuting Emperours gouerned, when as the Emperours had neuer greater power, nor yet malice or enuie; yet euenthen the Empire was an hinderance to the coming of Antichrist: and therefore Tertullian giueth this as a reason, why the Christians did pray for the Romane persecuting Emperours, Quod vni maximam vniuerso orbi imminuentem, &c. Because that wee know, that the great trouble and vexation of the whole world, threatening the end thereof, and horrible miseries, is kindled by the flourishing of the Romane Empire, Apocal. cap. 12. If that then the Imperiall state cannot be Antichrist, it must needs follow that the Papall and Ecclesiasticall state in Rome, which hath the exercise of both swords, there, and the chiefe gouernment thereof, is the very strength and head of Antichrists kingdom.

Hear the testimonie of an holy Martyr: The whore is that citie, saith Iohn, which hath the empire of the Kings of the earth, Apocal. 17. Now what citie is there in all the world, that, when Iohn wrote, had the rule of the kingdomes of the earth, but onely the citie of Rome, &c. Bishop Ridley, pag. 1779.

THE SIXT PART, CONCERNING THE doctrine of Antichrist.

The Papists.

Their opinion is, that Antichrist shall be an open and manifest aduersarie to Christ, and that he shall abolish all worship of God, and all religion, Rhemist. annot. 2. Thess. 2. sect. 10. Rhemist. draweth all the doctrine of Antichrist to these foure heads. First, he shall denie Iesus to bee Christ, and abolish the Sacraments instituted by Christ. Secondly, he shall make himselfe Christ. Thirdly, he shall make himselfe God, and be adored as God. Fourthly, he shall abolish all other worship.

worship, both true and false, yea the worship of Idols. Wherefore (saith he) the Pope cannot bee Antichrist, that doth none of these things, cap. 14. Of these now in their order.

Argum. 1. Antichrist shall vterly denie Christ, 1. Ioh. 2. 22. and 4. 3. Every spirit that confesseth not, that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God: this is the spirit of Antichrist: Ergo, Antichrist shall altogether denie Christ.

Ans. First, the Rhemists say, that this is not a marke for all times, to know an heretike by, but it was onely for those times, to confesse Christ to be come in the flesh. This is a surer note now (say they) that who so confesseth not Christ to be really present, and to be sacrificed in the Masse, is not of God, Rhemist. annot. 1. Ioh. 4. sect. 2. Where I will not stand to note the presumption of these Papists, that will correct and amend the Apostles rule, to know Heretikes by, which serueth for all times: and so Augustine taketh it. But here first I oppose our Rhemists iudgement against Bellarmine: for they denie that this place serueth to describe Antichrist, belonging onely to the Apostles times: Bellarmino saith, it doth most properly decipher Antichrist.

in 33.

2 The great Antichrist shall denie Christ no otherwise, then other Antichrists and heretikes did in the Apostles time: for they are all Antichrists, 1. Ioh. 2. 18. and he giueth one rule to know them all by, vers. 22. But the Antichrists then denied not Christ apertly, but couertly: Ergo, so shall the great Antichrist.

The first is true, that the old heretikes did not plainly denie Christ to be come in the flesh: but some denied his humanitie, some his diuinitie, some his person. Augustine saith, Arriani hoc negant, idcirco verbis faciuntur: The Arrians denie that Christ is come in the flesh, though they confesse it in word: for he that doth not confesse that Christ is equall vnto God, denieth Christ in the flesh, and so of other heretikes. The second also is as true: that Antichrist, who is no other but the Pope, shall also cunningly and couertly denie Christ; for he that denieth the offices of Christ, denieth Christ: As Augustine saith of Peters deniall, Quicquid rini negauit, ipsum negauit, Tract. in Ioh. 66. Whatsoeuer he denied of or belonging to Christ, he denied Christ. So the Pope denieth Christ to bee our Prophet, King, and Priest: His prophetical office he defaceth, and in effect denieth, in disgracing the Scriptures, saying, they are imperfect, and containe not all matters necessarie to saluation, that their authoritie bindeth vs not without his allowance: His Kingly office, in making himselfe Christs Vicar and Vicegerent vpon earth, in making new lawes, Sacraments, ordinances, beside Christs, as necessarie to saluation as the rules of the Gospell: His Priesthood, in setting vp a new propitiatorie sacrifice in the abominable Masse, beside the onely sacrifice of attonement vpon the Crosse, in making other mediators and intercessors, beside Christ: and such like, whereof we shall haue occasion to intreate afterward more at large: Ergo, the Pope in denying the offices of Christ, denieth Christ, and so is Antichrist.

Argum. 2. He shall make himselfe Christ and Messiah, which the Iesuite would prooue out of Iohn 5. vers. 43. If another come in his owne name, him will ye receiue: But the Pope commeth not in his owne name, but in the name of Christ, he calleth himselfe Christs Vicar: Ergo, he cannot be Antichrist, Bellarmino.

Ans. First, it is not necessarie that Antichrist should openly professe himselfe to bee Christ, in name, but he shall doe it, opere, indeede, and that closely and couertly: for those whom Christ calleth, apostolos falsos, false Christs, Matth. 24. 23. Iohn calleth Antichristos, Antichrists, 1. Ioh. 2. 18. False prophets therefore are false Christs, and Antichrists: yet all those false prophets and heretikes did not in name and outward profession make themselues Christs.

2 The Pope of Rome in effect maketh himselfe Christ: for who but Christ is the head of the Church? who but Christ is superiour to the Angels, and to commaund them? who but Christ can make Sacraments and articles of faith? But all this the Pope taketh vpon himselfe to doe: yea the Iesuite is not ashamed to say, that he hath the same office which Christ had being vpon earth, Ioh. 5. de pontif. cap. 4. And whereas they say, the Pope commeth in the name of Christ: it shall as much profite him (it being not in truth, but in colour onely and shew) as it shall profite the false prophets to say in the day of the Lord, Haue not we in thy name prophesied, and cast out devils? Mat. 7. 22. 23. to whom Christ shall make answer, Verily I know you not.

Argum. 3. Antichrist shall openly name himselfe God, and commaund men to worship him as God, 2. Thessal. 2. 4. But this doth not the Pope: Ergo, he is not Antichrist, Bellarmino.

Ans. First, if Antichrist should be such an one, you might haue found amongst the Emperours of Rome diuers Antichrists: for such an one Cabala was, that commaunded temples to be erected in his name, and his images to be set vp to be worshipped, yea in the temple at Ierusalem. Secondly, S. Pauls words will not beare any such sense: he shall sit, et dicitur, as God: and your vulgar Latin hath ostendens se tanquam sit Deus, shewing himselfe as though he were God, that is, in deepe and effect, not in open profession: for he should sit and be worshipped in the temple as God: how then can it be called the temple of God, being thus a temple of most grosse idolatrie? Bellarmino he taketh vpon him to correct the text, and saith it must not bee read, et dicitur, as God, but, in dicitur, that that he is God, both contrarie to the Greeke originall, and the Latin vulgar translation, which readeth, he shall shew himselfe as God, in such sense as I haue shewed. Thirdly, the Pope in effect maketh himselfe a god vpon earth: for he can dispence against the law of nature, the law of God, against both new and old Testament: as wee haue shewed before, Quest. 9. of this Controverſie: yea Bellarmino saith, he may by his Apostolike authoritie dispence with the precepts of the Apostles, cap. 14. He is able to change the nature of things, and of nothing to make things to be, of wrong to make iustice, &c. Pope Nicholau distin. 96. Yea it is said of the Pope, that he is neither God nor man, but a middle thing betweene both: Pope Boniface. I pray you then what is he? he is no Angell, for he is aboue them, and commandeth them: Papa Angelis precipit, the Pope commandeth Angels. He must then either be a God or a Diuell, by your owne confession, chuse which you will: Nay they do make him a plaine God: Es alter Deus in terris, another God vpon earth: and they salute him by these names, Dominus Deus noster Papa, our Lord God the Pope. Thus it is proued, that the Pope, both by his deeds as also by his titles, doth make himselfe God vpon earth.

Argum. 4. Antichrist (say they) shall take away all worship, yea of Idols, and shall command nothing to be worshipped but himselfe, 2. Thess. 2. 4. the word is idolopora, numina, all things that are worshipped. But so doth not the Pope, for he prayeth to Saints, adoreth the bodie of Christ on the altar. Ergo, Bellarm. cap. 14. Rhemist. 2. Thess. 2. sect. 10.

Ans. First, the text proueth not, that he shall take away all Idols, or things worshipped, but shall exalt himselfe against them, and make small account of them. The place also of Daniel is plaine, 11. 37. He shall not regard the God of his fathers, nor care for any God, but shall magnifie himselfe aboue all: and in his place shall he honour the God Mauzzim, and the God which his fathers knew not, shall he honour with gold and siluer. Out of this place wee gather two things: first, that Antichrist shall bring in a strange God, which his fathers neuer knew: so hath the Pope inuented a breadden god, which he honoureth with gold and precious stones, making more account of it, then of any Image or relick whatsoever. Secondly, yet he shall magnifie himselfe aboue all such Gods, Images, Roodes, Shrines, and the like, yea aboue his owne breadden god; so doth the Pope: for he rideth vpon mens shoulders, when his breadden god is carried vpon an hackney: he exalteth his throne aboue the altar, the Crosse is carried on the right hand of the Emperours sword and scepters, but is laid vnder his feet: In the yeere of Iubile, he beateth vpon the gates of Paradise with a golden hammer, Fulk. annot. 2. Thess. 2. 10. So then howsoever like an hypocrite he seeme to adore his breadden god, yet indeede doth he magnifie himselfe aboue it.

Bellarmino hath no other shift to foyst off our arguments, but these: he saith, this Mauzzim is like enough to be the diuell himselfe, whom Antichrist shall worship: but he careth neither for siluer nor gold: or else it is himselfe. And how I pray you can a man worship himselfe? or else, saith he, it is some strong castle where he shall lay his siluer and gold: or else you know not what, Bellarmino. 14.

2 That Antichrist shall not abolish Idols of siluer and gold, but rather command the people to worship them, as the Pope now doth, it is plaine, Apocal. 9. 20.

The Rhemists obiekt, that he speaketh here against the heathen Idols, which is here called the worship of diuels.

Ans. First, in this place Ioh speaketh of the end of the world, in the opening of the seventh seale: and the Idols of the Heathen were abolished long agoe: Neither is there any knowne nation in the world that hath worshipped Idols of gold, siluer, brasse, stone, or wood, but the Papists, for these many yeeres. Secondly, all worshippers of Images, doe worship diuels: for Idolatry is a seruice inuented by the diuell, and that which is sacrificed to Idols is offered to diuels, 1. Cor. 10. 20.

The Protestants.

That Antichrist shall not in outward shew bee an open enimie to Christ, but secretly and closely, and vnder pretence of religion take away all religion: thus we make it plaine.

1 These places alleaged before doe prouoe it, Ioh. 1. 2. 18. the Antichrist, and the Antichrists, shall be enemies all alike: but the Antichrists in *S. Ioh*s time were couert enemies. Ergo, so shall the great Antichrist. And as Antichrists forerunners were, so himselfe shall bee: but they shall speake lyes through hypocrisie, and giue eare to the doctrine of diuels, 1. Timoth. 4. 1. 2. that is, as one of your owne writers expoundeth it, Qui Christianorum sibi appellatione imposita, contrariis docent: Which taking vpon them the name of Christians, doe teach things contrarie, Esse in hoc locum. And this place is vnderstood of the forerunners of Antichrist, and so interpreted by Lys one of your owne authors: Ergo, also Antichrist himselfe shall pretend one thing, and teach another, and vtter his lyes through hypocrisie.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul calleth it the mysterie of iniquitie, 2. Thess. 2. 7. and he shall come in all deuiablenesse of vnrighteousnesse, verf. 10. and God shall send them strong delusion, to beleue lyes, verf. 11. All this prouoeth that Antichrist shall worke closely, cunningly, mystically, by de-

Argum. 3. Antichrist shall be the greatest enemy to Christ and his kingdome, that euer was in the world. But he is a greater enemy that pretendeth friendship, and yet is a foe, that vnder the name of Christ persecuteth the Christian faith, then he that openly destroyeth it, making no shew of religion: as Dauid complaineth, Psal. 41. 9. Teu my familiar friend whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lift up his heele against me. This was accomplished in Iudas, who betrayed Christ with a kisse, who was the greatest enemy of Christ, sinning against his owne knowledge and conscience: Euen so they now a daies, are the greatest enemies that Christ and the Church hath, that betray Christ with a kisse, which name themselves the Church of God, and yet make hauck of the Church.

Argum. 4. S. Paul also sheweth, that Antichrist, vnder colour of religion, shall be an enemy to religion and the Church: for he shall sit in the temple of God, that is, take vpon him the name and title of the Church, and yet an aduersarie vnto it. For he that publicly taketh away the exercise of religion, cannot be said to sit in the Church of God; as the heathen persecuting Emperors did, and Isabel the Apostata: but this agreeth better to one, that by bearing Christs name, shall wound the Christian faith, and this is the Pope: Origene writeth to the same purpose: Qui simulat christianum, &c. He that dissemblath the truth, wresting the Scripture to prooue false doctrine, he it is that is an enemy, & super Calcedonem scripturam sedet, and sitteth above the chaire of the Scriptures, Thess. 2. 7. in Marsh. And thus the Pope of Rome taketh vpon him to dispenche, contrarie to the Gospels and Apostles: which first Bellarmin impudently denieth, that euer the Pope in word or deede tooke vpon him so to dispenche: the contrarie I haue proued before, Quest. 9. Secondly, saith he, if he doe dispenche with the positive precepts of the Apostle, he doth it, iuxta Apostolum, according to the Apostle, that is, according to his Apostolike authoritie.

Contra. First, he must shew his authoritie out of Scripture, that he hath power to dispenche against Scripture, but that shall he neuer doe: but the Apostle sheweth the contrarie, that he is accused, that taketh vpon him to teach any other doctrine, then the Apostle taught, Galath. 1. 9. Here all power and authoritie to dispenche against the Apostle is cut off for euer.

Lastly, Augustine saith as much, that Antichrist shall come with deceiueable doctrine, and shew of righteousness: Quid expatiens in Antichristo, nisi quia nomen suum honoraturus est, & Domini contempturus? Quid aliud facit, qui dicit, ego iustifico? Quid aliud est, dei ignorare iustitiam, & suam vel la confutere, quam dicere, ego iustifico, ego sanctifico? What other thing doe wee see in Antichrist, but that he shall honour his owne name, and contemne Christs? What else doth he, which saith, I doe iustifie, I make holie? What is this but to destroy the righteousness of God, and to bring in his owne?

Marke now I pray you, if all this be not true of the Pope of Rome: for he taketh vpon him to iustifie, to sanctifie, to dispenche with mens sinnes for an hundred, yea a thousand yeeres: to rid soules out of Purgatorie: nay, to commaund Angels to carrie their soules to heauen, that dye in their pilgrimage to Rome, as Pope Clement the 6. did: what is this else but to say, Ego iustifico, sanctifico, I iustifie, I sanctifie? And who I pray you, doth so, if Augustine may be iudge, but Antichrist. But thus the Pope doth: Ergo, he is Antichrist.

And to conclude, such an enemy is the Pope, as Leo the 1. speaketh of, Epist. 82. Pro fide vos agere debetis & fidei contrarius: Erit laesus nomine armamini, & contra Ecclesiam dimicatis. Ye thinke ye worke for the faith, and ye goe against the faith: you are armed with the name of the Church, and yet fight against the Church.

I will adde the testimonie of an holy confessor of Gods truth Walter Brute: That the Popes come in the name of Christ it is manifest, saying, that they are his principall Vicars vpon earth: wherefore seeing they make themselves the chiefe friends of Christ, and yet doe iustifie many lawes contrarie to the Gospell of Christ, it is plaine that they are in earth the most principall Antichrists, because there is no worfe plague or pestilence, then a familiar enemy. For pag. 482.

THE SEVENTH PART, CONCERNING

the miracles of Antichrist.

The Popes.

Antichrist, they say, shall be a Magitian, and worke strange signes and wonders by the power of the diuell: and these three miracles by name shall be wrought by him: He shall cause fire to come from heauen, and make the image of the beast to speake: and thirdly, he shall faigne himselfe dead and rise againe, Bellarmin. cap. 15.

1. He shall by the helpe of the diuell cause fire to come downe from heauen, as it is Apocalypse 13. 13.

Anſw. Firſt, it is a great queſtion whether the diuell haue any ſuch power to bring downe fire from heauen: for the Ieſuite himſelfe remembreth the ſtorie 1 King. 18. How Baal his prieſts would haue fetched downe fire from heauen, but they could not: onely Eliu did it: and he that will doe the like, muſt haue Eliu his ſpirit, as Chriſt ſaith, Luk. 9. 55.

Council Bracaraenſ. 1. can. 8. It was decreed thus: Si quis credet, quod diabolus tonitrua, fulgura, tempeſtates, ſiccitates ſua auctoritate facit, ſicut Prifcillianu docet, anathema ſit: If any man beleue, that the diuell of himſelfe can raiſe tempeſts, thunder, lightning, drought, as Prifcillianu teacheth, let him be accuſed. How therefore can Antichriſt, who worketh by Satan, doe that which Satan himſelfe cannot doe?

Secondly, It is very groſſe to vnderſtand this literally: for the whole chapter is myſticall, of the beaſt with ſeuen heads, of another beaſt with two hornes, and all the reſt. But three wayes Antichriſt may fitly be ſaid to bring fire from heauen. Firſt, by fire the holy Ghoſt may be vnderſtood, as Matth. 3. and Aët. 2. The ſpirit appeared in fierie tongues: ſo Antichriſt and his miniſters make men beleue, that they doe conſerre the holy Ghoſt, as in conſecration, in abſolution of ſinners, and ſuch like. Secondly, the Popes thunderbolts of excommunication, are reſembled to fire, whereby he hath made the whole world aſtrayd in times paſt, as though he could cauſe the heauens to fall vpon men: yea, to make the matter more likely, the Pope uſeth burning Tapers in excommunicating men, which with violence are throwne downe as though God himſelfe did rayne fire from heauen vpon them. And this is the terrible manner of their excommunication: there are three candles burning ſet vp; and then they begin to accuſe them, whom they excommunicate, bodie and ſoule to the diuell: and let vs ſay they, quench their ſoules in hell fire, if they be dead, as this candle is put out (and with that they put out one of the candles: ) If they be a-live, let vs pray, that their eyes may be put out, as this candle is, and ſo the ſecond candle goeth out, and that all their ſenſes may faile them, as this candle looſeth his light, and ſo the third candle goeth out. Behold, here is the fire which the Pope and his popelings doe bring from heauen. Sir Bullinger ſerm. 6. in Apocalypſ. Adde vnto theſe their fierie ceremonies, their fierie iugling trickes alſo, as Cardinall Beſſus reporteth of Gregory the ſeuenth, that great Sorcerer: Cum uelut manica ſua diſcutiebat &c. When he liſt, he would ſhake his ſleeues, and out flew ſparkes of fire, &c. Thirdly, the Dragon is ſaid, Apocal. 12. 4. with his tayle to draw many ſtars from heauen: that is, many excellent men, as ſtars in gifts and knowledge, ſhall be deceiued by the Pope, and be wonne vnto him: yea the Pope himſelfe is a Starre fallen from heauen to the earth, from heavenly doctrine to earthly tradition, Apocal. 9. 1. Thus Antichriſt alſo may be ſaid to fetch fire from heauen.

2 The ſecond miracle, he ſhall cauſe the Image of the beaſt to ſpeake, which the Ieſuite vnderſtandeth literally, that is, groſſely.

Anſw. Firſt, Beſſarion and our Ieſuites doe not here agree: for Beſſarion ſaith, that theſe two miracles ſhall be wrought by Antichriſt himſelfe, to fetch fire from heauen: and to cauſe the Image to ſpeake. But the Rhemuſts ſay, this other beaſt, is another falſe Prophet, inferiour to Antichriſt, which ſhall alſo worke wonders, ſuch an one as Caluin, ſay they: where they ſhew their malice, more then learning; for Caluin, they know, tooke not vpon him to worke myracles, Amos. Apocal. 13. ſect. 3.

2 This cauſing the Image to ſpeake hath a better meaning: The Image of the beaſt is the ſhadow of the olde ſtately Empire of Rome, which was erected by the Pope: for the Weſt part wanted an Emperour the ſpace of three hundred yeeres from Auguſtulus time till Pope Leo the third, who made Charles the great King of France, Emperour: And at this day is there nothing in the Empire, but onely a name, title and Image: for neither hath the Emperour the Imperiall authoritie, which is in the Pope, nor the Imperiall kingdome, vnleſſe he haue them of his owne. And the Pope onely maketh this Image to ſpeake, for vnleſſe hee doe confirme the election of the King of the Romanes, he is not thought worthie the name of Emperour, Bullinger ſheweth.

3 And yet we deny not, but that they both haue and may make Images ſpeake either by the helpe of the diuell, as Daniſane cauſed a Roode to ſpeake; or by iugling, as the Roode of grace by gimmals was made to roule the eyes, moue the lips, and ſuch like, in King Henries dayes.

3 The third miracle that Antichriſt ſhall worke, is to faigne himſelfe dead, and to riſe againe, Apocal. 13. 3.

Anſw. There can be no ſuch thing gathered out of the text. Firſt, the words will not beare it: the text is, that one of the heads was wounded to death, and the wound was healed: which cannot be ſo meant, as though he fayned himſelfe dead: but he receiued a wound indeede.

2 The ſenſe is myſticall, as thorough the whole chapter: Firſt, it is ſaid, that the ſeuenth head was wounded to death: but reuiued againe; that is, the ſeuenth government of the Romanes in the Popedom: for the Popacie had many times deadly blowes, and yet was healed againe, eſpecially when there were three Popes together, at Rome, in France, and the third in Spayne: But this wound wound was cunningly healed vp in Pope Martin the first, in the Councell of Constance, the other three being deposed. See Bullinger Serm. 59. Secondly, it is said vers. 14. that the beast whose Image remained, had the wound of a sword, and yet liued: which is vnderstood of the Roman Empire, reuiued and quickened by the Pope.

The Protestants.

It is true that Antichrist shall worke signes and wonders by the power of Sathan, 2. Theff. 2. but lying signes, both because they shall be done to confirme lyes, neither shall they be such as the Prophets wrought, but many of them but cunning and cousoning sleights of iuglers. And for such wonders we neede not to search farre, the Popish Church is full of them: where els then should we looke for Antichrist?

1. There haue been of the Popes themselves Sorcerers and Coniurers, such an one Antichrist shall be, saith Belarmine. Siluester the second came vp to the Papacie by the helpe of the diuell, as we haue before shewed. Gregory the seventh was condemned in the Councell of Brixia for a Coniurer: and Beno a Cardinall in those dayes thus writeth of him: that on a time he sending two of his seruants for a certaine Sathanicall booke, charging them not to looke into it; they notwithstanding looked into it, and presently a great multitude of diuellish spirits were round about them; who were instant vpon them to knowe why they were called for; the seruants being at the first astonished, yet comming to themselves, enioyned them to plucke downe certaine high walles neere to Rome: and so they came to their master, Fax pag. 176. What other Antichrist now neede wee looke for? If he must be a Coniurer, we may here make our choyce. Beside these two, Platina and other writers make mention of 20. Popes that bound themselves as slaues to the diuell.

2. We are not ignorant, what lyes and fables are reported by the Papists of the myraculous acts of their popish Saints, of the which we haue spoken before: As how Dunstun appeared to a cripple, that came to his Tombe to be helped of his lamenesse: How Plegildus a priest saw and handled the shape of a childe vpon the Altar, which after he had kissed returned agayne to the likenesse of bread. How a certaine Jewes boy tolde his father that he saw a childe broken in peeces vpon the Altar and distributed among the Christians: and the boy for that, was cast into a furnace of fire, and was preserued from the fire by the Virgin Mary, which appeared to him, and spred her garment ouer him. Many such either lyes and fables, or workes of diuels the popish Church hathe: what neede we therefore doubt, but that it is the Antichristian Church?

3. Augustine saith, Saint Paul calleth them lying wonders, either because Antichrist shall deceiue men per phantasmatas, with iugling sleights, or because, ad mundicia portrahet credulas, by his wonders he shall make them beleeuelyes. But in which sense they are so called, it shall appeare when Antichrist is come saith he: and indeede it is now apparant; for our aduersaries haue plentie of both kindes, both myracles wrought indeed by the diuell, and many pretie iugling frates beside.

These lying fables and forged miracles, which the Popes worke by, are euident signes of their Antichristian profession: For Antichrist shall come with the power of Sathan with signes and lying wonders, 2. Theff. 2. 9. Stories shew this to bee true: Leo the third confirmed by his decree, that the blood which issued out of a wooden Crucifix at Mantua, was the very blood of Christ, anno. 800. Anno. 1470. one Alanus a drowsie dreaming Monke forged this blasphemous tale, how the Virgin Mary came into his Cell, kissed him, drew out her breasts, and espoused her selfe to him: and these and such like Monkish tales went for currant in those dayes. Not much vnlike to the wicked practise of Polychronius a Monothelite heretike, who affirmed before the whole Councell Constantinop. 6. action. 15. that a certaine beautifull young man appeared vnto him, and taught him to lay that there was but one will in Christ: and gaue him this for a signe, that he should lay the schedule of his confession vpon a dead bodie, and so raise it to life: The Councell hearing him, immediatly caused a dead bodie to be brought, but Polychronius muttering ouer the same a great while, could doe nothing, and so was condemned of the Councell for a lyar and an heretike.

Many such fabulous miracles popish bookes are full of: such are, in the iudgement of a graue writer of their side, Petrus Venerius his catalogue of the Saints, and the Martyrologue of Hasswardus the Monke: Multis scatent quisquilijs: These bookes (saith he) are stuffed with much paltre stuffe. Yea, the liues of the fathers, vnworthie of Ieromes name, are full of such fabulous narrations: See Esperus in 2. Timoth. p. 151. C. Seeing then that the popish Church is full of lying signes and miracles, where is Antichrist more like to be found, then there?

Tharasmus well said therefore Nicen. 2. Miracula non credentibus data sunt, sed ijs, qui in incredulitate versantur: Miracles are not for those that beleeuelyes, but for incredulous persons. The incredulitie then of Papists better appeareth not, then by their insatiabie desire, and superstitious vse of miracles.

Fox, pag. 1025.

Add vnto these the beleefe of Iohn Tenkesbury confessor of the truth: Antichrist is not an outward thing, that is a man, that should suddenly appeare with wonders, as your forefathers talked of him, but Antichrist is a spiriual thing &c.

THE EIGHT PART OF THE QUESTION,

concerning the warres, and kingdome of Antichrist.

The Papists.

64. Error.

Bellarmino saith, that Antichrist shall make great battailes against the Saints, and shall conquer the whole world: first, by craft he shall aspire to the kingdome of the Iewes: Secondly, he shall fight with three kings, of Lybia, Egypt, Ethiopia. Thirdly, with a great armie he shall persecute the Christians throughout the world; and this shall be the battaile of Gog and Magog, Id. l. 5. cap. 16.

Argum. 1. That he shall craftily aspire to the kingdome, he proueth it out of Dan. 11. 21. where it is prophesied, of one that he shall obtaine the kingdome by flatteries.

Ans. This prophesie of Daniel, as likewise the whole chapter, was historically accomplished in Antiochus Epiphanes, who defrauded Seleucus his brothers sonne of the kingdome, and circumvented his elder brother Demetrius: so that it being once fulfilled, it cannot be wrested to any other sense: of Antichrist it cannot be ment; for here is a succession of Kings described, vers. 19. One is said to be ouerthrowne, that is, Seleucus, but not in battaile, for he was poysoned, vers. 11. There another is said to be ouerthrowne and to be no more found, that is, Antiochus magnus. But Antichrist cannot succeed any in the kingdome of the Iewes: for he shall be their first King, as the Papists imagine.

Argum. 2. He shall (saith Bellarmino) ouercome three Kings, of Lybia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Dan. 11. 43. and this horne shall remoue three other hornes, Dan. 7. 8.

Ans. This also must needes be vnderstood of Antiochus Epiphanes: and they are two prophesies. First, he is called a little horne, because he was not heire to the kingdome: he remoueth three other hornes: for by his meanes Ptolemaus Philopater was cast out of the kingdome in his fathers time: Antiochus the great: his brother Seleucus poysoned, his sonne Demetrius disinherited, Trem. Dan. 7. 20. The second prophesie was also accomplished by Antiochus, who ouercame Egypt, and the countries adioyning.

Of Antichrist it cannot bee vnderstood: for the first prophesie speaketh of a beast with ten hornes, which must bee vnderstood of one kingdome and monarch, and by the ten hornes ten Kings are signified: for so was Antiochus Epiphanes the tenth from Seleucus: here then is a succession of Kings: but Antichrist shall not succeed any.

Argum. 3. The Iesuite saith, that Antichrist with a great armie shall vexe the whole world, and that shall bee the battaile of Gog and Magog prophesied of, Ezech. 38. 39. and Apocal. 20.

Ans. The prophesie of Ezechiel was fulfilled in the time of the Macchabees, when as Gog and Magog, that is Antiochus with the helpe of the Syrians and Scythians and other countries, molested the people of God: for vers. 23. chap. 39. the Prophet speaketh of the captiuitie of Israel, from the which they should at that time be deliuered. And againe, the Lord would not leaue his Church, which at that time endured great afflictions at the hands of the heathen, comfortlesse: but if these prophesies of Ezechiel and Daniel concerned them not, then small had been their comfort. Lastly, the Iewes may with as good reason vnderstand the prophesies concerning Christ, of their Messiah, whom they yet looke for, as you may these prophesies concerning the enemies of the Church, of your Antichrist:

The other prophesie also is fulfilled, Apocal. 20. 8. how Gog and Magog from the foure corners of the earth, shall compass the tents of the Saints: for by Gog and Magog, is vnderstood the whole multitude of the enemies of the Church both within and without, as Turkes, Papists, infidels, which all haue agreed together at times and in their turnes, though enemies amongst themselves, to afflict the people of God.

And yet more particularly Anno. 1300. the Church of God began to bee molested with the armies of Gog and Magog: when Boniface the eight shewed himselfe in his Emperiall robes, and so was the Gog in the West; and Ottomannus was crowned Emperour of the Turkes, Magog in the East.

And if you will needes also haue the other two prophesies fulfilled againe, being once before accomplished: they agree fitly to the Turkish Empire: for Mahomet by craft and subtiltie aspired to a kingdome, and in short time he ouerran Egypt and Lybia, with other parts of Africa.

WE denie that there shall come any such Antichrist: or that it is possible for him to wage battaile with the whole earth. We grant that the Antichrist of Rome hath warred with the Church, poisoning it with corrupt doctrine, and persecuting the same by fire and sword: which his rage is well slaked now, God be praised, in many places, and his tyrannie ouerpast: miserable were the state of the Church, if it should endure such a brunt againe.

Argum. 1. It is impossible, that Antichrist in so short a time as three yeeres and an halfe, should conquer all nations, and be Monarch of the whole world, burne and sacke Rome, and drive out the Pope, as the Papists grant themselves, Hellum lib. 4. cap. 3. de papistis: A man can not in that space trauaile through the whole world, much lesse conquer it. See the iudgement of one Hentenius a papist of this matter before par. 2. qu. 10.

And seeing Antichrist shall begin at Ierusalem, make his habitation there, and haue an ende there: (for, say they, he shall be slaine in Mount Oliuet, Gloss. sup. Apocal.) It is not like that in his owne person he should conquer the world: neither can it be thought that he shall do it by his deputies, for then they should be the Antichrists, and not he. See what a Labyrinth you are fallen into, out of the which you cannot wind your selues.

Argum. 2. Antichrist is not described in Scripture as a warriour, or warlike man, sitting hardnesed in his tent; but like an hypocrite aduancing himselfe in the temple; not comming with engins of warre, but deluding and deceiuing with false miracles, and lying signes, 1. Thesal. 2. Not with Harolds of armes openly proclaiming warre: but he shall worke in a mysterie, Apocal. 17. 5. Wherefore it is but a popish dreame and fancie, that Antichrist shal be such a mighty warriour: yet we denie not but that diuers of the Popes haue beene warriours; but that was beyond the commission of Peters crosse keyes.

Thirdly, they haue no ground of this their opinion out of Scripture: for neither Ezekiel nor Daniel maketh for them, prophecyng of the state of the Church before Christ: nor yet the Apocalypse, the prophecie of Gog and Magog, being accomplished in the greatest part already. Wherefore away with these mistie clowdes of your brain-sicke inuentions: they shall not be able to abide the lightsome sun-beames of the truth.

Lastly, if Antichrist by his warlike and bloody disposition may be discerned, wee shall finde him no where sooner then in Rome: Boniface 8. shewed himselfe openly in his Emperiall robes with the sword carried before him: Innocent the 2. threw Peters keyes into Tyberis, and drew out his sword: and vnder this Pope, as Chronicles make mention, in the space of seven yeeres were two hundred thousand men slaine by continuall warre. Alexander Farnesius Cardinal, Pope Paulus the 3. his Captaine generall against the Lutheranes, gaue out these threatening wordes, that he would shed so much blood of the Lutheranes, that their horse might swimme therein.

Such furious and Antichristian outrages of Popes, are contrarie to the decrees of antiquities Synod. Francisc. Seruis Dei armaturam portare, pugnare aut in exercitum pergere prohibetur: We forbid the seruants of God (he meaneth Clergie men) to beare armour, to fight, or go to battell.

Council. Agathens. decret. 22. Gratian. Non licet Episcopo, &c. It is not lawfull for a Bishop to finite any with his hands, much lesse with his sword.

Master Rogers holy Martyr iudgeth the Church of Rome Antichristian, because of their tyrannicall lawes, and maintenance thereof by cruell persecution, For. p. 1488.

THE NINTH AND LAST PART OF THIS

question, whether the Pope be Antichrist.

The Papists.

This question pincheth our aduersaries very sore, that we should touch their head so neere, as to make him Antichrist. For this being once knowne, we need not labour much about other matters: for Antichrist with all his doctrine must not be heard, but abhorred of the Church.

They therefore, craftily foreseeing this, do take great paines to deliuer the Pope out of this danger, and haue found out many starting holes, but all to finall purpose: yea their forefathers seeing the matter so plaine, and almost put out of doubt, gaue streight charge in the late Council of Laterane to all Preachers, that none should dare once to speake of the comming of Antichrist. This argueth a guiltie conscience. But yet they face out the matter, and say, the Pope cannot be Antichrist: their arguments are none other then those we haue heard, being eight in number.

1. Antichrist shall be one singular man: the Popes haue beene many, par. 1. of this question. Secondly, he shall reigne but three yeeres and an halfe: but the Pope hath continued many hundred yeeres, par. 2. Thirdly, he shall be knowne by his name: the Popes haue sundry names, par. 3. Fourthly, he must come of the stocke of the Iewes: but there was neuer yet any Iewe Pope, par. 4. Fifthly, his seate must be at Ierusalem: the Pope is at Rome, par. 5. Sixthly, he shall manifestly deny Christ: so doth not the Pope, say they, par. 6. Seuenly, he shall do strange miracles, as bring downe fire from heauen, cause Images to speake, par. 7. Eightly, he shall wage great battels, and conquer all the world, par. 8. which cannot agree to the Pope, par. 8. hee is not Antichrist.

Anſw. To theſe eight arguments, we haue before answered ſeuerally; ſhewing how fabulous, ridiculous, and impoſſible our aduerſaries aſſertions are, without ground of Scripture, ſhew of reaſon, or colour of argument. Wherefore we will not trouble the Reader with needleſſe repetitions, deſiring him to haue recourſe to that which hath beene already ſaid.

Argum. 9. Further the Rhemiſts do thus reaſon: Antichriſt ſhall exalt himſelfe aboue all, that is called God. 2. Theſſ. 2. 4. So doth not the Pope, who is ſo farre from exalting himſelfe aboue God, that he prayeth to Saints, kneeleth before the altar, adoreth the Eucharift. anot. 2. Theſſ. 2. 4. & ibid. ſect. 10.

Anſ. Firſt the Pope in hypocriſie maketh ſhew of a ſuperſtitious kind of deuotion, yet is in truth the Prince of Pride: for as he calleth himſelfe Seruum ſervorum; Seruant of ſeruants; yet hath made Kings his ſlaues: ſo alſo, though he ſeeme to be a worſhipper of Saints, yet hee taketh vpon him more then either Angell or Saint, as to forgiue ſinnes, to deliuer ſoules from Purgatorie, to diſpenſe with the Scriptures. Secondly, as touching the adoration of the Eucharift, therein hee ſheweth his pride, in adoring his owne inuention; and beſide hee honoureth his breadden god with Maſſe ſeruice for his owne aduantage, becauſe it is ſo gainfull vnto him: and yet what account he maketh of it may appeare, when his throne is ſet higher then the altar; and in proceſſion, he rideth on mens ſhoulders, when the hoſt is carried vpon a palfreyes backe.

Argum. 10. Sathan muſt be bound a thouſand yeeres, and afterward let looſe; and then Antichriſt ſhall come, whoſe kingdome ſhall increaſe, and faith decreaſe toward the end of the world. But if the Pope be Antichriſt, who hath beene theſe thouſand yeeres in the Church, then Antichriſt ſhould raigne while Sathan is bound, which can not be, and his kingdome waxe weaker toward the end of the world contrary to the Scripture, which ſaith, that at Chriſts coming, faith ſhall ſcarce be found in the earth, &c. Rhemiſt. ſect. 7. 20. Apocal.

Anſw. Firſt we ſay not that Antichriſt hath beene 1000. yeeres in the Church, but began to be revealed 1000. yeeres after Chriſt in Silueſter 2. who by Necromancy obtained the Papacie, and in Boniſace 8. who did iuſtifie the error of Purgatorie and Inuocation of Saints. So that Sathan looſing and Antichriſts raigning ſhall fall out together, that is at the expiration of the thouſand yeeres. Secondly, it is more agreeable to the Scriptures, that the kingdome of Antichriſt ſhall be weakened toward the end of the world: God ſhal firſt conſume him with the breath of his mouth, that is his word, as alreadie, thanks be to God, the preaching of the Goſpell hath ſhaken the wallies of Babylon: but hee ſhall perfectly be deſtroyed by the brightneſſe of his Coming. 1. Theſſ. 2. 8. And though faith generally ſhall decay in the ende of the world, becauſe iniquities ſhall abound: yet faith ſhall remaine in the true members of Chriſt, that are in continual expectation of his coming.

The Proteſtants.

That the Pope of Rome is very Antichriſt, and that all the qualities and properties which the Scripture deſcribeth Antichriſt by, do ſitly agree vnto his perſon: and that we are not therefore to expect and looke for any other Antichriſt: Thus by teſtimonie of Scripture, and ſufficient reaſons deduced out of the ſame, we truſt it ſhall appeare to all men.

Argum. 1. The firſt place of Scripture is Dan. 11. Where many notes and markes are declared proper to Antichriſt, yet eſpecially ſet forth to deſcribe Antiochus Epiphanes, who might be very well a type and figure of Antichriſt, who was then to come.

1. Verſe 36. It is ſaid, He ſhall do what him liſteth. This is moſt true of the Pope: his will muſt ſtand for reaſon, Diſtinct. 96. cap. ſatis. If the Pope ſhould draw infinite ſoules to hell, no man is to ſay vnto him, Sir, why do you ſo? Diſtinct. 40. Heere Bellarmino hath but this poore ſhift to ſay, that it is meant onely of publike iudgement, that no man is by authoritie to call the Pope to account: but yet a brotherly admonition may be vſed. But who ſeeth not that the words are generall: Nemo debet ei dicere: No man ought to ſay vnto him: neither Iudge, nor other?

2 He ſhall magnifie himſelfe againſt God, and ſpeake blaſphemous things againſt God: hath not the Pope done ſo? Of him it is ſaid, that God and the Pope haue but one Conſiſtorie: I am able to do almoſt all that God can do, Fox. pag. 783. articul. 192. I am aboue all and in all: Hagiouſ. Nay, that Dominion and Lordſhip which Chriſt had in earth, but habitu, in habite, the Pope hath actu, in act and in deed. Againe, as we reade, the earth is the Lords, and the fulneſſe thereof, and as Chriſt ſaith, all power is giuen mee in heauen, and in earth: ſo is it to be affirmed, that the Vicar of Chriſt hath power on things celeftiall, eſtreamall, infernall, apud Fox. p. 791. col. 1. Now let the diſcreet Reader iudge, whether this fellow doth not magnifie himſelfe, and ſpeake blaſphemouſly againſt God.

3 He ſhall proſper till the wrath be accompliſhed: So hath the Pope had but too good ſucceſſe: he hath ſubdued Emperours, and made them his ſeruants, trode vpon their necks, made them ſerue at his table, crowned them with his ſeete, made them hold his ſtirrop, and leade his horſe by the bridle. But we do hope that his date is out, and that he ſhall proſper no longer.

4 Verſ. 37. He ſhall not care for the God of his fathers : No more doth the Pope : for hee hath invented and erected a new breaden god, which he worſhippeth, hangeth vp in Churches, carrieth about in proceſſion, being but a peece of bread. This breaden god amight, his forefathers neuer knew.

He ſhal not care for the deſires of women: So he prohibiteth lawfull marriage, permitteth adulteries, and the vnnatural luſt of Sodomites. Belarmine firſt denyeth the text, which is faithfully tranſlated according to the Hebrew. Secondly, he ſaith, the place is meant literally and properly of Antiochus, who was giuen to the pleaſures of women.

Anſw. Firſt, if it be meant literally of Antiochus, then can it not be meant literally of your Antichriſt: If Antiochus be but a type of Antichriſt, then can you not neceſſarily conſclude out of this place: for types proue not, vneſſe they be diuine, that is, appoynted of God to be types, which you cannot ſhew for this place: See then, the beſt arguments that you haue for your Antichriſt, out of the prophecies of Daniel and Ezechiel, are proued nothing worth. Secondly, as Antiochus was giuen to vnlawfull deſires of women, ſo is the Pope: yet might he be an enemy to chaſt and holy marriage, and ſo is the Pope. And by the way let it be noted, that the Jeſuite picketh quarrels with Scripture, and maketh it falſe: for the text ſaith, He, that is, Antiochus, ſhall not care for the deſires of women. Yes (ſaith the Jeſuite) he ſhall be giuen to the pleaſures of women, cleane contrary to the text, Belarm. cap. 21.

6 Verſ. 38. He ſhall honour his god Mamzim, that is, a god of power and riches, with golde ſiluer, precious ſtones: Both of theſe are moſt true of the popiſh religion: for their god hath brought them great riches, lands, treaſure, poſſeſſion: by their idolatrous Maſſes, they haue greatly enriched themſelves, wherein their breaden god playeth the chiefe part: and therefore they doe worſhip him againe with gold, ſiluer, precious ſtones: what rich Corporals, and Altarclothes, Copes, Veſtiments of veluet, ſilke, wrought with golde, are ſcene in their Churches? what gilding of Roodes, and Roodlofts, garniſhing of Idols, what rich Crucifixes of ſiluer, of gold, beſet with pearle and precious ſtones?

This deſcription therefore of Daniel, as you ſee, doth in euery reſpect agree with the conditions and properties of Antichriſt of Rome, Argument. Ilyrici.

Argum. 2. Secondly, S. Pauls deſcription in euery poynt alſo is verified in the Pope. Firſt: He ſhall exalt himſelfe aboue God, and all that is called God, 2. Theſſ. 2. 4. So the Pope challengeth the full authoritie of Chriſt, as we haue ſhewed before, and exalteth himſelfe aboue Emperours, which are called gods vpon earth: yea they haue taken the iuſt proportion of inequalitye betwene the Pope and Emperour: for the Pope is 47. degrees aboue the Emperour, as the Sunne is 47. degrees bigger then the Moone, Iuſt. 3. in decretalib.

2 He ſhall ſit in the temple, that is, in the Church: ſo the Pope nameth himſelfe head of the Church, and hath the keyes, as he braggeth, both of heauen and hell. Therefore the Turke cannot be that Antichriſt, becauſe he is out of the Church: and ſo in truth is the Pope, but yet he challengeth to him and his the name of the Church.

3 The myſterie wrought in Pauls time, and afterwar. I encreaſed: ſo not long after the Apoſtles time, the Biſhops of Rome began to liſt vp their heads aboue other Churches, as Maximus falſified the Councell of Nice, and ſent to the 6. Councell of Carthage, to haue it there confirmed, that it might be lawfull to ſend vp appeales to Rome.

4 Antichriſt ſhall come with lying ſignes: So hath the Pope done, as experience proueth, and we haue ſhewed before.

5 Verſ. 11. God ſhall ſend ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhall beleeue lyes. And in time of Poperie, men indeede were ſo ſtrongly deluded, that the father perſecuted the ſonne, the ſonnes ſet fire to their father, yea the husband was made a witneſſe againſt the wife, the wife againſt her husband, and ſeruants accuſed their maſters. Theſe things are ſo well knowne in ſtories, that I neede not come to particulars.

6 Antichriſt is called a wicked man, and a man of finne, verſ. 3. 8. And where ſhall you finde more wicked men, then among the Popes? Silueſter the ſecond gaue his ſoule to the diuell to obtaine the Papacie, Fax. pag. 167. Benno reporteth of Hildebrand, that he poyſoned ſixt Popes to come to the Popedom. Pope Stephen and Sergius, tooke vp the bodie of Formoſus, and mangled it, cutting off his head and fingers, and ſo caſt it into Tibris, Fax. p. 120. Much vnlike to one of their predeceſſors Saxtus the third, who tooke the bodie of Baſſus his enemy being dead, who had accuſed him before, embawmed it, and buried the ſame with his owne hands. We haue heard before, what a holy Father Pope Iohn the thirteenth was, he lay with his owne ſiſter, and with his fathers Concubines, playing at dice called for the diuell, was ſlaine in adulterie. And was it not, I pray you, a common prouerbe in England? He that goeth to Rome once, ſeeth a wicked man; he that goeth twiſe, learneth to know him; he that goeth the third time, bringeth him home with him Fax. pag. 841.

That

That Antichrist that man of sinne sitteth in Rome, it might easily be proued by a particular induction: for sinne being the transgression of the lawe, as Saint Iohn defineth it, 1. Epist. chap. 3. vers. 4. If we shall shewe how the Pope of Rome hath notoriously transgressed the lawe and euery part thereof, who will doubt but that he is that man of sinne, and so consequently Antichrist.

Ex Balzi chronico de actis pontif.

The first Commandement: Thou shalt haue no other gods, &c. Among other corruptions, forbiddeth all prophanenes and infidelities, all confederacie or societie with the diuell: for the first we haue diuers examples of Popes: Boniface the eight when Parcherius Archbishop of Genua came to him to receiue ashes in a publike solemnity, he cast ashes into his eyes and said, Memento homo, quia Gibellinus es, &c. Remember man that thou art of the faction of the Gibellines, and shalt retorne to dust. Was not here great deuotion? Gregory the twelfth pulled a certaine preaching Carmelite Friar out of the pulpit and cast him into prilon, because he perswaded the Popes, who were then deuided, to vnite. Innocentius the eight was scene for the most part to sleepe in the time of diuine seruice. Iulius the second cast S. Peters keyes into Tyberis in great disdain, saying, Seeing Peter keyes did not serue his turne, he will try what Pauls sword can doe. Leo the tenth is reported to haue said to Cardinall Bombus: Quantum nobis profuit fabula ista de Christo: How much hath this fable or tale of Christ aduantaged vs? And such hath been the pietie and deuotion of our holy fathers of Rome.

Concerning the second point, their familiaritie with the diuell, the two forenamed examples of Siluester and Gregorie are able to certifie vs. Benedictus the 9. about the same time, was accustomed to call vpon euill spirits, and could by his diuellish enchantments, cause any woman whom he liked, to come vnto him. Paulus the 3. was a forcerer and enchaunter: hee gaue vnto a certaine noble Matrone a little hallowed brassen ball to hang about her necke, which should shield her from certaine molestations: he made Dionysius Seruus a notable Necromancer, Cardinall, thereby shewing his affection to that profession. And many other of the Popes were giuen to these diuellish studies, to the number of 22. ex Balzo, Platina, & alijs.

The 2. Commandement: Thou shalt make to thy selfe no graven image, &c. How the Popes haue transgressed this law, their practise to this day sheweth, who are more giuen to idolatrie and worship of images, then any knowne Nation vnder the Sunne. Constantinus the 1. decreed that images should be worshipped in Churches. Bonifacius the 4. begged of wicked Phocas Emperour, the Church in Rome called Pantheon, and in stead of Cybele an Ethnick Goddesse, there placed the image of the Virgin Mary to be adored. Leo the 3. iudged certaine forged blood which issued out of a wooden Crucifix, to be the true blood of Christ, and so to be adored.

The 3. Commandement: Thou shalt not take the Name, &c. Here blasphemie is forbidden. Diuers of the Popes haue been most horrible blasphemers: Iulius the 3. is a notable example hereof: who being forbidden of his Phisition to eate swines flesh, on a time called for it, more swinish himselfe, with great indignation and blasphemie, saying, giue me my porke, Al diuino de Dio: in despite of God. At another time, at supper missing the colde peacocke, which he commanded to be kept for him, he began to curse and sweare, and being admonished by some of his Cardinals, not to be moued so for a trifle: he added further, If God were angry with Adam for an apple, may not I much more for a peacocke, bring his chiefe Vscar vpon earth: ex Balzo, & alijs. Alexander the fift being at the poynt of death, said thus to the Cardinals, My peace I giue vnto you, my peace I leaue with you. Thus most blasphemously abusing the holy speech of Christ, and appropriating it to himselfe. Paulus the fourth said thus to his fellow Iesuites, whose sect he is said to haue founded, going to Rome, to be in the eye and sight of the world, Whither I goe, you cannot come: blasphemously abusing Christs speech to his owne purpose. Thus they are found grieuous transgressors of this law.

The 4. Commandement: Remember thou keepe holy, &c. Yet Alexander the sixt vpon festiual dayes gaue himselfe to heare Plautus Comedies, and to be present at other playes: his festiual exercise was, from Hadrianes Mount to behold the gay harlots, and braue bawdes and strumpets that passed by: ex Balzo de actis pontificis.

The 5. Honour thy father and mother, &c. Yet Paulus the third poysoned his mother and his nephew, that the whole inheritance of the Farnesians might come vnto him. And concerning the publike and common parents, Emperours and Kings and ciuill Magistrates; they were neuer more dishonored then by Popes: Alexander the third did tread on Henry the Emperours necke. Adrian made him hold his stirrup. Diuers of them caused Emperours to kisse their feete. Pasquell the second raised vp Henry the fift most vnnaturally against his owne father, to depose him from the Empire. Innocentius the third set vp Otho against the Emperour Philip, by whom he was slaine. Innocentius the fourth hired one Manfredus to poyson the Emperour Frederick. Such honor haue the Popes shewed to their earthly parents.

The 6. Thou shalt not kill. Iohn the 13. did thus vse his Cardinals, some had their eyes pulled out, some their tongues, some their fingers cut off. Gregorie the 7. poisoned; by wicked Brennus means, six Popes in order, to come himselfe to the Papacie. Urban the 6. put fire of his Cardinals into sackes, and drowned them. Alexander the 6. commaunded Antonius & Manuel his tongue, and both his hands to be cut off, because he made an oration inuocating against his impure life. Paulus the 3. poisoned his owne sister, whom he had knowne carnally, because she loued not her better then him: the same Pope also poisoned Fulgensius and Consarinius two Cardinals, that began somewhat to saue the Gospell.

The 7. Thou shalt not commit adulterie. As for simple fornication, it was no rare thing in the Popes chaire. John the 13. committed vncleannes with Raimera and Anna, two widowes. John the 23. was accused, Concil. Constantiens. sess. 11. for defiling of virgins. Paulus the 3. enticed a noble virgin to follie, promising her marriage.

The Popes many of them haue been adulterers. Gregorie the 7. retained Mathilda the Countesse, hauing forsaken her husband Earle Anon. Paulus the 3. was found with Nicholas Quercanus his wife, who gaue him a wound, which was seene till his dying day.

But what will ye say, if these holy fathers haue fallen into horrible incest? John the 23. was accused in the foresaid Councell, to haue knowne carnally his brothers wife. Alexander the 6. (oh most horrible impietie!) did lye with his own daughter Lucretia. Paulus the 3. that filthie wretch, vsed carnally his sister, daughter Constantia, and Neece. Neither stayed they here in these outrageous lusts, which were not yet against the naturall vse, but fell also into hellish vnnaturall filthines, into that abominable sinne of Sodomitie. Innocent the 2. did abuse two noble youths that were sent to Rome by the French Queene to bee instructed. Innocent the 3. had his Ganymedes, to whom, beside the rest of his Cardinals leaue, he gaue a red Hat. Neither did they onely in their owne filthie persons practise this wickednesse, but permitted it also to others. Sixtus the 4. created a Scrowes in Rome for both sexes: he gaue licence to his two nephewes Cardinals, and their house hold, in the three hot moneths of the yeere, Iune, Iuly, August, to vse masculine venerie. Alexander the 6. gaue leaue to Pet. Mendoza Cardinall, to vse his owne bastard sonne as his spouse: ex Babilon, & alijs. Who hearing now of these filthie abominations of that Trumpet of Babilon, will not easily graunt Antichrists seate to be there?

The 8. Thou shalt not steale. Notwithstanding this, Bonifacius the 7. carried away all S. Peters treasure at Rome, and fled to Constantinople. John the 18. as Platina saith, In pontificatu suo fuit & latro, behaued himselfe in his Papacie as a theefe and a robber. As for iniustice and oppression, which is also a kind of theft, nothing with the Popes was more common. Zacharias Pope put Chilperic King of France from his kingdome, and gaue it to Pippin. Adrian the first, Charles the King of France being dead, disinherited Bertha his wife with her two sonnes, and gaue the kingdome to Charles their vncle: and many such other examples might be alleaged.

The 9. Thou shalt not beare false witness, &c. Yet this notwithstanding, Vigilius accused Siluerius Bishop of Rome falsely, that he would haue deliuered Rome to the Gothes: Siluerius was therefore deposed, and Vigilius set in his place, who was iustly called to account by Theodora the Emperesse, for that he had promised to restore Anthemius Bishop of Constantinople, excommunicated by his predecessors, and afterward refused to doe it: ex pontificali. For this is also a breach of this law, not to performe the oth, or promise made, which with the Popes was not daintie. Paschal the 2. confirmed by an oth to Henry the 5. the imperiall right of inuesting Bishops: but afterward reuoked it againe. And as they were thus perfidious themselves, so they gaue counsell to others: Eugenius the 4. perswaded Vladislaus King of Hungarie to break his league made with Amurath the great Turke, which was to his owne ruine, and of all Christendome. Alexander the 6. betrayed Gomez Batatzates the great Turkes brother, that did flye to Rome for succour, and being thereto largely hired by the great Turke, procured him to be poisoned.

The like treacherous part played Alexander the 3. long before this with Fredrick the Emperour, who sent his counterfeite to the Sultane, against whom he warred, whereby the Emperour was taken: but the Sultane his enemy dealt honourably in deliuering him, whereas the Pope, his pretended friend, plaid a right Iudas part. The Popes their predecessors, though bad enough, yet were ashamed of such Iudaical practises: Nicholas 1. when Michael the Emperour sent to him, to deliuer one Theognostus, which was fled to the Pope for reliefe, made this answere: Nolumus, deo volente, Iudaproditoris similes esse, &c. We will not be like the traitor Iudas, nor be more wicked then the Pagans: for you may remember how one of your predecessors sent to the King of the Agarens, to haue one deliuered, but it was not granted: Epistol. ad Michael. Thus we see by the Popes owne testimonie, that they which betray such as of trust commit themselves vnto them, doe exceede paganorum nequitiam: are more wicked then the heathen: but such were some of the Popes.

The 10. Thou shalt not couet, &c. The couetousnes of Popes hath been insatiable, as it may appeare by the infinite treasure which they heaped together. John the 23. is said to haue gathered 205000.

207000. crownes. Calistus the 3. left to his successor, an hundred and fiftene thousand duckets, which he had scraped together by his Indulgences. Leo the 10. sent his Indulgences abroad with this commission, that whosoever would give ten shillings, should deliuer a soule from the paines of Purgatorie: the Popes chiefe factor for this merchandise, was one Simon a Frier Franciscane of Millaine, who by this means gathered such infinite summes of monie, that he offered in one day aboue 120000. duckets for the Popedome. And no marueile if the Popes did grow so infinitely rich, for all things were put to sale: as spirituall liuings, Bishopricks, benefices, &c. The Archbishop of Canturborie was wont to pay to the Pope tenne thousand stourence for his first frutes, and fise thousand for the vse of his pall: so did the Archbishop of York. Iohn the 23. exacted the tenths of Ecclesiasticall liuings. Pybus the 6. the first frutes. Innocentius the 7. more vnreasonable then they, would haue had halfe the frutes of Benefices, ex Balta. Cardinalships also were sold. Leo the 10. thade 31. Cardinals in one day, getting thereby vnreasonable summes of money. The Pope offered the Empire to sale: as Alexander the 3. tooke money of Alphonse King of Spaine for the Empire, and afterward sold it to another. Yea the Popedome it selfe hath bin set to sale: Benedictus the 9. sold the Papacie to Gregorius the 6. for fiftene hundred pound. Yea honestie and all is saleable at Rome: the renewes of the harlots in Rome amounteth yeerely to 40. thousand pound, Consul. Chronicle de H. Paul. 3. To conclude this place, considering this vnstable thirst of the Popes, the Greekes, anno 1330. or thereabout, made a sic anliwere to the Pope, who had sent to them before, telling them that Christ had but one Church, and he was the head thereof: their answere is this: Potestatem suam summam erga tuos subditos summitur credimus: superiorem suam summam tolerare non possumus, avaritiam satiare non valemus: Your tyrannie toward your subiects we easily beleue, your infinite pride we cannot beare, nor satiate your couetous desire: ex alib. Iohn. 23. Thus haue I shewed by the way the generall corruption that raigneth in the Papall chaire of pestilence, and the wicked visage of that sinfull seate, so that in no place in the world, neither amongst the Turkes or Infidels can the man of sinne be sooner found, then there. Let vs now proceede. Argum. 3. The third place wee doe take out of the Apocalypse, chap. 9. where is a plaine storie set downe of the Pope.

1. Vers. 1. He is a starre fallen from heauen: he is departed from the ancient faith of Rome to superstition and idolatry.

2. He hath the key of the bottomlesse pit: who giueth the crosse keyes in his armes but the Pope? Who saith he may euacuate all Purgatorie at once, if he will, but he? Who saith, he may, Plene iure currit animarum plenus secum ad tartara destrudere: By full right, carrie downe to hel with him charites laden with soules: cap. 8. Papadissus. 42. Is not this the Pope? Who then most fitly may be said to haue the key of the bottomlesse pit?

3. There arise out of the bottomlesse pit a great flocke of Locusts, that is, the innumerable sort of begging Friers: for they are in euery respect described: First, compared to Locusts for their number, vers. 1. There were an hundred diuers sorts of Friers, Fox pag. 260. Secondly, they had power given them for fise moneths: that is, as Walter Brute expoundeth it, taking a moneth for thirtie daies, and a day for a yeere, as it is prophetically taken, an hundred and fiftie yeeres for so long it was from the beginning of the Friers vnder Innocent the 3. anno 1212. to the time of Armandus, who preached, disputed, and wrote against the Friers, about anno 1360. Fox pag. 414. Thirdly, they shall sting like Scorpions, not slay all at once, but venome and poyson the conscience with the sting of their pestilent doctrine. Fourthly, other parts also of the description agree, as vers. 7. They are as horses prepared to battaile, that is, stouthe and ambitious, their haire as the haire of women, that is, they shall be effeminate, and giuen to the lusts of the flesh: their teeth as the teeth of Lions: they by valiant begging shall deuoure the portions of the poore: as it was well proued in King Henrie the 8. daies, in the Supplication of beggars, that the summe of the Friers almes came to a great summe in the yeere: for the fise orders of Friers had a penie a quarter for euery one of euery householder throughout England; that is, for them all twentie penie by the yeere: Suppose that there be but tenne households in euery towne, and let there be twentie thousand parishes and townes in England; it will nor want much of twentie thousand pound. Thus had they Lions teeth, that is, consuming and deuouring. Lastly, they haue a King, vers. 11. whose name is Abaddon, a destroyer: for the Pope, their chiefe prince and patrone, hath by his Antichristian doctrine laid waste the Church of God, Argument. Chytrai.

4. Argum. 4. The fourth place of Scripture wee will take out of the 17. of the Apocalypse, there the seate of Antichrist is described: First, vers. 3. It is called Babylon, the citie which raigneth ouer the Kings of the earth, vers. 18. This can be no other but Rome, which then had the Empire of the whole world: as Walter Brute, holy confessor of Gods truth, witnesseth: In the daies of S. Iohn the whole world was subiect to the temporall Empire of the citie of Rome, and afterward it was subiect to the spirituall Empire or dominion of the same, Fox pag. 499. Secondly, It is the citie built vpon vpon seven hills or mountaines, vers. 9. that is no other but Rome. Thirdly, the whore, which is Antichrist, shall sit vpon the beast with seven heads and ten hornes, that is, shall succede in the Empire, and haue the authoritie thereof: so hath the Pope. Fourthly, the ten hornes, that is, the Kings of the earth shall giue their authoritie to the beast, but afterward shall deuoure her flesh: Euen so the Kings of the earth, by their sword, maintained the authoritie of the Pope. But now being taught by the Gospell, they are made the Lords freemen, and begin to subdue their neckes from his yoke.

Argum. 5. The fifth place is, 1. Iohn 2. 22. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Iesus is Christe the same is Antichrist that denieth the father and the sonne.

Euen so the Pope of Rome, though not openly and apertly, yet closely and subtilly is an enemy vnto the whole Trinitie: He exalteth himselfe aboue God the father; because he taketh vpon him to dispenze not onely against the law of nature, but against the law of God, the morall law, and against the precepts both of the old and new Testament: but a law cannot be dispensed withall, but by the same authoritie, or greater.

Against Iesus Christ he exalteth himselfe, and all his offices; he denieth him to be the only Prophet, laying, the Scriptures are vnperfect, and that their traditions are also necessarie to saluation. Againe, he maketh other bookes Scripture, then those which are Canonically. His kingly office he doth arrogate to himselfe, in making lawes to binde the conscience, in ordaining other Sacraments, in granting Indulgences and Pardons, and saying that he is the head of the Church. His Priesthood he is an enemy vnto, constituting another priesthood after the order of Melchisedech, then that of our Saviour Christ, which begun vpon the Crosse, and remaineth still in his person, being incommunicable to any other creature: yet they make euery sacrificing priest to be of the order of Melchisedech. He impugneth the office of the holy spirit, counting that prophane which the holy Ghost hath sanctified, as marriage and meates: arrogateth in all things the spirit of truth not to erre: applieth the merits of Christs passion after his owne pleasure, by pardons, Indulgences, by ceremonies and Sacraments of his owne inuention, Fulk. 2. 7. b. 2. 2. 10.

Ergo, we conclude out of S. Iohn, that seeing he denieth Iesus to be Christ, he is Antichrist.

Argum. 6. Sixtly, Saint Paul saith, that Antichrist shall be an aduersarie, 2. Thess. 2. 4. An aduersarie in doctrine, teaching cleane contrarie to the Gospell of Christ: he doth the Pope.

1 The Scripture saith, wee ought to put our trust onely in God, and not in man, Ierem. 17. 7. and to call vpon God onely in the day of trouble, Psal. 50. 15. and to worship him in spirit and truth, Ioh. 4. 24. The Papiests say cleane contrarie, that we must call vpon Saints, and beleue they can helpe vs, and they teach vs to fall downe before Images, which are stockes and stones.

2 The Gospell teacheth, that we are freely saued by Iesus Christ, without workes, which neither merit remission of sinnes, nor eternall life: for eternall life is the free gift of God, Rom. 6. 23. And our sinnes are forgiven vs freely, because they are not imputed, Rom. 4. 6. They affirme cleane contrarie, that by our merits wee may deserue heauen: and that vita aterna, is merces bonorum operum, that eternall life is the reward of good workes. But Saint Paul saith, it is a free gift, Belarm. cap. 23.

3 The Gospell teacheth vs, that we should grow vp to an assurance of our election, 2. Pet. 1. 10 and with boldnes to call vpon the name of God, Heb. 4. 10. The Papiests say, we should bee kept alwaies in doubt, and it is presumption to be assured of the fauour of God.

4 The Gospell saith, that not onely externall acts, but euen secret thoughts are sinne, yea the very concupiscence of the flesh to be sinne, Genes. 6. 5. Rom. 7. 7. They denie that concupiscence and euill thoughts are sinne, vnlesse they be voluntarie, and haue the consent of the will, ibid.

5 The Gospell teacheth, that it is impossible for any man to keepe and performe the lawe of God, Rom. 8. 7. Luk. 17. 10. They doubt not to say, that a man by grace may fulfill the law, and by fulfilling of it deserue heauen.

6 Christ instituted the Sacrament in both kinds; and Paul, 1. Cor. 11 giuing a direction concerning the Sacrament, not onely to the Pastors and Ministers, but to the whole Church of Corinth, doth rehearse the institution in both kindes: but the Papiests doe minister but in one kinde to the people.

7 The Gospell saith, that the Church is builded vpon Christ, and he is the onely foundation thereof, 1. Cor. 3. 11. The Papiests hold that Peter first, and now the Pope, whom they make his successor, is the foundation of the Church, Argument. Chytrai. And thus we see, the Pope in his doctrine is a plaine aduersarie to Christ, and therefore Antichrist.

Argum. 7. The seventh argument, Apocalypse 17. 1. Antichrist is called the great whore: And here we are to note the singular prouidence of God, who suffereth not one jot of his word to fall to the ground: for euen so verily, anno 853. next after Leo the 4. there was a right whore elected Pope called Iohn, or if you will, Ioune the 8. who sate in the Papacie two yeeres, fixe moneths; and on a time being with childe, fell in labour in the middelt of a solemne procession. Whereupon there was a certaine Image of a woman with a childe set vp in the same place where the Pope was deliuered: And euer since the Popes, when they goe to Laterane, doe shun that streete, being in the neerer way, abhorring that fact and the memorie thereof. There was also long after a chayre of Porphyrie stone kept in Laterane, with an hole in the middelt, wherein the new elected Pope was wont to sit to haue his humanitie tried, Inel. pag. 428. Defens. Apol.

Obiect. 1. Harding and since him Bellarmino obiect, that there was neuer any such Pope, because she is not registred in the Popes Calendar.

Obiect. 2. Whereas it is said, that this Pope Ioane was first student at Athens, and afterward professed at Rome: Harding denieth, that at Athens then there was any place for students, but all was barbarous, and so saith Bellarmino; neither that at Rome there was any open profession of letters at that time.

Ans. First, anno 680. the Bishop of Athens was at a Council at Constantinople, called Synodus sexta, anno 742. at the second Councell of Nice, there were many Bishops of Greece present: and Pope Ioane followed, anno 853. and how should Athens afterward become barbarous, being inhabited all this while by Christians? for it was not taken of the Turks before anno 1440. Secondly, he thinkes it is a discredit for Rome, that there should bee there vnder the Popes nose no profession of learning, and that there should bee there no Vniuersitie of Students, where the vniuersall Bishop sate. But Theodoricus Niemus, sometime the Popes Secretarie, saith, she read a Lecture two yeeres at Rome.

Obiect. 3. It is not like that God would suffer Saint Peters chayre to bee polluted by a woman, Harding.

Ans. You presume too much of Gods prouidence, hauing no such promise. Why might not a woman as well creepe into S. Peters chayre at Rome, as one did into S. Andrewes of Constantinople? as Bellarmino confesseth: what priuiledge hath one more then the other? And why might not a woman as well be Pope, as Popes made by women? as Iohn the 11. got the Popedom by Theodora that harlots meanes: Iohn the 12. was made Pope through the helpe of Marozia that notorious strumpet. For the whore of Babylons seate was then, as reason would, gouerned by strumpets, the like by the like: So was Vilber the 3. elected Pope, at Marbilda that noble harlots suite. He to put the matter out of doubt, Mantuan that elegant Poet, writeth thus of Pope Ioane:

Famina, cui triplici phrygiam diademate mitram Extollebat apex, &c. lib. 3.*

Here did as yet, in shew a man, a woman sit,
Whose head a tripled costly Crowne did fit.

Coranza also the epitomizer of the Councils, doth assigne vnto this whore of Babylon, 1. yere, one moneth, foure daies; so long did she occupie that chayre of pestilence. Platina also reported the same storie, an author of their owne.

Obiect. 4. As for the chayre (saith Harding) it is a fable: but Bellarmino more modestly granteth there is a chayre of Porphyrie, but to another purpose, to shew the Popes humilitie, not to trie his humanitie. Againe, Harding saith it is a lye, that the Popes refrain to goe that way. But Bellarmino, that knoweth Rome better then he, denieth not that the Pope so doth, but not for any such hainous fact there committed, but because it is a strait way, and is not fit for his traine. And as for the Image, Harding saith, it representeth no such thing, but is rather like one of the great ragged stones at Stonage: Bellarmino denieth not, but there is such an Image, but it seemeth not to be the picture of a woman, but rather of some heathen priest going to sacrifice. We see how handsomely they agree in their answeres: And no maruile, for if one lyer is many times contrarie to himselfe, how should two lyers agree? But these men goe onely by coniectures: we haue their owne writers against them: for Theodoricus Niemus saith, there is such an Image that resembleth such a thing, and that the Popes will not goe that way in procession to this day vpon that occasion. And as for the chayre of Marble to that vse, to search the Pope, Sabellicus reporteth it, Ennod. 9. lib. 1.

In this one example we may see the boldnes of our aduerfaries, which are not ashamed to deny so famous a storie, being reported by Sabellicus, Leonicus Chalcondyla, Marianus Scotus, that liued about the yeere 1028. Sigbertus Gimblacens, anno 1100. beside thirteene Historiographers, as they are quoted by Bishop Inel, and of them all not one a Lutherane. It is almost as foule a shame for them to denie so manifest and plaine a thing, as it is a great blot to their succession, that a whore late sometimes in the Papall chayre. Thus then by euident demonstration it appeareth, that the Pope is the whore of Babylon, and so consequently very Antichrist.

Argum. 8. He that was lested and hindered from conuincing while the Empire stood, and shall bee reuincid after the dissolution of the same, is Antichrist: so the Apostle saith, 2. Thess. 2. 6. You know what he holdeth, &c. So much also is confessed by the Rhemists, Apocal. 17. Annot. 9. But this is the Pope, who was hindered from his princely supremacie or tyrannie rather in the Church, by the flourishing state of the Empire: and since the decay thereof, the Papacie hath increased. First, by the absence of the Emperour in the East parts, the Pope inroched in the West. Secondly, the Empire was weakened by translating of it from the Greekes to the French; from the French to the Germanes. Thirdly, whereas Rome was subiect to the Emperour, now he is excluded and beareth onely a vaine title to bee called, Rex Romanorum. Fourthly, whereas the Emperour bare stroke in the election of the Pope, now he hath nothing to doe with it. Fifthly, whereas the Imperiall state went by succession, now it is conferred by election, by the Popes deuice, that passing from one kingdome to another, by shifting of places it might bee weakened: So that now it is plain that there remaineth nothing but an image and shadow of the Empire; so that the Empire being thus defaced, Antichrist must needs be reuealed: And who should he be, but he, that hath inroched vpon the Imperiall right and possessions, which is the Bishop of Rome?

Argum. 9. He is Antichrist, and so called, which impugneth Christs kingdome in earth, that is, the spirituall regiment which he appointed in his Church, and the forme of gouernment ordained therein; applying all to himselfe by singular tyrannie. For which cause Athanasius calleth Constantine the Emperour, an Arrian, Antichrist, for making himselfe princeps Episcoporum, prince of Priests, &c. which also impugneth Christs Priesthood in earth, &c. he is Antichrist, Rhemist. 10. titulum verbi selt. 13. 2. Thess. 2. But the Pope impugneth both the kingdome and priesthood of Christ: Ergo, he is Antichrist.

First, he impugneth the kingdome of Christ, which is either externall, or internall, that is, spirituall; for the externall gouernment of the Church, which Christ hath appointed by making some Apostles, some Euangelists, some Pastors and Doctores, &c. Ephes. 4. the Pope hath arrogated all to himselfe: who challengeth to bee called vniuersall Bishop, prince of Priests, which Athanasius condemned in Constantius as an Antichristian title. And concerning the title of vniuersalitie, Gregorius thus writeth: Farre from all Christians hearts be this name of blasphemie, in which the honour of all Priests is taken away, while it is challenged of one man to himselfe, lib. 4. epist. 32. So then the Pope hath taken away the externall gouernment of the Church, by applying all to himselfe. And concerning the spirituall regiment of the Church, which is more properly the kingdome of Christ, he hath inroched vpon that also; both by presuming to dispence against the law of God, by abolishing the institution and right vse of the Lords Supper; in taking vpon him to forgive sinnes, and to absolve from the paine and the fault: with such like intolerable presumptions.

Secondly, he impugneth the Priesthood of Christ, both concerning his sacrifice, in offering vp Christ daily in the Masse, as though his sacrifice vpon the crosse were not sufficient; as also as touching his mediation, in making other mediators and intercessors beside Christ, as though he were not the alone able and sufficient Mediatour. So then, seeing the Pope most notoriously doth impugne both the kingdome and priesthood of Christ, he is certainly Antichrist.

Lastly, in the tenth place, their owne witnesses shall speake: Bernard saith, Bestia de Apocalypsi, Epistol. 135. qui datum est ei; loquens blasphemias, Petri Cathedram occupat: The beast in the Apocalypse, to the which a mouth was giuen speaking blasphemies, doth occupie Peters chayre. Isachim Abbas saith, Antichristus iam pridem uatus est Roma: Antichrist a good while since was borne at Rome. The Bishops in the Councell at Reynspurge say thus: Hildebrandus Papa, sub specie religionis, iecit fundamenta Antichristi: Hildebrand vnder colour of holinesse, hath laid a foundation for Antichrist. Nay, long before any of these, Gregorius the 1. first of all the Gregories, and the best of all the Popes that haue followed him, thus prophesied of his successors: Ego fidenter dico, quod quisquis se vniuersalem sacerdotem vocat, vel vocari desiderat, in elatione sua Antichristum praeuerrit: I speake it confidently, that whosoever calleth himselfe vniuersall priest, or desireth so to bee called in the pride of his heart, is the forerunner of Antichrist. But the Popes of Rome are now called vniuersall Bishops or Priests: Ergo, they are either Antichrists, or the forerunners of Antichrist. But it is not like that Antichrist should haue so many forerunners, and so many yeeres, almost a thousand since Boniface the 3. was first called vniuersall Bishop: Ergo, Antichrist is already come, and hath been a good while: and where else should he be, but there where his forerunners were, namely, at Rome?

We want not here the witnesse of their owne law in this case for the triall of this point, who should be Antichrist:

First, Nicolaus 2. decreeth him to be Antichrist that was elected or made Pope by simonie, De erit. 2. 3. cap. 1. but so was Gregorius the 6. made Pope, giuing to his predecessor Benedict the 9. 1500 pounds: and as things goe now a daies it was good cheape.

Secondly, Diffinit. 79. cap. 1. Nichol. 2. Qui sine concordia electionis &c. He that is intronized Pope without the Canonickall and concording election of the Cardinals, is not Apostolicall, but Apostaticall. But when Iohannes 23. was made Pope, and two more beside, a Gregorius and a Benedict the Cardinals concorded not in their election: Ergo, the Pope then was an Apostata.

Thirdly, Caus. 6. quæst. 7. cap. 3. Gregor. 7. thus decreed, that if any Bishop granted tithes or oblations, laicalibus personis, seu consanguineis, to lay persons, or his kinsmen, inter maximas hereticas & Antichristus non minimus habetur, he should bee counted amongst the greatest heretics, and not the least Antichrist. But the Bishop of Rome hath done this, by whose deuice many portions of tithes haue bin appropriate to lay persons: Ergo, he is an heretike and Antichrist.

Fourthly, Decret. par. 2. caus. 24. quæst. 1. cap. 25. that saying of S. Hierome is approved: Qui Christus non est, Antichristus est: He that is not of Christ, is of Antichrist. And againe he saith, Aduersarius Christi & Antichristus est, &c. He is an aduersarie to Christ, and an Antichrist, whom Christs precepts offend, or displease: Hierome de agrotat. Be. fill. But such an one is the Pope, that altereth and changeth the precepts of Christ: for Christ said, Feede my sheepe, but he preacheth not: Christ appointed the Sacrament in both kinds, he commandeth it to be vsed in one: Christ said, beloeue in me: but he would haue vs beleue in the Virgin Mary: And many such like precepts behinde contrarie to Christ: Ergo, he is Antichrist.

Fifthly, Caus. 25. quæst. 1. cap. 5. Damasus: In spiritum sanctum blasphematur, &c. He that violateth the Canons of the fathers is a blasphemour against the spirit. But so doth the Pope, in calling himself vniuersall Bishop, contrarie to the Canons: diffinit. 99. cap. 5. and in many other things he doth transgresse the Canons: Ergo, he is a blasphemour; and consequently Antichrist, who hath names full of blasphemie, Apocal. 17. 3.

Sixtly, Ibid. cap. 11. Hadrian. Anathema, quicumque regum: He is an anathema, or accursed, that doth violate the decrees of Kings. But so doth the Pope, whose Canons doe euery where impugne the Ciuill constitutions. Ergo.

Seuenthly, Caus. 35. quæst. 5. cap. 3. Gregor. Vxorē propinqui mei, &c. The wife of my kinsman I must hold as neere vnto me, as if she were my kinswoman in the same degree, &c. whosoever thinketh otherwise is Antichrist. But the Pope so thinketh, that permitteeth a brother to marrie his brothers wife, which is as neere as his owne sister by this Canon: Ergo, he is Antichrist.

Eighthly, Decret. par. 3. dist. 3. cap. 12. Qui die sabbati, &c. They that forbid to worke vpon the Saturday, predicantes Antichristi, are the preachers of Antichrist. But so doth the Pope, that ioyneth Saturdaies to be as strictly kept holy daies, as the Lords day. Ergo.

Let vs see in the last place the glorious testimonie of the holy Martyrs and confessors of Gods truth: Walter Brute proueth the Pope to be Antichrist by this argument: He which established his lawes, allowing warres and the slaughter of men in the warres, as well of Christians, as of Infidels; doth he not iustifie things contrarie to the Gospell and law of Christ? therefore he is Antichrist: but this doth the Pope, &c. Fax pag. 487.

Iohn Huffs holy Martyr: The way of Antichrist is wickednesse and sinne, of the which the Apostle speaketh to the Thessal. &c. pag. 617. But in Rome, even in the Popes chayre, all abomination, as pride, couetousnesse, simonie, are to be found, pag. 628. Ergo, the Pope is Antichrist.

Thomas Bilney holy Martyr: The Pope sitteth in the temple of God: for the conscience of man is the temple of the holy Ghost: as S. Paul saith, 1. Cor. 3. The temple of the Lord is holy, which is you but the Pope sitteth in the conscience, counting them guiltie of death, that breake his constitutions: therefore sitting in the temple as God, he is Antichrist, pag. 1002.

Maister Tindall Martyr: The Pope inferring a necessitie of those things, which Christ leaueth free and indifferent, what doth he else, but make himselfe Antichrist? pag. 1251.

For this truth also many besides gaue their liues: Thomas Becket burned at Excester, for saying the Pope is Antichrist, pag. 1037. Iohn Stelman burned in Smithfield for the same, p. 815. Maister Rogers holy Martyr, for affirming the Romish Church to be the Church of Antichrist, p. 1488.

Now therefore seeing we haue so many witnesses, the Scripture, reason, experience, authorities to proue the Pope Antichrist: who will either be so simple, as seeing so good grounds, not to beleue it; or so scrupulous, hauing such certaine euidence, to doubt thereof? And thus at the length, by Gods gracious assistance, we haue finished and brought this great question concerning Antichrist, to an end; as also the whole controuerſie as touching the Bishop or Pope of Rome.

THE FIFTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING SPIRITVALL PERSONS, COMMONLY CALLED THE CLERGIE

Having now sufficiently handled the controversie of the chiefe member of the Militant Church, which our adversaries say is the Pope, wee must come in the next place to speake of the middle parts, which are those whom they call Cleriques, Clerkes, and they are of two sorts: Secular, which haue any publike function in the Church; or Regular, which liue according to some rule, and they are called Monachi, Monkes. First then of their secular Clerkes.

This Controversie containeth sixe questions.

1 Of the name and title of Clerkes or Clergie men.

2 Concerning the election of Bishops and Ministers: first, of all in generall: secondly, of the election of the Bishop of Rome.

3 Concerning Ecclesiasticall orders: first, in generall: secondly, of the difference of Bishops and other Ministers: thirdly, of Cardinals.

4 Concerning the keyes of the Church, and the power of binding and loosing: the question divided into foure parts.

5 Concerning the marriage of Ministers: three parts of the question.

6 Of the maintenance of the Church by tithes: in two parts.

THE FIRST QUESTION, CONCERNING the name of Clerkes or Clergie men.

The Papists.

This name Clergie, in Latin, Clerus, is a name made proper to the Spirituallie, by vse of antiquitie, and agreeably to Scriptures: they are so called, because they are the Lords lot, and consecrate to the diuine seruice: the rest are called popular, or lay men, which meddle not with any function of the Church.

Argum. 1. This word (say they) hath been vsed by all antiquitie, and thereby Church Ministers onely signified: Ergo, it is a fit and decent name, Beatus Hieronimus de Clericis, cap. 1. Rhetoric. 1. 2. 3.

Ans. First, the Fathers vsed this name Clergie, but not as it is now vsed of the Papists, which do hereby as it were exclude the people of God from the Lords inheritance, counting them as Ases and Dogs, in respect of the Clergie: as one of their owne writers thus complaineth; Quoniam uisus est uisus hominibus in ecclesia presules, etc. How can the Prelates of these daies bee excused, or suffered, which doe rule ouer men as beasts in the Northerne parts, (he meaneth the Lapians, and Pilagii people of those countreies) which doe lay such grieuous yokes vpon those simple people, as stray sheepe, hauing no pastor, that they cannot submit themselves to the Lords sweete yoke, ecc. Episc. in 1. Timoth. 3. 12. Such distinction betweene the Clergie and Laie the fathers neuer allowed: they vsed it as a euill indifferent name, for an outward distinction of their calling, not as a name of more holines, and so we refuse it not.

What though by custome and continuance this name hath been somewhat abused, wee will learne herein to speake of the Scriptures, and not of men.

Argum. 2. Secondly, wee milke this name (say our adversaries) because wee would haue no difference betweene the people and Clergie, Rhetoric. 1. 2. 3.

Ans. It is a great slander: because we make no such difference, as they doe, as to make the Clergie onely Gods lot and portion, and to count the people as vnholie, and to preferre euerie ignorant doltish Masse priest, before the best and deuoutest of the people: therefore they imagine we make no difference at all. We do distinguish the calling of the one, and the other: none of the lay sort to be so hardie as to meddle with the word or Sacramentes, which are committed to the the Ministers, which you notwithstanding permit them to do: and the people every where reuerence their Pastors, and to yeelde due obedience vnto them. But that the calling of the one before God in it selfe, is more meritorious then the other; that wee doe not, neither doe we affirme.

Argum. 3. The Leuites in the time of the law, were seuered out from the rest of the Lords people, and he was their lot and inheritance, and they the Lords lot: Deut. 18.2. And as the Leuites were then, so are the Ministers of the Gospell now, Bellarmius sheweth.

Ans. First, the Lord is rather said to be their lot, because they had the Lords portion, and liued by the Altar, then they are said to be the Lords lot: for the whole Nation was holy vnto God, and a kingdom of Priests, Exod. 19.6. Secondly, it followeth not, that because there was a legal and ceremonial difference then between the Priests and the people, that therefore it ought to be now: Nay rather the contrarie followeth, because there was such a difference then, that therefore the Priesthood of the law being ceased, there ought to be none such now: for Christ hath made vs all Kings and Priests to God his Father, Apocal. 1.6. And wee are all a royall Priesthood and holy Nation, 1. Pet. 2.9. Now, though there be a difference of callings amongst men, yet before God we are all Priests alike; and there is but one Priest for vs all to Godward, euen Christ Iesus our Lord.

The Protestants.

THe name of Clerks, or Clergie men, if it be not vsed as a name in it selfe of greater holiness and merite, and so be in effect a proud excluding of the rest of Christians from the Lords inheritance; we refuse it not, though there are better names and titles, to call the Ministers of the Gospell by: yet being taken as it is in Poperie, we do utterly refuse and reiect it.

First, 1. Pet. 3.3. The Apostle exhorteth the pastors and teachers to feede the flocke of Christ, non vt dominantes Cleris: Not as Lords ouer Gods Clergie and inheritance. Here S. Peter calleth the whole flocke, the Clergie: wherefore it appeareth, that this difference was not knowne in the Apostles time of lay and Clergie men. And it is against all sense, that Saint Peter should vnderstand here the inferiour Ministers, and so exhorteth the superiour Pastors and Bishops to looke to their Clergie, as the Rhemists would haue it. For S. Peter writeth not onely to Bishops, but to all Presbyters, pastors or Elders, verse 1. Secondly, verse 3. That which he calleth the Clergie, or heritage, he expoundeth in the same verse to be the Lords flocke: but the Clergie in their sense is not the whole congregation or flocke. Thirdly, the Apostle would haue them to feed the flock, that is, to teach and instruct them, but he was farre from allowing an ignorant Clergie, that was to be instructed and catechised, such as for the most part the popish Clergie is.

Bellarmius answereth againe; that it may be granted also that the name of Clergie in some sort, agreeth to the people, as being the Lords heritage; but in a more excellent manner is it giuen to those which serue at the altar: as all the Israelites were the Lords heritage, yet the Leuites more specially so called. Bellarmius lib. 1. de Cleris. cap. 1.

Contra. First, if the people then may be called the Clergie, then is not this name peculiar to ecclesiasticall persons, which is the thing now in question. Secondly, there is no such legal difference now betwene the Priest and people, as was vnder the law, betwene the Leuites and other tribes: for Christ hath now made vs all kings and priests to God his Father. Apocal. 1.6. Thirdly, we denie not, but that the Ministers of the Gospel haue a more excellent office, then lay men, in respect of the policie and order of the Church, but not more meritorious in it selfe before God.

Argum. 2. Neither shall we find this word Clerus, the Clergie, properly applied to the Ministers, throughout the new Testament, let our aduersaries brag neuer so much of scripture as they do. Galat. 6.6. S. Paul vseth these names of difference, magister, the teacher, and he that is taught: and 1. Corinth. 14. 16. locutus, the speaker, and incomprehensibilis the private or vnlettered man. So that all their names are giuen in respect of their outward ministerie and calling, not in regard of any difference before God. For before the Lord, as there is neither Gracian nor Iew, bond nor free, male nor female; so neither is there Clerke or lay man.

Argum. 3. S. Paul saith, 1. Cor. 12. 20. There are many members, yet one bodie, &c. verse 13. By one spirit are we all baptized into one body, &c. Like as then the parts of the same body, though they haue distinct offices, and one more excellent then an other, yet no parte is despised or vnecessary, but are all knit to the same head, and are partakers of the same life and spirit: so is it in the members of the Church, their offices are diuers in the bodie of the Church, but all vniited by one and the same spirit to the head Christ: if they be all one bodie, then consequently one entire inheritance of Christ. Augustine thus writeth concerning this name, Clerus, qui sunt in ecclesiasticis ministerijs gradibus ordinati, sic dicti sunt, quia Manibius sibi electus est, in Psal. 67. Clerkes, which serue in the Ministerie, I thinke, were so called, because Manibius was chosen by lot. See then, they are not called Clerkes, so much because they are the Lords lot, but because they are allotted and chosen out of the people for that seruice: as the Leuites are called the people had no calling of the Church, as a great nation of the Indians was by Adasus and Primitius, Ross. lib. 1. c. 9. and the Iberians by a captive woman, Ross. 1. 1. c. 10.

Argum. 2. The people cannot judge, who are fit to be pastors, and their elections are tumultuous, as we may see, how in the election of Damasus there were 137. persons slain: and therefore it is not meet, nor convenient, that the matter should be committed to the people, either to elect, or to damn: but whatsoever they did in times past, it was either by sufferance or negligence of the Bishops, Bedae. sup. 7.

Argum. 3. First, sincere popular elections were never allowed in any well ordered Church, neither was the allowance of their pastors wholly referred to the people, neither did they beare the chief stroke, but the election was moderated by the wisdom and grauntie of the Clergie, Falk. Tit. 1. sect. 2. Secondly, the question is not betweene vs, concerning the ordaining of pastors, for that belonged onely to the Eldership, and was done by laying on of their hands, 1. Tim. 4. 14. but concerning the electing and choosing of them. Thirdly, neither doe we dispute, whether it be convenient and necessitate all times, but whether it be lawfull: for neither doe we affirme, that the essence and substance of the calling of ministers to be chosen by the voyces of the people, as though they were no ministers, but usurpers and intruders that are not so called: but whereas hath been at any time, and may yet be lawfull, to require the consent of the people. Fourthly, as false, that the people had this right by usurpation, or els sufferance of the pastors: for Cyprianus it did, De divinis auctoritate defendere lib. 1. Epistol. 2. That this custome was grounded vpon divine auctoritie, yea it was established by the lawes of Kings: as there was a law made by Lotharius King of France, that Bishops should be ordained by the free election of the Clergie and the people. Lotharius. lib. 1. c. 10.

Argum. 3. Therefore (say they) elections of Bishops ought to be at the Popes assignation: for unto Peter was committed the care of the universall Church, when hee badde Peter feed his sheepe. Hereupon they are bold to affirme, that we have neither true Bishops nor Ministers, because they are not lawfully sent, that is, as they interpret it, from the See Apostolike, Adrian. lib. 1. cap. 3. 8. Rhenish. Res. 1. c. 10. sect. 5.

Ans. First, the charge given to Peter beareth no such sense: that because Christ had committed his sheepe, therefore he and his successors should onely have auctoritie to consecrate Ministers: for if Peter had it by this graunt, other Elders and Pastors had it in like sort, to whom it was appointed to feed the flocke of Christ, 1. Pet. 5. 2. And againe not Peter onely, but the rest of the Apostles did ordaine and consecrate Pastors and Elders, as it shall be shewed afterword.

Secondly, neither is it a good reason to condemne our Ministerie, because it hath not the allowance: for every Church hath a lawfull calling within it selfe, without sending to some Prelate for their approbation. And if you aske vs by whome our Ministers were first called, there were none but popish Bishops in every Church: we answer, that some had their calling in the popish Church, which afterward being more effectually called of God, became prebiterians of the Gospell. Neither is it necessarie, that the Church should alwayes be bound to an ordinarie calling: when as the state of the Church is so corrupted, and the government thereof, that no good calling can be obtained: for then the Lord raiseth vp some extraordinary for the reformation of the Church, such as we doubt not, but Lausius was. In which and the like cases, the ordinarie imposition of hands by the Pastors of the Church, being heretikes and idolaters, as it was in time of poperie, is not to be expected or stayed for, Plura apud Falk. ann. 1610. sect. 5.

And the Protestants.

Concerning election or choise to be made by the people, we are to put three cases. First, popular elections, wherein the people by multitude of voyces should carry all away, with no case, nor at any time to be allowed. Secondly, for the people to give their voices in elections, which are moderated and governed by the graue and wise Pastors and Elders, it hath been in times past, and may be againe, and is in some places, where the state of the Church, the condition and qualitie of the people will beare it. Thirdly, though the people neither beare sway in the election, nor give their suffrages and voyces, yet it is convenient and requisite, that their consent should be had, and publike testimonie: for the Ministers should be such as have a good report of all, 1. Tim. 3. 7. Falk. Tit. 1. 14. sect. 3. But as for the Pope, let him keepe himselfe, as a Bishop in his owne Diocese, hee hath nothing to doe with ordaining or electing of Ministers in other Churches.

Argum. 1. Numb. 20. 27. Aaron was made Priest in Aaron place, in the sight of all the congregation: Ergo, Ministers ought to be ordained publicly in the sight of the congregation: not in corners or private places, as they vsed to doe in time of Poperie: yea it is recorded of Pope John the thirteenth, that he ordained Deacons in a stable. And herein they offended manifestly against their owne rules. For their decree is, Nullus inania detur Episcopus sed Clerici & plebis consensu

pap. dist. 63.
cap. clerici.

for the sake of the requirer. Let no Bishop be thrust vpon any against their wils, but let the consent and desire of the people and Clergie be knowne.

Argum. 2. We haue the example of the Apostles, Act. 1. & 6. 14. 23. When Matthias was elected, the whole multitude was called together: and Act. 6. the deacons were chosen by the whole multitude: Ergo, the people had an interest in times past in the election of Church officers: and this example of the Apostles may safely and lawfully be followed of the Church, when time and place serueth.

Belarmine answereth: First, the election of Deacons and Pastors is not all one, neither is there the like reason. Ans. They are both publike officers for the good of the Church; and therefore if the people haue any interest in the one, why not in the other? Secondly, this was done by the grant and suffurance of the Apostles. Ans. Yea the Apostles called them together, but by the direction of the holy Ghost: as Act. 15. when the Church was assembled together vpon another occasion, it is said, it seemed good to vs and the holy Ghost. Again, in the election, beside imposition of hands, prayer was vsed, which was a chiefe part of that action: but the people had their interest in publike prayers, as being part of the congregation, and were not admitted thereunto at the pleasure and will of men: wherefore it is not true, that it was a meere grant of men, that the people might be present at elections, but it so seemed good to the Apostles thereto directed by the spirit of God.

Now, whereas Belarmine gaue vs this answer before, concerning the election of Deacons, that the reason is not alike betweene them and Pastors: we do oppose the election of Matthias into the place of Indas, no Deacon, but an Apostle, that it was done by the consent and suffrage of the whole Church. Ergo the consent of the people is requisite in the election of Ministers.

Belarmine answereth, First, this was done not of necessity, but by toleration from Peter.

Contra. Three things are set downe, which were done in this action by the whole assembly. vers. 1. They presented two: vers. 24. They prayed: verse 26. They gaue forth their lottes: if any one of these was by permission or suffurance, then the rest also: if they presented by leaue, then they prayed also by licence, which were very absurd. Again, it is too great boldnesse for them to imagine a licence granted from Peter, where the Scripture maketh no mention of any such thing: and to the Apostles here assembled, which in commission were equall vnto Peter.

Secondly, saith he, this was not so much an election, as a postulation or request vnto God, that one might be chosen in Indas place.

Contra. There is both an election and a postulation: the election is of two, which were presented out of the whole number; the postulation is, that God would declare his will concerning those two, which of them should haue Indas Apostleship.

Thirdly, saith he: one example doth not proue a thing to be de iure diuino: by diuine right. Belarmine sheweth.

Contra. First, as one precept of Scripture as well proueth, as many precepts of the same thing: so also one act and example of the Apostles is of diuine authoritie, as well as many in the same end: for their actes proceeding of the same spirite, are euery one of the same power: vnlesse they will say, the Apostles erred in some of their actes, wherein they were directed by the spirit of God, as they were in this, and by the warrant of Scripture. Secondly, if one example out of Scripture proue not the lawfulness of the act; then both Christs fact in whipping out of the Temple, and Paulus reprehension of Peter may be doubted of, being both but once done; and many other things beside, whereof we finde but single examples in Scripture: which were a great blasphemie to say. Thirdly, yet to satisfie them to the full, we haue more then one example for the election of the people: as Act. 6. The Deacons were so elected: act. 14. 23. Elders ordained by election in euery citie.

Argum. 3. But as for the right of elections in the Pope, it hath no shew of reason: for be it that Peter had onely the right of consecration amongst the Apostles, you doe but flatter your selves in thinking, that whatsoever right was in Peter, it must needs be in the Pope: for he is not Peters successor, as we haue shewed before at large. But we will hold you rather to this point: that all the Apostles had as full right to ordaine and consecrate by laying on of handes, as Peter had. Look Act. 6. 6. & Act. 13. 3. & Act. 14. 23. And if the Pope cannot haue all that which Peter had, muchlesse can he be capable of that which Peter neuer had.

Argum. 4. We haue had good experience in England, of the Popes great discretion and wisdom, in collation of spirituall preferments, and ordaining of Bishops. About anno. 1253. the Pope Fox. pag. 323. wrote a very imperious and commanding letter to the good Bishop of Lincolne, Robert Grosst. to bestow a Canonship in Lincolne vpon his nephew, a boy; for so Popes call their bastards: but he suffered the repulse for that time. In the time of Edward the third, and Richard the second, a certificate was sent vp into the Chauncerie, of such Ecclesiasticall dignities, as were possessed by strangers not inhabiting the land: and there were found about fourtie Deanries, Archdeconries and and prebends, and those not the worst, some worth one hundred, some two hundred, nay some four hundred pound by the yeere; the Archdeaconrie of Canturburie was valued at seven hundred Florences by the yeere, which a Cardinall of Rome had: And there were about a dozen Cardinall resident at Rome, that had at once the best and richest dignities in the land: beside a great sort of Italian priests, and others, that were beneficed in England. By this it may appeare, what good choise the Pope-holy father of Rome was wont to make in bestowing Church dignities: and it were pittie but he should haue the ordering of them still, he did so wel dispose of them when he had them.

5 Let Augustine speake, who growing now old, was desirous to knowe his successor while he liued: he went not to Rome for the matter; but assembling the Church together at Hippo where he was Bishop; in the presence of two Bishops beside, and seven Presbyters or Elders, Augustine with his clero & frequenti populo, The whole Clergie, and a great sort of people standing by: Augustine himselfe began first and said, Presbyterum Eradium mihi successorem volo: I would haue Eradius Presbyter to be my successor. Afterward, hearing how the people did approue and like of his motion, he desired them to subscribe to that which was done, Rogo ut dignumini gestu subscribere, qui parati. And when they held their peace, he vrged them further, saying, Hic mihi responsione vestra quæst, de hac assensione aliquid acclamate: I must needs haue you make some answer, and testifie your consent by your acclamation: A populo acclamatum est, fiat fiat, dictum vicies quinquies: The people cryed out, let it be as thou hast said, let it be, and this was repeated fise and twentie times, Augustinus. Epistol. 110. By this example it appeareth, though the people made not the choise, yet their consent was demanded. And thus a Bishop was elected, and no word sent vp to Rome at all.

Neither was it the custome of the Church so to doe in those dayes: for whereas the Donatists objected against Cecilianus Bishop of Carthage, because he stayed not to be ordained of the chiefe Bishop of Numidia, Præcipue Episcopus à principe ordinaretur: That one chiefe Bishop might be ordained of another: Augustinus answered, that there was another custome of the Catholike Church, Præcipue Numidia, sed propinquiores Episcopi, Episcopum ecclesia Carthaginis ordinarent: That not the Bishop of Numidia, but those Bishops that were neere at hand, should ordaine the Bishop of Carthage. So we see, they were not onely bold to choose an inferiour Bishop, as was Eradius of Hippo, without the Popes consent: but they would aduenture to ordaine a chiefe Metropolitan Bishop euen of Carthage, without the Popes leaue.

The testimonie of antiquitie herein is plentifull: Anacletus epistol. 2. Electionem summorum sanctorum sibi Dominus reservauit, licet electionem illorum bonis sacerdotibus, & spiritualibus populis concessisset: God hath reserved to himselfe the election or deposition of the chiefe priests, though he hath granted the election of them to good ministers, and faithfull people.

Council. Carthaginens. 3. can. 22. Nullus ordinetur Clericus non probatus vel Episcoporum excoꝝmunicati populi testimonio: Let none be ordained a Clergie man, vnlesse he be first examined of the Bishop, or approued by the testimonie of the people.

Leo epistol. 90. cap. 1. Nulla ratio fuit, ut inter episcopos habeantur, qui nec à Clericis sunt electi, nec plebibus sunt expetiti. There is no reason, that they should be counted Bishops, which are neither chosen of the Clergie, nor desired of the people.

Council. Parrhisien. can. 8. Nullus citius inuitis ordinetur episcopus, nisi quem populi & Clericorum electio plenissima quaesierit voluntate: Let no Bishop be ordained against the will of the people or citizens, but such an one, as the Clergie shall choose, and the people desire. By these testimonies of Councils, and of the Bishops of Rome themselves, and many more, which might be alleadged, it doth and may further appeare; that the interest of election is not in the Pope, but that in former times both the voice of the Clergie and assent of the peoples was required.

We haue here also testimonie of both the lawes: for although tumultuous, turbulent and meere popular elections are condemned, as Cod. lib. 9. tit. 30. l. 2. Leo the Emperour made a law, that he which did tumultuously gather voices of the multitude to obtaine any dignitie, should be booted out of the place he sought, and be seuerely punished likewise. diffinit. 63. c. 6. Non est permittendum turba &c. The election of Clerkes must not be left to the multitude. 1. decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 6. c. 1. Isidorus ad clamorem populi &c. He that is chosen by the confused noyse of the people must not be confirmed: for the rude multitude may easily be corrupted.

Although then meere popular elections are not to be approued: yet that both the whole Clergie and the people ought to giue consent in the election of their Pastors, it is consonant to both the lawes: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 11. Arcadius, ad ecclesiam sunt promouendi &c. They must be preferred to the gouernment of the Church, that are of the same citie, as (they no doubt) which are best knowne to the people.

Now the Canon law is most pregnant, not onely requiring the presence of the people, respecting their desire, but their consent also and election. diffinit. 61. c. 13. Nullus inuitis datur Episcopus

No Bishop ought to be thrust vpon a people against their will; the consent of the Clergie and people must be required: Celestin. dist. 63. 11. Gelasius. Pateris in vnum consensum: All must consent to elect one. cap. 12: Stephan. Conuocato Clero & populo: The Clergie and people beeing called together, let such an one be chosen &c. and many such Canons there are beside.

The holy Martyrs also consent with vs. Thomas Becket: if the Bishop of Rome would doe all things after Gods ordinance, then would I beleue him to be a good Bishop ouer his owne Dioces, and to haue no further power. Fox. pag. 1039.

Maister Philip holy martyr: By the word of God the Bishop of Rome hath no more authoritie, then the Bishop of London hath, pag. 1811. He hath therefore no right to meddle in the election of other Bishops, that belong not to his charge.

THE SECOND PART, CONCERNING the election of the Pope.

The Papists.

They say, that the surest and safest way and simply the best, is that which is now vsed, to choose the Pope by, namely, by the Colledge of Cardinals: That whosoever is by two parts of the said Cardinals elected, is rightly the successor of Saint Peter, and the vndoubted Pope of Rome. 68. Error.

Argum. 1. None can better iudge who is fittest for the papacie, then they which are the Popes Counsellors, and know the affaires of the Church. Ergo, the Cardinals the meetest men. Bellarmin. lib. 1. de Clericis. cap. 9.

Ans. First, you take that for graunted, which we instantly deny, that the Cardinals of Rome are alwayes the wisest and most learned: as though a Cardinals hat doth bring with it such a-bundance of vertue and learning: nay a title of a Cardinalship is sooner obtayned by fauour then desert, by masses of money, then weight of learning. And good reason, seeing that the Cardinals make a gaine of the papacie: For an Assie loaden with golde shall sooner enter into the Cattle of Saint Angell, then any other comming with a cart loade of bookes: they that reade Cardinall Wolffes instructions sent to Steuens Gardiner at Rome, what great promises of money and preferment, may easily vnderstand the disposition of the Pope-holy Electors of Rome: Seeing they make a gayne of the Pope, why should he not set Cardinalships to saile? For if Iacobus Fox. pag. 592.
Archbishop of Mentz payed 27000. florences for his pall, what thinke you a Cardinals hat is to be valued at, which is a higher degree, then either Bishop or Archbishop? Fox. pag. 794.

We say then, that there may be wiser and more learned men of the Clergie in Rome then the Cardinals: and that the whole Clergie may better iudge, then a few ambitious Cardinals, and are free from corruption: And as concerning the affaires of the Church, Bishops are like to know better, what appertaineth to the office of a Bishop, then Priests and Deacons, as most of the Cardinals are.

Secondly, how fit the Cardinals for the most part are, to manage the gouernment of the vniuersall Church, it may appeare by the notable choice, that the Popes haue made of their assistants, Status the fourth made Petrus Ruerius his nephew a Cardinall, a young man of 26. yeeres: who in riot and wantonnes in two yeeres spent vpon harlots two hundred thousand crownes, and dyed miserably being wasted and consumed by his inordinat lust.

Leo the tenth was made Cardinall, being but thirteene yeeres olde, by Innocentius the eight: Paulus the third made Alexander Farnesius his sonne or bastard Cardinall being a very youth, to whom he appointed a Tutor and gouernor. Iulius the third brought Innocentius a stripling his minion, into the order of the Cardinals, who when they said vnto him, What doe you see in this young man, worthy of this honor? he answered, what did you see in me, when you chose me to be Pope? Thinke you not now that these Cardinals, both for their youth, being void of experience, and for their lewd disposition, being without any good inclination, were very meete and fit persons to be employed in the waighie regiment of the Church?

Argum. 2. It appeareth by the continuance to be the best: for it hath now endured foure hundred yeeres: and by the effect, for the See of Rome hath neuer been freer from Schismes, then since this order was taken for the Popes election. Bellarmin. cap. 9.

Ans. First, how can it be of such long continuance, seeing by your owne confession, it exceedeth not foure hundred yeeres? Nay who will not graunt, that the ancient order of electing the Bishop of Rome by the whole Clergie, and consent of the people of Rome, with the confirmation of the Emperour, which lasted a thousand yeeres, till this new deuice came in place, was farre more ancient and durable: Secondly, how well the Cardinals election hath kept the See of Rome from Schisme, experience of former times teacheth vs: In Pope Vrbanius time the sixt, there were two Popes many yeeres together; and one did so deadly pursue the other, that Pope Vrbanius at once cut

Ex Balzo, Functio &
alijs.

Fox. pag. 434.

cut off five of the Cardinals heads: might they not haue great ioy, thinke you, in choosing such a Pope? In the time of Pope Iohn the 23. there were three Popes at once. In the Councell of Basile Pope Engenius was depoled, and counted an heretike. And yet for all this, the Cardinals are the onely preferuers and maintainers of the peace of the Apostolike See.

The Protestants.

Though it doe not greatly concerne vs, what manner of election is vsed at Rome: (for vnto vs the election of the meanest Bishop in the land is as much, yea and more, then the glorious enthronizing of the Pope:) yet it shall not be amisse briefly to shew, how these great antiquaries are become enemies of antiquitie, refusing the ancient manner of election, which was vsed in Rome for 1000. yeeres together, namely, that the Bishop there should be elected by the whole Clergie, with the consent of the People and confirmation of the Emperour.

Argum. 1. It is a plaine case, that till theyere 685. in all their elections they waited for the authoritie of the chiefe Magistrate, the Emperour, or the deputie of Italie. But then came in the constitution of Constantine the fourth, that their elections should be firme without the consent of the Emperour. Yet for all this constitution, anno. 810. Pope Adriane gaue vnto Carolus magnus full authoritie to elect the Bishop of Rome: and anno. 961. Leo the ninth, made the same grant to Odo first Germane Emperour. This continued in force till Alexander the second his time, who wailected first without the Emperours consent, but afterward repenting of it, he protested openly, that he would be no longer Pope vnlesse he had the Emperours consent; and thereupon he was depoled by Hildebrand, and throwne into prison. This was more then 1000. yeeres after Christ: since that time the Emperour hath been excluded, and shut out from their elections: But all this while notwithstanding, though the Emperours consent sometime was not necessary, yet the Clergie of Rome, and the people retained their ancient priuiledge still. So we see by this new erection of the Colledge of Cardinals, there is great iniurie offered to three estates, the Emperour, the Clergie of Rome, the people.

Fox. pag. 435.

Argum. 2. This new forme of election hath not stood continually in force, since it was first founded. For in the Councell of Constance, sess. 40. they proceeded to the election of a new Pope, not staying for the rest of the Cardinals, but appointing other electors in their roume. In the Councell of Basile, the Duke of Sauoy was elected Pope, by other electors, then Cardinals: Nay there was but one Cardinall, namely Arelatenfis; the rest were Bishops, Doctors, and others. And though they will say perchance that this Pope was chosen in a schisme, for they hold the Councell of Basile to be schismaticall: yet they cannot, neither doe denie, but that Pope Martin the 5. who was chosen at Constance, was rightfully Pope.

Gregorie the 7. was established in the Papacie, and yet not one of the Cardinals consented to his election. Iohn the 24. became a Pope after this manner: When the Cardinals were assembled together to chuse them a Pope, they desired him to nominate whom he would to bee Pope, for they feared him: then he made this answer, Date mihi chlamydem Petri, & ego dabo Pontificis sacra, Giue me S. Peters robe or cloake, and I will giue it to him that shall be our Bishop: and so he put it vpon his owne shoulders, and said, Behold your Pope, ex Balao, Functio & alijs. Thus wee see that the Popes and Papists themselves haue been the chiefe ouerthrowers and peruerterers of this new forme of election by the Cardinals.

3. In Augustines time the rest of the Bishops of Italie neere vnto Rome, should seeme to haue had some interest in the election of the Bishop: Romana ecclesia Episcopum non ordinat Episcopus aliquis Metropolitanus, sed de proximo Ostiensis Episcopus: The Bishop of Rome is not ordained by any Metropolitane, but by the Bishop of Ostia that is neere at hand, Breniculus collation. lib. 2. cap. 5.

Other monuments also of antiquitie wee haue for this matter: When as Syluerius was made Pope without the Emperours consent, Sacerdotes secundum morem antiquum non subscriperunt: The Clergie men, according to the old custome, refused to subscribe to his election: anno 537. pontifical.

Hadrianus 1. anno 796. gaue vnto Charles the Emperour, potestatem eligendi Papam, power to chuse the Pope. Gregorie the 4. confirmed the same graunt, anno 830. and refused to bee Pope, till the Emperour had confirmed his election.

Alexander the 2. who a little before in a Councell held at Mantua, had decreed that the Pope should be chosen onely by the Cardinals; yet afterward repented him, and publickly in a sermon professed, that he would not continue in the Papacie without the Emperours licence. Gregorie the 7. the greatest enemy to the Imperiall crowne and dignitie, who vtterly excluded the Emperour from the election of the Pope, yet lying on his death-bed repented him, and desired a Cardinall to goe to the Emperour, and craue pardon of him for all the wrongs he had done him: Sic Antoninus, Vincentius de actis huius Papa.

We haue also euident testimonie herein of their owne law, that the Bishop of Rome ought not to be elected without the consent of the Emperour, the Clergie, and people.

First,

First for the right and authoritie of the Emperour in the election of the Pope: Hadrianus, with the consent of a great Synode, consisting of an 153. Bishops and Abbots, assembled in the palace of Laterane, did giue vnto Charles the Emperour, potestatem eligendi pontificem, power to chuse the Bishop of Rome, diff. 63. ca. 22. So likewise Leo Bishop of Rome in a Synode at Rome, with the consent of the Clergie and people of Rome, did giue the same authoritie to Otho the Emperour, diff. 63. ca. 23.

And for the consent of the whole Clergie, and not of the Cardinals onely, we reade, diff. 79. c. 1. Nicolai 2. in this manner, Si quis Apostolica sedi, &c. If any man be inthronized into the See Apostolicall, without the generall consent of the Cardinals, and of other religious Clerks, he is not Apostolicall, but an Apostata.

And thirdly, the interest of the people together with the Clergie in the election of the Pope, is warranted by their owne Canons: Can. 7. quast. 1. ca. 5. Cornelius was chosen, de Clericorum personarum testimonio, de plebis, qua tunc affuit suffragio, &c. by the testimonie of the Clergie, and the suffrage of the people, that was present. And distin. 26 ca. 1. there is a latter decree of Pope Nicholas; that beside the choice of the Cardinals, reliquus Clerus & populus ad consensum noua electionis accedat: the rest of the Clergie and people should giue consent to the new election. Thus wee see that this new device of electing the Pope by Cardinals, is against the ancient practise of the Church and their owne Canons.

John Wickliffe holie confessor, was condemned for saying, that the election of the Pope by Cardinals, was inuented and brought in by the diuell, articul. 40. Seeing then we haue both the testimonie and practise of Popes to the contrarie, against this manner of election by Cardinals, and the truth also sealed by holy men; we haue no reason but to reiect and discommend the same.

THE THIRD QUESTION, CONCERNING THE degrees and orders of Ecclesiasticall Ministers.

This question hath three parts: first, of the seuen degrees of popish priesthood. Secondly, of the difference and distinction of Bishops and other Ministers. Thirdly, of the institution of Cardinals, a new degree of the popish Clergie.

THE FIRST PART OF THE SEVEN degrees or orders Ecclesiasticall.

The Papists.

Though they haue diuers degrees of dignitie in the Church, as Popes, Cardinals, Patriarches, <sup>69. Error.</sup> Primates, and such like: yet they make but seuen Ecclesiasticall orders, which are conferred solemnly by certaine rites and ceremonies by their Bishops: And they are these, Oficiarij, doorekeepers, Exorcistae, Exorcists, Lectores, Readers, Acoluthi, Attenders, Subdiaconi, Subdeacons, Diaconi, Deacons, and the highest degree, Sacerdotes, Priests: vnto the which all the other are but rises and steps. All these they maintaine to bee ecclesiasticall orders, and to bee retained in the Church, Belarum. cap. 11. Rhemist. 1. Tim. 3. sect. 7.

They haue no prooffe nor warrant out of Scripture, for these friuolous orders, but onely a shew of antiquitie, as they alleage certaine Canons out of the 4. Councell of Carthage, where such offices are reckoned vp, Rhemist. ibid.

As first, to let passe this, that the Councell may bee suspected for the credit thereof, seeming wholly to be patched out of the Popes decrees. And whereas Augustine with other is said to haue subscribed to this Councell, therein appeareth some forgerie: for Can. 104. it was thus decreed, Crimine adulterij notabuntur, &c. They are touched with the crime of adulterie, that hauing deuoted themselves vnto God, doe afterward runne to secular mariage. Yet Augustine is of another iudgement, Non ipsa nuptia talium damnanda iudicantur: The mariages of such we condemne not or disanull, but their fraudulent purpose, de Bon. viduitat. cap. 9. But he that saith, such are adulterers, disanulleth their mariage: therefore Augustine would not against his owne iudgement haue agreed to this Canon. Secondly, we denie not but they had such offices, as Readers, to reade the text of the Scriptures; Exorcists to cast out diuels, which was an extraordinarie gift for the time; Acoluthists, yong men appointed to attend vpon the Bishop for their better instruction; Doorekeepers, that kept the entrie of the Church, that no heathen person or excommunicate should enter. But these were both diuers offices, then are now appointed for them in the popish Church: for they make them now, all or the most, ministers and seruitors for the idolatrous seruice of the Masse, which in those daies was not heard of: neither though there were such offices and seruices in the Church, were they made orders and degrees of the Ministerie. Thirdly, they had other offices beside, which now are not in vse, no not amongst the Papists: for they had also singers, labourers, bourers, confessors, diggers or Sextons. Council Carthage 4. can. 12. there is an eight degree of Priests added. Council 1. sub Syluestro 1. there is another order found out, which are there called moder Maritimum, keepers of the Martyrs. There were also fossarij, diggers and labourers, as appeareth in the Epistle of Iguatius. So that if you will make all those offices used in time past in the Church, so many orders of the ministerie, you must make ten or eleuen; more, then you doe acknowledge, or vse in your Church.

The Protestants.

The question is not betwene vs and our aduersaries in this place, concerning the titles and dignities annexed to the Ministerie, as of Bishops, Archdeacons, Deacons, Prouosts, but of the severall orders of the Ministerie: For Bishops and other Ministers doe not differ in order, but in office of government. They hold that there are seuen severall such orders, which haue their severall rites of consecration, and peculiar offices in the Church allotted them. But we content our selves with those orders onely and degrees as necessarie, which the holie Scripture hath commended.

Argum. 1. As for the names and offices of Subdeacons, Readers, Exorcists, Acolythi, Doore-keepers, we haue no such warrant out of the Scripture, to make them orders of the Church: and therefore we condemne them. All necessarie orders for the edifying and building of the Church, the Scripture hath prescribed vs, Ephes. 4. 11. there are all offices set downe needfull for the doctrine, instruction, and edifying of the Church, Fulk. Ephes. 4. sect. 4. Wherefore away with these popish orders, inuented by men. But as for other offices and seruices, which shall be thought meet for the affaires and busines of the Church, they may be retained and kept, but not as new orders of the Ministerie.

Argum. 2. These offices are first Idolatrous, as they are now used among the Papists: for the Deacons, Subdeacons, Acolythi, were to attend vpon the Priest at Masse. Secondly, some of their offices were ridiculous; as to sweepe the Church, to driue out dogs, and to hold a flye-flap of Peacocks feathers, to keepe the flies from falling into the Communion cup. Thirdly, they were distinguished, by ridiculous ornaments and attire, which were proper to euery one of them: as it shall appeare now in their description.

From the Priest when he was degraded, they tooke the Chalice, patine, and host, that he should haue no power any more to offer sacrifice: they scraped his nayles with a peece of glasse, and so tooke away his annoynting: and lastly, they tooke away his priestly ornaments, the Chiefe, which signified charitie; the Stole, that represented the signe of our Lord. From the Deacons in their degradation, they took first the booke of the Gospels, and so all power to reade the Gospel. Then they tooke away his Dalmatike, a signe of his Leuiticall office, and the white Stole becom his backe that signified innocencie.

From the Subdeacon they tooke the booke of the Epistles, that he should haue no more power to reade them; also the emptie Chalice, and Subdeacons vesture: his office was to serue and minister to the Deacons at the Altar.

The Acolythi did light the candles in the Church, and brought wine and water to the Altar in pitchers and bottels: and in his degradation there was taken from him, an emptie flaggon or bottle, and a candlestick, with a waxe candle put out.

The order of exorcisme was taken away, by depriving him from power to reade in the booke of exorcismes.

From the Reader they tooke the booke of Church-lectures or lessons. Last of all, from the Doore-keeper was taken the keyes of the Church: And so was he deprived of all power to open or shut the Church doores, and to ring the bells, Ex Fox pag. 2134.

Thus we see, how much these offices are degenerate from the ancient vse: First, they are all but Ministers and attendants for the abominable sacrifice of the Masse, which in those daies was not knowne: for the Acolythus or waiter waiteth vpon the Subdeacon, the Subdeacon vpon the Deacon, and all of them vpon the Priest at Masse. Secondly, whereas then the Exorcists had a peculiar grace of God to cast out diuels: their Exorcists doe but reade certaine exorcismes in bookes: their Readers onely reade the text of Scripture; now they reade the Legends of popish Saints. Then in time of persecution, when Christians assembled in the night, the waiters had the charge to light the candles: but now they doe light them at noone day.

Argum. 3. These offices haue not been in vse these many yeeres among the Papists themselves: for many times the Sexton or his boy, doe execute the charge both of Acolythists, Ostiaries and Readers, yea of Deacons and Subdeacons also, when the Priest with his boy can dispatch a Masse. Neither are these orders retained amongst them, for any speciall seruice or office, but onely as preparatories, and steps and degrees to the priesthood, Fulk. annot. 1. Timoth. 2. sect. 7.

Let vs now consult with antiquitie: Damasus sometime Bishop of Rome, thus saith: Non amplius, quam duos ordines, &c. Wee know but two orders to haue been among the Disciples of our Lord:

Lord: that is, 12. Apostles, and 70. Disciples, Epist. 4. And it followeth, Vnde ille tertius professus: From whence this third order hath proceeded, we know not. And that which is brought in without reason, must bee rooted out, dist. 68. ca. 5. If Damasus misliked of a third order, much more of sixe or seven new orders: and these being invented without any cause or reason, by his rule must be extirped and rooted out.

And what is to be thought of these popish degrees, the Councell of Colen aduiseeth vs: Part. 3. cap. 31. laniandum est, ut illi minores ordines Offitiorum, Exorcistarum, Psalmista, Lectores, prater nomen in ecclesia retinerent, illorumque loco tenues aliquot homines laici per ecclesia prelatos minoris compendi gratia subrogantur: It is now come to passe, that the foure lesse orders of Doore-keepers, Exorcists, Psalmists, Readers, beside their name, haue no other office in the Church, and in their stead loose filie poore fellowes of the lay sort are appointed by the prelates, by a more compendious way. How then call you those orders, which haue a name without office, and whereof the lay sort are capable, as it is now practised in poperie?

Let vs further see how these seuen popish orders may stand by their law: Cod. lib. 1 tit. 5. l. 3. Honorum in ecclesia non debet esse maior numerus, &c. There must not bee a greater number in the Church, then the goods thereof or reuchewes will suffice to maintaine: but few Churches are able to maintaine so many orders, nay some Churches haue not left so much, as to keep one poore Vicar; how then should so many vnecessary orders be maintained?

And concerning their owne Canons, beside the decree of Damasus alleaged before, dist. 68. ca. 5. the like decree hath Innocent. 3. decret. Gregor. lib. 1 tit. 14. ca. 9. Sacros ordines dicimus diaconatum & presbyterium, &c. Sacred orders wee call Deacons and Presbyters, for these two the Primitiue Church is found onely to haue had: and in the same place he denieth Subdeacons to be numbred amongst the sacred orders. The very like words hath the Master of Sentences, lib. 4. dist. 24. l. 1. That the Primitiue Church had but two orders: & de his solis preceptum Apostoli habemus: and the Apostle giueth charge concerning no more, &c.

Now concerning these orders in particular: First, that the office of Doore-keepers is not now necessary, but had then some vse, when as Iewes and Gentiles dwelt amongst Christians: see the iudgement of your owne writer, Espe. 1. Tim. p. 226 g. And in the same place he sheweth out of Chrysostom, how it belonged to the office of the Deacon, to admit into the Church, and shut out. Also your owne Master of Sentences saith, that Christ tooke this office vpon him, when he whipped the buyers and sellers out of the temple: and that Christ, when he said, I am the doore, shewed himselfe to bee the doore-keeper, lib. 4. dist. 24. f. But if Christ were a doore-keeper, what reason haue they to make it the least office in the Church?

The second degree is of Readers; which is not a distinct office in the Church: for in some places it was the office of the Deacon, in some of the Minister, in some it belonged to the Bishop to read the Scriptures, especially on Festiuall daies, Histor. tripart. lib. 9. cap. 39. And Christ, whom your Master saith did fulfill the office of a Reader in his owne person, after he had read in the booke did interpret and expound it: so that to read Scripture and expound it, doth belong to the same office. And though we denie not, but that it is lawfull, and many times conuenient, for one to read, and another to preach, as Saint Paul did, Act. 13. 15. yet for this cause they need not bring in a new office into the Church of onely Readers.

The third degree is of Exorcists: whose office was to exorcize infants in baptisme, that were vexed of euill spirits, by adiuring them. First, we say that this miraculous gift is now ceased in the Church, and the bare name and title thereof onely remaineth. Secondly, this office of exorcizing, S. Chrysostom saith belonged vnto Deacons: sic Espe. 1. Timoth. p. 227. i. so that a speciall office needed not for that seruice. Thirdly, and Origen saith, Inducium est adiurare demonia: It was a custome among the Iewes to adiuire spirits, Tract. 3. in Mat. 23. And your owne glosse saith, that Salomon found out a certaine kinde of exorcizing, dist. 2. l. 1. c. 1. then can it not bee an office of the Gospell. Fourthly, Isidore saith, it belonged to Exorcists to looke to the fabrick and ruines of the Church, de Ecclesiast. offic. cap. 13. So that they themselues are vncertaine what the office of Exorcists should be.

The fourth degree is of Acolythists, which are interpreted followers: for so the Greeke word ἀκολουθός signifieth, whose office (they say) is to attend vpon the lampes or lights of the Church. First, whereas your Master saith, that they in the old Testament did shew a forme of this office, that dressed the lampes in the temple, lib. 4. dist. 24. f. then can it not bee a calling in the new Testament, being instituted in the old. Secondly, he saith in the same that Christ did beare this office, where he saith, I am the light of the world: by the same reason the Apostles also were Acolythi, to whom Christ said, you are the light of the world. Who seeth not what simple grounds they haue of their superstitious and superfluous offices? Thirdly, these Acolythi, or Ministers or attendants, were such as waited vpon the Bishop in his domesticall offices, both for greater honour, and to auoide further suspicion, they being alwaies witnesses of the Bishops acts: which function of the

Aclythi, Bellarmine ſaith, that Caluſt found out of his owne braine: yet is the ſame alledged by Eſſene out of the Canons, 1. Timoth. p. 215. d.

Fiftly, concerning the office of Subdeacons: firſt it is certaine, that they were employed as carriers of letters vnder the Biſhops, by whom they ſent their epiſtles and meſſages, as Eſſene ſheweth out of S. Cyprian, Comment. in 1. Timoth. p. 214. d. But this was no Eccleſiaſtical function, and therefore they were no Eccleſiaſtical officers. Secondly, I haue ſhewed before out of the decrees of  Innocentius, that Subdeacons in times paſt were not counted amongſt the ſacred orders.

Thus we ſee what ſmall warrant the Church of Rome hath for theſe ſiue ſuperfluous orders: as for the other degrees of Deacons and Miniſters, wee reſuſe them not, though wee denie them to haue any ſuch office to ſerue at the Maſſe Altar: whereof I ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake afterward in the Controverſie as touching the Sacrament of Order: and therefore of purpoſe I doe forbear in this place.

What the holy Martyrs their opinion was of theſe popiſh orders, and their ridiculous apparrell, it appeareth by Doctour Taylor holy Martyr, who when the Biſhop came to degrade him, vniuſally reſuſed to put on the popiſh prieſtly garments, calling them apopiſh toys, and toying trumperie, as for boyes to laugh at, For pag. 1324.

Biſhop Ridley Martyr, in the like caſe alſo reſuſed, calling the aforeſaid veſtures, whereby the popiſh orders are diſtinguiſhed, fooliſh and abominable, and too fond for a vice in a play, pag. 1768.

Biſhop Cranmer alſo, as Boner was buſie in degrading him from the higheſt degree to the loweſt, he mildly ſaid, All this needed not, I had my ſelfe done with this geare long agoe, pag. 118. Wherefore together with theſe holy Martyrs, wee condemne theſe deuſed degrees of popiſh orders, with their fooliſh appurtenances, as ſuperſtitious, abominable, and Antichriſtian.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE DIFFERENCE OF Biſhops and other Miniſters.

The Popiſts.

WE differ from them in two points: Firſt, they ſay, that Biſhops are not onely in a higher degree of ſuperioritie to other Miniſters, but they are as Princes of the Clergie, and other Miniſters as ſubiects, and in all things to bee commaunded by them. Secondly, they affirme that Biſhops are onely properly Paſtors, and that to them onely it doth appertaine to preach, and that other Miniſters haue no authoritie without their licence or conſent, to preach at all, and be not principally or chiefly, but ſoly and wholly to them appertaineth the right of conſecrating and giuing orders.

For the firſt, for the princely authoritie of Biſhops, whom they would haue obeyed in all things they wreſt theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture, as 2. Cor. 1. 9. I write vnto you, to know whether you will be obedient in all things: Ergo, they muſt be abſolutely obeyed.

Anſ. The Apoſtle challengeth onely obedience in ſuch things, as he ſhould commaund agreeable to Gods word: For if I my ſelfe (ſaith he) preach another Goſpell, hold me accuſed, Gala. Fulk. annot. 1. Cor. 2. ſell. 3.

Argum. 2. Againſt an Elder receiue no accuſation vnder two or three witneſſes, 1. Tim. 5. 13. Ergo, the authoritie of Biſhops is abſolute and princelike: Videmus Episcopum iudicem eſſe propriorum, prout verum principem: We ſee the Biſhop is the iudge of the Elders: Ergo, a prince ouer them, Bellar. cap. 14.

Anſ. Firſt, it followeth not, Biſhops haue iuriſdiction and authoritie ouer other Miniſters: Ergo, they are princes ouer them. Can there be no preeminence and ſuperioritie in the Church, but it muſt needs be princelike? Is every iudge a prince ouer thoſe, which are brought before him to be iudged? 2. Timothie had no ſuch princelike authoritie, for here it is reſtrained and limited, a rule is ſet downe by the Apoſtle which he muſt obſerue: Ergo, his authoritie was not abſolute. Thirdly, S. Paul was ſo farre offe from making Timothie a prince in the Church at Epheſus, that he would rather haue him not to rebuke, but to exhort the Elders as fathers, the younger men as brethren, chap. 3. 1. Where now is his princely authoritie become, whereas he maketh his ſubiects (as our aduerſaries call inferior Miniſters) his fathers and brethren?

71. Error.

For the ſecond, they reaſon thus: the Apoſtles properly had the preaching of the word committed vnto them, Act. 6: For other were choſen to attend vpon tables: the Apoſtles alſo onely had the right of laying on of hands, Act. 14. 23. Ergo, It is proper onely to Biſhops to preach, and to ordaine, who are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, Bellar. cap. 13. & 14.

Anſ. Firſt, Bellarmin denieth that Biſhops doe properly ſucceede the Apoſtles, de poſtice lib. 4. 25. becauſe he would magnifie the Pope his ghoſtly father aboue all Biſhops: but now forgetting himſelfe, he ſaith, Episcopi proprii ſuccedunt Apoſtoli, Biſhops doe properly ſucceede the Apoſtles, poſtles, chapter. 14. and ſo by this reaſon every Biſhop hath as full authoritie as the Pope. Secondly, every godly and faithfull Biſhop is a ſucceſſor to the Apoſtles; wee deny it not, and ſo are all faithfull and godly paſtors and Miniſters: for in reſpect of their extraordinarie calling, miraculous giſtes and Apoſtleſhip, the Apoſtles haue properly no ſucceſſors; as Maſter Benbridge Martyr ſaith, that hee beleeneed not Biſhops to bee the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, for that they bee not called as they were nor haue that grace: Fox. pag. 1046. artic. 67. That therefore, which the Apoſtles were eſpecially appointed vnto, is the thing, wherein the Apoſtles were properly ſucceeded; but that was the preaching of the Goſpell: As Saint Paul ſaith, be was ſent to preach, not to baptize. 1. Corinthians 1. 17. This alſo the prophet Eſay ſheweth, where hee ſaith in the name of the Lord: My words, which I haue put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeeder, nor of thy ſeeder ſeeder. Eſay 59. verſe 21. The promiſe of ſucceſſion, wee ſee, is in the preaching of the word, which appertaineth as well to other paſtors and Miniſters, as vnto Biſhops; as afterward ſhall bee declared. Again, ſeeing in the Apoſtles time Episcopos, and Presbyteros; a Biſhop, and a Prielt, were neither in name nor office diſtinguiſhed, as Maſter Lambert Martyr proueth by that place of Saint Paul, Ti. 1. where the Apoſtle calleth them Biſhops, verſ. 7. whom before verſ. 5. he had named Presbyters, Prieſts, or Elders. To this agreeeth the Councell Aquiſgranſ. cap. 8. collecting thus out of this place: Paulus Apoſtolus Presbyteros, et veros sacerdotes, sub nomine Episcoporum adſeruauit: Paulus the Apoſtle doth affirme the Elders or Presbyters to be true Prieſts, or Paſtors vnder the name of Biſhops. It followeth then that either the Apoſtles aſſigned no ſucceſſion, while they liued, neither appointed their ſucceſſors, or that indifferently all faithfull Paſtors and Preachers of the Apoſtolike faith, are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors. Fox. pag. 1117.

Thirdly, at that time when the Deacons were elected, the congregation was at Jerusalem, neither were there as yet any other Paſtors ordained; and therefore the Apoſtles onely attended vpon preaching of the word: but afterward when they had ordained Paſtors in other Churches, to them alſo fully was committed the word of reconciliation; Ephes. 4. 11. Chriſt hath giuen ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Paſtors and teachers: So that Paſtors and teachers, though ordained firſt by the Apoſtles, yet had their calling of God: and together in their calling, authoritie and commiſſion to preach; neither being once ordained, needed they to expect any further licence from the Apoſtles.

And as for the right of ordaining and impoſition of hands, though it were chiefly in the Apoſtles, yet the Paſtors and Elders together with them layde on their hands, Act. 13. 4. Yet the Rhemish conſeſſe as much, that when a Prielt is to be ordered, the reſt of the Prieſts together with the Biſhop do lay on their hands, Annotations. 1. Timothy 4. 13. What doth this elſe ſignifie, but that they haue ſome intereſt in ordaining together with the Biſhop?

The Proteſtants.

Fiſt, though we doe admitte, that for auoyding of Schiſme, the Church hath thought it meete, there ſhould be difference in degree and a ſuperioritie among Miniſters, yet your princely domination which you doe vrges now muſt be admitted.

Argum. It is contrary to the rule of Chriſt, Luk. 12. 21. The Kings of the nations are Lords over them, and they that haue authoritie over them, are called benefactors. Here our Saviour forbiddeth, that there ſhould be any ſuch princelike and pompous preeminence among eccleſiaſtical perſons, as there is among ſecular and ciuill gouernors. A ſuperioritie may be graunted, but not as the Prince is ouer his ſubjects: it was ſo in time of poperie, that the people were halfe ſubjects to the Prince and halfe ſubjects to their ſpiritual gouernours: But though we acknowledge other eccleſiaſtical fathers and paſtors, yet we are ſubjects onely to our Prince.

Argum. S. Prior alſo is ſtill againſt this princely rule and domination, Feede the ſlocke, (ſaith he) not as Lords ouer Gods heritage, but that you may be examples, 1. Pet. 5. 3. But are not they? I pray you, Lords ouer the ſlocke, that challenge to be Printes?

Let vs ſee what antiquitie ſaith: Council. Carthage. 4. can. 34. Episcopus in quolibet loco ſedens, ſine preſbyterum non patitur. Whereſoeuer the Biſhop ſitteth, hee muſt not ſuffer a ſimple prielt to ſtand before him: and this canon is confirmed in the decrees: diſtinct. 95. c. 9. Again, can. 35. Episcopus in conſſu preſbyterorum ſublimior ſedeat, intra domum vero collegam preſbyterorum ſe ſedeat. The Biſhop in the aſſembly of Prieſtes, ought to ſit in the higheſt place; but within the houſe, let him know that hee is but their fellow: This canon alſo is ratified in the decrees. diſt. 95. c. 10. Theſe ancient Canons, as they gaue vnto Biſhops ouer their brethren ſome preeminence to auoid conſuſion; ſo they allow them not a princely or lordly authoritie, to ſtay their ambition. See alſo for this point, your owne decrees: diſtinct. 95. c. 7. Episcopi ſe ſacerdotes eſſe no. ſciunt. &c. Let Biſhops know, that they are Miniſters, not Lords; let them honour their Clergie, as the Clergie, that they againe may be honoured of them, as Biſhops. And againe, Can. 8. qu. 1. c. 20. ſine reſpectum eſt, &c. This may be alledged againſt thoſe Qui de Episcopatu inuanoſcunt; which, which do swell with pride because they are Bishops, thinking that they haue gotten not a ministeriall, but an imperiall office. &c.

Fox. pag. 454.

Secondly, concerning the power of preaching, we affirme, that euery Pastor once ordayned, hath sufficient authoritie to preach in his owne flocke and charge, as Iohn Hesse notably proued to their face out of a certaine glosse in the fift booke of the decretals, that when as the Bishop ordaineth any priest, he giueth him also therewithall authoritie to preach. We denie not, but when there is iust occasion, this authoritie may be restrained by the Church gouernours, and so also may an euill Minister be suspended from his whole ministerie. But the power before spoken of, he hath at his first receiuing of orders: We thus shew it.

Whatsoever belongeth to the office of a Minister set ouer a flocke or charge, hee receiueth the power thereof when he is ordayned: But to preach the word, belongeth to the office of such: for preaching is properly the feeding of the people.

But see the absurditie of the Papiſts: they say it is not proper to the Priesthood to preach, but onely to haue power to sacrifice the body of Christ: But it is proper to the Bishop, say they, to preach. We answer: First, then the Bishop is properly the pastor of euery flocke and congregation in his diocesse, for he that properly feedeth, is properly the Pastor: And he that is properly the Pastor, hath the charge of soules properly, yea more, then hath the particular Pastor: for he is improperly their Pastor, but as it were the Bishops substitute and Vicar. But what Bishop in the world is able to beare so great a burthen, to haue the especiall and proper charge of all the soules in his diocesse? It is not to be denied, but he hath a charge of their soules, as a Christian Prince also hath in some respect of his subiects: but to say, he is the proper Pastor, and hath the proper and principall charge of soules in teaching and feeding of them (for the question is now of preaching, not of gouerning) who is able to abide it? Secondly, but our Rhemists tell us another tale, that many that are not able to preach, are meete enough to be Bishops. 1. Timothy. 5. 17. Ergo, it is not proper to Bishops neither to preach. I pray you then, for whom is it proper? if neither for Bishops nor inferiour pastours, then for none. Thirdly, they make but lesser orders of Ecclesiasticall Ministers, and the priesthood is the chiefe: for a Bishop and a Priest make but one order, as Bellarmine confesseth chapter 11. But to none of all these orders it is proper to preach: for seeing it is not proper to the priest, none of the inferiour orders can challenge it. So then what goodly orders these are, which leaue the very chiefe part of the ministerie vndone, which is the preaching of the word. I thinke their meaning is, that this preaching is not so necessary a dutie, but may be well spared in the Church.

Fox. pag. 453.

Argum. 2. That which a man is bound to do vnder paine of the curse of God, that hee may lawfully performe in due order without the leaue of men: but a woe is layd vpon them that preach not the Gospell, where they are bound, 1. Corinthians 9. 16. Ergo. Argum. Wickliff.

Argum. 3. A man is bound to giue corporall almes to the poore, the needie, the hungry, the thirſtie, neither is he to craue leaue of any: Ergo, much more to teach the ignorant, to comfort the weake, and doe other duties appertayning to his charge. Argum. Wickliff.

To these agree the decrees of former times: Council. Aquisgranens. cap. 8. ex Iſidor. Presbyteri. f. cut episcopi. dispensatio mysteriorum Dei commissa est: praesunt enim Ecclesiae Christi & in confectum dominici sanguinis &c. confortes cum episcopis sunt, similiter & in doctrina populorum, & officio predicandi &c. Vnto Priests, as well as to Bishops, is committed the dispensation of Gods mysteries, for they are set ouer the Church of God, and are partakers with Bishops, both in the confectiō of the sacrament of Christs bloud, &c. and in the teaching of the people, and office of preaching.

Constantinop. 8. cau. 8. 9. It was decreed thus, that whereas Photius the schismaticall Bishop of Constantinople, who did vsurpe that See, did extort writings from the Clergie, vnder their owne hands, wherein they promised to cleaue to him, and he againe gaue them writings, authorizing them thereby to preach: the Councell thereupon thus determined, ſi licet omnibus idoneis doctis liberi sine facultate per chirographum, That it should be lawfull for all that were fit to preach without license vnder hand writing.

Likewise in their owne decrees, distin. 95. c. 6. we thus reade: Nemo hinc Episcoporum tractetur &c. Let not the Bishops from henceforth be offended, if the Presbyters or Ministers exhort the people, if they preach in the Church, &c. He that wil not haue them to do that, which is commanded of God, let him say, is any man greater then Christ? if the Minister do consecrate the bodie of Christ, and blesse the Sacrament, ought he not to pronounce the blessing vpon the people? And it followeth in the same place. Thus by your commandment (O vnequall prelates) the Minister of God doth loose his office, is deprived of the vse of his tongue, he is mayned, he hath onely the name of a Minister, but the fulnesse and perfection thereof, which appertaineth to his consecration, he holdeth not: much more followeth in the same place, which may be applyed against gainst popish Bishops, that cut the inferior Ministers short of the better part of their office, which is to preach the word of God.

Againe: ibid. dist. 93. c. 7. Pessima consuetudo est: It is a very bad custome in certaine Churches, for Priests to hold their peace in the presence of the Bishops, as though they did either enuie, or scorn to heare them, contrary to the Apostle which saith, If any thing be revealed to another sitting by, let the first keepe silence. Thus farre that decree out of S. Hierome.

Maister Lamberti Martyr. It is lawfull for all Priests freely to preach the word, and that at all times, in al places, and to al persons, although they be not sent: for al such are chosen to be preachers, and therefore sent: for of this speaketh Gregory in his pastorals, saying, Prædicationis officium suscipit quisquis ad sacerdotium accedit: Whosoever taketh priesthood vpon him, taketh vpon him also the office of preaching: Fox. pag. 1111. respons. ad articul. 21.

Maister Tindall Martyr, there is but one especiall office that pertaineth to thine orders, and that is to preach the word of God. pag. 1253.

Concerning the power of giuing orders: As S. Paul speaketh of the laying on of his hands, 2. Tim. 1.6. so he maketh mention of imposition of hands by the Eldership, 1. Tim. 4.14. And the Rhemists vpon that place milike not the practise of the Church, that their Priests doe lay on their hands together with the Bishop vpon his head that is to be ordayned.

Concil. Carthagen. 4. can. 3. Omnes presbyteri, qui presentes sunt, manus suam iuxta manum episcopi, super caput presbyteri ordinandum tenent. Let all the Priests that are present, hold their hands next to the Bishops hand vpon his head that is to be ordained. Againe can. 24. of the same Councell. Episcopus sine concilio Clericorum Clericos non ordinet: The Bishop must not giue orders, but in the presence and assemblie of the Clergie. By this then it is manifest, that imposition of hands doth not wholly and folie belong vnto the Bishop, seeing the rest of the Elders were wont to lay on their hands likewise, or the Bishop in the name of the rest, Falk. ann. 1. tit. 1. fol. 2. So that the Elders were not excluded.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, WHETHER THE difference betweene Bishops and other Ministers be grounded vpon the Law of God, and institution of the Apostles.

The Papists.

Bellarmin affirmeth, that the iurisdiction of Bishops, as now it standeth in their Church, and the difference betweene them, and other Presbyters, is, iure diuino, grounded vpon the Law of God, and of such necessitie, that he holdeth the contrary to be heretic, and those to be hereticks, that hold this difference to arise rather of a politike constitution of the Church to auoyd Schisme, then of the institution of the Apostles: lib. 1. de Clericis c. 14. Yea they hold them to be no Churches at all, which are not vnder the gouernement of Bishops, but of other ouerscers, and superintendents: Sand ego, nec ecclesiam ibi intelligere possum &c. Surely I see not (saith one) how there can be any Church, where there is no Bishop: Episcopus. in 1. Tim. 194. b. And so is it in a late decree of theirs out of the Council of Paris: dist. 93. c. 8. Nulla ratione Clerici &c. They in no wise are said to be Clerkes, or priests, that are not gouerned vnder the discipline of any Bishop; for such the Church in former time called Acephali, men without an head: Which decree if it be so vnderstood, that no Church ought to be without an head, that is, some commendable forme of discipline and gouernement, then may it well be receiued: but if it be taken strictly, that no Church can be without such Bishops, as they haue; this were both to condemne the Churches of Geneva, and Scotland, and diuers in Germanie, which haue Superintendents, and no Bishops at all; as also the Church of England, that hath Bishops, but not such, as theirs are. Let vs see some of their arguments, for the necessary difference and preeminence of Bishops by the law of God.

Argum. 1. In the old Testament, there was the high Priest as chief, vpon whose sentence euery matter depended, and other inferior priests vnder his obedience. In the new Testament, Bishops are as the high Priests then; and presbyters now, as the inferior priests then: Ergo, by the Law of God there is a difference: Bellarmin.

Answ. First, the high Priest in the Law was a figure of Christ, who is the high Priest of the new Testament, and chiefe Shephard. 1. Pet. 5. 4. and therefore this type being fulfilled in Christ, cannot properly be applied to the external Hierarchie of the Church. Secondly, if euery Bishop be this high Priest, then haue you lost one of your best arguments for the Pope, whom you would haue to be the high Priest in the Church. Thirdly, a difference notwithstanding we grant of prioritie and order, but not of princely dominion, both in the Priests of the old law, and the Ministers of the Gospel. Fourthly, it is yntue, that all things were gouerned onely at the will of the high Priest, for the other Priests also were his assistants, and did debate matters in Council with them: And this was that Sanhedrim or Councell, Act. 15. 4. wherein together with the high Priests were aſſembled other Elders alſo, called Presbyteri, Presbyters, A. 4. 8. 23. And this one of your owne writers confeſſeth: Et Synagoga, & poſtea Eccleſia ſeniores habuit, &c. Both the Synagogue and afterward the Church had certaine Elders, without whoſe counſell, nothing was done: which Seigniorie, by what negligence it was growen out of vie, S. Ambroſe modeſtly confeſſeth hee knew not; Eſpene. in 1. Timoth. 5. 5. verſ. 1. Fifthly, S. Hierome reaſoneth thus, that if Mofes, qui potuit ſolus praeſſe: that if Mofes, who might himſelfe onely have bene Ruler of the people, yet choſe unto him 70. Elders, together with whom hee iudged the people: ſo ſhould Biſhops and Presbyters in commune regere; governe the Church in common, imitating Mofes; Hierom. Enag. If Mofes had partners in the gouernement of the ciuill ſtate, there is no queſtion, but the high Priest had likewiſe in the eccleſiaſticall.

Argum. 2. Chriſt ordayned 12. Apoſtles, and 70. Diſciples beſide, betweene whom there was great difference; the Biſhops ſucceed the Apoſtles, the Priests come in the place of the Diſciples: Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, Bellarmino here diſputeth not to the point, for he is not onely to proue a ſimile difference and diſtinction, which we graunt: but a Princely preeminence, which hee ſhall neuer ſhew. Secondly, not onely Biſhops, but all faithfull Paſtors and Miniſters are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors: as Ignatius witneſſeth epiſtol. ad Trallianum. Subditi eſſote &c. Be ye ſubiect to the Colledge of the Presbyters, as to the Apoſtles of the Lord: though in the ſame place he compare the Biſhops to Chriſt, the priests to his Apoſtles, as noting a difference; yet it is ſufficient, for that purpoſe we alledge in, that they alſo are reſembled to the Apoſtles. Thirdly, that Priests ſucceed in the place of the Apoſtles, and that Deacons are in ſtead of the 70. Diſciples: and not, as he ſaith: that it is euident out of their owne decrees, diſtinct. 68. c. 4. Damasci, non amplius, quam duos ordines, &c. We reade but of two orders among the Diſciples of Chriſt, that is, of the twelue Apoſtles and the 70. Diſciples: And who are now in the place of thoſe, Innocentius ſheweth, decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 24. c. 9. Hoc ſolus Primitiua Eccleſia &c. The primitiue Church onely had theſe two ſacred orders, of Priests and Deacons. Fourthly, his argument concludeth not, Apoſtles were aboue Diſciples: Ergo, Biſhops be. viſeſſe he do aſſume this, but Biſhops are Apoſtles: which is denied by Ignatius, who though he were neere to the Apoſtles time, being the third Biſhop of Antioch after Peter, and had ſeene Chriſt after his reſurrection; yet writing to the Antiochians, ſaith, Hac non uti Apoſtolus praecipio: I do not command theſe things as an Apoſtle.

Argum. 3. S. Paul ſaith to Timothie: Recte ne accuſation agant contra te quod non es presbyter, sed quod non es episcopus: 1. Timoth. 5. Here Timothie Biſhop of Ephesus, is made iudge of the Priests and Miniſters: Ergo, in the Apoſtles time a difference. &c. Bellarmino. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it may be doubted whether Timothie were ſo ordayned by the Apoſtle Biſhop of Ephesus, as now a Biſhop is ſet ouer his diocelle: for then the Apoſtle would neuer haue called him ſo often from his charge as he doth, and employed him in the ſeruiſe of other Churches; as he ſendeth him to Corinthus, 1. Cor. 6. 10. to the Theſſalonians to confirme their faith, 1. Theſſ. 2. and to other Churches beſide. It is moſt like, that Timothie had the place and calling of an Euangelist, whoſe office was to ſecond the Apoſtles in their miniſterie, and to water that, which the Apoſtles had plantyd. And that the calling of Euangelists and Biſhops, which were Paſtors, was diuers, it appeareth by S. Paul. Ephel. 4. 11. He hath giuen ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Euangelists, ſome Paſtors &c. And that Timothie was ſuch an Euangelist, it may be gathered, for that the Apoſtle biddeth him do the worke of an Euangelist, 2. Timoth. 4. 5. Secondly, and againe, ſeeing that Timothie was ordayned by the authoritie of the Eldership, 1. Timoth. 4. 14. which they themſelues translate the Priethood; and the Rhemiſts expound it of the ancient practice of the Church, when the Priests together with the Biſhop lay their hands vpon him that is ordaind, ex Concil. Carthag. 4. c. 3. and ſo alſo Iohan. Groppe in their owne bird doth vnderſtand it; to whom alſo conſenteth Eſpene in his Commentarie vpon that place: how then could Timothie be a Biſhop ſtrictly and preciſely taken, being ordaind by presbyters? Thirdly, but to admit that Timothie was a Biſhop, or at the leaſt, which is all one to the matter in hand, greater then a Biſhop: yet cannot he conclude from hence the princely preeminence ouer priests as their ſubiects, and an absolute and plenarie power in them, the other excluded: for he biddeth Timothie not to rebuke, but to exhort the Elders as Fathers; which Ephraſimus vnderſtandeth of elder Miniſters: whereby he giueth no princely dominion to Timothie, but a brotherly ſuperioritie in gentle admonition. Again, where he ſaith, recte ne accuſation agant contra te quod non es episcopus &c. though he ſpeake by name to Timothie, directing his ſpeech to him as the chiefe, yet he excludeth not the reſt: as the holy Ghoſt writing to the Angels and chiefe Paſtors of the ſeuen Churches, Apocal. 2. 3. implieth the reſt of the Miniſters and Church there; as may appeare by the matter of the Epistles, wherein the faults of the whole Church are reſproued, and their vertues commended. Neither can it be gathered by thoſe words of the Apoſtle, Lay hands ſuddenly vpon no man, &c. that Timothie had this ſole power in himſelfe: for the Apoſtle would not giue that to him, which he did not take to himſelfe, who associated vnto him the rest of the Presbyterie in the ordaining of Timothy, 1. Tim. 4. 14. but he speaketh to him as the chiefe. Wherefore whatsoever yet hath been alleged, this champion hath failed in the prooue of the princely Monarch of his united Bishops by the worde of God: I will come now to deliuer our owne opinion.

The Prolegomena.

Of the difference betweene Bishops and Priests there are three opinions: the first of Aerius, who did hold that all Ministers should bee equall, and that a Bishop was not, neither ought to be superiour to a Priest, neither that there was any difference at all betweene them: which opinion of his, was counted among other heresies: Augustin. de heresib. cap. 33. Epiphanius. heres. 75. The second opinion in the other extreame is of the Papists, as we haue seene, that would haue not onely a difference, but a princely preeminence of their Bishops ouer the Clergie, and that by the worde of God: and they vrge it to bee so necessarie, that they are no Churches, which recognize not their pontificall hierarchie. The third opinion is betweene both, that although this distinction of Bishops and Priests, as it is now receiued, cannot be directly proued out of Scripture, yet it is very necessary for the policie of the Church, to auoid schismes, &c. to preserve it in vnitie: Of this iudgement B. Iewel against Harding sheweth both Chrysostome, Ambrose, and Hierome to haue been; Deus. Apolog. pag. 248. And amongst the rest Saint Hierome thus writeth: « Apostolum perfectum docere, &c. » That the Apostle teacheth euidently, that Bishops and Priests were the same: Yet he holdeth this distinction to be necessarie for the government of the Church: Quid enim post electus est, qui ceteris praeponeretur, in schismatis factum est remedium: That one afterwarde was chosen so bee let ouer the rest, it was done to be a remedie against schisme: ad Euseb. To this opinion of Saint Hierome subscribeth Bishop Iewel in the place before quoted, and a most reuerend Prelate of our Church yet liuing, in these words: I know these names bee confounded in the Scriptures, but I speake according to the manner and custome of the Church euer since the Apostles tyme, Deus. Apolog. aduoc. pag. 383. Which saying is agreeable to that of S. Augustin. de sermone hominum uoc. 4. Epist. 19. ad Iulianum « Iula qua ecclesia usui obtinuit, &c. » According to the names of honour, which the use or custome of Hieron. the Church hath obtained, a Bishop is greater then a Priest. So that Augustin himselfe, who was no Aerian, doth ground this distinction rather vpon ancient custome, then the Scripture. Now then of these three opinions, the two first we reiect, the one of the Papists we haue already confuted; the other of Aerius commeth now to be examined; the third followeth by our argumentes to be confirmed.

That Aerius was iustly condemned of the Church for bringing in a popular equalitie of Ministers in the Church (though he deserved not for this opinion onely, to be counted amongst the greatest heretikes) thus we make it plaine.

Argum. 1. There was an order and prioritie amongst the Apostles themselves, though in respect of their Apostleship they were all of one authoritie: much more therefore should there be an order and degree amongst the Ministers of the Church, who are inferior to the Apostles.

The first part is thus proued: Act. 1. The prioritie of speaking is given to Peter, in the election of Matthias, Act. 15. The definitive sentence is pronounced by S. James, Galath. 2. 7, 8. Saint Paul is ordained the chiefe Apostle of the vncircumcision, and Saint Peter of the circumcision. And amongst the Apostles themselves, some were counted the chiefe and esteemed as pillars, as James, Cephas, John, Galath. 2. 2, 9. We also graunt, that Peter, when he confessed Christ for and in the name of the rest, had a primacie of order, and a prioritie at that tyme, who also for and in the name of the rest first receiued the keyes of the Church. And thus much Cyprian acknowledgeth: Hic est ceteris Apostoli, quod fuit Petrus, &c. The rest of the Apostles were the same that Peter was, hauing like fellowship of power and honour: but the beginning is from one, that the Church may appeare to be one, de simplicit. praelator. Wherefore if that amongst the Apostles an order and prioritie may bee graunted, how much more amongst other Ministers is a difference to bee admitted?

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith, God hath ordained in the Church, first Apostles, secondly Prophets, thirdly teachers, then them that doe works miracles, after that the gifts of healing, &c. The Apostle here assigning to some the first place, to others the second, to some the third, and so to the fift, euidently sheweth, that there was a difference, and a preeminence in the gifts and callings of the Church. And seeing it cannot be denied, but that the Apostles were chiefe and superiour to all other Ministers: it followeth, that the Apostles themselves allowed a superioritie in the Ministers of the Church. And although their calling was extraordinarie, and therefore they were the chiefe; yet after their calling ceased, and they were translated, an order still for government was to remaine in the Church.

Argum. 3. 1. Cor. 14. 33. the Apostle saith, God is not the author of confusion, or disorder: but to haue a popular equalitie amongst the Ministers, were the next way to bring in confusion, if none should bee ruled or directed by other. As S. Hierome well saith, « Si nulli ordinem tueremur, &c. » If you take take away the order of the tabernacle, if all should be as one mixt bodie, and as the saying is, in one heape of dust, or as we say, an hodgepoch: then to small purpose are Bishops, Priests, Deacons, &c. lib. 2. aduers. Iovinianum. His meaning is, that like as where a building is not distinguished into the parts, but lieth altogether in a rude heape, it falleth quickly to ruine and dust: so the Church being without order, soone commeth to confusion. Wherefore as the Apostle concludeth, Let all things be done comely and in order, 1. Cor. 14. 40: So, whosoever goeth about to breake the order of the Church, as Aerius, or whosoever else, is a disturber. And this may suffice by the way for the confutation of Aerius schismaticall opinion. Now for the confirmation of Hieromes iudgement.

Argum. 1. S. Hierome alleageth diuers places of Scripture, to shew that a Priest and a Bishop in the Apostles times were all one: as Aët. 20. vers. 17. those whom the Apostle calleth Elders or Presbyters, vers. 28. he nameth Bishops, or ouerseers. Tit. 1. 5. I left thee in Crete for this cause, to ordaine Elders or Priests: and then he sheweth what manner of persons the Elders should be, vers. 7. for a Bishop must bee blamelesse, &c. Likewise S. Peter, 1. epist. 5. 1. exhorteth the Presbyters or Priests to feede the flocke, vers. 2. that is, ouerseeing, from whence the name of Episcopus, a Bishop, is deriued. Hence he concludeth thus, idem ergo presbyter & Episcopus, &c. Therefore a Bishop and Priest are all one. Hieron. ad Euag.

To these testimonies of Scripture diuers answeres are framed: First, Epiphanius answereth, that the Apostle calleth Bishops Priests, because in many Churches, for the want and penurie of sufficient Ministers, there were no Priests but Bishops, who also did the office of Priests.

But Ballarminus misliketh this answer: for the Apostle in his epistle to the Philippians, writeth to the Bishops and Deacons there, 1. chap. vers. 1. but in one citie there could be but one Bishop: and it is more like that there might be many Priests, then Bishops, in one citie.

Secondly, Theodoret answereth, that in the Apostles time the Bishops were called Apostles, and the Priests Bishops, as Epaphroditus is called the Apostle of the Philippians, 2. Philip. 2. 5. and therefore the office of Priests is described vnder the name of Bishops.

Ans. First, it is more probable, that Bishops should bee called Apostles after the Apostles time, then while they lived; because that while the Apostles remained, the calling of Bishops is not thought then to haue been so necessarie as afterward: but yet after the Apostles were departed, the ancient Bishops refused to bee called Apostles, as before I shewed in Iguatius. And S. Cyprian thus writeth, Me nullius suadela potest inclinare, &c. No man can perswade me, that there are now other Apostles, &c. de singularitate clericorum. Secondly, concerning the instance of Epaphroditus, he is called their Apostle, that is, messenger, because he brought the beneuolence of that Church vnto S. Paul, Philipp. 4. 18. and so this word, Apostle, is taken both in the Ciuill and Canon law, in so much, that letters dimissorie graunted in the cause of appeale, by him, from whom the appeale is made, are called (Apostolic) letters of dismissing, or sending the cause to him, to whom the appeale is made, Divers. p. 2. caus. 2. quest. 6. ca. 2. 4. facti decret. lib. 2. tit. 1. 5. 2. 1. Thirdly, we denie not, but that the Ministers and Pastors of the Churches were also called Apostles, in respect of their pastoral office, 1. Cor. 8. 23. but not in that sense, as the 12. Apostles were so called, but in a larger sense and more generall vse of the word: As the word Deacon or Deaconship is likewise taken sometimes strictly for a speciall office of the Church, as Aët. 6. there were seuen Deacons elected; sometimes more largely for any office, or ministerie, as the Apostleship is called diaconia, Aët. 1. 2. 5. a Deaconship; and Timotheus an Euangelist is called a Deacon, that is, a Minister, 1. Thessal. 3. 2. As the Apostles then in a generall acception of the word were called Deacons, to wee denie not but that Bishops and Pastors might bee called Apostles. Fourthly, that none in the Apostles time were vsually and properly knowne by that name, but the twelue onely, to whom were afterward adioyned Paul and Barnabas, it is manifest out of the Scripture, Luk. 6. 13. Christi chose twelue, whom he named Apostles: the name therefore of Apostle, must be of Christs giuing. And Saint Paul saith, 1. Cor. 12. vers. 28. Ephes. 4. 11. that God hath giuen some to be Apostles, some Pastors and Doctors: and all are not Apostles, vers. 29. If then some were Apostles, not all, some other Pastors, the Pastors were not Apostles. This answer therefore is insufficient.

Thirdly, Michael Medina a Papist thinketh, that both Hierome, Ambrose, Augustine, Chrysostom, were in the same heresie with Aerius.

This erroneous iudgement of his is confuted by Ballarminus: and it may easily bee disprooued. First, seeing Augustine with the rest held Aerius to bee an heretike, how could they condemne that for an heresie in him, which they themselues maintained? Secondly, it is not like that the Church, which hath condemned that for heresie in Aerius, would tolerate it in the rest. Thirdly, there is great difference betweene Aerius opinion, and theirs: for he would haue no difference at all betweene a Bishop and a Priest: the fathers allowed a difference, holding it to be profitable for the peace of the Church: they onely affirmed, that this distinction was rather authorized by the ancient practise of the Church, then by any direct place of Scripture.

Fourthly,

Fourthly, Bellarmine alleageth the opinion of one Delphinus a popish writer, lib. 2. de Ecclesiâ that by the sentence of Hierome, in the beginning the same men were both Bishops and Priests, not that the office of both was the same, but that then both were ioyned together in one man; and afterward, some were made Bishops onely, some Priests only.

Bellarmine also confuteth this opinion, and sheweth, that Hierome his meaning was, that the office of a Bishop and a Priest in the Scripture are taken to bee all one, and not for that they might be, or were sometime in one man: for thus Hierome saith, epist. ad Enag. Quid facis excepta ordinatione, &c. What doth a Bishop, beside giuing of orders, that a Priest doth not? And againe, Communi presbyterum confilio, &c. The Church was governed in time past by the common counsell or aduice of the Presbyters. Whereby it is cleere that Hierome speaketh not of the persons, but of the office. And yet more plainly, Episcopum & presbyterum unum esse, aliud nomen officij, &c. That a Bishop and a Priest are all one, the one being a name of office, the other of age. So he thinketh the office to be the same, the names diuers.

The fit and last answer to the places of Scripture proposed is Bellarmine: who thinketh that in the Apostles time the names of Bishops and Priests were confounded, being common to all Ministers; but that the offices and functions themselves were distinguished.

Ans. First, Saint Hierome sheweth out of Saint Paul, 1. Timoth. 3. where he describeth the office of a Bishop, that not only the name of a Bishop and a Priest was taken for the same, but the office also: because the Apostle requireth the same properties and qualities in them both: De presbytero requiritur, quia & in Episcopo presbyter continetur: There is no mention made of a Priest, because he is contained vnder a Bishop, Hieron. Enag. And in the same Epistle he vrgeth that place, Tit. 1. 5. 7. where the Apostle doth not only giue the name of Bishops to Priests, but requireth the same gifts and qualities in them both. Secondly, S. Chrysostome vseth the same reason, Hom. 11. in 1. ad Timot. Inter Episcopum & presbyterum interest ferè nihil, &c. There is almost no difference betweene a Bishop and a Priest, because that vnto Priests the care of the Church is committed, and that, which the Apostle said of Bishops, doth agree vnto Priests. Thirdly, Saint Ambrose also vpon the same ground thus writeth: Comment. in 1. Timoth. 3. Post Episcopum diaconatus ordinationem subiecit, &c. He doth place the ordination of a Deacon after a Bishop: why? because there is but one ordination of a Bishop and a Priest: for both of them is a Minister (Sacerdos) yet the Bishop is the first among the Priests. Fourthly, likewise Council. Aquisgran. cap. 8. in these words out of Isidore they conclude thus: Vnde ad Timotheum de ordinatione, &c. Hereupon the Apostle writing to Timotheus of the ordination of a Bishop and a Deacon, speaketh nothing of Priests, because he comprehendeth them vnder the name of Bishops: secundus etenim gradus penè coniunctus est primo: for the second degree is almost all one with the first. Thus by the iudgement of these learned fathers, there was small difference, as betweene the names; so betweene the offices of Priests and Bishops in the Apostles time. And thus much concerning the testimonies of Scripture.

Argum. 2. Archbishops and Primates haue the same right of iurisdiction ouer other Bishops, which Bishops haue ouer simple Priests: but their authoritie and iurisdiction is rather grounded vpon the ancient custome of the Church, then any Apostolical iniunction or institution in Scripture. Ergo.

The second part of the reason is proued by the authoritie of S. Hierome, or who else was the author of the booke de 7. Ordinib. Propter hoc est nuper Episcopalis electio, &c. For this cause also, that is the preferring of vnitie, the election of the Bishop is referred to the Metropolitane, &c. and now the chiefe Priests begin to endure another Priest aboue them, non ex iure, sed necessitate, rather of necessitie, then equitie. Also the decree of Nicholau the Pope, Can. 3. de Patriarch. Primates vel Patriarchas nihil habere privilegij, &c. We doe determine, that Primates and Patriarches haue no priuiledge before other Bishops, nisi quantum, but as farre as the sacred Canons doe graunt, and ancient custome of old time hath giuen vnto them. This also is affirmed by that reuerend and learned Prelate B. Iewell out of Hierome, Defens. Apolog. p. 123. that Bishops are subiect to Primates rather by continuance of custome, then by precept of Scripture.

Argum. 3. Bishops are said to succcede the Apostles, as S. Cyprian witnesseth, lib. 2. epist. 10. ad Cornel. Hoc vel maxime frater, &c. Brother, wee must chiefly labour for this, that we may retaine vnitie, deliuered by our Lord and his Apostles to vs their successors. But a successor commeth not in place, till the predecessor be gone: Decret. pars. 2. caus. 7. quest. 1. & 5. Viuentis Episcopo, &c. As long as the Bishop liueth, no man can succcede him. And Can. 41. In vna Ecclesia, &c. There cannot bee two Bishops in one place: Ergo, the Apostles could haue no successors while they liued: and they being the chiefe Pastors and Bishops of euery Church, there could be no other beside them. And although they might commit the chiefe oversight of some Churches to some speciall men in their absence, as to Timotheus at Ephesus, to Titus in Creta: yet could they not then be said properly to be the Apostles successors; and the Apostles yet being aliue, the office of Bishops was lesse needful, as a reuerend Prelate hath written. So then I conclude out of the Councell Aquisgran. cap. 9. ex Isidore, Isidor. Apostolis decedentibus, successerunt Episcopi: The Apostles deceding or departing, the Bishops succeeded. Wherefore it is probable, that while the Apostles liued, Bishops were not in their full office, but after their departure.

Argum. 4. If the distinction of Bishops and priests were by the commandement and institution of Christ and his Apostles, it should necessarily be enioyned vnto all Churches: for all the precepts and ordinances of Christ and his Apostles are of necessitie to be kept. 2. Thess. 2. 15. Hold the ordinances which you haue bene taught, &c. But this cannot without preiudice of many reformed Churches, be affirmed, which haue no Bishops, though they haue other Ouerseers in their stead. And although it can not be denied, but that the governmēt of bishops according to the vse of the primitiue Church, is very profitable for the preserving of vnitie; yet dare we not condemne the Churches of Geneva, Heluetia, Germanie, Scotland, that haue receiued an other forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernement: as the Papiſts proudly affirme all Churches, which haue not such Bishops as theirs are, to be no Churches: Wherefore I cannot conclude that this speciall forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernement; is absolutely prescribed in the word: for then all those Churches, which haue not that prescript forme, whether of Bishops, or other, should be condemned as erroneous Churches. So then here is the difference betwene our aduersaries the Papiſts and vs: they say it is of necessitie to saluation, to be subiect to the Pope, and to Bishops and Archbishops vnder him, as necessarily prescribed in the word: but so do not our Bishops and Archbishops, which is a notable difference betwene the Bishops of the popish Church, and of the reformed Churches: defens. anſw. aduoc. p. 382. Wherefore, as we condemne not those reformed Churches, which haue retained another forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernement; so neither are they to censure our Church, for holding still the ancient regiment of Bishops, purged from the ambitious and superstitious inuentions of the popish prelatie. Let every Church vse that forme, which best fitteth their state: in externall matters every Church is free, not one bound to the prescription of another, so they measure themselves by the rule of the word: for if any Church shal seeme to prescribe vnto another in those things, wherein they are left free, that saying of the Apostle may be fitly applied againſt them, 1. Cor. 14. 36. Did the word of God spring from you, or came it vnto you only? God may giue vnto one Church wisdom out of the word, to know what is best for their state, as well as to another. And so I conclude this point, with that saying of S. Augustine to the Donatist Bishops: Tenete, quod tenetis &c. Hold, that which you hold; you haue your sheepe, I haue my sheepe, be not troublesome to my sheepe, I am not troublesome to yours, exposit. 2. in Psal. 21. So may we say to our sisters the reformed Churches, and they likewise to vs: let them hold that gouernement they haue, we do not molest them in their course, neyther let them molest vs in ours.

Thus hitherto haue I shewed the grounds of Hieromes opinion concerning the distinction of Bishops and other Ministers, which is also ratified by their owne decrees, distinct. 95. c. 5. Olim idem erat &c. In times past a Priest was the same, that a Bishop: and before that by the instinct of the diuell sectes entred into Religion, communis presbyterorum concilio; The Church was gouerned by the common councill of the Presbyters: and distinct. 93. c. 24. quod postea unus electus est &c. that afterward one was chosen to be preferred before the rest, it was done to be a remedie against schisme: likewise that saying of Augustine, secundum honorum vocabula; That according to the titles of honor, which the vse of the Church hath obtained, a Bishop is greater then a Priest; is confirmed, par. 2. caus. 2. qu. 7. c. 34. And so their owne decrees conclude this matter against themselves, distinct. 95. c. 5. Sicut ergo presbyteri &c. As Priests therefore do know, that they by the custome of the Church are subiect to him, that is set ouer them; so let Bishops vnderstand, that they also by the same custome, rather then by vertue of the Lords dispensation, are greater then Priests &c. But Hierome thus writing, giueth no encouragement to inferior Ministers, to cast off the yoke of their superiors: but exhorteth them willingly to submit themselves; Sit subiectus presbyteri &c. Be subiect to thy Bishop, and receiue him, as thy spirituall father. Likewise he exhorteth Bishops, Honorent clericos &c. let them honour their Clergie, as the Clergie, that their Clergie may honor them, as their Bishops, distinct. 95. c. 7. And thus the same learned father concludeth with his exhortation to them both: that they not respecting their titles, should labour together for peace, and to profite the Church: Quomodo in legionibus & exercitu &c. Like as in the armie, some are Generals, some Centurions, some Tribunes, but the battell being once ioyned, titles of honor cease, onely valour is required: so in this field and battell, wherein we fight against the diuell, not names and titles are to be sought for, but godly endeouour &c. lib. 1. aduers. Iovinian. that whether Bishops as superiors, or Ministers as inferiors, they must ioyne together in the Lords worke, like as the Captaine and souldier fight together, the Master builder and the labourer build together.

Now to conclude this whole question, and to speake distinctly of euery point, that it may appeare how farre this difference in Ecclesiasticall functions is diuine, and wherein humane: this I iudge may safely without any contradiction be affirmed, that in this distinction of the Ministers of the Church, there is somewhat apostolicall, somewhat also politicall: and in the popish Prelacie ie, something also antichristian and diabolical: as I will now briefly shew in every point, by particular induction.

First, in the calling of Bishops, as they are now ordained in some reformed Church, there is somewhat diuine and Apostolicall; for it cannot be denied, but that to haue order in the Church, and to haue diuersitie of degrees and ministrations, to auoide confusion, proceedeth from the institution of Christ: And thus farre the preface to the 21. distinction may be receiued and allowed; which thus determineth, Maisimum & minurum facit deum, &c. The distinction of the greater and lesse Ministers tooke beginning from Christ in the new Testament, who did institute 12. Apostles as the greater and higher sort of Ministers, and 72. Disciples as the lesse. This then we say, is agreeable to the institution of Christ, that there should be not a popular equalitie, but a convenient superioritie and prioritie in the Ministers of the Gospell, as S. Paul also sheweth, 1. Cor. 12. 28. first Apostles, secondly Prophets, &c. as I haue proued at large before.

Secondly, there is somewhat politicall: and that of two sorts, as touching the policie Ecclesiasticall, and Ciuill.

To the Ecclesiasticall policie in the aduancing of the dignitie of Bishops these things doe appertaine: First of all S. Hierome saith of confirmation committed onely to Bishops, Discretio obferuationis ad honorem patris esse sacerdotis, &c. Know that this obseruation is rather for the honour of their priesthood, then by necessitie of any law, Hierou. aduers. Iulianum.

Secondly, the Councell of Aquisgran, ca. 8. saith, that the ordination and consecration of Ministers is now referred to the chiefe Minister; solum propter auctoritatem, onely for authoritie sake, least that the discipline of the Church being challenged by many, should breake the peace of the Church.

Thirdly, the author of the booke vnder Hieromes name de 7. gradibus saith, that the consecration of Virgins, which is not now in vse in the reformed Churches, was referred to the Bishop, for concord sake.

Fourthly, the iurisdiction of the Church, which in time past Hierome saith was committed to the Senate or Colledge of the Presbyters, was afterward, to auoide schisme, deuolued to the Bishop: Distinct. 95. c. 5. Antequam, &c. Before sects entered into religion, the Church was gouerned by the common councell of Presbyters. And of this Senate mention is made in the decrees: Caus. 16. quæst. 1. c. 7. Senatum Romanum, &c. As the Romanes had their Senate, by whose counsell every matter was dispatched; so we haue our Senate the companie of Elders.

Fifthly, S. Ambrose saith, 1. Timoth. 3. Episcopi & presbyteri, &c. A Bishop and a Presbyter haue but one ordination: for they are both in the Priesthood. Whereby it may appeare, that the speciall consecration of Bishops was since ordained for the dignitie of that calling. And S. Hierome saith, That in the Church of Alexandria, the Presbyters did make choise of one, whom they placed in a higher degree, and called him their Bishop; like as if an armie should choose a General, or the Deacons should choose an industrious man, whom they make their Archdeacon, Hierou. ad Euag. So it should seeme that the very election of a Bishop in those daies without any other circumstance, was his ordination.

Sixthly, in Hieromes time it was lawfull for Priests and Ministers to preach without further licence obtained from the Bishop: as it may appeare distinct. 95. c. 6. Qui non vult presbyteros, &c. He that will not haue a Minister to do that, which is commanded him of God (that is to preach) would be greater then Christ, &c. And afterward: Wherefore let it bee lawfull for them to doe that in the Churches, which they are suffered to doe at Rome, in Creete, Cyprus, Italie: nay, which is more in heauen. But since, to stay the humour of contentions and schismaticall preachers, it hath seemed good to the Church to refferre the allowance of preachers to the Ordinarie: according to the decree of the Laterane Councell, sub Innocent. 3. cap. 2. Præter auctoritatem, &c. He that preacheth priuately or publickly without the authoritie of the Bishop, let him be excommunicate.

Seuenthly, for the better distinction of the offices, and discerning of their persons, it hath been thought meete by the Church, that Bishops should haue their seuerall habite and attire: Council. Aquisgran. c. 113. out of Augustine: Offeratur mihi birrum pretiosum, &c. If a costly garment bee offered me, it may become a Bishop, though it befeme not Augustine, a poore man borne of poore parents, such a garment as a Presbyter or Deacon may weare, such an one will I haue, &c. Though Augustine in modestie refuse to weare a Bishops habite, yet it may bee gathered, that some vesture was seemely in them, that became not inferiour Ministers.

Eightly, diuers other constitutions haue been made in Ecclesiasticall policie, for the maintaining of the dignitie of Bishops: as Caus. 2. quæst. 5. c. 1. that an oth should not bee ministred to a Bishop, but in a matter of faith: and whereas one common witness was not taken to bee sufficient in any cause: Caus. 4. quæst. 3. cap. 2. yet the testimonie of a Bishop was sufficient, Caus. 11. quæst. 1. c. 26. Likewise two or three witnesses were receiued against a Presbyter, Caus. 2. quæst. 4. c. 1. but a Bishop could not be condemned by fewer then twelue Bishops, ibid. cap. 3. These and such like immunities haue been in Ecclesiasticall policie annexed to the dignitie of Bishops.

So also the Ciuill state hath augmented and enlarged the priuiledges and immunities of Bishops, which they haue rather by the munificence of Princes, then by diuine authoritie: and this was the assertion of Marfilus Patavinus, that, wherein Bishops are greater then simple Priests, and Primates then Bishops, illud ex gratuita, &c. that it proceeded from the franke gift of the Prince, Præfat. in concil. Senonens.

As first, the diuision of Provinces and Cities, vnto Archbishops and Bishops, and the limitation of their iurisdiction was brought in by the consent of Princes: as distinct. 99. Provincia &c. Provinces were for the most part diuided before the coming of Christ, &c. And where of late the secular Primates were placed, to whom appeales were made, when they could not trauell to the Emperours Court, there now Ecclesiasticall Primates are seated, &c.

Secondly, the reuenues and lands of Bishopricks haue been giuen by deuout and religious Princes vnto Bishops and their successors, and diuers imperiall lawes haue been made in fauour of the maintenance of the Church: as Cod. lib. 8. tit. 54. l. 34. Iustinian. That a gift exceeding three hundred shillings, being made without insinuation, that is, inrolling and recording of it, should not be good, but to the Church. And leg. 35. A simple gift without stipulation, or tradition, is, vnlesse it were either deliuered, or warranted, was not good, but to the Church. Likewise, Col. tit. 5. l. 19. Whereas the prescription of twentie or thirtie yeeres might bee vrged against a private man, the Church might lay claime to the possessions thereof after an hundred yeeres. And thus by the fauourable lawes and bountifull gifts of Princes, the reuenues of Bishops haue been enlarged.

Thirdly, the titles of honour annexed to Bishopricks, as that they are created Barons, and made Lords of the Parliament house here in England, haue been bestowed by the liberality of the Kings of this realme, not yet about 400. yeeres since. And whereas by the Imperiall law Aduocates were made equall to Knights, as may appeare by the law of Leo: Cod. lib. 2. tit. 7. leg. 14. Ne minus præsident, &c. They which take vpon them the defence of causes, doe no lesse profit mankind, then if they did defend their countrey by warre and weapons. By the same reason also spirituall Pastors shall bee preferred before both, which doe not defend mens bodies as Captains, nor their goods as Aduocates, but watch ouer their soules. And as it followeth in the same law: Nec enim solus vestro imperio militare credimus, &c. Neither doe we thinke that they onely fight for our Empire, that vse swords and shields, but aduocates also, &c. yea and much more spirituall Pastors doe fight and strue by their spirituall weapons of teares and prayers. So that by the equall of this law, the Pastors of mens soules are not to be held inferiour to Lords and Knights.

Fourthly, the iudgement of matrimoniall and testamentarie causes, and of other such like matters, hath been reserued vnto Bishops by the Ciuill and Imperiall authoritie, as may appeare by these particular graunts:

- 1 Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 28. Anthemius made this law, that if a stranger dyed, giuing towards the redeeming of captiues, if he appointed no executor, the Bishop of the place should take vpon him to execute the Testators will to the foresaid vse, &c.
- 2 Cod. lib. 6. tit. 54. leg. 10. authentic. If a stranger dye intestate, his goods shall be deliuered to the Bishop to be kept for the next heire.
- 3 Cod. lib. 1. tit. 7. leg. 2. Valentinian. It is referred to the care of Bishops, that victuals be not sold at excessive prices in the time of dearth.
- 4 Cod. lib. 1. tit. 7. leg. 10. Honor. It is committed to the Bishops to call vpon the Iudges, that the prisoners be provided for.
- 5 Ibid. leg. 12. It belongeth to Bishops, to take order for captiues redeemed, that they be not wronged, or molested after their returne.
- 6 Ibid. leg. 11. Bishops haue charge to see the bookes of Sorcerie burned, and what other books soeuer tending to impietie.
- 7 Ibid. leg. 18. If a man confesse he haue receiued a piece of money, in hope thereof, being promised it onely, and afterward receiue it not, he may make his complaint before the Bishop of the place.
- 8 Lib. 3. tit. 1. leg. 14. authentic. If the Ordinarie Iudge be suspected, the Bishop of the place shall heare the cause together with the Iudge, and so determine it.
- 9 Lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 15. Iustinian. A law is made against dice-play, and the charge thereof is committed to Bishops.
- 10 Cod. Theodosian. lib. tit. de Episcop. indic. leg. 1. It was lawfull to any man in the wager of law, yea vpon the point of sentence, to referre his cause to the iudgement of the Bishop, and they were to stand vnto it, though his aduersarie gainesaid.

Thus wee see also how in Ciuill policie the dignitie of Bishops, by the fauour of Christian Emperours, hath been enlarged: And hitherto I haue shewed, what is to bee iudged politicall in the distinction distinction of Bishops from the rest of the Clergie, both as touching the Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall policie.

Now in the last place I will briefly declare, what hath been brought in beside the first institution of Bishops, by ambition and pride into the popish prelacie.

First, the Bishops of ancient time were diligent preachers, Distinct. 43. c. 5. Nicholau: Dispensatio, &c. The dispensation of the heauenly seede is committed to vs; woe vnto vs, if he sow it not, if we hold our peace. But they allow vnpreaching prelates, and say, that want may bee recompensed with other gifts of government, Rhemist. annot. 1. Tim. 5. vers. 17.

Secondly, Bishops in times past did shew themselves humble and lowly in their apparell, diet, familie: For apparell, Augustine saith, Fateor vobis de preciosa veste erubescere, &c. I confesse vnto you, I am ashamed of a costly garment, it becommeth not this profession, ex concil. Aquisq. ca. 113. For diet, order was taken: Lateran. sub Alexand. 10. that Prelates, tria tantum ferula haberent, should haue but three dishes of meate. And concerning their traine, it was decreed, Concil. Basiliens. append. ca. 4. That Cardinals should haue but tenne Patriarches, eight Archbishops, fixe to goe before them in the streete, whether they went a foote; or on horsebacke. But now who seeth not, how farre the ambition of popish prelates hath exceeded these ancient rules: for costlines of apparell, their Clergie hath been so wanton, that they were constrained to decree, that none of the Clergie should weare any guilt spurres, or buttons, or shoe bands of gold; Concil. Lateran. sub Innocent. 3. ap. 16. Ruricius the Cardinall vnder Sixtus 4. did weare cloath of gold, and vsed bed coverings of gold, and had siluer basons for his priuie vse: And their statelines was such, that vpon festiuall daies, the Bishop coming forth in procession, would be carried vpon mens shoulders; against the which vse there is a decree extant, Concil. Bracaren. 3. can. 5. And thus hath the popish prelacie degenerated from the ancient simplicitie.

Thirdly, in former time Bishops depended not as seruants and subiects one vpon another, but were as the chiefe Pastors in their feuerall Churches and charges. Distinct. 93. ca. 24. Vbiunque fuerit Episcopus, &c. Wherefoeuer a Bishop is, whether at Rome, Eugubium, Constantinople, they are all of the same merite or worthines, and of the same priestly authoritie. But now popish prelates are all subiects and slaues to the Pope, being bound vnto him by oth of obedience and fealtie.

Fourthly, Bishops of former times had their singular circuites and dioceses allotted them in such sort, that they might themselves haue the oversight of them: for they were bound by the Canons to visit every parish Church every yeere in their diocese, caus. 10. quest. 10. c. 11. ex concil. Tolosan. 4. And againe, Extraneag. commun. lib. 1. tit. 6. s. 1. Joann. 22. sheweth a reason why he diuided certaine dioceses some into two, some into more, Quod in eorum singulis singulorum vultus iniquitas, ut deceret, unicui pastor inspicere, &c. Because one Pastor or Bishop, was not able to know the face of every one: that is, to haue a particular knowledge of the parishes in his diocese. But since those times, popish prelates haue ambitiously sought to enlarge their diocese, and to in-croach vpon the limits of others, respecting more the largenes of their iurisdiction, then the discharge of their Episcopall dutie. This enormitie misliked some of their owne Popes and chiefe patrons: and therefore Iohn 22. diuided the Bishopricke of Tholouse into fiue dioceses, Extraneag. commun. lib. 3. tit. 2. c. 5. giuing this reason thereof, Quia durum erat & difficile, &c. Because it was an hard and difficult matter, that in so large a diocese recourse should be had to one man, &c.

Fifthly, the Bishops of the Primitiue Church were readie to forgiue, and were full of mercie, and did make intercession to the Magistrate for offenders, yea for schismatikes; as Caus. 23. quest. 5. c. 1. Augustine is a mediatour to Marcellinus for the Donatists: Sic succurre iniquitati, &c. So punish iniquitie, as you forget not humanitie. And Cyprian excellently saith, lib. 1. epistol. 3. Remitto omnia, &c. I remit every thing, I dissemble many things; yea sinnes committed against God, I doe not strictly examine; yea in remitting of offences I my selfe do almost offend. But popish prelates are of a contrarie spirit, who were most cruel suckers of the blood of the Saints, condemning them to death, and deliuering them ouer to the secular power to be executed, as the high priest did Christ to Pilate to be crucified: contrarie to their owne Canons, Caus. 33. qu. 3. dist. 1. c. 23. Qui hominem tradidit, &c. He that deliuereth or betraieeth a man, killeth him, as our Lord saith, He hath the greater sinne that hath deliuered me vnto thee.

Sixthly, in the former ages of the Church, Christian Bishops did not hold themselves exempt from the secular power; Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 34. Omnes, &c. All, of what condition soeuer, whether Bishops or Clerkes, or Monks, are subiect, iurisdictionis prafidali, to the iurisdiction of the president. But now popish prelates challenge a priuiledge to be freed from the Ciuill iurisdiction, according to the proude decree of Boniface, caus. 11. qu. 1. ca. 8. Nullus Episcopus, That no Bishop should be conuented before a secular Iudge neither in ciuill nor criminall causes.

Seuenthly, in elder times a Bishop could not, sine concilio examine deicere presbyterum, without the examination of a Councel depriue a Priest, Concil. Hispanus. 2. can. 7. Solus honoratus deponere potest, &c. The Bishop may conferre Priesthood alone, but he cannot take it away alone, distinct. 67. c. 2.

and the same is ratified by Innocentius 3. decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 7. ca. 2. But of late daies popish Ordinaries tooke vpon them, ex officio, in their Consistories, by their sole authoritie, to deprive the Ministers of the Gospell both of their liuing and life to contrarie to their owne Canons.

Eightly, the ancient Bishops did account of Priests as of their colleagues, distinct. 93. c. 10. And, Concil. Carthag. 4. c. 34. it was decreed, that a Bishop sitting should not suffer a Presbyter to stand before him. But the popish prelates challenge to be Princes and Lords ouer their Clergie, as we haue seene before, and call the Clerkes vnder their iurisdiction, their subiects.

Ninthly, the Bishops of former times did admit Priests to sit in councell, and giue voices with them, Decret. p. 1. distinct. 95. c. 6. Presbyteri interesso sacerdotum concilio, &c. It was lawfull in times past for Priests to be present in the councell of Bishops, &c. But now the contrarie is practised by popish prelates, who doe proudly exclude their Clergie from giuing voice in their Synodes, and doe iustifie their doing therein.

Tenthly, the Bishops of the Primitiue Church did not take vpon them the iudgement of secular matters: Caus. 11. qu. 1. c. 29. Neque iudicem, &c. Christ hath not appointed thee either iudge, or inquisitor of secular busines. Likewise, Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 56. c. 4. Alexander 3. decret. No Clericus iusticiarius fiat principis, &c. That a Clergie man should not be administrator of iustice to the Prince. And againe, ibid. c. 5. he thus writeth: Canuariens. Archiepiscop. Ne quis sacerdos officium habeat vicecomitis, aut prepositi secularis, &c. That no Bishop should beare the office of a Vicount; or of a secular gouernour. But it was an vsuall thing for popish prelates to bee Lord Treasurers and Chancellors vnto Kings, and beare other more secular offices.

Hitherto as I haue shewed, how popish prelates haue swarued from the ancient Canons; so will I briefly declare, how they haue degenerated from that perfect paterne and forme of a Bishop, according to S. Pauls description, 1. Timoth. 3.

- II First, S. Pauls Bishop might be the husband of one wife: which is not so to bee vnderstood, as though he could bee no Bishop that had been twice married, but not such an one as had two or three wiues at once; according to the corrupt vse of the Iewes, and so S. Hierome expoundeth it, as shall be shewed afterward: it was lawfull then in the Primitiue Church for Bishops to be married. And in the Councell of Gangra, rehearsed also in the decrees, dist. 28. c. 13. it was decreed vnder paine of anathematisme, that no man should make any difference betweene a married and unmarried priest. But the practise of popish prelates is otherwise, who cannot abide honest matrinie, yet haue been knowne to resort vnholly to concubines: as two of their Bishops, that were at the Councell of Trent, were slaine being deprehended in adulterous acts, ex Protestat. Concilio German. aduers. concil. Tridentin.

- 12 Secondly, S. Paul requireth, that his Bishop should be vigilant and diligent in his charge: and accordingly the Canons of the Church haue provided, Sardicenf. can. 14. Episcopus, &c. That a Bishop should not be absent from his Church about three Lords daies. And Concil. Carthag. 5. can. 1. Placuit ut nemini, &c. No Bishop shall haue licence, leauing his Cathedrall Church, to make habode in any other Church, no not within his diocesse. And it is memorable, which is recorded of Pope Gregorius 11. that as he admonished a Bishop to goe home to his Church, and he againe replying, said: Why he, that was to giue example to others, did not returne to Rome; for at that time the Pope had his seate in France: the Pope thereupon remoued his Court to Rome out of France, where the Popes had sojourned by the space of 74. yeeres. But now it is vsuall for popish prelates, both Cardinals and others, to follow the Popes Court, and very feldome to visite their Churches.

- 13 Thirdly, S. Pauls Bishop must be giuen to hospitalitie: so likewise the ancient Canons requir, distinct. 83. c. 1. Episcopus pauperibus, The Bishop must minister meate and raiment to the poore that are not able to labour with their owne hands, &c. But it hath been the vse of some popish prelates, in stead of the poore and impotent, to keepe Horses, Hawkes, and Hounds: as William Lampchamps, Chancellor and chiefe Iustice to King Richard the 1. is reported to haue brought with him where he lodged, in any Religious house or other, such superfluitie of Horses, Dogs, and Hawkes, that the place was worse three yeeres after, Fox. pag. 246. ex Matib. Parisiis. Likewise Lodouicus Cardinal Aquileg vnder Eugenius 4. is said of the goods of the Church to haue kept in the stead of the poore, horse and hounds, ex Balas & alijs.

Fourthly, S. Pauls Bishop must be id est verus, a man of sufficiencie, apt to teach, both able and willing: but of willingnes and diligence in preaching see before artic. 1. So also their decrees, distinct. 36. c. 2. Zozimus: Qui ecclesiasticis disciplinis, &c. He that is not endued with ecclesiasticall learning, ought not to be preferred to be a Bishop, &c. Decret. 49. c. 2. Caeum offeri, &c. He offereth a blind sacrifice, that admitteth one that is vnlearned. But such ignorant popish prelates did and doe yet abound amongst them; such as the Bishop of Cauaillon was, who thus said to the Merindolians, That it was not necessarie to saluation to vnderstand the articles of the Creede: for there were many Bishops, and Doctors of Diuinitie, whom it would trouble to expound the pastor and the Creed. Fax. p. 449. Such an one also was the Bishop of Dunkelden in Scotland, who finding great fault with Thomas Ferri Martyr, because hee preached every Lordes day to his Parishioners; said vnto him; I thank God, I neuer knew what the old and new Testament was; I will know nothing but my portus and pontifical. Of these words rose a common by-word in Scotland; yee are like the Bishop of Dunkelden, that knew neither old nor new Law; ps. 166. in Registru Scotic. And least that this singular ignorance might seeme onely a personall fault in this Bishop, he saith in the same place; We are not ordained to preach, speaking of the popish prelates it selfe: and no maruell, that they knew not their Grammar. Yet it is contrary to their owne Canons, decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 14. c. 17. Humer. 3. deposeth a Bishop, de defunctis Grammaticis. Because he knew not his Grammar, neither had read so much as Damasus. Fifty, S. Pauls Bishop must not be degenerare, given to filthie lucre, according also to their owne 15 canons, Caus. 10. qu. 3. c. 7. In lucris animarum, &c. Let the Bishops seeke rather the lucre of mens soules, thereto pray vpon their goods. But who list to reade the grieuances exhibited by the States of Germany at the assemblye of Norenburge, anno 1523. shall see how the practises of popish Prelates tended all to this ende, to rake commoditie to themselves: they made gaine of marriages, of pardons, excommunications, hallowing of Churches, christening of belles, burials, licensing of concubines, Fax. p. 861. they made gaine of dedicating of Churches, giuing of orders, for the which a promise was made, they should take nothing; council. Cabillonens. sub Carol. cap. 16. Bishops exacted yeerely pensions of their Clergie, which is prohibited in the same Council, cap. 17. they let out their iurisdiccions to farme, which enormitie is redressed, council. Lateranens. p. 1. c. 17. And in the council held at Oxford vnder Stephen the Archbishop, it was decreed; that no Archdeaconie or other spirituall office should be let out to farme: they also made gaine of licences to teach; which is forbidden, council. Lateranens. p. 1. c. 18. Pro licentia docendi &c. That no man should take any thing for a licence to teach &c. In these, and many such like things, their greedie couetousnesse appeareth, contrary to the Apostles rule.

Sixty, S. Pauls Bishop must be, humilis gentle, courteous, not cruell, and vnecharitable in pursuing euery offence, and that vnto death. But the practise of these bloudie popish Bishops hath been too well knowne in England: their owne law saith, that when a Clerke is degraded, effectual intercession must be made for him, ut citra mortis periculum, &c. that he might be punished without danger of death, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 40. c. 27. Innocent. 3. And concerning lay-men, they should protest, quid piam sanguinis &c. That they desire not oriend their blood, fact. decret. lib. 3. tit. 4. c. 2. Bonif. 8. But it is certaine, in the late persecutions here in England, they intended nothing els but blood.

Seuenthy, S. Pauls Bishop must be, pacificus, a man not giuen to fight, or contend, not warlike: and their canons agree, Caus. 2. qu. 8. c. 19. Nicholaus, Episcopus non debet militari. Bishops must not be occupied in militarie affaires: But popish bishops haue often, and yet do take vpon them to be Captaines, and Generals of the field; as I haue giuen an instance before in Hugh Spenser bishop of Norwich, who was Pope Vrbans the 6. his Champion, to warre against the Antipope, and in Cardinall Ballus, who was chiefe Muster master vnder Lodouic. 11. And a Cardinall at this time, or very lately, was the King of Spaine his Lieutenant generall in the Low countries.

Eighty, S. Pauls Bishop must be, sollicitus, a loue and patrone of good men; Tit. 1. 8. as your owne Canons also, dist. 86. c. 14. Primum operari &c. First of all do good to the household of faith: it is a great sinne, if a faithfull man do want, and thou knowest of it: but popish Prelates were persecutours of good men, as Sampson for reprouing one for swearing, was suspected for a Lutheran, and suffered at Paris, anno 1551. Fax. p. 904. Tomkins was a godly man, who, when any man came to him about any businesse, would alwayes begin with prayer, yet was he most cruelly handled of Bower, first his hand burned, afterward all his bodie; 1534. And their owne conscience wil tell them that Master Bradford was an holy and innocent man, yet by them cruelly slaughtered: by these, and infinite examples moe, we may see how well they loued good men.

Ninty, S. Pauls Bishop must be, iudex, iust; Tit. 1. 8. But their proceedings were most vnjust and indirect: first their owne law saith, Ne iudicium fiat in tenebris &c. That no Iudgement should be giuen secretly, in the darke decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 39. c. 24. Yet their Spanish inquisition is all in secret and silence, nothing done openly, till the Innocents are brought forth to execution; Again, Caus. 2. qu. 8. c. 17. Enyrhian. Quicquid in iudicio &c. He that wil accuse must come openly into iudgement &c. Their owne law in capital matters enforceeth an accuser to be produced, but they haue proceeded vnto sentence of death without cyther accuser or witnesse. Again, their owne law saith, Innocentes ad paria cum delincentibus: Innocents should not haue like punishment to offenders, extra. commun. lib. 3. tit. 9. c. 1. Ioan. 23. But they haue condemned Innocents, as children, madde men, and such as recanted, and submitted themselues, as afterward Erasmus. 105. of this first Centurie, it followeth to be declared more at large.

- 20 Tenably, and lastly, S. Pauls Bishop must not be firmly, disobedient, or rebellious, Tr. 1. which qualitie, as the Apostle requireth in the same place in the children of Bishops, that they should be obedient and dutifull; so much more is it requisite in Bishops themselves to be subiect to their higher powers also, as the Apostle teacheth, Rom. 13. 1. And hereunto agree their owne Canons, cap. 1. 1. q. 2. 20. Hlad. 1. 1. 2. 20. This is that, which we require of you, that you send under safe custodie Paulus Bishop Aquileiens, and the Bishop of Millaine to the most gentle Emperour Max. Grigor. This Canon subiecteth Bishops to the ciuill Maieſtie: yet popish Prelates haue continually shewed them selues stubburne against their Soueraignes; as Thomas Becket Archbishop of Canterbury did worthily procure the Kings displeasure, which was Henry the 1. and thereupon was exiled, because he would not yeeld obedience to the Kings lawes, but conditionally, Saluo ordine suo, Sauing the priuiledges of his order: see the storie, Far. p. 207. Such another stout Champion, was William Longchamps, Chauncellour and chiefe Iustice, and Viceroy to King Richard the 1. while hee was at the siege of Ierusalem: who being in his ruffe, regarded not the Kings letters sent vnto him, but imprisoned, and otherwise shamefully tyed the Kings brother, causing him to be haled and drawne through the myre in the streets. plur. apud Far. p. 247. Like vnto these was Hugo Bishop of Lincolne, who traicterously ioynd with Louis the French Kings sonne against King Iohn, and afterward Henry the 3. his sonne; and therefore was put to a fine of 1000. marks for his Bishopricke: see more p. 258. And other such like trecherous pranks this popelike Bishop played against his Soueraigne, and for his manly actes was canonized a Saint in the Popes kalendar, as trayterous Becket was before; and this is that goodly ſaint Hugh, that should haue his day the 17. of Nouember, whereat the Papists storme; that we place the Coronation of her Maieſtie, in his stead: which ioyfull Day, God graunt we may yet many yeers solemnize as we do, to the glory of God. And thus haue I shewed how far popish Prelates haue departed from the first institution of a Bishop: And thus much concerning the distinction and degree of Bishops, both what therein is diuine and Apostolicall, what humane and political.

THE THIRD PART, CONCERNING THE office and title of Cardinals.

The Papists.

72. Error.

- Bellarmine would faine haue the office of Cardinals, as ancient as the Apostles times: and the name to be worthily appropriated to the See of Rome, that as the Pope himselfe by his presence and holines, is, tangquam cardo Ecclesie, to the Church as the hingell to the doore, vpon which it is turned and borne vp: so his Counsellors and assistants should be called Cardinals, hauing the care of the Vniuersall Church: but the Iesuite, beside some vaine shew of moethwaine antiquitie, hath not one good argument to proue the name, and office of Cardinals, to be either ancient or commendable. Their especiall office, as they are Cardinals, is to elect and chuse the Pope, and to be assistant vnto him in Counsell, for the gouernment of the vniuersall Church; and in this respect the Cardinals are preferred before Bishops. Bellarm. cap. 16.
1. For the first, he sheweth the office of the Cardinals in being assistant to the Pope in the affairs of the Church to be most profitable and commodious in three respects.
2. First, that by this meanes the Pope hath his senate or Councell alwaies readie, with whom he may consult euerie day if he will for the affaires of the Church: Secondly, for that Bishops could not be assembled without detriment of their Churches, from the which they cannot be conveniently absent. Thirdly, the Cardinals are more exercised and experienced in matters of State.
3. Contra. First, for the space of 800. yeares by his owne confession, but as the truth is, a thousand yeares, the Church of Rome was gouerned by the counsell and aduise of the Clergie then without these Cardinals; and it was as well gouerned or better; then since: why might not the Pope content himselfe as well with that counsell, as his predecessors? Secondly, the Pope busied himselfe with more then he need, to entermiddle with other Churches, of which vnnecessary busines if he would exonerate himselfe, he should as little need a Colledge of Cardinals as other Bishops, if he would holde himselfe contented with his owne diocesse. Thirdly, some of your Cardinals are Bishops, and haue dioceses, all of them haue titles belonging to their charge, therefore they can no better be absent, then Bishops without detriment of their Churches. Fourthly, and whereat he saith Cardinals are exercised in State matters: in deede they know too much of Princes secrets: neither is it their calling to studie such matters, but ought rather to giue themselves to preach the Word according to their office: and as for the managing of Ciuill and State busines, it belongeth to the Senate of Rome: they should onely deale with Ecclesiasticall affaires.
- For the second: though Bishops in respect of their Episcopall iurisdiction are before Cardinals, yet they for the regiment of the vniuersall Church, and for that they onely elect the vniuersall Bishop, are preferred before Bishops, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Contra.

Contra. First, in that Cardinals meddle with the business of the universall Church, wherein they are but intruders; for every diocesse should be left to the proper Bishop thereof. Secondly, against, in that they take vpon them to elect the Pope, they are but therein vsurpers, and doe appa- rantly wrong to three states, the Emperour, Clergie, People, as I haue shewed before. Thirdly, in con- trarie to the seventh Canon of the Trullane Councell; that a Deacon in any office of the Church, should be preferred before a Presbyter, and so consequentie, not a Cardinall Deacon should in that behalfe be excepted.

The Protestants.

That neither the name of Cardinals, as proper to Rome, is ancient, nor their office, or oth- er of them lawful or commendable, but vsurped and Antichristian; thus briefly: it is shewed.

1. In Augustine's time it was a common name, vsually applyed, both in the good and euill parts, to chiefe and principall men of any place, or sect: as he calleth the ringleaders of the Donatists, Cardines Donatistae, Cardinall or capitaine Donatists, de baptismo lib. 1. cap. 6. Surely, if it then had been onely due to the assistants of the Romane Bishop, Augustine had been much to blame to ap- plic the name to Hereticks. Also there were not onely Cardinals in the Church of Rome, but in other Churches also, as dist. 74. c. 5. Gregorius giueth licence to the Bishop of Naples, ad Gratianum cardanum, to make one Gregorius a Cardinall of that Church. And dist. 74. c. 6. the same Gregorius liceneth the Bishop of Syracuse, constituere presbyterum Cardinalem, to make one Cassius a Presby- ter Cardinall there. Olymprius also a witnesse of their owne, doth testifie for vs in this point, that Cardinall priests, and Cardinall deacons were so called, becaule they were set ouer other Priests and Deacons of the same Church: de Cardinal. titulis. So then this name or title of Cardinal- ship is not proper or peculiar to the Church of Rome.

2. Augustine thus writeth to Hierome, Quamuis secundum bonorum vocabula, saith he, Epistol. 19. tu presbyterio maior sis, tamen in multis rebus Augustinus Hieronymo, minor est. Though according to the custome of the Church, a Bishop be greater then a Priest, yet Augustine a Bishop in many things is inferior to Hierome a Priest. Now Hierome was a Priest of Rome, and a Cardinall, as some of our aduersaries thinke, and therefore they picture him commonly in a red gowne and habit of a Cardinall: yet you see Augustine as a Bishop was before him, though for his great learning he putteth himselfe behind him.

Belarmine here telleth vs very boldly, that Hierome was a Priest of Antioch, not of Rome, though he helped Damasus to write letters there: and therefore Augustine doubted not to pre- ferre a Bishop in degree before him.

Contra. First, whereas he allegeth the 61. epistle of Hierome, to proue him a Priest of Antioch, there is no such thing: but he onely saith, Ego Antiochiam deserui, &c. I left Antioch. Secondly, Belarmine is contrarie to the common opinion and tradition of their Church, for they vsu- ally commonly picture Hierome with a red Hat and gowne, like a Cardinall of Rome. Thirdly, this bold assertion of his without ground is contrarie to Hierome himselfe, who thus writeth, Pre- fatus Paulinus. Dum in Babylone versarer, & perperam a meretricis, &c. While I was aduersant in Babylon, and a tenant to the purple whore, I began to mutter somewhat of the holy Ghost: but the whole Senate of the Pharisees gainesaid me, &c. and I straightway returned to Ierusalem. By this it appeareth, that Hierome was not onely a young scholler at Rome, but then began to bee a professor, and disputer, and most like to haue entered into orders: for without a calling he would not haue offered himselfe to publike conference and disputation; and when he left Rome, im- mediately he went to Ierusalem, and there continued: It is not like then he could bee a Presbyter at Antioch. Fourthly, Hierome himselfe condemneth that disorder at Rome for Deacons to bee preferred before Priests: Quid mihi proferri videtur, ut his &c. What doe you tell me of the custome of one citie? Hieron. Enagrio. Fifthly, Augustine also in another place complayneth of one Falcidianus a Deacon of Rome, qui datus stultitia, saith he; diaconus presbyteris equum conuenit. Who being led or caried away with folly, did goe about to make Deacons equall vnto Priests: Is not the same folly now generally practised in Rome, or a greater? for they doe not onely preferre Cardinall deacons before Priests, but euen before Bishops and Archbishops: in Augustine's time this was counted a great follie.

Lastly, if we looke backe into former times, we shall find, that neither the office, nor dignitie of the Cardinals, nor any part thereof, is of any great antiquitie. And in the beginning of the 12. cen- tury, as Belarmine himselfe saith, it is to be ascribed to the Pope in the regiment of the universall Church, and to make choyce of a new when the See is voyde: As for the first it was impugned, as 402. by the same Councell of Carthage, who writ thus to Celsus Bishop of Rome concerning the sending abroad of his legates: Exequatur vestris Clericus quilibet; potestibus nolite miseri, nolite concedere, ne famosum typhum seculi in ecclesiam Christi videamus inducere. They of the Clergie your agents, we pray you send not; neither grant any great mans request, least the secular vain- glorious glorious pompe ſhould be brought into the Church: Their meaning is, that it was not ſeemely for a Biſhop to ſend forth his legates and meſſengers, as temporall princes haue their ambaffadors.

Anno. 1139. Frederick that famous Emperour ſent this meſſage to Adrian the fourth: Cardinalibus vſtris ciuitates noſtras non patens, quia non videmus eos predicatores, ſed predatores; non pacis propagatores, ſed pecunie raptores, &c. We ſhut vp our cities againſt your Cardinals, becauſe we ſee that they preach not, but pray vpon the people; they doe not ratiſie peace, but rake together pence. Non orbis reparatores, ſed auri inſatiabiles correptores. They doe not repaire the world, but empaire their wealth.

Now concerning the other part of their office in electing the Pope, it is but an vſurpation, and that of no great antiquitie: for in times paſt the Clergie and people of Rome were wont to chooſe their Biſhop and the Emperour confirmed him. But afterward as the ambition of the Pope increaſed, ſo alſo by degrees the ancient forme of election was altered: Firſt, anno. 817. the Emperour was excluded by Stephen the fourth, from the election of the Pope, but not from his conſecration: then came Paschalis the firſt, who deprived the Emperour of all right either in electing, or conſecrating the Biſhop of Rome. For by his ſubtill allurements the Emperour Lodouicus reſigned his intereſt in ſuch elections to the Romanes. After him Adrian the third, Leo the ninth, Alexander the ſecond, Gregory the ſeuenth, Calixtus the ſecond, did one after another as by violence thruſt the Emperour from hauing any authoritie in electing the Pope: thus was the Emperour excluded. As for the conſent of the people it was cleane cut off, anno. 1000. by Pope Joh 19: The Clergie yet had their voice, which was empaired at the firſt, when Nicollas the ſecond made a decree, that the Pope ſhould not be choſen without the conſent of the Cardinals an. 1060. but afterward it was altogether taken away by Alexander the ſecond, who decreed, that the Pope ſhould be choſen onely by the Cardinals: And about this time the Cardinals began to grow in credite.

Concerning the dignitie of the Cardinals, and their priuiledges, they are but very young: An. 1245. it was firſt deuifed by Innocentius the fourth, that Cardinals ſhould weare red hats and robes, and ride vpon their footclothed and ſtrapped horſe. Anno. 1538. when Paulus the third held the papacie, a complaint was made to the Pope about ſome abuſes of the Cardinals, and one chiefe was this, that the Cardinals did hold certaine Biſhopricks, whereas Cardinalatus officium & Episcopatus officium incompatibilia ſunt, the office of a Cardinall, and of a Biſhop are vnmatchable: ſe Contar. Sadoles. Polus. Cardinales. ſuggeſtione ad Paulum. 3.

Now whereas the Cardinals though they be but Deacons, do ſit aboue Priests, Biſhops, and Archbiſhops: this alſo doth ouerthrowe the ſeuenth Canon of the ſixt generall Councell Tholozan, which determineth thus, Statim in vi diaconis, in quouis ſit eccleſia officio ante preſbyterum non ſedat: We enact, that a Deacon, in what place or office of the Church ſoeuer, doe not ſit before a Priest.

Laſtly, that the office and calling of Cardinals, as it is now currant in Rome is altogether unlawfull, and againſt all antiquitie, I will produce their owne witneſſes, that haue found out theſe ſeueral faults in the Cardinals.

Firſt, that they buſie themſelues altogether with ſtate matters, neglecting the office of preaching, to the which they are called. Eſpene. thus writing to the Cardinall of Lorraine, ſaith: Paſſi mali tibi futurum: Woe and euill ſhall be vnto you, if you doe not proceed to preach the Goſpell. But ſome man will ſay, auant with this thy neceſſitie of preaching? and not much better ſaid vnto me of a mitred Biſhop, now an hatted Cardinall: Wouldeſt thou haue a Biſhop, or Cardinall preach? I pray you, who elſe, &c. and yet this prelate was of their number, that would be called reuerend Fathers, Vicars of Chriſt, ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles: ſe Eſpene. praſus ad Carol. Luthering.

Secondly, they are reprov'd for haunting the Courts of Princes, and leauing their owne charges: and they take vpon them, ad inſtar proconſulum, like to the old Romane Proconſuls: for ſo is the decree of Clement 4. ſext. decret. lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 2. to haue their circuites and prouinces. Of this matter thus freely the ſame author vttereth his minde: Sicut me miſit pater, &c. As my father ſent me, ſaith Chriſt, ſo ſend I you, not gouernours of politicall, but reformers of eccleſiaſticall matters; Paſtors, not theeues; not Potentates, but Euangelists; not law-makere, but law-keepe; not Captaines of ſouldiours, but fiſhers of men; Eſpene. ibid.

Thirdly, he findeth fault; becauſe many beardedleſſe youths were made Cardinals: as alleaging an ancient Canon of Sylueſter, he thus intereth: Eccleſia Romana &c. In times paſt the Church of Rome had no Cardinals vnder 60. yeeres old: which Canon would now be reuiued, there being in theſe daies ſo many beardedleſſe, or but yong bearded Cardinals, Eſpene. commentar. in 1. Thimo. 2. 23. 8. b.

Fourthly, the Cardinals of Rome are ſome them, no fewer alwaies then fixe Cardinall Biſhops by which meanes the Churches, whereof they are Bishops, are neglected: which also is contrarie to their owne Canons, Decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 5. c. 3. Innocentius 3. would not suffer a Cardinall of Rome to be Bishop of Rauenna, though he were desired of the Clergie there, quia presentia eius utilis est, because his presence is more profitable to the Church of Rome, then Rauenna.

Fiftly, another notable abuse in Cardinals is this, that whereas some of them are but Deacons, yet they sit and take their place before Priests and Bishops: Hereof complained Bernard in his time to Eugenius the Pope, de considerat. lib. 4. Ridiculi ministri vestri, &c. It is very ridiculous, that your Ministers or Deacons take vpon them to be preferred before your Priests. To this effect also their owne decrees, dist. 93. c. 15. Non oportet, &c. It becommeth not a Deacon to sit in the presence of a Priest. Ibid. c. 17. Diaconi, Let Deacons know that they are the Priests ministers, as well as the Bishops. But least it might be here answered, that all Deacons of other Churches are tied to this rule, but the Cardinall deacons of the Church of Rome are exempted: it followeth, dist. 93. c. 16. Presbimus, &c. We commaund, that no Deacon, in what dignitie or office soeuer he is, shall sit before a Priest. So likewise, part. 2. caus. 2. qu. 4. c. 2. Praesul non damnabitur, &c. A Prelate shall not be condemned but with 72. witnesses; a Cardinall priest with 44. a Cardinall deacon of the cite of Rome with 17. witnesses: By this Canon a simple Prelate or Bishop is preferred before a Cardinall priest or Deacon. Thus wee see how enormous, vnlawfull, and repugnant to the Canons the office of Cardinals is: but I haue staied too long in this argument, I will therefore proceede.

THE FOURTH QUESTION, CONCERNING THE keys of the Church, committed for the execution to the pastors and gouernours thereof.

THIS question hath foure parts. First, wherein the authoritie of the keys consisteth: secondly, to whom they are committed: thirdly, whether there is absolute power of binding and loosing in the Church, or ministerially only: fourthly, whether they that haue the dispensation of the Keys, doe alwayes necessarily bind and loose before God: of these in order.

THE FIRST PART, WHEREIN THE AVTHORITY and power of the Keys consisteth.

BY the Keys and power of binding and loosing, they chiefly and principally vnderstand the censures of the Church, as Excommunications, Anathematizings, suspensions, Degradations, and the whole Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction, Rhem. Annot. Matth. 16. sect. 14. Beller. lib. 1. de potest. cap. 13. Secondly, they tye remission and retayning of sinnes to their imagined and deuised sacrament of penance, saying, that where Christ gaue authoritie to remitte sinnes to his Apostles, Ioh. 20. 23. he instituted the sacrament of penance, Rhemist. Ioh. 20. sect. 3. The sacrifice also and sacraments of the Church, say they, are ministred for remission of sinnes, Rhemist. 2. Corin. 5. sect. 3. Thirdly, they seeme to grant in words, that by preaching also of the Gospell, sinnes are retained, and remitted, ibid. but they make small account thereof: for as we haue heard, they make it not the essence of their priesthood to preach, neither doth it properly appertaine vnto that office: yea, say they, absolution cannot be rightly sought for at the priests hands, but by confession of our sinnes, which is done in penance. Rhem. Ioh. 20. sect. 5. This then is their opinion, that by their deuised ceremony and Sacrament of penance, sins are properly forgiuen, and that the preaching of the word is not thereto necessary.

Their chiefe argument is, by abusing that place, Ioh. 20. 23. where they say Christ instituted the Sacrament of penance, when he gaue power to his Apostles to remit and retaine sinnes.

Ans. First, your Sacrament of penance, is neither grounded vpon this, nor any other place of Scripture: here in the words of Christ there is no institution of a Sacrament, because there is no visible element giuen, whereunto the word being added, may make a Sacrament. Secondly, here the commission is but renewed, which was granted before to his Apostles, and their successors, Matth. 18. 18. Fulke. Annot. Ioh. 20. sect. 3.

The Protestants.

THE keys of the Church, that is, the power to binde and loose sinners, to open or shut vnto them the kingdome of God, consisteth both in the external discipline and gouernment of the Church lawfully executed according to the word of God, as also in preaching of the Gospell, by assuring in Christs name all faithfull and penitent persons remission and forgiuenes of their sinnes, and in denouncing and threatning the wrath of God against the disobedient and impenitent: Also as the Sacraments are ioyned to the word, as seales and pledges of the promises thereof, so by the right administration of the Sacraments together with the preaching of the word, sin are retained or remitted.
of,

The Rhemists therefore doe vs great iniurie, in falsely charging of vs, that we should hold that the spirituall power of the Church standeth onely vpon the preaching of the word; whereas we grant, that it is exercised also in the Ecclesiasticall gouernment of the Church, both in punishing, excommunicating and censuring of offenders, which is the binding of them, and in releasing and absolving them againe, which is the other power of loosing: Rhemist. 2. Corinib. cap. 10. sect. 1. Leauing now this part of spirituall power in Ecclesiasticall discipline, which is not in this place in question betwene vs, we must touch that other part, which is exercised in the word and sacraments.

1 That the Sacraments doe bind and loose, it is proued out of the word of God: they doe binde, Whosoeuer eateth and drinketh vnworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, 1. Cor. 11. 29. They doe also loose, As oft as ye shall eate this bread, and drinke this cup, you shew the Lords death till he come, verf. 26.

But here is a double caution and condition to be annexed. First, that all Sacraments worke not this effect, but onely those of Christs institution, which are but two, baptisme and the supper of the Lord: for Paul saith, I haue receiued of the Lord, that which I deliuered vnto you, 1. Cor. 11. 23. If the Apostles would not, neither might deliuer any Sacraments, but those which were instituted of Christ, what great presumption is it in any other to doe it? Secondly, we must thinke, that remission of sinnes is necessarily tied to the Sacraments, as though there could be no remission without them, for the grace of remission may be effectuell in the name of Christ, by the preaching of the word without a Sacrament, Iob. 20. sect. 4. Fulk. For the word may be preached without a Sacrament, but the Sacrament cannot be ministred without the word: for that were it though a man should deliuer a seale without a writing. Neither is it our meaning, that as the Rhemists cauil with vs, the Sacrament cannot be administred without a sermon of the death of Christ: for though that were alwayes to be wished, yet where it cannot be had, there must and ought to be a brieft shewing and declaration of the death of Christ out of the word, so oft as the Sacrament is administred, as it is obserued in our Church, Fulk. annot. 1. Corinib. 11. sect. 15.

And as touching this conueniencie, and in some sort necessitie of hauing sermons and admonitions before the Sacraments, our aduersaries haue no cause to mislike our opinion, seeing it hath been of late yeeres by themselves in some of their Councils so decreed: As in the Council of Colen, anno. 1549. Parochus sub administrationem cuiuslibet sacramenti sacra concione breuiter populum admo neat, quid ea in re agatur: Let the parish Pastor in the administration of euery Sacrament briefly admonish the people, what is done therein. Likewise, Synod. Augustens. anno. 1548. Volum populum, quid in cuiusque sacramenti collatione agatur in concionibus et sacramentorum administratione frequenter doceri: We would haue the people taught often in sermons, and in the administration of the Sacraments, the meaning thereof: now to returne to the matter.

2 We must take heed, we conceiue not thus, as though the Sacrament gaue grace by the word wrought, and that by the very use, forme, and externall act of the Sacrament we obtaine remission of sinnes, as the Rhemists would beare vs in hand, 1. Corinib. 11. sect. 15. But the Sacraments are onely effectuell to the worthy receiuers, and to the worthy receiuing, faith is requisite, as S. Paul willett all men to examine themselves, 1. Corinth. 11. 28. which is, as he himselfe interpreteth it, to proue whether they be in the faith, 2. Corinth. 13. 5. These conditions then being obserued, we deny not, but that there is an exercise of the keyes euen in the Sacraments.

But chiefly and principally, is this power dispensed by the preaching of the word, as S. Paul saith, We are the sauour of death vnto death, vnto some: there is the binding: And to other the sauour of life vnto life: there is the loosing, 2. Corinth. 2. 16. So our Sauour Christ saith, He that refuseth me, the word that I haue spoken, shall iudge him in the last day, Ioh. 12. 48. Here is the power of binding. Againe, the truth shall make you free, Ioh. 8. 32. Here is the power of loosing. Who therefore can doubt of this, that the preaching of the word is the most proper and principall way and meane, for the exercising of this Ecclesiasticall power? for seeing faith is the key of heaven, thereby we haue free access vnto the throne of grace, Rom. 5. 2. and faith cometh by hearing, Rom. 10. 17. and hearing by the word: It remaineth that by the word the keyes are dispensed.

Augustine also subscribeth vnto this: for speaking of reformation of life and repentance with remission of former sinnes, thus he saith, Quid empturus es vs facias, qua emplastra quaesiturus? cum loquor, muta cor, & factum est, quod tam saepe & tam diu clamatur, vs fiat. in Psal. 63. What medicine or plaister wilt thou buy to heale thy sinne? Behold euen now, while I preach vnto thee, change thy heart, and it is already done, which we so often call vpon you to be done. See then by the preaching of the word our heart is changed, our life amended, and our sinne remitted.

Thus also it was decreed Council. Coloniens. pars. 10. cap. 6. Nihil gladio illo spiritus, qui est verbum Dei

De potentia ad deprimendos, ac vicissim consolandos animos nostros, &c. Nothing is more mightie & powerfull either to cast down, or againe to comfort our soules, then the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God: to cast downe is to binde, to comfort, that is to loose.

Their owne Canons also here helpe vs: Canf. 33. distinct. 1. c. 50. Verbum dei dimissis potest a, &c. The word of God doth forgiue sins, &c. And distinct. 20. c. 1. There were two keyes giuen to Peter, clavis scientie, the key of knowledge to discern, clavis potestatis, and the key of power to binde or loose. And this is confirmed, Extran. Ioann. tit. 14. c. 5. Refat quod ad aliquid de sciendum, &c. It remaineth, that to determine the busines of the Church, both keyes are necessarie, the key of discerning, and the key of determining, &c. that like as the materiall eye doth direct the materiall key, so the spirituall eye of knowledge, &c. Whereupon I conclude, that if spirituall knowledge bee one of the keyes, and true knowledge cannot be had without the word; For the use knowing of the Scriptures is the cause of error, Mark. 12. 24. then it doth necessarie follow, that the keyes consist in the knowledge of the word.

The holy Martyrs haue sealed this doctrine; Walter Brute: The keyes of the kingdome of heauen are not knowledge to discern, and power to iudge, because these nothing auail in baptisme, by the which the kingdome of heauen is opened: therefore in my iudgement it seemeth, that the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, are faith and hope; for by faith in Iesus Christ, and hope in him for remission of sinnes we enter the kingdome of heauen, Fax p. 492. But faith cometh by the word: Ergo, in the power of the word doe the keyes consist.

George Wischard holy Martyr: I say, that an vnlearned man not exercisid in the word of God, &c. whatsoever state or order he is of, hath no power to binde or loose, seeing he wanteth the instrument, by which he bindeth or looseth, that is to say, the word of God, pag. 1270.

THE SECOND PART, TO WHOM THE authoritie of the keyes is committed.

The Papists.

The authoritie and power of excommunication, say they, is not in the whole Church, but only in the Prelates: neither was the power of binding and loosing giuen vnto the whole Church: but in their owne name, not in the name or right of the Church, doe the Pastors and Prelates exercise this power, Rhemist. 1. Corinth. 5. scilicet. 3. Bellarm. lib. 1. de Clericis cap. 71. The Church is said to binde and loose, because the Prelates doe binde and loose, as a man is said to speake, and see, though he onely speake with the tongue, and see with the eyes.

Argum. 1. They seeme to proue it by S. Paul example, 1. Cor. 5. Iubens in bodis, but present in spirit, haue decreed: Saint Paul vseth here his Apostolike power, in sending his letters and Mandatum, to haue the incestuous person excommunicate: Ergo, the right was in him and not in the Church, and so consequently in the Bishops his successors.

Ans. First, Saint Paul sendeth no Mandatum, but sheweth his Apostolike power, in decreeing the incestuous person worthe of excommunication, and requiring the same to be executed by the Church, Fulk. 1. Cor. 5. scilicet. 2. Secondly, though Paul gaue the sentence, yet was it done both in the power of Christ and the name of the whole Church: for he had decreed onely that he should be excommunicate: it was not actually done: but to the due performing thereof there is required the congregating of the Church in Christs name, the presence of Paul in spirit by his Apostolike power, and that it should be done in the name of Christ. All this sheweth, that Paul gaue sentence in the name of the whole Church. Thirdly, the words of the text are plaine, that the power was giuen to the whole Church: for that power, whereby he was deliuered to Sathan, was the power of Iesus Christ, 1. Cor. 5. 4. but the power of the Lord Iesus was committed to the whole congregation: When ye are gathered together and my spirit, in the name of the Lord Iesus Christ: that is, in the power of the Lord Iesus. So that this place which they vrge for themselves, affordeth a better argument for vs.

Argum. 2. Paul (they say) by the preminent power of his ministerie, pardoneth the incestuous person whom he had excommunicate, Rhemist. argument. in 1. ad Corinth. b.

Ans. The text is plaine, that he consenteth the Church should pardon him, 2. Corinth. 2. 10. To whom you forgive any thing I forgive also. Here not Paul onely, but the whole Church pardoneth.

Again, the Iesuites smile may be returned vpon his owne head: for as the eye and tongue in the bodie are but instruments of the life and power of the soule, which quickeneth the whole bodie: so the gouernours of the Church doe execute the discipline of the Church by the spirit of Christ, which is giuen to the whole bodie.

The Protestants.

The authoritie of excommunication pertaineth to the whole Church, although the execution and iudgement thereof, to auoide confusion, bee committed to the gouernours of the Church

Church, which exercise that authoritie, as in the name of Christ, so in the name of the whole Church, Full, totidem verbis, canon. 1. Cor. 5. scilicet. 3.

Argum. 1. Matth. 18. 17. If he will not heare thee, tell the Church: This place prooventh, that although the exercising of the keyes be referred to the gouernours of the Church, yet the authoritie and right is in the whole Church: for the keyes were given to the whole Church. The Pastors and gouernours, though they bee excellent and principall members of the Church, yet are they improperly called the Church, Argument. Ilyric.

Their answer here commonly is, that die ecclesia, tell it to the Church, may bee vnderstood of the Prelates of the Church: yea Bellarmine will haue it beare this sense, that to tell the Church, is to referre it to the sentence of the Pope: So that in effect he maketh the Pope the Church.

Ans. First, that the Prelates and Pastors of the Church, haue the administration of the keyes committed vnto them for order sake, wee denie not: yet the right and power thereof resteth in the whole Church: and to them offences are to bee brought, as the ministers and officers of the Church. Secondly, how ridiculous a glosse that is, that die ecclesia, should be all one as to say die Papa, tell it to the Pope, as though one man should bee the Church. Saint Hierome sheweth in the like case concerning a great man in his time, Iohn Patriarch of Ierusalem: An tu solus ecclesia visus? Are you onely the Church, that whosoever offendeth you, is straightway excluded from Christ? ad Pammach. aduers. Iohann.

Argum. 2. We conclude the same also out of S. Pauls words, 1. Cor. 12. 12. *All things are yours, whether Paulus, Apollus, or Cephas, whether things present, or things to come, and ye are Christs, and Chrs Gods:* Ergo, whatsoeuer power is in the Church, it is the Churches, not onely the common vse and the benefit thereof, (because it may be answered, that although the keyes be onely granted to the Prelates, yet they vse them to the good of the Church) but the right also and possession thereof, euen as the Church is the inheritance and proper possession of Christ.

3 Augustine consenteth: Ecclesia, que fundatur in Christo, tenet ab eo regni calorum accepta in Petro. Tract. in Iohann. 124. The Church, which is founded vpon Christ, receiued in Peter the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: But the whole Church, and not onely the Pastors, is founded and builded vpon Christ: Ergo.

Inuicely. Casarea. cap. 9. Ad Ecclesiam pertinet verbum dei, pertinent sacramenta, pertinent iudicandi & soluendi: Vnto the Church appertaineth the word of God, the Sacraments, the keyes also of binding and loosing. From hence we reason thus, to whom the word and the Sacraments belong, to the same also appertaineth the keyes: but they belong to the whole Church: Ergo.

And yet more evidently out of their owne decrees: Caus. 24. qu. 1. c. 6. Petrus quando, &c. Pau. when he receiued the keyes, signified the whole Church: Si hoc Petrus e. for if it were said onely to Peter, then the Church doth it not: but if the Church binde and loose, &c. And cap. 10. Dnm ecclesie, &c. The house of the Church receiued the keyes: And your Master of Sentences, lib. 4. tit. 19. c. out of Hierome: Habet omnia ecclesia in Episcopis & presbyteris: The whole Church hath this power in Bishops and Priests: that is exercised by them, yet the power is in the whole Church.

Walter Bruns holy confessor of Gods truth, who lived in the raigne of Richard the second, testified with vs: In the 20. of Iohn our Sauiour Christ saith, Remittam vobis omnia peccata, quae fuerint ligata super terram, &c. Seeing therefore that all Christians that are baptized in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghost, receiue the holy Ghost, it appeareth that they haue power giuen them of Christ, to remitt sinnes, Pag. pag. 492. His argument is this: to whom the holy Ghost is giuen, to them also is giuen the power and right of binding and loosing: but to the whole Church and all faithfull Christians is the holy Ghost giuen: Ergo, &c. And therefore the Pastors and Ministers doe execute this power in the name of the whole Church.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER THE PASTORS

of the Church haue any absolute power to remitt sinnes, otherwise, then as Ministers onely.

The Papists.

75. Error.

They spare not to say, that Priests haue full right to remitt sinnes, and are not ministers onely thereof, and dispensers, but haue full power as Christ had, and he that doubteth of their right herein, may as well doubt whether Christ had authoritie as man to remitt sinnes, Rhemus. Amos. Iob. 20. scilicet. 3. And againe, they call it an expresse power and commission, yea a wonderfull power which is giuen vnto priests to remitt sinnes, and therefore it followeth necessarily, that men should submit themselues to their iudgement, for release of their sinnes, Amos. Iob. 20. scilicet. 3.

Argum. 1. They reason thus out of our Sauiours owne words, Ioh. 20. 21. As my father hath sent me, so I send you. He sheweth his fathers commission giuen to himself, and then in plaine termes most amply imparteth the same to his Apostles: But Christ had full right to remitt sinnes: Ergo, also the Apostles and their successors: for they haue the same power that Christ had, *Rhemist. an-

m. Joh. 20. sect. 3.*

Ans. First, it is great presumption, and spoken without any ground, to say, that Christ, by sending his Apostles into the world, gaue them as full, large, and ample commillion, as he himselfe had: for neither the Pope, in whom remaineth, as they say, the Apostolike authoritie, by their owne confession, can doe all that Christ did, as to ordaine and institute Sacraments: and Christ (say they) might forgive sinnes without the Sacraments, which the Pope cannot doe, and so consequently neither the Apostles, whose full iurisdiction he hath, in this behalfe, *Bellarmin. de pontif. lib.
3. cap. 6.* Secondly, the power here granted to the Apostles, is in the name of Christ, to declare and pronounce remission of sinnes, according to the will of God, not properly in their owne power to release or absolve sinners.

Argum. 2. He breathed vpon them, and gaue them the holy Ghost, verf. 22. Therefore he that denieth the Priests authoritie to forgive sinnes, he must denie the holy Ghost to be God, and not to haue power to remit sinnes, Rhemist. ibid. sect. 4.

Ans. What a blasphemous consequent is this? The holy Ghost hath absolute power to forgive sinnes: first, the Apostles also, and all other priests: haue the same power. First, by this meanes they make no difference betweene the fulnes of power in our Sauioer Christ, and the communication of that power to other Ministers: of Christ it is said, that the Spirit was not given him by measure, Joh. 3. 34. and that the holy Ghost dwelleth in him bodily: but it were great blasphemy so to say of any man, Apostle or Minister beside, which haue receiued of the same grace, but not in the like measure that Christ hath; but the spirit is given to euery one in measure, as they haue need in their severall places and callings: Secondly, though wee should graunt, that the Apostles had the full authoritie of Christ actually to remit sinnes, which they shall neuer proue, yet it may bee doubted, whether all Ministers, whom they call Priests (which name we refuse not, if it bee taken according to the sense of the originall word Presbyter and not for a sacrificing priesthood) haue as full power in this case, as the Apostles had, nay it is plaine they haue not: for the Apostles and other in the Primitive Church, had power to discerne spirits, 1. Cor. 12. 10. and after a strange manner to exercise power ouer their bodily life, as Peter did vpon Ananias and Sapphira, Act. 5. Yet we rather stand vpon this point, that neither the Apostles nor any other Ministers haue power actually to remit sinnes, then onely as dispensers and stewards in the name of Christ.

The Popelians.

AL the power of binding and loosing committed to the Apostles and to the Ministers of the Word and Sacraments, is, by declaring the will and pleasure of God out of his word, both to pronounce forgiveness of sinnes to al, that are truly penitent, and the retaining of them to the ob-stinat and unrepentant, Fulk. answ. Joh. 20. sect. 3. So that Ministers are not made iudges in this case, but onely as the Lords ambassadours, to declare the will of God out of his word.

Argum. 1. There is a notable place for this purpose, 2. Cor. 5. 18. God hath reconciled vs vnto himselfe through Iesus Christ, and hath given vs the ministerie of reconciliation. So then Christ is the only author of reconciliation, the Apostles are but ministers: how then say the Rhemists that Christ himselfe is but a minister also of our reconciliation, yet a chiefe minister, whereas the A-postle maketh him the author? God was in Christ reconciling the world to himselfe, verf. 19. We are but ambassadours for Christ, and pray you in Christs stead, to be reconciled vnto God. This then is the office of Ministers, not to reconcile men vnto God, but to pray them to bee reconciled through Christ: Christ onely is the reconciler, they but ministers of reconciliation: they are but messengers and ambassadours, onely to declare their princes pleasure; their commision is certaine, beyond that they cannot goe. Wherefore that is a blasphemous decretall, and cleane contrarie to the Scripture, which is ascribed, but falsely, to Pontianus Bishop of Rome, which saith, that God hath Priests so familiar, that by them he forgiveth the sinnes of others, and reconcileth them vnto him. But S. Paul saith, that God onely by Christ reconcileth vs vnto himselfe.

Argum. 2. Augustine doth very freely vtter his minde concerning this matter, who putteth this obiection: If men doe not forgive sinnes, then it should seeme to be false which Christ saith, Whosoever you bind on earth is bound in heauen. He answereth: Daturus erat Dominus hominibus spi-ritum sanctum, &c. God was to giue vnto you the holy Ghost, by whom their sinnes should be forgiuen them. Spiritus dimittis, non vos; spiritus autem Deus est: Deus ergo dimittit, non vos: The spirit therefore remitteth sinne, and not you: And this is recited in the decrees, Canf. 2. qu. 1. cap. 82. the spirit is God; God forgiveth sinnes, and not you. Here is one argument, God onely forgiveth sinnes: Ergo, not man. Againe, Quid es homo nisi ager sanandus? vis mihi esse medicus? morbum quare medicari? O man what art thou that takest away my sinnes, but a sicke man thy selfe: wouldst thou be my Physician, nay, let vs both together goe seeke a Physician that may heale vs. Loe, another argument: He cannot be a Physician to others, that needeth a Physician himselfe: he cannot reconcile others to God, who hath himselfe neede of a reconciler. Further, he saith; Qui dimittit per hominem, potest dimittere prater hominem: non enim uoluntas est idonea per se dare, qui potest per alium dare: He that can forgiue sins by man, can forgiue also without man: for he may as well forgiue by himselfe, as he can do it by another. Here is then the third argument: If man doe actually forgiue sinnes, then Christ should not forgiue sinnes without man: for the whole power is committed to man. Yea, the Rhemists affirme the same, that it is necessarie we should submit our selues to the iudgement of the Priest for release of our sinnes: if it be necessarie, then sinnes cannot be remitted without the Priest: then is Christs power limited, he cannot forgiue without man, which is contrarie to that Augustine affirmeth here.

To this agreeth the Councell Cabilonens. sub Carolo. can. 33. in these words: Confessio qua Deus, purgat peccata; qua sacerdoti fit, docet, qualiter ipsa purgentur peccata: Deus enim saluus est sanctuaris legitur & author, plerumque hanc praebeat sua potentia inuisibili administratione, plerumque medicum operatione: The confession which is made to God, purgeth our sinne; that which is made to the priest, sheweth how our sinne should bee purged: for God the author and giner of health and saluation doth many times saue by his inuisible power, and many times by the worke or labour of the Physician. Hence we learne, that the Minister doth heale the sinnes of the soule no otherwise then the Physician doth cure the diseases of the bodie, that is, ministerially onely: and that he actually forgiueth not sinnes, but onely sheweth and declareth how they are forgiuen.

We haue plentifull testimonie from their owne Canons: Decret. p. 2. can. 11. qu. 3. c. 89. Pius tenet, &c. It is the rocke (that is Christ) which retaineth sinnes, the rocke remitteth sinnes. Pius. distinct. 4. c. 141. Nemo tollit, &c. No man taketh away sinne but onely Christ, which is the Lamb that taketh away the sinne of the world.

Their Master of Sentences alloweth that saying of S. Ambrose: Ille solus peccata, &c. He onely forgiueth sinnes, that died for our sinnes, lib. 4. distinct. 18. d. And againe, ibid. f. Sacerdotibus in illa potestatem, &c. Christ giueth power to Priests to binde and loose, that is, ostendendi, &c. to shew or declare that they are bound, or loosed: like as the Priests in the law had power to discern betwene leper and leper. And distinct. 19. c. Sacerdotes non propria virtute, &c. Ministers doe not binde by their owne power, but as they beare the figure of Christ, that is, represent Christ: Ergo, the Ministers of the Church not iudicially, but ministerially onely forgiue, or retaine sinnes, that is, onely declare them so to be.

This truth hath been sealed by the blood of holy Martyrs: George Carpenter burned in Batavia anno 1527. for this article with others, that he did not beleue that a Priest could forgiue a mans sinne: that is, by any actuell or inherent power in himselfe.

John Lambert holy Martyr: I say, that onely Christ looseth a sinner, which is contrite, by his word and promise, and the Priest doth nothing but shew and declare that word. And this telleth S. Paul in the 2. to the Corinthians, saying, God hath reconciled vs vnto him through Christ Iesu See it is God that through Christ, looseth our sinne. And he hath (quoth S. Paul) ordained ministers of the same atonement. See how Christs Apostles called not themselves the authors of bindeing and loosing, but Ministers, For pag. 1105.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER STRAIGHT- waies whatsoeuer be loosed or bound by the ministerie of men vpon earth, be so in heauen.

The Papists.

76. Error.

AN expresse power (say they) is giuen vnto Priests to remit and retaine sinnes: And Christ promisseth, that whose sinnes soeuer they forgiue, they are forgiuen of God, and whose sinnes soeuer they retaine, they are retained of God, Rhemist. annot. Ioh. 20. sect. 1. Whereby this appeareth to bee their opinion, which is manifest also by the practise of their Church, that at the will and pleasure of euery Priest exercising the keyes vpon earth, men are bound and loosed in heauen.

They ground this their opinion vpon the generalitie of the words: Whosoever sinner you remit, they are remitted, Ioh. 20. 23. And Matth. 18. 18. Whatsoeuer you binde in earth, shall bee bound in heauen.

Ans. These places are not so to be vnderstood, as though God were bound to ratifie every decree of men vpon earth: for first this power is giuen to all lawfull Pastors which doe hold the Apostolike faith, not to Idolatrous, ignorant, and blasphemous priests, such as most, if not all, of the popish sort are. Secondly, they must decree in the earth according to Gods will: Wherefore Ioh. 20. 22. first Christ breatheth his spirit vpon his Apostles, and then giueth them their commission: signifying hereby, that they must execute this power as they shall be directed by Gods spirit: and Matth. 18. 20. it followeth, that they must bee assembled in the name of Christ, that is, according according to Christs rule and the direction of his word; they must binde and loose, and not at their owne discretion.

The Protestants.

That no sentence or decree of men bindeth or looseth before God in heauen, but that which is pronounced according to the will and pleasure of God, and by the warrants of his word, the Scripture euery where teacheth vs.

Argum. 1. Prouerbs. 26. 2. As the sparrow by flying escapeth, so the curse that is causelesse shall not come. And 1. 26. Wee vnto stornes that speake good of euill, and euill of good. He that iustifieth the wicked, and condemneth the iust, they are both an abomination to God. Prou. 17. 13. Wherefore a Priest binding a penitent man, and loosing a wicked man, doth flatly transgresse the law and rule of Gods word: neither shall his sentence be ratified in heauen.

Arg. 2. In saying that whosoever sins the Priest bindeth or looseth, his sentence standeth in effect before God, they must needs admit one or both of these absurdities: either to grant, that a Priest cannot erre in dispensing of the keyes, which were too shamefull a saying, to giue so great a priuiledge to every ignorant and simple priest, (such as their Church hath great store of) which no mortall man can haue; Saint Paul giueth warning to Timothee, who was more then a common or ordinarie Minister, that he lay not his hands suddenly vpon any man. 1. Timoth. 5. vers. 22. But if Timothee, so excellent a man, had been free from erring in executing his function, this exhortation of S. Paul had been needlesse and superfluous.

Or else, they must say that the iudgement of mens soules is committed vnto them: for if, looke; how they pronounce vpon men on earth, euen so it fareth with them before God; then the salvation and damnation of men dependeth of their sentence. But the Scripture saith, Deo non iudicabitur for we shall all appeare before the iudgement seate of Christ. Rom. 14. 10. Men therefore are not iudges to pronounce who are saued or damned, but the iudgement must bee committed to Christ.

But who knoweth not that the popish Church doth arrogate vnto themselves this power, to define who are Saints in heauen, and whole soules are tormented in hell? Thus they dealt with Iohn Husse, having condemned him, they set a crowne of paper vpon his head pictured with diuels, saying vnto him: Now we commit thy soule to the diuell. At the burning of that worthie seruant of God and blessed Martyr Iohn Frith, one Doctor Cooke, a foule mouthed Papist, bid the people to pray no more for him, then they would for a dogge. And thus they take the Lords office out of his hand, in taking vpon them to be iudges of men.

Argum. 3. I will conclude with Augustines words, he saith; that finnes are forgiven, or not forgiven: non secundum arbitrium hominum, sed secundum arbitrium Dei. (According to the will of God, not after the will and pleasure of men, but according to the will of God, and at the prayers of deubut and holy men.)

With Augustine accordeth all antiquitie, Council. Aquisgranus. cap. 17. Tunc verus est absolutio presbiteris, cum eterni arbitrium sequitur iudicii, ut Lazarum prius Christum mortuum vniuissimus, qui vniuissus postea a discipulis solutus est: Then the Rector absoluteth aught when he followeth the will of the eternall Iudge, as Christ first did reuiue Lazarus being dead: and then bad his Apostles loose him.

Nicholaus apostol. ad Michaelem: Qui ligati sunt ligare, & qui ipsi mortui sunt alios mortificare non possunt: They cannot binde others that are bound themselves, nor mortifie others being dead themselves. But many priests themselves are dead and bound in their finnes; how then can they binde others?

Leo in epistol. cont. Paschal. 2. Dicimus cum Gregorio legandi & solvendi potestate se prius, qui subiectos pro suo uelle, non eorum merito ligat, aut soluit: We say with Gregorie, he doth deprive himselfe of the power of binding and loosing, which doth binde or loose his inferiours after his owne fancie, not according to their desert.

This also is the sentence of their decrees; Caus. 11. qu. 3. & 46. Gelasius: Neminem potest iniqua gravare sententia: An vniust sentence can hurt no man: therefore he neede not desire to be absolved from that sentence, wherewith he is not bound. Cap. 62. Gregor. Tunc vera est absolutio, etc. Then the absolution of the President or Prelate is good, when he followeth the will of the eternall Iudge.

Likewise the Master of Sentences, distinct. 18. lib. 4. b. Interdum, qui foras mittitur, etc. Sometime he that is thrust out of the Church is within, and he that is within is out of the Church.

Walter Brute holy confessor, sheweth how that Priests taking vpon them to bee iudges of men, doe more then Christ did in the daies of his flesh, who would not take vpon him to be a iudge, or to punish sinners according to the quantitie of their finnes, but hath reserved that for his second coming: And against such he applieth that saying of S. Paul, 1. Cor. 4. Iudges not before the time, until the coming of the Lord, who shall disclose the secrets of hearts, etc. Fox pag. 491.

John Lambert holy Martyr: The declaration or ministerie of the Priest doth not any thing availe to loose any person, vnlesse he that should bee loosed giue credence vnto the word ministered or shewed by the Priest, Fax pag. 1105. Ergo, the sentence of the Priest doth not absolutely binde.

THE FIFTE QUESTION, CONCERNING the lawfulness of mariage in Ministers.

This question hath three parts: first, whether it bee expedient or requisite that all Ministers should be tyed vnto single life. Secondly, whether men twice married are to be admitted into the Ministerie. Thirdly, whether Ministers hauing entered into holy orders, ought to renounce the societie of their wiues before married.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER IT BE lawfull for Ministers to marrie.

The Papists.

Bellarmino confesseth, that single life is not imposed vpon Ministers by the law of God, for there is no precept either in the old or new Testament, that forbiddeth Ministers to marrie; but it is a positieue law of the Church, most ancient and most iust, kept and obserued euery since the Apostles time. And therefore it is not now lawfull for Ministers to marrie, cap. 1. de Clericis.

Argum. 1. 1. Timoth. 2. 3. The Apostle saith, that no man that warreth, entangleth himselfe with the affaires of this life: But to bee married and to haue care of household, are counted among the affaires and busines of this life: Ergo, a Minister who is the Lords Iouldier, ought not to entangle himselfe therewith, Bellarmino.

Ans. First, the Iesuite before confessed, that they had no Scripture against Ministers marrieage, how is it then, that now he pleadeth Scripture? Secondly, we must put the Iesuite in minde of his owne exposition of this place, lib. 5. de pontif. cap. 10. where, this place being alleaged against the temporall dominion of Ecclesiasticall persons, he answereth, that this place onely forbiddeth negotiations, and merchandise and trafficke in the world, not regimē politicum, politick regimēt. If then the politick care of a Citie, Prouince, or Common-wealth bee no impediment, in his iudgement, to the spirituall warfare: much lesse without all question is the domestick care of one familie, the charge of wife and children. Thirdly, we vtterly denie, that marrieage is an hinderance or let to the calling of Ministers: nay, we say, that it is an helpe and comfort to those that haue not the proper gift of continencie.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul would not haue women admitted to be widowes of the Church, that had a purpose to marrie, 1. Timoth. 5. 11. much lesse they that are married should bee admitted to minister the Sacrament, Rhemist. annotat. ibid.

Ans. First, the reason is not alike: for such women as had no husbands were fittest for the seruice of the Church, because they were free from other domesticall attendance, as wiues are not, which must waite of their husbands: but mariage in this behalfe is no impediment to Ministers, but rather an helpe, while they haue one at home that careth for their domesticall affaires. Secondly, if the married estate be not fit to minister or receiue the Sacrament, then in those churches where they receiued the Sacrament euery day, there should haue been no mariage at all. Thirdly, Saint Paul would haue no widow chosen vnder 60. yeeres, in which age, the heate of lust being abated, there is no neede of mariage: but the case is otherwise in Ministers, who in the strength of their age are admitted, and had neede of that remedie, if they be not endued with the gift of continencie. But if it were so, that a Minister should not bee admitted before 70. or 80. yeeres, which in a man is no more, in respect of procreation, then 50. or 60. in a woman, the iniunction then of single life would not seeme streight. Thus then is this argument answered.

Argum. 3. The Iesuite giueth diuers instances, wherein mariage is a let and impediment to Ministers: As, it hindereth their prayer, their preaching, their almes and liberalitie to the poore, for they haue wife and children to care for, Bellarmino.

Ans. First, belike you esteeme of marriage, as of an vnholie and vnpure thing, that a man can neither pray, nor do the office of a Christian, perfovrning the dutie to his wife: and indeed one of your companions calleth mariage a prophonation of sacred orders. Greg. Martin. dissolut. cap. 15. sect. 11. Whereas the Apostle calleth it an honourable state, Hebr. 13. And it was instituted in Paradise, whereas before the fall of man there was no vnclane thing. Secondly, we denie not, but that abuse of mariage both in Ministers and other lay-men, is an impediment to all holy actions: and therefore S. Paul giueth generall counsell to all, both Ministers and others, that they which haue wiues should be as though they had none, 1. Corinth. 7. 29. that is, should liue soberly soberly in marriage, and not give themselves to the wantonness of the flesh. Thirdly, neither doth marriage hinder hospitalitie: for S. Paul requiring that a Minister should be harboured 1st Timothy 3. 2. giveth also rules concerning the government of his familie, his wife and children. ver. 4. 11. For to whom may he better commit the care of household affaires then to his wife? And that familie which is guided by a carefull and godly housewife, wee see by experience, to yeeld more reliefe to the poore, and give entertainment to strangers, then those houses which have none. And where it is objected, that Ministers will care altogether for their children: It hath bin seene that single priests in time of Poperie, have been more covetous and greedy to enrich their kindred, then married Ministers have cared for the prouision of their children. And hereupon diuers Canons were made to restrain their covetous desires to aduance their kindred, as Can. 1. 2. qu. 1. 7. P. 1. 2. Nulli Episcopus &c. It shall not be lawfull for any Bishop to convert the moveable or immoveable thinges of the Church to his owne use. Can. 1. 6. qu. 7. 1. 2. Greg. 7. de I crech against such Bishops, as did conferre oblations vpon their seruitors, and kinsmen. And as for a moderate care to be taken to make prouision for wife and children, your owne Canons allow it. Can. 1. 3. qu. 1. 2. 19. Episcopi de rebus proprijs &c. Bishops may leaue to their heires, their owne gotten goods: and 2. 21. Potestatem habet maritus &c. A Bishop dying hath power to dispose of his proper goods to whom he will; Paraffus uxorem habet &c. It may be he hath a wife, children, kinsmen, or seruantes &c.

Argum. 4. Single life by the Apostle is preferred before the married estate, and therefore fittest for Ministers: for hee that is married careth for the things of the world. 1. Corinth. 7. 33.

Ans. First, single life is preferred before marriage, in all men, and not onely in Ministers: And therefore as lay-men are not bound to single life, though it be in it selfe more convenient; so neither ought ministers to be. Secondly, though a thing in it selfe be best, yet is it not vniuersally best for every man: as riches are better then pouertie, because they are Gods blessing; yet is it not best for every man to be rich: God seeth it good, that some men should be poore: So single life is the best for those that haue the gift of chastity; that can with a quiet conscience live single: otherwise matrimony were much better: for Saint Paul, that wiseth that every one would live single as he did, yet afterward faith, It is better to marry then to burne. So that by the Apostles iudgement, to marrie is best for him that hath not the gift of continencie; 1st Cor. 7. 33. 1st Tim. 4. 3.

Apolog. Argum. 5. Winchester reasoneth thus, A father may forbid certaine of his children to marrie, so may a King in his kingdome forbid certaine of his subjects to marrie, that is all the Priests of the Realme. Reas. 1. 7. 93.

Ans. First, the father hath no such power to keepe his child from marriage, if neede require: for the fathers will herein dependeth vpon the necessitie which his child hath to marrie, as S. Paul teacheth, 1. Cor. 7. 37. Secondly, that which the word of God hath left free for all men, by the law of the prince cannot be restrained; and if the King may forbid marriage to any, he may as well enioyne laymen single life, as priestes: but such a law to restrain the lay sorte from marriage, were manifest tyrannie, and therefore the other restrainte would seeme hard and vnjust. Thirdly, by this argument it appeareth, that these cruell prohibitions of marriage, are built vpon the lawes onely and ordinances of men, neither warranted by Gods word, nor allowed by the ancient practices of the Church, as our aduersaries would beare vs in hand.

Beilarmus here countenanceth out this matter with great shew of antiquitie; and first he produceth diuers Canons of Councils, which I will briefly take a view of. First, Ancyran. can. 16. it was decreed, that Deacons in their ordination not protesting that they would marrie, should not be suffered afterward; but if they did protest to marrie, they might, for they are therein dispensed with by the Bishop.

Ans. First, this Canon maketh more against them for Ministers marriage, which is here vpon protestation permitted; which is not suffered now in the popish Church. Secondly, if the Bishop may dispense with marriage of Ministers, then is it not a diuine or apostolicall; but a humane and politicall deuise. Thirdly, it is not the dispensation of the Bishop, that maketh marriage free, but the libertie granted by the Apostle, which is not to be abridged, as 1st Tim. 4. 3. is acknowledged out of the Tolcan council, that subdeacons being asked in their ordination, of their will fire or purpose of marriage, should not be denied, concessum ab Episcopo licentiam; the licence granted vnto them by the Apostle. Fourthly, Marriage was then free by protestation, but now quod noluit, will they, will they, the decree of Pope Martin is in force, a man is not left to his choice, decret. Martini. Can. 1. 7. qu. 1. 2. 8. Why do they then alledge antiquitie, and yet take away the priuiledge of antiquitie?

Secondly, he objecteth the counsell of Nicaea. can. 1. 2. Presbyter & exorcism &c. If a Presbyter marrie a wife, he shall be deposed from his order.

Ans. First, this Canon may be suspected, for how is it like that the Greeke Church would decree against the marriage of priests, seeing that Stephanus before this affirmeth in his decrees; Alia se habet Orientalis &c. The East Churches have an other tradition then the Romane Church for their priests, deacons and subdeacons are coupled in marriage: either Stephanus must be accused of vntruth, or this Synode of forgerie. Secondly, though this Synode permit not priests to take new wiues; yet they forbid them not to retayne their old, can. 8. He that keepeth an adulterous wife, must not minister: they might then keepe a wife, not an adulteresse. Thirdly, this Synode can. 7. seemeth to condemne second marriage: they forbid the Minister consensire, to consent to second marriage, or to be present at the marriage feast. Fourthly, this Synode was prouinciall, consisting of 17. Bishops, and seemeth to be of no great authoritie.

Thirdly, he vrgeth the Nicene council 1. which was generall, can. 3. Interdixit sancta Synodus. The sacred Synode forbiddeh a Bishop, Priest or Deacon, to haue any woman in their house, beside their mother, sister, Aunt: a wife is not here mentioned.

Ans. First, this Synode forbiddeh them to haue, mulierem extraneam, vel subintraditam, any strange woman, secretly or by stealth brought in, beside those, which are named: now, there is no strange woman, and therefore not forbidden. Secondly, if the Councell had concluded against marriage, they had done contrarie to the ancient tradition, which was, and is yet in force in the Greeke Church, as Stephanus saith in his decree, which is not like. Thirdly, Socrates lib. 1. c. 2. reporteth how that the Synode would haue decreed against the marriage of Ministers, but was stayed by Paphnutius, who shewed the inconuenience thereof, whose sentence the whole Synode commended: and therefore it cannot be, that any such thing was decreed. Fourthly, the Canons of the Nicene council may be suspected, that they are not the right Canons; for Athanasius saith, there were 70. canons of this Synode, diffin. 16. c. 12. but now there are but 20. And ep. 13. Stephanus saith, that many of them are lost: and beside it appeareth to be so, because there is not one Canon extant against the Arrian heresie, for the which the synode was chiefly assembled: as also another notable thing concluded in the Nicene, was as touching the vniforme obseruation of Easter, whereof there is not any mention in these 20. Canons: so that it is very like: that these ancient Canons are changed and altered, and as some haue been left out, so other are put in their stead.

Fourthly, the Trullane Synode being the 6. generall, can. 6. decreeth, that neither Bishops, priests, deacons or subdeacons, should after their Ordination take them wiues.

Ans. First, this Synode can. 13. permitteth Priests and Deacons to haue the companie of der wiues, whom they married before, and those that would separate them, they decree to be deposed: and this the Synode agreed vpon, though they knew the custome of the Romane Church to be contrary; so that this Synode maketh as much for the marriage of Ministers, as against it. Secondly, Belarmius, though he now be contented to vrge this Councell against vs, yet at other times, taketh to himselfe great libertie to confute and reiect it: And indeed it seemeth to be of a great authoritie: for can. 2. they allow the Canon of Cyprian for rebaptizing of heretikes: And this Synode hath beside some ridiculous Canons, as can. 56. they forbid the eating of cheese and egges in Lent; can. 67. Damnamus eas &c. Wee do condemne them, that do by any kind of art dresse the blood of beasts, and so eate it: they forbid the eating of puddings. Thirdly, can. 33. this Synode prescribeth a law to the Romane Church, that whosoever should fast Saturdayes, should be deposed: if this Synode serue their turne against marriage, it serueth our turne as well against their Saturday fast. Fourthly, can. 12. this Councell forbiddeh Bishops the companie of their wiues, contrary to the 5. Canon of the Apostles; and they take vpon them in direct words, to correct the Apostles Canons: Non diminuis Apostolis &c. We do not contrary the Apostles, thus decreeing, but willing to bring the Church to a better order, &c. They do take vpon them to make better orders for the Church, then the Apostles, which is great presumption. We see then, what is to be thought of this Councell, yet it maketh as much for vs, as against vs.

Fifthly, hee obiecteth Carthag. 2. can. 2. Carthag. 5. can. 3. & concil. African. can. 37. in all which Canons, Bishops, priests, deacons, are enioyned to abstayne from their wiues.

Ans. Whether shall we take to be of greater authoritie, the Canons of the Apostles, or the canons of councils, generall Synodes or prouinciall? The 6. Canon of the Apostles dealeth with Bishops and Priests to be excommunicate if they refused their wiues: Trullan. 6. generall. can. 13. decreeth them to be deposed, that forbid Priests or Deacons the companie of their wiues: they only restrayne Bishops. But these African councils make a generall restraint for Bishops, priests and deacons. Secondly, they notwithstanding giue libertie to all other degrees, subdeacons, and other; as African. can. 37. Ceteros autem Clericos &c. But other of the Clergie were will not haue compelled to forbear their wiues, but let the custome of euery Church be obserued: but afterward subdeacons also were restrained. Thus we see how these Councils are contrary one to another.

Sixthly, hee produceth cap. 1. sub Siluest. can. 1. Aradensis. can. 2. Turonensis. can. 1. Agathensis. cap. 1. Aradensis. 3. can. 1. in all which Canons it is not permitted, that any of the Clergie from subdeacons upward, should either marrie wiuies, or companie with their wiuies, if they had any.

Ans. First, some of these Synodes are thought to be depraved and corrupted: as first, the council holden at Rome vnder Siluester, first, it beginneth with a lie, can. 1. that Constantine was baptized by Siluester, whereas other stories say, that he was baptized by Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia. Theod. lib. 1. c. 32. Secondly, this Council is said to haue been celebrate the very same time, that the Nicene council was held; and that Constantine was present, and subscribed to this council, and 133. Bishops of the Greeke Church beside: but how could they be there, and here to at the same time? Thirdly, c. 1. it is decreed, that none of the lay sort should be present, and yet cap. 10. Calphurnius President of the Citie, was present and subscribed: Fourthly, this Synode beareth date cap. 20. 3. Calend of Iune, when Constantinus and Priscus were rather Crissus were Consuls: the Nicene beareth date when Paulinus and Iulianus were Consuls, which was the yeere after: so that this synode by this account, should go before the Nicene, which is untrue, for that was the first general, and the Epitomizer of the Councils confesseth in these words, In exemplaribus &c. In the copies of this Romane synode there is intolerabilis deprauatio, an intolerable deprauation: Barib. Canonic. Fifthly, if there were so many Bishops of the Greeke Church present, it is not like that they would agree to any such Canon contrary to the custome of their owne Church: Sidely. can. 2. Siluester approbeth all the acts of the Nicene Council, whereof this was one, that they would not prescribe single life to the Clergie at the motion of Papinianus; how then is it like that he would decree the contrary in this Romane Synod? Seienthly, the inhibition for the mariage of subdeacons was not generall, no, not in the Latine Church, till Gregorius his time: for in Sicilie til then they had a custome for their subdeacons to marrie: as it may appeare distict. 32. c. But such a custome contrary to a decree of a general Council at Rome could not haue so long continued.

Concerning the second Council of Arles: first, I answer, that many things therein may be thought to be forged; for it is said to haue been celebrate in the time of Syluester: yet Can. 8. mention is made of the Valensian Council, which was held vnder Leo 1. about an hundred yeere after. Secondly, Can. 3. this Council onely inhibiteth the companie of women, gradus Diuinitatis, from the degree of Deaconship and upward: so that Subdeacons are exempted. Thirdly, it giueth leaue, that they may haue, in solatio suo, for their solace in their house, their mother, sister, daughter, niece, or uxorem cōiugis sui, and their wife conuerted: But what solace should they haue in their wiuies, if it were not lawfull to enioy them as their wiuies.

Now to the Council of Turone we answer: First, it doth mitigate certaine Canons made before against the mariage of the Clergie. Can. 2. Vt sacerdos, vel Diaconus, &c. That a Priest or Deacon, that begetteth children, should not be barred from the Communion, as our predecessors haue decreed: but we willing to moderate the strictnes of this constitution, doe decree, that such bee not prohibited to a higher degree: Thus it doth appeare to be but an humane constitution, which they did sometimes mitigate, sometimes aggrauate as they thought good. Secondly, in the decree against Ministers mariage, they doe abuse that place of Scripture, qui in carne sunt, They that are in the flesh, cannot please God: which hath no such meaning; and in their sense then, none that are married, that is in the flesh, can please God. They also call married Ministers, conuinculatos, & inimicos, defiled and contaminate: but contrarie the Apostle calleth, the mariage bed vndefiled, Hebr. 13. 4. I thinke the Papists themselves are ashamed of such stuffe. Thirdly, it was but a provinciall Council of eight Bishops, and of no great authoritie.

Concerning the Council of Agatha, we answer: First, it hath diuers Canons against some superstitions of Poperie: as Can. 19. they allow no women to professe single life before 40. yeeres: Can. 26. they condemne the idle life of Monkes. Can. 61. they count it incest for a man to marrie his cosine germane, or brothers wife, contrary to the practise of the Church of Rome. If this council serue their turne against vs in this point of mariage, we will oppose it against them in the rest: Secondly, they onely enioyne Priests and Deacons to abstaine from their wiuies, no mention is made of Subdeacons. Thirdly, Can. 10. they allow Ministers to haue their neece with them in the house, and by the Popes law a man may marrie his neece, though the woman cannot marrie her nephew. Now who seeth it not how vnreasonable a thing it is, that a strange woman should bee receiued into a Ministers house, and his owne wife excluded? It is euident that superstition was working then in those daies.

In the seventh place, he alleageeth, Council. Elbertin. c. 33. Talsrah. 4. cap. 10. Talsrah. 4. cap. 26. Talsrah. 4. cap. 27. in all which Canons both Bishops, Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons are forbidden the vse of their wiuies.

Ans. First, concerning the Elbertine Council, we answer: first, it is not like, that this Council being kept not long after the Nicene, which at the motion of Papinianus, would decree no-nothing touching the single life of the Clergie, but left it free. Again, in the 21. Canon, Qui dicitur coniugiu hominum, &c. He that saith the mariages of men, which are lawfull by the diuine law to be execrable, accursed bee he. But the mariages of Ministers are lawfull by Gods law; this our adversaries doe confesse, making it but a constitution of the Church: Ergo, they which condemn their mariages, are vnder this curse. And thus I thinke wee haue sufficiently answered the lesse oppositions out of the Councils: which I haue shewed either to bee forged, or else erroneous, or contrarie one to another, or concluding directly against Scripture. Now it followeth for further answer, that the Canons also which doe establish and ratifie the mariage of Ministers, be likewise produced, which I haue inserted in the end of our arguments that here follow.

The Protestants.

That it is not onely lawfull but conuenient, that all men both Ministers and others, that haue not receiued a proper gift of continencie, should marrie; and that it is agreeable and consonant to the word of God: thus we shew it.

The Scriptures are most playne for the mariage of Ministers, 1. Tim. 3. 2. S. Paul saith, a Bishop and generally every Minister, may be the husband of one wife: and ver. 11. their wives are described how they ought to behaue themselves: Let their wives be honest: Ergo, it is lawfull for them to be married. Bellarmine answereth, that S. Paul speaketh of the wives which they had before their calling and ordaining, not those, which they should marrie after. But there appeareth no such thing out of the text, but rather the contrarie. First, the Apostle saith ver. 2. Optus Episcopus sicut &c. A Bishop must be the husband of one wife: he sheweth not what he hath been, but what he is, not of the wife which he had, but now hath. Secondly, ver. 11. He describeth what manner of women their wives ought to be, indued with like qualities to their husbands: but if they were not still as their wives, what are they more to them, then other women? neither should they neede to be otherwise qualified, then all other Christian women. Thirdly, the Apostle speaketh of hospitalitie, of bringing vp of Children, of well gouerning his house, and of Bishops wives; how then can he be otherwise vnderstood, but that their wives should be with them, as helping toward all those domestical duties? Fourthly, S. Paul also sheweth in another place, that he had libertie as well as others, To leade about a sister, a wife, euen after he was an Apostle, 1. Corinth. 9. Wherefore it is as lawfull afterward as afore. Bellarmine answereth: We must thus reade, a Sister a woman: and it is like they were women, that did minister vnto the Apostles and followed them. We reply: First, the word Sister, doth implic a woman, and therefore it had been an improper and needlesse speech, to say, a Sister a woman: therefore we must rather reade, a Sister a wife. Bellarmino replieth: First, if the Apostle vnderstoode a wife, he would haue set downe the greeke worde with an article, uia gratia. Ans. This is a false obseruation, for the Apostle, 1. Timoth. 3. 2. 11, 12. making mention of Bishops wives, leaueth out the article. Secondly, S. Paul saith, a Sister a woman, inuerting the order, for a woman a Sister, as Peter Act. 1. saith, Viri fratres, Men and brethren. Ans. In deede your latine translation hath presumed to correct the text, reading thus, a woman a Sister: but what boldnes is this, when you haue no other shift, to take vpon you to amend the text, and seeing the Apostle saith, a Sister a wife, or as you would haue, a woman, in the singular; it must needes implic a wife: for they had other women, more then one, that ministred to them. Secondly, if they were other women which ministred of their substance, what neede the Apostles to be maintained of the Churches? If they ministred but in their seruice and attendance, who were more fit to doe it and to follow them from place to place then their wives? And beside, if the Apostle did meane other women beside wives, how could he alleage this instance to shew that he departed from his right? for he himselfe refused not the ministerie and beneuolence of other women; as of Phoebe, Rom. 16. 1, 2. Wherefore this libertie, which the Apostle vsed not, was as concerning wives. Thirdly, the phrase of leading about a Sister, importeth a superioritie and authoritie, such as the husband hath ouer his wife. Bellarmino replieth, the Apostles had this power ouer these women, not as husbands ouer their wives, but as teachers ouer their Disciples. Ans. First, the Apostle vseth the same word, 1. Cor. 7. 4. The woman hath not power ouer her owne body, &c. The vse of the word sheweth, what power he meaneth. Secondly, the Apostle onely had not power, but in deede did vse that power ouer both men and women, as his Disciples, as it may appeare, Act. 16. 13. but here he speaketh of a power, which he vsed not. Lastly, S. Hierome, though in other places he varieth from himselfe, yet giueth this rule for the vnderstanding of this word: Tim. 3. ad Ocean. Mulierem autem, &c. A woman (which word is ambiguous in the Greeke tongue) in all these places vnderstand a wife. S. Ambrose also, Comment. in 1. Tim. 3. vpon these words, having children, expoundeth it of Bishops ioyned in mariage: Idco inferiorem posuit, &c. The Apostle put the case of the inferiour order, that is, such as were married; that no man might doubt of the superiour, that is, such as were not coupled in mariage. Another place we haue, Heb. 13. 3. Marriage is honorable among all men: Ergo, amongst Ministers. Bellarmino. If it were meane of all mariages, then to marrie within the degrees of Consanguinitie, were also honorable. Ans. This is a very childſt ſauill: Firſt, he might haue read further And the bed vndeſiled: S. Paul therefore ſpeaketh of lawfull marriage. And indeede the other ioyning and coupling of men and women together contrary to Gods law, is not to be counted Matrimonie or Wedlocke, but inceſt, rachi and Fornication, as the brother to marrie his brothers wife, and ſuch like. Secondly, S. Paul ſaith, not all marriages are honorable, but marriage is honorable for all men; the generalitie is not of the thing, but of the perſons: wherefore we doe ſafely conclude out of this place, that marriage is lawfull and commendable: even among miniſters.

Further, Saint Paul ſaith, For avoiding of fornication, let every man haue his owne wife, 1. Cor. 7. 2. Here is no reſtraynt for Miniſters. Bellarmin, this is to be vnderſtoode of thoſe that haue not made a vow of continencie. Auſtine Firſt, our Sauour Chriſt commandeth no ſuch vowes; it is a cruell Antichriſtian yoke layd vpon Miniſters, to binde them, when they receiue orders, to vowe ſingle life: and therefore your Antichriſtian decree ought not to abridge the generall libertie granted by the Apoſtle. Secondly, the ende of marriage is generall, to ſtoppe fornication, and therefore the remedie alſo is generall: for every man hauing not a proper ſight of continencie, may be in danger of that inconuenience, if he be denied the ordinarie helpe.

Secondly Bellarmin: This is not a precept of the Apoſtle, but a permiſſion and libertie, that they which feared to fall into fornication, ſhould be ioyned to their wives.

Auſtine then the Apoſtle gaue libertie to marrie, where fornication is feared; how dare you abridge that libertie, which God hath made common and free for all: as it is recited in your owne decrees, diſtinct. 28. c. 5. out of the ſecond Toletan Councell, Conceſſum ab Apoſtolo licentiam, &c. The licence to marrie granted by the Apoſtle, we cannot take away. And the Councell there ſpeaketh of the marriage of Miniſters, confeſſing that this libertie to marrie is generall to all, both Miniſters and others.

Again, 1. Tim. 4. to forbid marriage is called a doctrine of diuels: but the Popiſh Church forbiddeth marriage. Bellarmin. We do not forbid marriage to any, but we require ſingle life of al that are entred into orders, which, it is at their owne choyce to receiue or to reſuſe. Auſtine. Firſt, it is neceſſary that ſome ſhould receiue orders, and be conſecrate to the Church miniſtery: wherefore requiring this condition of all ſuch to liue ſingle, though particularly you prohibite not this man or that to marrie, yet generally you prohibite the whole calling, which is worſe. Secondly, if you ſay you doe not forbid marriage ſimply to all: no more did the Manichees, for they ſuffered their ſchollers and auditors to marrie. And Saint Auguſtine words are generall: Ille prohibet matrimonium, qui illud malum eſſe dicit: He forbiddeth marriage, that thinketh it is euill: you therefore forbidding marriage, muſt needs hold opinion that it is wicked and euill. The Councell of Turon, Can. 2. calleth married Miniſters, contaminatos, contaminate, or defiled. Toletan. 8.9.20. Detestabili concubium, ſaith their marriage is deteſtable. The Papiſts allow theſe Councells, and ſo conſequently condemne marriage in this caſe as euill, counting that vnholy and vncleane, which the Lord hath made holy and honourable. There is a ſeuere decree againſt ſuch, Toletan. 1. can. 21. Qui dixit coniugia hominum &c. He that ſhall ſay that the marriages of men, which are lawfull by the diuine law, are execrable, is accuſed. But ſo do the Papiſts count the marriages of Miniſters prophane and vncleane, which are lawfull by the word of God: Ergo, they are accuſed.

Argum. 2. This reſtraint of the marriage of Miniſters hath not been of auncient time in the Church, but impoſed vpon the Church of late, 1000. yeares after Chriſt: Polycrates Biſhop of Ephesus anno. 180. had ſeuē of his progenitors before him Biſhops of the ſame See. In the Nicean Councell Paphnutius ſtoode vp, and ſtayed the decree that ſhould haue paſt, for reſtrayning of the marriage of Miniſters, and it is ſaid, Synodus laudauit ſententiam Paphnutij: The Synod commended Paphnutius ſentence. Sozomen. lib. 1. cap. 11. Bellarmin here ſetteth a good face vpon it, and ſtoutly denieth the ſtorie, and maketh the author a lier that reporteth it. Thus, when they haue no other ſhift, they will reſuſe authors, bookes, antiquitie. But Gratian doth report it for a true ſtorie, diſtinct. 3. 1. 12. who is of better credit, I thinke with Papiſts, then any of this vpiſt popiſh ſect.

Gregorie the Father of Gregorie, was Biſhop of Nazianzum. Symphoroſa, which was put to death with her ſeuē ſonnes vnder the perſecution of Adrian the Emperour, was the wife of one Geſulius Miniſter in the citie of Tyber, For. pag. 45. Clement Biſhop of Nilus, vnder the tyrannie of Maximinus fled with his wife into the mountaines of Arabia, and was neuer ſcene againe, Euseb. lib. 6. cap. 42. Fabianus Biſhop of Rome and Martyr was a married man. Saint Cyprian maketh mention of one Numidicus a preſbyter, that was married; lib. 4. epistol. 10. Likewiſe epistol. 6. ad Cornelium, he reporteth thus of Novatus a prieſt, eternus uxoris, &c. Hee ſtrooke his wife with his heele being with child, and killed the child, that ſhe went with: yet hee findeth no fault with him, for being married, but for abuſing his wife. Diuers of the Biſhops of Rome beſide were Biſhops and prieſts ſonnes: Bonifacius the firſt, the ſonne of Lucius a prieſt: Felix

Felix presbyter, the father of Felix the third: Agapetus the first, Gordianus his sonne a priest: Syl- vanus the sonne of Hermisila Bishop of Rome: Theodorus Pope, sonne to Theodorus Bishop of Ier- Ex pontif. usalem: Hadrianus second sonne to Talarus, Bishop Benedictus the eight, and Iohn 21. his suc- Damasi. cessor both sonnes to Georg. Episcop. Partuens. And diuers other of them beside. The lesuite can answere here nothing els, but that these sonnes of priests were borne before their fathers priesthooe: But this is their vaine surmise and coniecture, seeing no such thing is mentioned in the storie. And this surmise is taken away by the direct words of Gratian. distinct. 56. c. 2. where after he had rehearsed the names of the forsaide Bishops of Rome, concludeth thus: Quamplures etiam
alijs inuenerunt in de sacerdosibus uarijs, &c. And many beside are found to haue gouerned the Apostol-like See, being borne of Priests or Ministers: which is more then to haue said, sonnes of Priests; for they might be Priests sonnes, though borne before their priesthood: but to bee borne of Priests, implieth, that they were at the time of their birth, Priests.

The Greeke Church neuer yet receiued this popish decree of single life, and their Bishops are married at this day. Bellarminus saith, that the Church of Rome hath dispensed with them, cap. 18.
Ergo if the Pope would dispence with the Latine Church, it might be lawfull enough then for Ministers to marrie; wherefore it is but a humane constitution. Againe, it is false that they haue dispensed with the Greeke Church: they care not for their dispensations; but vse their owne Christian liberty: neither was the Greeke Church euer subiect to the Bishop of Rome. This also may appeare by the 13. Canon of the Trullane Synode the 6 generall, where it was decreed, that notwithstanding the contrarie custome of the Church of Rome, Priests and Deacons might enioy the companie of their wiues. And Innocent. 3. saith, Orientalis ecclesia votum continentie non admittit.
 The East Church hath not admitted or receiued the vow of continencie, deu. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 3. c. 6.
 Wherefore it is vntreue that the Greeke Church alloweth the mariage of their Ministers by vertue of the Popes dispensation, they doe it without and beside his leaue. And we shall finde few ages wherin some Priests, notwithstanding so many prohibitions, were not married. In Gregorius the 7. his time, who by excommunication forced Ministers from their wiues, there were 24. Bishops with their Clergie that stood in defence of their mariage. Anno 1191. the nation of the Danes gaue licence to their Ministers to marrie, and were for that cause excommunicate by Clement the 3. ex Bales. Anno 1372. the Archbishop of Colen was married: sic Præmonstratens. Paulus 2. is said to haue taken aduice about the restoring of the mariage of Ministers, ex Bales.
 Thus we see, that in times past mariage was lawfull for all men, vntill Pope Nicholas the second,
Alexander the second, and Gregorius the seuenth, that notable forcerer and adulterer: for these three coming together, one not long after another, began by publike decree to restraine priests mariage: not long after them, Anselmus began to play the Rex here in England, anno. 1104. who stoutly proceeded in his vngodly purpose, and enacted that married priests should either leaue their wiues, or their benefices. At which time 200. Priests at once came barefoote to the Kings palace, to make complaint: and for all Anselmus Pope-like and outrageous proceedings against maried priests, yet they continued married nie two hundred yeares after Anselmus time; do what he could: and thus it is manifest, that the restraint of Ministers mariage is no ancient thing; but then began to be vtged, when Antichrist fully was reuealed to the world, when as the orders of Friars came in and were confirmed and priuiledged vnder Bonifacius the eight about anno. 1300.

Argum. 3. What better argument can we haue against this Popish decree, then the great vn-cleannes, and foule enormities that haue been brought, by the meanes thereof, into the Church?
 In the time of Gregorius the first, who enioyned his Clergie to liue single, commanding on a time his seruants to catch him some fish, out of his Motes and Ponds, in stead of fishe they brought vnto him fixe thousand heads of young children: whereupon, he fetching a great sigh with himselfe, commended then the saying of the Apostle, It is better to marrie then to burne. Bellarminus hath no better answere then to deny the storie, which notwithstanding is found in the Epistle of Haldericus Bishop of Augusta, which he sent to Pope Nicholas, Fox. pag. 1155.

In Anselmus time, after the restraint of Ministers mariage, great rumors, and complaint was brought to him, of the execrable vice of Sodomitie, which began to raigne in the Clergie. Pope Pius the second said, he saw many waightie causes, why wiues should be taken away from priests, but he saw more why they should be restored to them againe. The same Pope Pius also dissolved certaine houses of the Brigidines, bidding them to goe forth of their celles, ne amplius overvnu- ant, that they should no longer burne in lust, ex Bales. Bernard saith, Tolle de Ecclesia honorabile coniug- Sup. Cant.
ium, &c. Take from the Church honorable Matrimonie, shall you not replenish it with incestuous Seru. 66.
 persons, concubiniaries, Sodomiticall vices? Hereupon the popish Catholikes seeing their owne luel. p. 231.
 infirmitie, began thus to salue vp the matter, Si non caste, tamen caritate: If thou deale not chastly, Fox. pag. 785.
 yet deale charily: Yea they are not ashamed thus to write, If any of the priests should be found embracing of a woman, it must be expounded and presupposed, that he doth it to blesse her.

Reade

Reade Master Bales preface to his booke entituled, De aliis Romanorum pontificum: there you shall finde how that the Kinges visiters appointed to visite the Abbeyes, anno. 1538. found in some irreligious houles five, in some ten, in some twentie Sodomiters and adulterers: whereof some kept five, some seuen, some twentie harlots. O filthie vncleannes vntpeakeable! Who would not thinke, that it had been much better for these professed votaries to haue married? This was well foreseee of that good man D. Colles, founder of Paules schoole, who wished that the Master and Vibier of the schoole should be rather of married men, then single priests. Fox pag. 139.

Among the Heluetians it was an ancient vse and custome, that when they receiued any new priest into their Churches, they would premonish him to take his concubine least he should attempt any misse with their wiues and daughters: Fox pag. 866. these things considered, who can not but approue and highly commend the saying of Pope Pius before alleadged, if he had done as he said?

I but (saith Bellarmino) these are the abuses of single life, will you condemne a good thing, because of the abuse? by the same reason (saith he) calum & terra tollenda sunt, Heauen and earth must be taken away, because they were abused of the heathen and taken for Gods, cap. 21.

Ans. First, we say not, that these be the fruites of single life, which S. Paul commendeth in all those that haue the gift, but of this coasted and constrained Popish Virginities, which is imposed indifferently vpon all, and cannot haue any good vse. Secondly, when you can proue that the straying of Ministers marriage is of Gods ordinance, as it is certaine Heauen and earth are of his making, then we will grant vnto you, that it may haue a right vse; and for the abuse ought not vterly to be abolished.

De sanct. Virgin. cap. 34.

Saint Augustine also saith, Qua nubere volunt, & ideo non nubunt quia impune non possunt, melius nubunt, quam videntur, id est, quam occulta flamma concupiscentia in ipsa conscientia vastatur. Those Virgins, which would marry, but cannot, because of restraint, and reproch, might better marrie then burne, that is to say, then with the secret flame of concupiscence to be wasted and consumed in their conscience. Wherefore it followeth, that all they, both Ministers, votaries and Virgins, that haue not power to abstaine, should doe better, for all their profession and vow, to marrie, then to burne.

Argum. 4. The testimonie of antiquitie is very full and plentifull for the lawfulness of Ministers marriage: Stephanus Bishop of Rome, Decretal. Aliter se habet orientalis Ecclesia traditio quam Romana Ecclesia: Nam illorum sacerdotes, diaconi & subdiaconi Matrimonio copulantur: The tradition or custome of the East Church is diuers from the vse of the Romane Church: for their Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons are married. See then, how is this like to be an Apostolike tradition, that Ministers should liue single, seeing it was neuer vniuersally receiued? And Cardinall Campegius here found to be a lier, who was not ashamed openly to say in the assemblie at Noremberg. anno. 1524. that the Greekes did not permit their Priests to marrie, Fox pag. 865.

Bellarmino answereth, first, that this Canon of Stephanus is of no authoritie, being not found in any of his Epistles, &c.

Contra. Thus he taketh to himselfe great libertie in denying of authorities alledged, refusing his owne authors: as he denieth the storie of Pope Iohn, witnessed by 13. authors of account; as I haue shewed before: he giueth no credite to Saxomane his report of Papennius: the Epistle also of Huldericus Bishop of Augusta written to Pope Nicholas, is of him refused: and now he giueth Gregorius the lie, the compiler of their owne decrees; these are but beggerly shifts.

Secondly, saith he, the Canon is to be vnderstood according to the practise of the Greeke Church, that it is not lawfull for their priests to marrie new wiues, but onely being married before, to vse and exercise that marriage, which custome notwithstanding the Church of Rome condemneth.

Contra. First, the wordes of this Decree are plaine, Matrimonio copulantur: The Priests, deacons and subdeacons in the East Church, are coupled or ioyned in marriage: which sheweth a libertie as well to take wiues as to vse wiues. Secondly, the same also is affirmed by Clement 3. decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 7. Sacerdotibus Græcis legitimo matrimonio uti licet: The Greeke priests may vse lawful marriage: If marriage be lawful, then both before their priesthood and after. Thirdly, Innocentius 3. thus testifieth; decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 3. cap. 6. Orientalis in minoribus &c. The Easterne Churches do contract matrimonie in the lower degrees, and in the higher degrees they vse matrimonie already contracted. Wherefore it is vnttrue that Bellarmino saith, it is not lawfull in the Greeke Church for any, in sacris existentes; that are in orders, to marrie wiues. Fourthly, neither do they contract marriage in the lower degrees onely, but in the higher also: as deacons are counted amongst the greater orders, for whom, by the Ancyane council, it was lawfull to marrie, can. 10. as it is alledged in the decrees, dist. 28. c. 8. If the 6. Canon of the Trullane be objected, that maketh it vnlawfull for Deacons to marrie; wee answer, first, that the Ancyane council is more ancient by more then 300. yeere, being celebrate anno. 308. the other about 670. and and therefore to be preferred. Secondly, the Ancyane is confirmed can. 1. of this Trullane Synode, and therefore therein the Synode is contrarie to it selfe. Thirdly, as this Synode prohibiteth deacons to contract marriage, so can. 12. it forbiddeth Bishops to vse marriage contracted, contrarie to the generall vse of the Greeke Church.

Council. Ancyran. ann. 308. can. 10. Diaconi, si in ordinatione protestati sunt, se non posse conuincere, & uxoribus ducere, hi postea, si ad nuptias venerint, maneat in ministerio, &c. Deacons, which when they are ordained doe protest, that they cannot containe, but doe purpose to marrie, if afterward they marrie, let them continue still in their ministerie.

This Canon is also alledged by Ballarmine, to proue that marriage is not lawfull for Ministers, vntill they be dispensed with by the Bishop; because it followeth in the Canon, Quia Episcopus &c. Because the Bishop gaue them leaue, that is, Deacons, to marrie, they may be suffered so to doe.

Answ. First, if the Bishop may dispense with the marriage of Ministers, then is it no Apostolick constitution; for then it were not in the Bishops power to dispense. Secondly, the marriages then of the Ministers of the Gospell by your owne Canon are lawfull, because both they and their Bishops are enabled to marrie by the law of the Prince; which is more then the dispensation of a Bishop. Thirdly, it is not the dispensation of the Bishop, but the libertie of the Apostle, that maketh the marriage of Ministers lawfull, as distinct. 27. c. 5. ex Toletan. 2. cap. 1. Concessum sub Apostolice licentia, &c. We can not take away the licence, or libertie of marriage graunted by the Apostle.

Council. Gangren. cap. 1. qui mulierem fidelem cum viro suo dormientem, abominandum crediderit, anathema esto: He that abhorreth a faithfull woman because she sleepech with her husband, accursed be he. And more apertlie chap. 4. the Councell approueth the marriage of Ministers, decreeing thus: Si quis discernit Presbyterum coniugatum, tanquam occasione nuptiarum, quid offerre non debeat, & ab eius oblatione ideo se abstineat, anathema: If any man make question of a married Priest, that by reason of his marriage, he ought not to Minister, and therefore refraineth from his oblation and seruice, let him be accursed. This Canon alloweth as well of the seruice of a married minister, as of a single: And although this were a prouinciall Councell, yet is it confirmed council. Roman. 6. sub Symmacho, and in the sixth generall Trullane Councell. Can. 1.

Ballarmine answereth, that they are condemned, which condemne marriage in Ministers as simply euill, as can. 1. and this Canon speaketh of him, Qui habuit uxorem, that had, not hath a wife.

Answ. First, the first Canon of this Synode condemneth those that dispraise marriage as euill, but in this 4. Canon, it also decreeth against them, that mislike marriage in Ministers: so that these being two diuers Canons, they can not be thought to decree one and the same thing. Secondly, the words are plaine, Tanquam occasione nuptiarum, If by occasion of marriage, they say not as euill, a man discern betweene a priest married and vnmarried; they say not, condemne, but preferre one before another, for that onely, that he is married; but thus do the Papiests, occasione nuptiarum, by reason of marriage, put Ministers by from ministring: Ergo, they are anathema. Thirdly, the right translation is, Presbyterum coniugatum: as Peter Crab readeth, a married Presbyter, which implieth the present time, not one, which had a wife, which is your owne glosse, and contrary to the custome of the Greeke Church, who suffered their Ministers to hold their wiues. Also your owne decrees do thus reade, distinct. 28. cap. 15. Si quis discernit presbyterum coniugatum: If any man discern a priest married, the Greeke word is γαμωμενος, married or ioyned to a wife, not which had a wife: so that the reading in their owne Canons, doth ouerthrow this new translation of theirs.

Council. Lateranens. sub Alexandro. 3. part. 18. cap. 4. Si subdiaconi contraxerint matrimonium, eos dummodo ante tales fuerint, quod timendum sit, ne pro vna pluribus abutantur, dissimulare poteris cum suis uxoribus remanere, quia tolerandum est malum, ut peiora vitentur: If Subdeacons marrie, if they were such before, that it is to be feared, least in stead of one, they would abuse many, you may winke at them, and suffer them to enioy their marriage: for an inconuenience must be suffered to prevent a mischief.

Ibid. cap. 4. Nullus vestrum enim à contracto matrimonio prædicti ordinis obtentu, prohibere presumat, nec sibi propter hoc molestiam, aut gravamen inferat: Let none of you hinder him (meaning a certaine Subdeacon) from his marriage contracted, vnder colour and pretence of his orders, nor for that respect molest or grieue him any way. Farre off were those times, though euill enough, from such crueltie and outrage, as of late many haue seene and felt, when the marriage of Ministers was made felonie, by that bloodie act of the sixe articles, Fax. pag. 1135.

Argum. 5. In the fifth place, that the imposition of single life vpon the Clergie is no Apostolike institution it may appeare, both because the authors and first deuisers of this hard constitution may be assigned, as also, for that the obseruation thereof is diuers, and not vniformely kept.

For the first, Syriscus is held to haue been the first imposer of this yoke, who was Bishop of Rome almost foure hundred yeere after Christ : which although it bee stoutly by Bellarmino denied, cap. 19. lib. 1. de Cleric. yet is it by Clementius, a popish writer of great credit amongst them, affirmed, and by Innocentius the 3. who, although the other bee by Bellarmino reiected and confuted, ought to beare more sway with him : he thus writeth, distin. 82. c. 2. Si ad aliquos forma illa ecclesiastica vita, &c. If that forme of Ecclesiasticall conuersation and discipline, which was sent from Bishop Syriscus to the prouinces, doe appeare not to haue come to the knowledge of some, to those that are ignorant, pardon shall not be denied. By this it is euident, that this iniunction of single life first proceeded from Syriscus, both because he is said to haue prescribed a certaine forme of life; and for that, many were ignorant thereof : whereby it is manifest, that it is not Apostolicall, for then no Church could haue pretended ignorance.

This Syriscus onely inhibited Bishops, Priests, and Deacons to marrie; for Subdeacons it was yet free, till Pelagius the 2. his time, who was Bishop of Rome about the yeere 580. as Gregorius the first thus testifieth, distin. 32. c. 1. We haue heard by the relation of many, that your Subdeacons doe companie with their wiues : which thing that no man should afterward presume to doe, it was prohibited, by the authoritie of our predecessor ; which was this Pelagius. And the same decree against the mariage of Subdeacons is againe reuiued by Gregorius, distin. 31. cap. 1.

Again, it should seeme that the mariage of Presbyters was not generally inhibited till the first Toletan Councell, which was celebrat about anno 407. in the which Synode, Can. 1. it is thus decreed: Si quis presbyter ante interdictum : That if any Presbyter, yea before the interdiction, had begotten children, he should not bee preferred, &c. So that it seemeth, that mariage began then first to be interdict, or forbidden.

Secondly, the diuersitie hath been very great, and much alteration in the vrging of this inhibition.

1 The Greeke Church alloweth their Clergie to enioy their wiues before married, but some of them are not permitted to marrie againe : the Latin Church inhibiteth both the one and the other : So witnesseth Innocent. decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 3. c. 6.

2 The Greekes also differ much in their opinion and practise : first, Deacons were suffered to marrie after their ordination, if they made such protestation, when they receiued orders : concl. Ancyran. can. 10. ann. 308.

3 Bishops were first inhibited in the Greeke Church the companie of their wiues before married ; in the Trullane Synode, Can. 12. whereas it was lawfull before : which Synode was celebrat about the yeere 673.

4 In the Latin Church Subdeacons were not a long time prohibited to marrie, as it may appeare concl. Carthag. 5. c. 3. which was about the yeere 438.

5 At the first they were not enforced to make profession of single life at the receiuing of their orders, but it was left free, as it is extant, concl. Toletan. 2. c. 1. about the yeere 530. but afterward it was decreed, that Priests and Deacons should make such promise and profession, Toletan. 42. c. 1. anno 680.

6 Mariage was free in the Latine Church for all the inferiour orders and degrees of the Clergie, vnder Subdeacons, more then a thousand yeeres, as it is extant in the decree of Leo the 9. anno 1049. distin. 32. c. 14. But about an hundred yeere after, Alexander the 3. decreed, that if any of the lower degrees did take a wife, he should be deprived of his benefice, decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 3. cap. 3.

Thus, as we see, there hath been great difference in the Church, concerning the degrees of the Clergie, which of them should bee restrained mariage : first, Bishops were inhibited, after that Priests and Deacons, then next Subdeacons, and last of all the inferiour orders also, as of Readers, Exorcists, and the rest : Whereby it appeareth, that this inhibition of mariage was not Apostolicall, for then it should haue been knowne at the first, to whom the inhibition did appertain. And as the diuersitie hath been great concerning the degrees, so the censures also of the Church touching the mariage of Ministers haue been as diuers.

7 First, they that were married, and had children after their ordination, were but forbidden to ascend to a higher degree, as concl. Taurinat. c. 7. anno 400. or thereabout.

8 Afterward, anno 438. in the 5. Councell of Carthage, Can. 3. Clergie men, not abstaining from their wiues, were decreed to be remoued from their office : but yet they were not suspended from the Communion, Aurelianens. 5. cap. 4.

9 Then the censure was aggrauated, and Ministers, that were married, were deprived of the Communion : which heauie decree is reuerfed : Council. Turonens. 1. c. 2. anno 480. or thereabout, they decree, that they should not bee kept from the Communion, but onely deprived of their office.

10 As yet Ministers, though they were enioyned abstinence, yet were not forbidden cohabitation with their wiues : as concl. Aurelianens. 2. can. 3. it was lawfull for a Minister to haue his wife with with him in the house, as well as any other kinswoman: but afterward they were commaunded to be separated from their wiues, anno 680. in the 4. Toletan. Can. 43.

11 Yet was it put to the Ministers choise, whether they would leaue their wiues, or bee suspended from their office: as Gregor. 1. maketh mention of one Speciosus a Subdeacon, that was commaunded to leaue his calling, rather then to forsake his wife, and so maintained himselfe being a Notary, diffinit. 32. c. 2. and this was an. 600. or thereabout: But afterward Gregor. 7. an. 1070. did excommunicate Ministers by excommunicatio to leaue their wiues, not leauing them to their choise at al.

12 All this while they only proceeded against the mariage of Ministers by Ecclesiasticall censures, as yet no ciuill or corporall punishments were deuised, till Vrbani 2. anno 1086. who decreed, that it might bee lawfull for the Prince, mancipare seruituti, &c. to make Ministers wiues bondwomen, diffinit. 32. c. 10.

13 But hitherto the life of married Ministers was not touched, till of late it was made felonie, by the bloodie act of the sixe articles, Fax pag. 1135. such was the crueltie of Papiests. Thus wee see how variable and diuers the constitutions of former times haue been concerning the mariage of Ministers: whereby it is euident, that the Apostles haue not imposed this yoke of single life; for their constitutions are generall, and ought vniiformely to bee kept of all Churches.

Now because Bellarmine taketh vpon him to iustifie this last heauie censure of the mariage of Ministers, which doth suspend them not from their liuings only, but from their life, I cannot passe ouer with silence so great impietie, that it may appeare how this blood-sucking generation of vipers intendeth nothing but crueltie.

His reasons, for the iustifying of this cruell law, are two: the first, that married Ministers are worthie to die, because they doe breake their vow: the second is taken out of the saying of Hierome, that a Bishop begetting children, quasi adulter damnabitur, shall be condemned as an adulterer, and not reputed as an husband: but adulterie (saith he) in Hieromes time was death: Ergo, married Bishops and Ministers are worthie of death, cap. 21. resp. ad vltim. argument. Philippi.

Ad To the first reason our answer is this: first, if not the mariage of Ministers, but the breacking of the vow be worthie of death, then haue you dealt most cruelly with many Ministers of the Gospell, which were neuer votaries, and yet haue been condemned, and put to death for their mariage. Secondly, mariage after a vow made is permitted both by the Ciuill and Canon law, and therefore the sentence of death is vniust, and against law in this case. First, the Ciuill law permiteth, that if a widow haue taken a solemne oth that she will not marrie againe, may notwithstanding that oth, goe vnto second mariage: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 35. Valentin. Theodos. In optione huiusmodi nulla cogatur: Let no woman be compelled, but left to her choise. If this be lawfull after an oth, there is the same reason of a vow: for a vow doth not more binde before God, then an oth.

2 Your owne Canons also doe warrant mariage after a vow, as decr. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 6. c. 5. Alexander the 3. thus resolueth concerning a woman, that had made a vow not to marrie, Nos attendimus, &c. We considering, that it is more safe for the woman after a vow simple made to contract mariage, then incur the guile of fornication, &c. It will here bee answered, that after a simple vow mariage may be tolerated, but not after a solemne: they call that a simple vow, when the partie neither changeth habit, nor place, professing to liue single.

Contra First, Celestinus the 3. of this matter thus decreeth: Simplex votum non minus, &c. A simple vow doth no lesse binde before God, then a solemne, decr. Greg. lib. 4. tit. 6. cap. 6. Wherefore if mariage be lawfull after the one, then after the other likewise: for they both binde alike before God. Thus it appeareth, that to marrie after a vow made, is agreeable to your owne Canons; and authorized also by the Ciuill law: and therefore cannot be iudged worthie of death.

To the second reason collected out of S. Hierome, our answer is: first, he doth not directly affirme, that a married Bishop is an adulterer: sed quasi adulter, but as an adulterer. Secondly, there is no great heede to be taken what Hierome saith, for he many times in his heate is so caried away with the commendation of virginie, that he misliketh not onely the mariage of Ministers, but condemneth generally both first and second mariage; as of the married estate he thus speaketh: Femina maritata iumentibus vteris praeferunt feditatem: epistol. ad Latam. Married women with their great bellies bewray their filthines. And writing to Paula: Au vereris ne ex te parens tuus non habeat pusillam, &c. Art thou afraid least thou shouldest not bring to thy father a little dwarfe, to creepe vpon his breast, & cernicem eius stercore linat, and to beray his shoulder? Thus vnreuerently hee speaketh of children which are the fruite of mariage: and yet I doe not translate his words as they are set downe. And againe, ad Gaudentium: Sernos carnis, &c. Paul calleth them that are married, seruants of the flesh. Thus he wresteth Scripture to serue his turne; thus hee counteth mariage, filthines, vncleannes, fleshlines. And hee is no more equall toward second mariage, as thus he noteth vpon these words of the Apostle, 1. Timoth. 5. I will younger widowes to marrie, for certaine are turned backe after Satban: Maritum potius accipias, quam diabolum: Let younger widowes rather choose an husband, then the diuell: a goodly matter, and much to bee desired, that is receiued in comparison of the diuell, ad Saluam. If Hierome had this conceit of second marriage, making it in the next degree to the diuell, I doe not marue, that he calleth the marriage of Ministers adulterie. But Hierome himselfe hath giuen vs a rule, where we should doe in this case: Non consueui eorum. insultare erroribus, quorum miror ingenia: I doe not vse to reioyce in their errors, whose wits I commend, Pammach. & Ocean. That libertie then, which Hierome had in iudging of others, is not denied to vs in discerning of him.

Thirdly, Hierome saith, thus of himselfe in another case, In itatis estis errantem, imitamini & corruptum: As ye followed me when I erred, so imitate me now being corrected. So I would wish Hierome, as he is readie to take hold of this vnequall sentence of Hierome pronounced of the marriage of Ministers: so to giue him the hearing, where he speaketh in fauour, as he thus writeth: Qui dixit, unus uxoris virum, ipse mandauit, &c. He that said, a Bishop must be the husband of one wife, he also said, he must be without reproofe, sober, wise, apt to teach, &c. Ad hac omnia, &c. We wince at all this, onely we can see their wiues: they passe by that, which they ought not, & obijciunt, quod concessum est, and they object that which is granted, Hieron. Ocean. Here he directly affirmeth that it is granted vnto Ministers to haue wiues.

Fourthly, he vrgeth the custome of Hierome: daies, when adulterie was punished with death, which cannot be denied: but he is not able to proue that the marriage of Ministers was then punished by death: Ergo, it was not reputed for adulterie. And I would aske him this question, whether he approue that law or not that iudgeth adulterers worthie of death: if he doe, why is it not practised in Poperie? if he doe not, how can it serue his turne against the marriage of Ministers? Againe, and doth this popish champion speake as he thinketh? would he haue married Ministers put to death? what then are adulterous and fornicating Priests worthie of? doth he thinke marriage a greater stain to orders, then fornication? But your fornicators, incestuous, or adulterous Priests, were not adiudged to death: the heauiest censure against them, was to bee depofed from their office, distin. 81. c. 12. and afterward this censure was thought to be somewhat too hard, and therefore was mitigated, and chaunged into certaine yeeres penance, distin. 82. c. 5. If then by your owne law adulterous and fornicatorious Priests are not to die; how much lesse married Ministers? for they doe transgresse Gods law, the other breake but a constitution of your Church. Thus we see, how by the practise of the popish Church, in punishing more cruelly the honest marriage, then the vncleane conuersation of Ministers, they do preferre the one before the other: and thus, as S. Hierome saith, Lupanaria thalamis preferuntur, Brothel-houses shall be preferred before the marriage bed. And thus much by the way for the answer to Bellarmines vniuist defence of their cruell proceedings against the marriage of Ministers euen vnto death.

Fifthly, and lastly, I will shew the consent both of the Ciuill and Canon law, for the lawfulness of Ministers marriage.

First, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 27. leg. 1. Constantin. That they, quos sacerdotij ornamenta condecorant, which are honoured by the Priesthood, should not marrie any abiect or vile persons: they are not forbidden simply to marrie, but prescribed of what condition. But if it be answered, that this word, sacerdotum, Priesthood, is here taken for an office or place of government, as some thinke; though that vse of the word cannot be proued in the Ciuill course, there are other lawes beside to strengthen this: as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 2. Constantinus: Clerici, coniugia, & liberi immunes, &c. Clergie men, their wiues, and children, are freed from base seruices. And leg. 20. Clericorum bona post mortem & uxorem ad ecclesiam deferuntur: Clergie mens goods, after their children, and wife, must be giuen to the Church, Theodos. Ergo, by the imperiall law it was lawfull for Ministers to be married. It will be here answered, that they are called their wiues, whom they had married before their ordination, but had now left their companie. Contra. First, the law saith, coniugia, not coniuuges, the marriages or the wedlocke of Ministers, not their wiues, must bee free; shewing a present vse of marriage. Secondly, if they had now left their wiues, being married to the Church, then the Church should haue been preferred before their wiues, to inherit their goods: but now their wiues were preferred before the Church, and so they are in the neereft degree to them that might be: and therefore they are their wiues still, as before. Thirdly, the law being generall of all Ministers wiues, not excluding them that are married after, no more then the first, it must bee so vnderstood, vnlesse by the law it selfe, they could shew a restraint: for the law must be taken according to the letter.

I come now to their owne Canons: first, Innocentius 3. distin. 26. c. 3. thus testifieth, Uxorum decore non est crimen, &c. It is no fault to marrie a wife: if it bee a sinne, the author of marriage should be in fault. And againe, Nuptiarum copula Dei mandato perficitur: The marriage bond is perfected by Gods commandement. If then it be no sinne to marrie a wife, it is not sinfull in a Minister to take a wife. Decret. 2. 2. can. 12. qu. 1. c. 21. Potestatem habet Episcopus, &c. A Bishop when he dieth hath power to leaue his goods to whom he will, &c. fortassis enim uxorem habet, &c. it may bee he hath wife and children: the Canon saith not, habuit, he had a wife, but he hath. Sext. decret. lib. 2. tit. 2. Bonif. 8.

Quest. 5. Clericus coniugatus, &c. A Clergie man, that is married, doth enioy the priuiledge of the Clergie, &c. Their marriage then is lawfull, for otherwise, they could not enioy their Clergie.

We haue also direct places of the Canons, that do affirme the mariage of the Clergie, Legislation to be legitimate, or lawfull: as council. Lateranens. sub Alexand. 3. c. 2. In sacerdotum genus, &c. They which are borne in the Priesthood, may be admitted to be Priests: but none which were not borne in lawfull mariage, could be preferred to be Bishops or Priests part. 3. cap. 3. Ergo, mariage in the Priesthood is lawfull. Likewise Lateran. sub Innocent. 3. cap. 14. Clerici, &c. Clergie men falling into fornication, ought to be more grieuouly punished, Quoniam legitimum matrimonium possunt uti, licet they may vse lawfull matrimonie, decret. Gregor. lib. 5. c. 38. c. 5. Clement. 3. Gratia legitimum matrimonium uti licet: The Greekes may safely vse lawfull Matrimonie. In all these places, the marriage of the Clergie is called lawfull.

Now I will shew in particular, that it hath been lawfull for the seuerall degrees of the Clergie, to marie: for Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Subdeacons, Readers, Exorcists, Singers and the rest: first, for the foure inferior orders, of Doorekeepers, Lectores, Exorcists, Acolythi, that they may take a wife, the decree of Leo the 9. is extant, distin. 32. c. 14. Secondly, Subdeacons are permitted to marrie, distin. 84. 4. out of the Councell of Carthage c. 3. 3. Thirdly, it was lawfull for Deacons also to marrie, distin. 27. c. 7. Gregorius maketh mention of one Iohannes a Deacon, Quoniam habuit filium, that had a little daughter, whom the Citizens of Naples elected to be their Bishop: the yong infant was begotten in his Deaconship: for it is not like they would choose one to be their Bishop, that had bin Deacon but a while. Fourthly, Priests also were married, distin. 28. c. 17. Nicholaus thus writeth to the Balgari, Dirigere non debemus, &c. I would not haue you to depriue him of his place, speaking of an Elder or a Priest that was married. Fifthly, for the lawfulness also of Bishops marriage, we haue a direct Canon, distin. 28. c. 13. Where Pelagius consenteth to the election of a married Bishop elected to Syracusa: though hee deferred it a whole yeere, yet at the length gaue consent. Thus haue we the testimonie of their owne Canons for the approbation of Ministers marriage.

Let vs adde the seale of Martyrs, M. Lambert Martyr out of S. Paul thus saying, They that cannot abstaine in them marrie, &c. 1. Cor. 7. 9. inferreth thus, this proueth well, that all Priests wanting continencie of heart, had need to marrie to auoyde burning lust, Fax. pag. 1104.

M. Thad. Martyr: A priest ought to haue a wife for two causes, least he should seeme vnapt for so chargeable an office, which hath no household to rule: and againe, because chastitie is an exceeding feldome gift, &c. Fax. pag. 1150.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER ANY OUGHT to be admitted to the Ministerie after second marriage.

The Papists.

They deny not, but that Bishops and Ministers, hauing been once married, are rightly ordeyned, so that afterward they doe not companie with their wiues: but they which haue been either themselves twice married, or haue married a widowe, which had a husband before, are wholly vncapeable of holy orders, Bellarm. cap. 23. Remyss. Timoth. 3. scilicet 4. And this they call Bigamy.

Argum. 1. They reason thus out of S. Pauls words. 1. Tim. 4. 2. A Bishop must be the husband of one wife: that is, say they, that no kinde of way was Bigamy, or had two wiues either at once, or one after another. And they proue their interpretation thus. First, as S. Paul describeth a widow of the Church, 1. Tim. 5. 9. that hath been the wife of one husband, so here he saith of a Bishop, that he should be the husband of one wife: but that is meant, successiuely, of one husband after another: for it was neuer scene that one woman should haue more husbands then one at once, nor neuer suffered either amongst the Iewes or Gentiles: therefore it must be so taken here, a husband of one wife, that is, who hath been but once married, as it is taken there, a wife of one husband, that neuer had more, not onely simul, at once, but not successiuely, not successiuely one after another, Bellarmin. cap. 23.

Ans. First, there were many women both among the Iewes and Gentiles, that had forsaken their first husbands, and were vnlawfully coupled to others, and so had moe husbands at once, and likewise many men that had done the like to their wiues, but afterward repented, and were conuerted to the Christian faith, but yet were not admitted to any publike office in the Church, because of their former infamous life. Of such the Apostle speaketh in both these places, and not of those that married one wife, or one husband after another. It is therefore great boldnes, and a greater vntruth to say, that there were none such heard of in those dayes: for although it were neither lawfull then nor now, yet both many such were heard of in those dayes, and it were no hard matter to finde out some now among the papists, that haue had more then one wife at once.

Secondly, the Iesuite might haue remembred himselfe, how else where, helping to excuse the Councell of Neocesarea, which decreed thus, Can. 7. Presbyterum coniugio secundarum nuptiarum interesse non debere. That a Priest should not be present at a second marriage feast; hath deused this shift, Councilum laquei de eo, qui duas simul uxores habet. That the Councell calleth that second marriage, when as a man hath two wiues together, Bellarm. de concilijs lib. 2. cap. 8. Why then should he thinke it strange, that we so vnderstand S. Paul, as giuing a caueat against such, as had two wiues together?

Thirdly, S. Hierome thus expoundeth the Apostle, writing in this manner, Hec, quod dicit omnis uxor uerum, &c. This, which the Apostle saith, the husband of one wife, may be otherwise expounded: the first Church of Christ did consist of the remnant of Israel: the Apostle did know that it was tolerated in the law to haue children by diuers wiues, yea, the Priests themselves vsed that libertie; wherefore he commandeth, that the Ministers of Christs Church should not challenge the same licence, that they should haue two or three marriages together, but at one time euerie man his single wife; Hierom. Oceanus, 3.

Fourthly, he is not to be counted Bigamus or Digamus, that is coupled and ioyned to one wife after another lawfully, but he that vnlawfully at once enioyeth more then one. Fals. ann. 1. Tit. 5. sec. 6. & cap. 3. sec. 4.

To this agreeth that decree of Nicelyus the first: Vi Laicus Vxorem suam & concubinam habens non communicet Ecclesie. That a lay man, keeping a wife and a concubine together, should not communicate with the Church. And againe, Decret. septim. de reprobis. An non disticta vltima sententia est, qui in duabus uxibus adulterium & flagitium Lamech imitatus est? Are you not seuerely to be censured, which haue played the adulterer with two wiues? Thus he writeth to King Lutherus, who had two Wiues together, Tiberga, and Gualdreda: And such as these, are truly called Bigami. And thus is this worde taken both in the Ciuill and Canon law: as Cod. 5. leg. 2. Dicitur. In duas habens uxores est infamis: He that hath two wiues (that is, at once) is infamous. And to this agree the Canons, decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 2. c. 4. Innocent. 3. Qui duas simul uxores habet, &c. Hee is counted infamous, that hath two wiues at once. And in the same place, Licet in veritate non sit Digamus, &c. A Clergie man twice married, though in trueth he be not Bigamus; yet incurreth the penaltie of Bigamie. Here in direct termes second marriage is denied to bee Bigamie. So also in the Decretes, can. 31. qu. 2. cap. 10. Primus Lamech &c. First the homicide Lamech brought in two wiues; Fratricidium & Digamium: But the same punishment of the Deluge, did meete both with his Fratricide and Digamie: Here Lamech is called Digamus, hauing two wiues at once. Againe Innocent 3. decreeth, that he is not to be counted Digamus, that hath many concubines, one after another, decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 2. c. 6. How much lesse is he Digamus, that hath had many wiues, one after another? vnlesse they will preferre whoredome before marriage.

Argum. 2. Againe say they, the high Priest in the lawe was not permitted to marrie a widow, Leuit. 21. 13. Which lawe being obserued in the high Priest, ought much more to be kept up,

Rhemist.

Ans. That law concerning the high Priest, did onely appertaine to himselfe, who was a figure of Christ, neither can it be extended to the Ministers of the Gospell, no more then any other part of his office, that were peculiar to that state and calling. Secondly, in the same place the Priest enioyned to marrie a Virgine: if then the priesthoode of the lawe is for them against the marrying of a widowe, it maketh also with vs for the marrying of a Virgine.

The Protestants.

That it is not by the word of God forbidden, that any man should marrie the second, yea the third time, after the deale of his wife, neither that he is to be counted vnchast or wantonnes in so doing (much lesse he that in his first marriage taketh a widowe,) neither that he haue been twice married ought to be a barre or a stop from entring into the state and calling of the Ministerie, if otherwise the man be qualified and furnished with sufficient graces for the calling; thus it is proved.

Argum. 1. They that cut off such, as haue been twice married, from hauing any calling in the Church, doe fauour of the heresie of Montanus, into the which also Tertullian fell, who condemned second marriage: for if once marriage be no impediment nor preiudice to him that is to be ordained, but second marriage be; then doe they disallow second marriage, (because a man is thereby disabled to be a Minister) if not simply, yet they make it lesse lawfull, may more offensive, and subiect to obloquie and reproch. But the Scripture maketh no difference betweene first and second marriage: S. Paul saith, For auoyding of fornication, let euerie man haue his owne wife: he think not, his first wife; but generally: so that it is lawfull for auoyding of fornication to marrie the second or the third wife, as well as the first.

Argum. 2. If it be as lawfull to marrie the second wife, as the first, if it be for auoyding of fornication; then second marriage doth no more hinder the receiuing of orders then the first: but the the antecedent is true: for what should make the second marriage lesse lawfull? not any dutie that the wife or the husband oweth to the partie deceased: for they are free in that respect, and set at libertie, Rom. 7. 3. Neither is the end of marriage made frustrate more now then before: for he that marrieth the second time, may haue as good cause to doe it, for auoyding biffornication, as he had at the first.

3. Second marriage, make the worst of it you can, is not so great a blot as fornication, or adultery, or to haue a Concubine: but these were no lets of Priesthood in poperie: Nay, we read that Augustine in the purer age of the Church, that confesseth he had two Concubines, yet afterward was made presbyter, and at the last a Bishop for all that. Wherefore, there is no reason that exception should be taken against a twice married man, seeing a fornicator is free. And by this reason, if after a second concubine a man may be admitted to orders, but not after a second wife: then as S. Hierome saith, Coniugales ergo debiles, non cuitus &c. Not vnlawfull companie, but the marriage bond should be by the Apostle condemned: Imputatur infidelis ac uxoris mortua & libello mortuicia coronatur: Then a wife should be counted vnhappie, and whorish lust crowned. Hieron. Opera. Tom. 3. Wherefore, if Pelagius the Pope admitted one to be made a Deacon, who had a concubine after his first wife, distinct. 33. c. 17. with how much greater reason, may he be admitted, that had one lawfull wife after another?

Confess. lib. 4. cap. 15.

Lastly, of this opinion Augustine seemeth to be: That it is as lawfull to marrie the second time and the third, as the first. Ant. Apostolus, mulier alligata est viro, quamdiu vir eius uiuit; non dixit primus, secundus, tertius, aut quartus: The woman is bound (saith the Apostle) so long as her husband liueth; he saith not, the first husband, second, third, or fourth. So the woman is as free after the first or second husbands death, as when she was a Virgine. Yet if she can content her selfe with her widowes estate, and haue the gift of continencie, she shall doe better not to marrie: but if she haue not, it is better to marrie (S. Paul saith not, the first, second, or third time, but so often as she hath neede) rather then to burne.

De Bon. vi. diu. c. 12.

Concerning twise married Ministers, though some in times past thought it inconuenient, yet were they not so fierce against them, as our aduerfaries now are, to thinke such vnworthie their calling, and to deprive them both of office and maintenance. Council. Arelaten. c. 20. Clerici qui duplicata uiderint Matrimonia non ultra subdiaconatum Ecclesiasticum capiunt dignitates, Clerkes, that chance to be married twise, let them not be capable of any Ecclesiasticall dignitie more then the subdiaconship.

Council. Agathens. can. 1. Placuit, ut dignus, &c. Presbyteri uel diaconi uicini obsequio, officium non exequuntur: it seemeth good to vs, that they which are twise married in the Ministerie, should receyue the name of Priest, or Deacon, though they execute not the office: yet this is not so hard, as to be deprived both of name, office, and dignitie.

But we haue yet clearer testimonies: Innocentius 1. Epistol. 25. c. 2. reasoning against those, which counted it not bigamie, if a man had one wife before Baptisme, and another after, Quia in Baptismo inter cetera crimina dimissum est, Because it is forgiven them amongst other crimes in Baptisme, say they: he thus writeth, Vxorera ducere crimen est, an non est crimen? si crimen, maior est in culpa qui constituit, ut crimen in paradiso constitueretur: quod Deus ergo continere non uult appellare, &c. Is it a sinne to marrie a wife, or is it none? if it be a sinne, the authour is to be blamed, who ordained sinne in Paradise: therefore that which God hath ioyned together, it is not lawfull to call sinne. Hence we gather thus: second marriage is it a sin or no? if it be a sin, then the blame relecth vpon God, which were blasphemie to thinke; if it be no sin, why should it be an hindrance to the calling of a Minister? How can he be polluted, and made vnapt for that calling, by an act not sinfull?

Leo Epistol. 90. hath this saying: Ancillam a uero abicere, & uxorera certa uxoris uicinis accipere, non duplicatio est coniugij, sed profectus honestatis: For a man to barre a bondwoman or concubine from his bed, and to take a freewoman to his wife, is no doubling of marriage, but a profectus in honestie. Say then, is it an honest part after a man hath knowne a concubine, to gette a wife? And is it not like honest part, after a man hath had one wife, to marrie, if neede require, an other? If it be then profectus honestatis, a profiting in honestie, to marrie a second wife for necessity, as it is to take a wife after a concubine: for otherwise we make marriage worse then fornication: Why should not a man profiting in honestie, that is twise married, be admitted to the ministerie?

Now for the indignance of the ciuill law concerning second marriage, thus we find, Cal. lib. 8. tit. 4. leg. 2. Iustitia doth reuerse the law Iulia, which did not permit second marriage, vntill the widow did take an oth, that she did it for procuration sake: wherefore he giueth libertie for second marriage without any such oth, allodging this reason, that law; Maiores uirgines nostras impubescunt, &c. For we desire rather our common wealth to be increased, and by many men lawfully borne to be frequented, &c. The reason of this law serueth as well for the approbation of the second marriage of Ministers.

And as for your Canons, they allow the sentence of S. Hierome, that he is not counted Bigamus, that had one wife before Baptisme, and another after, distin. 26. c. 1. and so it was no let unto orders. And Hierome himselfe maketh mention of one Carterius a Spanish Bishop, that had had two wives, one before baptisme, another after: yea, saith he, Omnis mundus his ordinationibus plenus, &c. All the world is full of such Ordinations, I speake not onely of Priests, but of Bishops, whom if a man would number, he shall finde such a companie, as may well compare with the Synode of Arimine for multitude: Hieron. Ocean. Tom. 3. Thus we see, it was an usuall thing in S. Hierome time, for men twice married, once before baptisme, and once after, to be received to orders: yet afterward Innocent. 3. decreed the contrary, that such mariage should be counted Bigamic, distin. 26. c. 3. But we preferre Hieromes time as more ancient, and neerer the practise of the Primitive Church.

Concerning the iudgement of holy Martyrs: it is cleare by their practise, for diuers of them being in orders, were twice married, as Bishop Cranmer holy Martyr, see his storie, For. pag. 1860. & diuine.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER MINISTERS ought to refraine the companie of their wiues, being entred into orders.

The Papists.

79. Error.

They confesse, that Peter and other of the Apostles were married; but after their calling they had no company with their wiues, Rhemist. Math. 8. sect. 3. And so ought the Ministers of the Gospell (saith Bellarmine) be kept from the vse of their wiues, to whom they were married before their calling.

Argum. 1. The Priests of the law were bound to withdrawe themselves during the time of their seruice, while they attended vpon the sacrifice, and to forbear the companie of their wiues: much more the Priests of the law, that must alwayes offer sacrifices, must be alwayes free from matrimonie, Rhemist. Luk. 1. sect. 10.

Ans. 1. The Leuiticall priesthood did represent and shadowe forth the priesthood of Christ, and their legall cleannings, washings, abstinence, purifying, did shewe forth the holines and perfection of the priesthood of Christ: wherefore the law of their abstinence doth no more binde vs, then other of their legall purifications: they haue their end in the priestthoode of Christ. Thus also saith S. Hierome, Noster Pontifex secundum ordinem, &c. But our Bishop according to the order of Melchisedech, is without father or mother, without kinned, without marriage, lib. 1. contra Iulianum.

2. We acknowledge no sacrificing priesthood in the newe testament, nor any sacrifice in the Church for sinne, but onely that sacrifice of attonement vpon the Crosse: but our sacrifices are spirituall, of praise and thanksgiuing; therefore the argument followeth not from the priests of the lawe, to those that are no priests, For. pag. 1166. 3. Pureness of life, we grant, is as much required now in Ministers of the Gospell, as it was then in the priests of the lawe: therefore they ought as well to haue libertie to marrie, seeing Matrimonie is the best remedie against fornication and vncleannes of life. 4. The Priests of the law did onely abstaine during the time of their seruice, not while they liued: and so was it decreed in the sixth generall Synode, cap. 13. as it is leaged, distin. 31. c. 13. Non in perpetuum, sed tempore oblationis, &c. That Ministers should abstaine from the companie of their Wiues, not for euer, but during the time of the offering onely.

Argum. 2. Another argument they picke out of S. Pauls words, 1. Cor. 7. 5. Defraud you not one another, vnlesse it be by consent for a time, that you may give your selues to prayer. For by man cannot pray, vnlesse he abstaine from his wife; the Priest, that must alwayes pray, must alwayes abstaine, Rhemist.

Ans. 1. The lay man is bound to offer prayers alwayes as well as the Priest, and so by this reason, neither ought any lay man to performe his duty to his wife, if it were an hindrance to prayer. 2. S. Paul speaketh not here of all prayer, but of a speciall kind, which, to be made more seruent, requireth fasting and abstinence, which kind is not alwayes necessarie, but vpon some certaine occasion. 3. It is so farre off that a lay man cannot pray, vnlesse he abstaine from his wife, that many times he prayeth more quietly then he that is vnmarried, or abstaineth, if he haue not dominion ouer his lust, Fulcr. annot. 1. Cor. 7. 5.

The Protestants.

Neither the Apostles forsooke the companie of their wiues, after they were called and chosen of Christ, neither ought the ministers of the Gospell to renounce, abandon, and forsake the societie and fellowship of their wiues: but rather to liue with them in all temperance and sobriety, for the good example of others.

Argument. It is proved out of the 1. Cor. 9. 5. that Peter and the other Apostles did leade about their wives in their companie, and S. Paul there saith, that he also might vse the same libertie. Likewise, 1. Tim. 3. 5. S. Paul giueth rules concerning the house and familie of the Minister, his children, the behaviour of their wives, vers. 11. But where, I pray you, is it fitter for the Ministers wife and children to be, then with her husband? By these places it is apparant, that Ministers wives were not excluded from their husbands company: as a thousand yeere after and more it was decreed by Augustine, that they should not dwell in house with their husbands, nor talke with them without two or three witnesses, For, pag. 1167.

Argument. It is cleane contrarie to the scripture. First, our Sauour saith, whosoever putteth away his wife, except it be for fornication, causeth her to commit adulterie, Matth. 5. 32. By this rule, therefore a Minister ought not for any other cause to put away and dismis his wife, but for fornication: Ergo, it is not lawfull because of his calling, or vpon any other colour to send her away. Secondly, S. Paul saith, They ought not to defraud one another but for a time, and that with consent, 1. Cor. 7. 5. Therefore if the wife will not consent, her husband cannot goe from her: nay, though there be consent, yet they must be asunder but for a time: they cannot by consent altogether breake off, and dissolue their marriage, which was made before God, though they would neuer so sayne themselves, vnlesse it be for fornication, then without consent the marriage knot is broken.

Argument. Peter left not the companie of his wife after he was made an Apostle: for he had a daughter called Petronilla, of whom the popish legends write much holines, which must needes be borne after he was called Peter. And againe, it is proved by her age, for she was so young in the persecution vnder Domitian, that Flaccus the Countie desired her in marriage: but if she had been borne before Peters Apostleship, she must haue been three score yeere old at that time, or hard vpon, Falsk, Matth. 8. sect. 3.

Augustine thus writeth of this matter: Vna sola esse causa posset, quate id quod vovisti, non solum non variare, verum etiam prohiberemus implere, si forte tua coniux hoc tecum suscipere animi. seu carnis infirmitate recusaret, Epistol. 45. There may be one cause, and no more, which would make me, not onely to moue you to performe that which you haue vowed, but to dissuade and forbid you, namely, if your wife by reason of her weakenes, should refuse to beare the yoke with you. Therefore, by Augustines sentence, neither ought a Minister that is married, performe the vow of continencie which he made, without consent of his wife: for he speaketh generally of vowes made by those that are ioyned in Wedlocke: Let vs see also the decrees of generall Councils.

Trullan synod generall. 6. Can. 13. It was decreed, Deprehendentes eos, qui audiant post ordinationem diaconorum & sacerdotum cum suis prioribus legitimis uxoribus consuetudine prauare, & ipsas, qui ordinentur videri suas pietatis praetextu expellentes, excommunicandos: That they should be deposed, which presumed to depriue Deacons and Priests, after the receiuing of orders, of their lawfull wives companie, and that they, which after the taking of orders, vnder pretense of greater holines, should put away their wives, should be excommunicate.

Lateranens. sub Alexandro 3. part. 19. cap. 2. & 3. Qui in sacerdotio geniti sunt, admitti possunt ad sacerdotium, sed paternas ecclesias habere non debent, alij tamen ecclesijs praefici possunt: They which are borne in the Priestthoode, may be admitted to the Priestthoode, but their Fathers Churches or benefices they cannot haue, yet other Churches they may be set ouer. And part. 3. cap. 3. thus, Ne quis non de legitimo Matrimonio natus, Episcopus fieret. That none not borne in lawfull Matrimonie, should be a Bishop. Then we conclude thus, A Priests sonne borne in the Priestthoode may be made a Bishop, and set ouer Churches, but he that is not borne in lawfull wedlocke cannot: therefore the marriage of Priests, and the sober vse thereof, euen in the Priestthoode, is lawfull.

Lateranens. sub Innocentio 3. cap. 14. Clerici, qui secundum religionis suam morem, non abdicauerunt copulam coniugalem, si lapsi fuerint in fornicationem grauius puniantur, cum legitimo Matrimonio vti possunt: Clergie men, which after the custome of their profession, doe not abrogate the marriage knot, if they fall into fornication, let them be more seuerely punished, seeing they may vse lawfull Matrimonie. The Matrimonie of Clergie men is called lawfull, and made free vnto them in respect of the vse: what clearer testimonies can any more require?

We haue also the warrant of both lawes, that Ministers should not leaue or forsake the companie of their wives: as first, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 19. Honor. Theodos. Illas non relinqui, &c. The affection of chastitie doth exhort not to leaue or forsake those women, which before their husbands priestthood deserued lawfull marriage: neque enim Clericis incompetenter adiuncta sunt, &c. neither are they incompetently ioyned to Clergie men, which by their conuersation made them worthe the priestthoode. By this law it appeareth, that Ministers wives must not be cast off, but ioyned still to their husbands.

The Canon law also alloweth that decree of the Synode, Gangrens. distinct. 30. 3. Si qua mulier, &c. If any woman forsaking her husband, will depart, and dissolue the marriage bond, and so condemning ning mariage, let her be accursed. This Canon forbiddeth all forsaking or departing of them that are married one from another: and so consequently neither is any such departure lawfull for Orders sake. It will be answered, that this Canon forbiddeth such departure, as condemneth marriage. Contra. Mariage is condemned two waies, either absolutely, as by counting it vncleane in it selfe, as the Manichees wickedly taught; or else by way of implication, as to thinke any calling disgraced or polluted by it, as the Papists say Orders are. This Synode in generall decreeth against all condemnation of mariage, both the one and the other: as it may appeare by the 10. Canon of the same Synode: Si quis propter Deum virginitatem professus, &c. If any professing virginie for Gods cause doth arrogantly dispraise those that are married, let him be accursed. So the popish votaries doe despise the married Ministers of the Gospell, and therefore are vnder the censure of this Canon. Likewise the same Synode in the last Canon decreeth thus against the condemnors and despisers of mariage: Hos condemnamus qui se extollunt, &c. We doe condemne those, that extoll themselves against the Scriptures, and ecclesiasticall Canons, and bring in new precepts. For the popish Church in imposing single life, bringeth in new precepts contrarie to the Scripture and the Canons. Ergo.

I will set to the scale of the holy Martyrs: Doctor Taylor preacher, holy Martyr, when his key-uant Iohn Hull had brought his sonne Thomas vnto him, he put off his hat, and thus said to the people: Good people, this is mine owne sonne begotten of my bodie in lawfull Matrimonie, and God be blessed for lawfull Matrimonie, For pag. 1325.

Lawrence Saunders preacher, holy Martyr, when his childe was brought vnto him into the prison, he said thus to the standers by, which praised the goodlines of the childe: What man fearing God would not rather lose this life present, then to adiudge this boy to bee a bastard, his wife a whore, and himselfe a whoremonger? Yea if there were no other cause, for which a man of my estate should lose his life, yet who would not giue it to aduouch this childe to bee legitimate, and his mariage to be lawfull and holy? For pag. 1497.

THE SIXT QUESTION, CONCERNING THE maintenance of the Church by tithes.

Concerning the maintenance of the Church, there are diuers points, wherein wee and our aduersaries agree: The maintenance of the Ministers of the Church is either by temporall possessions, which haue been bestowed vpon the Church, by the gift of deuout and religious men; or else they haue inheritance from their friends and a patrimonie of their owne; or else they live of the tithes and oblations of the people.

1 We graunt, and agree vnto them, that the Church Ministers, beside the portion of tithes, may lawfully enioy temporall lands, which the Church of ancient time hath been endowed withall. But we yeeld vnto them vpon certaine conditions: First, there must be a moderation vied in all such gifts, which are bequeathed to the Church: for ecclesiasticall persons ought not to be too greedie and bastie in receiuing whatsoever in simplicitie and blinde deuotion any man shall giue vnto them: as if they see that others are impouerished by the gift whereby they are enriched. Thus the Priests offended in our Sauour Christs time, who allured the people to bring their offerings to the Altar, though their parents wanted in the meane time, whom they were bound to relieue by the law of God. This also was a common practise in time of poperie: So the priests might be enriched, they cared not greatly, though all the stocke of their patrones and founders were vndone: who because they were vnsatiable, and had no measure in entising simple men, to giue ouer their lands and Lordships into their hands, the statute of Mortmaine was made, not without iust cause, to be a rule vnto them, that otherwise could not rule themselves. At the first it was lawfull by the Imperiall constitutions for any man to giue to the Church, as much as he thought good, as it may appeare by the law of Constantinus, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. leg. 1. when as yet the Church was poore, and newly deliuered from persecution: but afterward, when as ambitiously Clergie men sought to enrich themselves, and without measure heaped possessions together, it seemed good that a restraint should bee made; as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. leg. 16. Iustinian made a law, that no gift made to the Church about 500. crownes should bee good, without insinuation, that is, some act done before the Magistrate. And there is a law more ancient made by the Heathen Emperours, Dioclesian, Maximian, that a Colledge, not priuiledged, that is licenced, should not be capable of any inheritance, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 34. leg. 8. Yea their owne Canons also haue made prouision against the insatiable desire of the Church, Decret. par. 2. caus. 12. qu. 3. can. 49. Gregor. Ecclesia rapuatur ardore, &c. The Church must not greedily inuade the things pertaining to another. And, Can. 74. Non ultra quinquagesimam partem, &c. That a Bishop should not giue about the 50. part of the Church goods to a Monasterie. Augustine doth highly commend Aurelius Bishop of Carthage, and worthely, for this one act: A certaine rich man of Carthage hauing no children, gaue all his substance substance to the Church, reseruing onely the vse thereof for his life time: afterward the map had children: Raddidis Episcopus nec opinanti ea, qua donauerat: The Bishop restoreth vnto him that which he gaue, not looking for it, nor making any account of it: In potestate habuit Episcopus non reddere, sed iure fieri, non iure polli? It was in the Bishops power not to restore the gift, but by the law of the court, not by the law of heauen. I pray you how many such examples can ye shew me in the time of popish superstition? This then is the first thing required, that although it be lawfull for the Church to enioy the bequests of their benefactors, yet it should be done with some limitation; as the Levites, beside their tithes, had cities appointed them: but the number was set down, they should not exceede 48. in all: and to euery citie was a quantitie and circuite of ground allotted, which should in length and bredth containe euery way three thousand cubites, Numb. 35. velt. 8.

2 It must also bee provided, that the gifts and legacies bestowed vpon the Church, bee for the maintenance of pietie and true religion, and to good vses, not to nourish idolatrie and superstition; or if they bee giuen through ignorance of the time, to such vnlawfull purposes, they ought by the Prince to bee conuerted to better and more godly vses: As now in England, the lands of Colledges, which were first giuen to maintaine that abominable Idoll of the Masse, are turned to the maintenance of learning and true religion. So was the law of Moses, that the gold and siluer, brass, yron, tinne, lead, which the Israelites should receiue of the Heathen, first should passe through the fire, and so be made cleane, and fit for holy vses: Euen thus according to this law, the lands consecrate to superstition, hauing now passed through the fire of Gods word, and triall of the truth, may safely be vsed to the glorie of God, in aduancing and setting forward true religion and vertue: As Cod. lib. 1. tit. 8. leg. 8. Valentin. Maritan. It is made a law that the houses, wherein heretikes did meete, should bee adiudged to the orthodoxall Church: tit. 12. leg. 11. Honor. That the habitations of certaine heretikes called Caelicolæ, should be annexed to the true or right beleeuing Church. Likewise, leg. 17. The Synagogues of the Iewes are confiscate to the vse of the Church. Theodos. Valentin.

Ad fratres in Eremito Seru.

Numb. 31. 23.

3 Another thing must bee required: that Church-men ought not to abuse the possessions of the Church, to maintaine pride, idleness, and riotous liuing: for in case they doe notoriously spend and waste the Church goods, the Prince (by whose authoritie they were giuen to the Church) may iustly take from them their superfluities, not leauing the Church destitute of sufficient maintenance. This is notably proued by Ioh. Huse, in the defence of Wickliffes articles: And we haue seen the practise thereof in England, in the late suppression of Abbeyes; wherein (though some of those lands might otherwise haue bin disposed of) yet the prouidence of God notably appeared in bringing desolation vpon those Cels of sin, and vnclane cages of birds. Neither hath this been an vnusuall and vnaccustomed practise in the Church, for Princes to correct the misdemeanour of Priests, by cutting them short of their temporalities: for in Augustines time the Christian Emperours dispossessed the Donatists of their Churches and possessions, and gaue them to the Catholike Bishops. And at that time the Donatists cried out, as the Papiests now doe, Quid mihi est imperator? What hath the Emperour, the King to doe with our lands? Augustinus answereth, Secundum tu ipsius possides terram: by the law of Princes the Church enioyeth her possessions: Recita- mus leges imperatorum, videmus si valuerint aliquid ab hereticis possideri: Let vs then rehearse the lawes of Emperours, and see whether they suffer heretikes to enioy the Church possessions.

Fox. pag. 457.

Tractat. in Iohann. 6.

That it is lawfull for the ciuill Magistrate to dispossesse Ecclesiasticall persons of their liuings and maintenance abusing them to wantonnes and impietie, see Council. Colanien. part. 9. cap. 21. Fratritates, que vocantur, &c. The brotherhoods, as they are called, which are made in the honour of some Saints, haue a shew indeede of godlines, but as they are now vsed, both Clerkes and lay men doe follow nothing els in such places but ryot and drunkennes, and sometimes they intend conspiracies against potentates, we thinke it better that they should be cleane taken out of the way, and their reuenues giuen to the poore.

Now, whereas there is a great complaint amongst malecontents and superstitious fauourites of the popish profession, that the Abbey lands were taken away from their Cels, confiscate to the Prince, and conuerted to lay vses: for the better answer thereof, I will briefly set downe these conclusions. First, that it hath been alwaies lawfull for the Prince, to seaze vpon such goods and lands as were abused to idolatrous and superstitious purposes, which afterward being in the Princes right, were at his deuotion and disposition to bee employed. See the law of Constantine, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 1. 4. leg. 1. That the goods of sacrificing Priests were confiscate to the Prince. And leg. 5. Honor. Theodos. Omnia loca, que sacris veterum error deputant, nostra rei inuermus sociari: All those places, which haue been in the error of former time appointed to sacred vses, we bid to be ioyned to our treasure: excepting such things as were bestowed by the liberalitie of Princes vpon priuate persons. So S. Ambrose answereth Symmachus, making the like obiection, for that the Emperours had spoyled the Idoll priests of their reuenues, Sublata sunt pradia, quia non religioni utebantur, sed, qua religionis religiosis in re defenderent: Their lands were taken away, because they did not religiously vse those things which they held vnder colour of religion. The same answer may we make our aduersaries in the like case.

Secondly, we say it had been very meete, that a greater part of the Abbey lands had been conuerted to godly vses, as it was religiously by the Prince intended, if his godly purpose had not bin by the couetousnes of some other hindered: according to the law of Anastasinus, Cod. lib. 1. c. 28. leg. 9. who decreed that the possessions of heretikes should be confiscate to the Prince, yet so, that the oratories and places of praier be still maintained.

Thirdly, if any were rather led with the expectation of their priuate gaine, then the hatred of superstition in the dissolution and spoyle of Abbeyes, we defend them not, neither hold them excused: as Augustine saith to the Donatists, and it is alleaged in the decrees, Caus. 23. qu. 7. c. 1. Quisquis occasione huius legis, &c. If any man by occasion of this law, which Kings seruing Christ haue promulgated to correct your impietie, doth greedily couet your goods, he pleaseth not vs.

Secondly, concerning the second kind of maintenance, which ariseth by the proper and peculiar inheritance, which Church Ministers haue: wee also yeeld our consent, that a Minister to whom some inheritance is befallen, is not bound to disclaime therefore the maintenance which he hath of the Church: for the Leuites, beside the allotment of the tithes, had their proper houses, which they might sell, and redeeme againe, Leuit. 25. 32. As also that place, 1. Timoth. 3. 2. will beare it, where the Apostle would haue a Bishop to be harbourous, and giuen to hospitalitie: which he shall be much better able to performe, hauing some helpe, beside the Church liuing, of his owne inheritance. So then it is not to bee doubted, but that Ecclesiasticall persons may, together with spirituall liuings, retaine their owne proper inheritance: referring them both to one and the selfe same end, that is, to countenance their Ministerie, and to be the better able to performe the externall duties thereof, in relieuing the poore, helping the needie, and such like. Yet notwithstanding there was an imperiall law, that he which liued of the Church, should renounce his owne patrimonie: of the which law S. Ambrose maketh mention, writing against Symmachus: Nobis enim priuata successionis euolumenta recentibus legibus denegantur: We also by a late law are forbidden to reape any aduantage by priuate inheritance. And the same is ratified in the decrees, Caus. 1. q. 3. c. 6. Clericos illos, &c. Such of the Clergie should bee maintained by the Church stipends, as haue no goods nor patrimonie from their parents. As then this law, that, whereas a man hath sufficient maintenance beside of the Church, his patrimonie should passe to the next heire, is not of it selfe vniust, nor vnreasonable, where the state of the Common-wealth doth require it: so where there is no such positive law, it is both lawfull and conuenient, that Ministers together with their ecclesiasticall calling, should enioy their patrimonies, for the gracing and dignifying of their Ministerie.

Thirdly, as touching the proper maintenance, and reuenuue of the Church, which is by tithes: diuers points are agreed of and accorded betweene vs. First, that tithes are due onely to the Church, and cannot be alienated to any other vse, nor be turned to the maintenance of lay-men: for there must be, where tithes are paid, a matter of giuing and receiuing, Philipp. 4. 15. Vnusquisque spirituali, and Recipere temporal: which because lay-men doe not performe, they haue nothing to do with the tithe: for not keeping the condition, they cannot claime the covenant.

Damasus, decret. 3. thus writeth of this matter: Qua fronte, qua conscientia oblationes volunt accipere qui vix valetis pro vobis, ne dum pro alijs deo preces offerre? With what face or conscience can you receiue tithes and oblations (speaking of lay-men) seeing ye are neither able to pray for your selues, nor others?

Lateranensis, sub Alexand. 3. part. 26. cap. 8. Qui decimas laico in seculo manenti concesserit, & depnendus: He that granteth tithes to a secular lay-man, should be deposed. And many such decrees they haue beside against the appropriating of tithes to lay-men, as decret. Greg. lib. 3. in 30. c. 14. Decima laici, &c. Tithes can in no case be granted to lay-men for their inheritance. Caus. 16. qu. 2. c. 68. Vfus decimarum, &c. The vse of tithes must in no wise redound to secular men. It may therefore iustly be maruelled at, how contrary to their owne Canons, they made so many impropriations: for it is certaine, that impropriations (which may more sely so bee called, then appropriations) haue been founded of ancient time in poperie, and by the Popes themselues maintained: for in King Henrie the 3. his raigne, suite was made vp to Rome to Pope Alexander the 4. by the Bishops of this land, that benefices appropriate to religious houses might bee restored: but they could not be heard, ex Flor. Histor.

First, it may bee said, that by the Canons it was not lawfull for the Ciuill Magistrate to make a benefice appropriate, but the Bishop might.

Contra. Caus. 16. qu. 7. c. 1. Periculum animae, &c. They of the lay sort incur the danger of their soule, that receiue tithes either of Bishops or Kings. Secondly, though it be not permitted to euery Bishop, yet the Pope hath authoritie to doe it.

Contra,

Contra. Caus. 16. qn. 7. c. 3. Gregor. 7. Si quis amodo Episcopus, &c. If any Bishop hereafter do grant the tithes to lay-men, let him bee counted amongst the greatest heretikes. This Pope maketh no exception, but includeth all Bishops, and so the Pope to, if he will be a Bishop.

Thirdly, it will be answered, that they made no graunt of tithes to lay-men, but onely to religious houses and Cathedrall Churches, and such like.

Contra. First, the multitude of Canons made against the holding of tithes by the lay sort, doth evidently shew, that it was a continuall practise in poperie, to alienate the tithes of the Church to lay-men. Secondly, it is also against their owne Canons, that benefices should be annexed or appropriate to houses or Churches of religion. Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 5. c. 30. Innocent. 3. decret. 1. de tithes, and reserue onely a pension. Again, ibid. c. 33. mention is made of a generall Council, that would not suffer Chappels or Churches to be annexed to Prebends. Likewise, Clement. lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 1. P. prelati beneficia non applicant mensuris. That prelates should not employ benefices for the maintenance of their table. Thus if they had obserued their owne Canons, this pernicious deuise of appropriating benefices should not haue found entertainment.

1. The people are bound in conscience, to giue of their goods vnto their lawfull pastors, according to the determination of the Church, and the positue lawes of Princes made in that behalf, the which they are bound to obey: and the tenth being the hire of the labourer and the wages of the Lords workman, Matth. 10. 10. it shall be as great a sinne to defraude the Minister of his portion, as to keepe backe the meate or wages from the hiring and labourer, Iam. 5. 4.

Cabellus. cap. 18. Qui decimas dare neglexerint, excommunicantur. They that neglect to pay their tithes, let them bee excommunicate. It is no small sinne therefore which delerueeth excommunication.

3. We utterly denie also, and herein consent with our aduersaries, that tithes are not pure almes, as some haue been of opinion in times past, but are a plaine debt of the people to their Ministers. First, the wages or reward of the labourer is no almes, but his due, and of right belonging to him: but tithes are so vnto Ministers who labour in the Lords haruest, 1. Timoth. 5. 16. Ergo, no almes. Secondly, almes doe alway exceede the desert of the almesman, they shew the benediction and free heart of the giuer, not any merite or worthines in the receiuer: but tithes and all other temporall gifts, are farre inferiour to the labours of Ministers: for what are temporal things to spirituall, 1. Cor. 9. 11? Ergo, no almes. Thirdly, the tenth is the Lords part, and by him it is assigned to his faithfull Ministers, which in Gods stead doe teach vs, 2. Cor. 5. 20. But almes cannot be giuen vnto God. Again, the tenth is as an inheriſance to the Church, and to bee counted as the corne of the barne, or the abundance of the winepresse, Numb. 18. vers. 26. 27. it is vnto them for the fruite of the earth, and increase of the ground to the husbandman: Therefore to be counted no almes from men, but the blessing of God both vpon the pastor and the people.

Council. Moguntiens. sub Arnulpho. cap. 17. Admonemus, ut decima omnino dari non negligatur: sicut enim de cunctis, ut quisquis Deo debitum abstrahit, Deus propter peccatum ei auferat necessaria: Wee thronghly charge, that no man neglect to pay his tithes: for it is to bee feared, that as a man doth withhold from God his due, so God should for his sinne deprive him of things necessarie. Tithes therefore are debitum, a due debt, therefore no almes.

Council. Aquisgranens. lib. 1. cap. 34. Attende diligenter lector, quod omnes primitie, & quicquid ad sanctuarium oblatum est sacerdotibus sunt, & ad ius eius pertinent: Vnderstand diligent reader, that all first fruites and whatsoever was offered in the sanctuarie, was the priests, and belonged to him of right. Therefore tithes are more then almes.

Likewise, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 20. c. 14. Cum decima, &c. Seeing tithes were not instituted of men, but of God, quasi debitum exigi possunt, they may be exacted as a due debt.

4. We also agree, that it is not meete that the maintenance of Ministers should be voluntarie, or left to the peoples choise: but that it is conuenient, iust, equall, requisite, that both by lawes of Princes, and constitutions of the Church, prouision should be made, as there is, for the necessaries, certaine, and competent maintenance of the Church. First, the tenths in the lawe were established by a perpetuall ordinance: Ergo, the maintenance of ministers ought now also to be confirmed by positue lawes, as then tithes were: the argument followeth: for if their Ministerie deserved such allowance of their maintenance, which did but serue at the Altar, much more now doth the Ministerie of the Gospell deserue it. And the Apostle also seemeth so to reason, 1. Cor. 9. 14. &c. that as they which wayted on the Altar were partakers of the Altar: so God hath ordained (saith he) that they which preach the Gospell, should liue of the Gospell. That is, as then the people did not onely giue tithes voluntarily, but were bound by lawe to doe it: euen so God hath ordained, that Ministers should liue of the people: and by this ordinance of God, the people may as well be bound vnto it now, as they were then. Secondly, if Ministers, bound in conscience to feed and instruct the people, may also be enforced & vrged by the constitutions of the Church and lawes of Princes to doe that, which in conscience they are bound : why may not the people likewise be constrained by publike law, to performe that dutie to their pastors, which their owne conscience doth vrge them vnto? Thirdly, experience teacheth, that men are hardly (euen liuing vnder a lawe) brought to pay their rights to the Church, no not in those places where they can take no exception against their pastors : how much more vnwilling would they be (I speake of those which are not yet wonne to a through liking of the Gospell) if they were left to their owne libertie?

Neither is it safe to giue the people this libertie to detaine their tithes from vn sufficient Clerkes, lest vnder this colour afterwards they might deny them to those which were worthie. Sometimes indeede it was put to the peoples choyce to pay their tithes to whom they would, and to withhold them, if they saw cause, for as yet there was no positiue lawe made, but since it hath been otherwise determined by ciuill constitutions of Princes, as Council. Ticinesf. sub Lodouico Pio: Pius pro suo libitu Clericis laici decimas tribueret, &c. That the lay sort should not pay tithes at their pleasure to the Clergie: Synod. August. cap. 19. Qui iustas non solum decimas, ver moniti, cuiusmodi communio: They that being thrise admonished doe not pay their full tithe, let them be denied the Communion: Anno. 1538. King Henrie the eight of excellent memorie, made this positiue lawe concerning tithes: For as much as by a lawe established every man is bound to pay his tithe, no man shall by colour of dutie omitted by their Curates, detaine his tithes, or be his owne iudge, but shall truly pay the same, as hath been accustomed without any restraint, or diminution, and such lacke and default as they finde in their Parsons or Curates, to call for reformation thereof at their Ordinaries, and other superiours hands; For pag. 1006. Such ciuill constitutions of Princes not contrarie to the word of God, doe binde subiects to obedience.

5 We also acknowledge (as Bellarmin seemeth to grant, chap. 25.) that to pay precisely the tenth, is not now commanded by the lawe of God : as though that order could not be changed by any humane lawe, as the Canonists hold, but men necessarily were bound to pay tithes. But thus farre forth we hold, that it is grounded vpon Gods lawe : first, in respect of the equitie of the lawe, in paying of tithes, which is this, that the Ministers ought to liue of the people, and to haue sufficient and competent maintenance by them : which equitie and substance of the lawe is morall, and ought alwayes to continue, being grounded vpon the lawe of nature : Thou shalt not moule the mouth of the oxe that treadeth out the corne. Secondly, in as much as the lawes of the land and of the Church doth confirme this ancient constitution of tithes, (which is left indifferent of it selfe) we are bound to obey such lawes, being agreeable to the word of God : And in this sense also, tithes may be sayd to be due by the lawe of God, because Gods word commandeth obedience to our Magistrates, in all lawfull ordinances.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 7. Statuimus, ut decima, qua iure debentur diuino, soluantur sine fraude We appoynt, that tithes, which are due by the diuine lawe, be payd without any fraude. This Council doubteth not to affirme, tithes to be due by the word of God.

6 Though the lawe of tenths be not now necessarie, as it was a ceremonious dutie : but is lawfull either to keepe that or any other constitution, for the sufficient maintenance of the Church, whether it be more or lesse then the tenth part : yet we doubt not to say, that this prouision for the Church maintenance by paying of tithes, is the most safe, indifferent and best way, and no better can come in the place thereof. First, it is the most equall way, to haue every thing in the kinde, according to the Apostles rule : Let him that is taught make his teacher partaker of all his goods, Gal. 6. 6. But this cannot be so conueniently done any other way, as by recting of a set stipend, or such like, as by paying the tenth in the kind.

7 Whereas S. Paul requireth, that the Pastor should be giuen to hospitalitie, 1. Tim. 3. 8. who seeth not, that for the better and more conuenient maintenance of his house, it is the fittest count to receiue the tenth in his owne nature and kinde: being so more able to relieue the poore, hauing sufficient prouision and store of his owne?

8 The tenth is as the corne of the barne, and the abundance of the winepresse Numb. 18. 17. that is, it is more or lesse, as God giueth encrease to the fruites of the earth: which is the most equall and indifferent way : for then the Minister, as God blesteth them, shall be partaker of the blessing, and if they suffer losse, he likewise shall beare the burthen with them.

9 This manner of tithe-paying is farre more safe and sure, then any way can be deuised, because of the long custome and continuance, which without great hazard of the Church cannot be broken. Neither is it possible by any act of parliament, to make stipends so certaine, as this constitution of tithes is: for the people will hardly yeeld to breake their custome : and when an olde custome is broken, a new is not so soone receiued : nay, many yeres must runne to make a custome. Againe, whatsoeuer may be objected against tithes, that they breede much trouble, wrangling and contention, may be more iustly feared, in the collection, leuying, imposing, and demanding of stipends.

Hitherto we haue shewed, that it is most naturall, that the Ministers portion should be payed in the kind. Now, concerning the tenth, though it be not necessarie, yet that proportion being first appoynted by the wisdom of God, is verely thought to be most equall and indifferent betwene the pastor and the people, as both affording competent sustentance for the one, when he liueth of the tenth, rather then the fifteenth, or twentieth part, which were too skant allowance; nor yet grieuing or oppressing the other, whe the owner hath nine parts reserved to himselfe. And so it is be most meete, that things should be answered in their kind, no proportion can serue better, then that which was first deuised by the Lord himselfe: yet we hold neither the one nor the other to be necessarie.

It hath been an olde obiection, that the owner ought first to deduct his see, and of the residue to pay his tithes: thus was it articulated against one Thomas Clarke, Far. pag. 830. But this notwithstanding, people ought to pay the full tenth, and not to be so straight handed, seeing God hath giuen them nine parts for that one tenth: See to this purpose, Council. Tridentin. cap. 13. ex Augustine, Da mihi decimam, &c. Giue me thy tithes (saith the Lord,) if thou wilt not giue me the tenth, I will take away thy nine parts: if thou giuest me the tenth, I will multiplie thy nine: If any man aske why tithes are giuen, let him know, that they are giuen, both that God being well pleased therewith, should giue vs things necessarie, and that the Ministers being thereby relieved, should more freely attend their spirituall seruice, and haue to giue to the poore. Thus we see why both the tenth is to be giuen, and why in the kinde.

Hitherto for the most part we and our aduersaries are agreed, both concerning tithes, as also other maintenance of the Church: but we differ about tithes in two poynts. First, there is a question betwene vs and the Rhemists about the necessitie of paying of tithes: Secondly, concerning the right whereby the Ministers of the Gospell may demand their duties, which they say, is by reason of their Priesthood: of both these now briefly in their order.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE PAYMENT OF TITHES BE NECESSARIE.

The Papists.

THe payment of tithes is a naturall due, that men owe to God in all Lawes, and to be giuen to his Priests in his behalfe for their honour and liuelihood, Rhemist. annos. 7. Hebr.

Argum. 1. Iacob vowed to pay tithes to God, before the lawe, Genes. 28: Ergo, it is a perpetuall law. Rhemist.

Ans. One Papist shall answere another at this time. Bellarmin proueth by this example the cleane contrarie, that the payment of tithes is not morall, because it did not bind before the law of Moses: for Iacob made a voluntarie vowe to pay his tithes, vpon a condition: but if he had been bound absolutely to pay tithes, they should haue been payed without any such condition: It was therefore a voluntarie and a franke offering in Iacob.

Argum. 2. Christ confirmeth the lawe of tithes, Matth. 23. 23. though he preferre the workes of mercie and iudgement, yet he saith that the other ought not to be left vndone, speaking of the paying of tithes, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. We must consider in what time our Sauour Christ so spake vnto the Pharisees: for as yet neither the lawe nor the ceremonies thereof were fully abrogated: Christ was circumcised, and Mary his mother purified according to the lawe, Luk. 2. 21. 22. Our Sauour also biddeth the Leper to shew himselfe to the priest, and offer a gift as Moses commanded, Matth. 8. 4. Yet none of all these ceremonies doe now stand in force, though Christ did them at that time, and bad them to be done. The same answere may serue also concerning his iniunction to the Pharisees as touching their tithes.

The Protestants.

THe lawe of paying tithes did borrowe part of the morall, part of the iudiciall, and part of the ceremoniall lawe. The morall part therefore, is the equitie of the lawe, which is perpetuall, that as the Leuites then liued of the tenth, so the Ministers at all times ought sufficiently to be provided and cared for. The iudiciall part was in this, that as the Leuites were not much lesse in common account then the tenth part, being one of the tribes, (though in proportion of number, they made welneere the thirtieth part: for the rest of the tribes were numbred to fixe hundred, three thousand, five hundred and fiftie persons, Numb. 1. the Leuites made but two and twentieth thousand, Numb. 3.) As I say the Leuites made one whole tribe, and were not much lesse then the tenth part in that account, being in number the thirteenth tribe, for there were twelue beside: So it was thought reasonable that the tenth part of their brethrens goods should be allotted vnto them; which being a iudiciall and politike constitution of that countrey, doth neither necessarily binde Christians now, neither is forbidden; but left in that respect indifferent. Thirdly, the ceremonie of the lawe was in this, because the tenth was due to the Priests and Levites for their seruice at the Altar, and as belonging to their priesthood: In which sense tithes are neither due now vnto Ministers, nor in any such respect can be challenged, seeing the Priesthood of the lawe is gone, and all the ceremonies thereof: wherefore although it be a wife and pollicie constitution, that the people should pay their tithes, and may conveniently be retained, yet it is not now of necessity imposed vpon Christians, as though no other prouision for the Church could serue but that.

Argum. 1. Bellarmino thus reasoneth (for herein he is an aduersarie to our Rhemists) (one Iesuite against another) If the lawe of tithes be morall, then the other precept annexed to this law was morall also, that the Levites, because they liued of the offerings and tithes, should haue no patrimonie or inheritance beside. And by this reason euery Minister now ought to resigne such inheritance and possessions, as are left him by his friends: which is not to be admitted: Ergo, whether the other lawe standeth necessarily in force, Bellarmino cap. 25.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith in flat words, If the priesthood bee changed, of necessity there must also be a change of the lawe, Hebrew. 7. 12. But the priesthood of the lawe is altered and changed: Ergo, also the lawe of the priesthood, and so consequently the ceremoniall duties of tithes.

3 In Augustines time, it was no generall lawe nor custome in the Church, that tithes should be payed. Prædicator & deputatus aliquod fixum ex annuis fructibus vel quotidianis quasiibus: Definitur, saith hee, and appoynt some certaine portion, either of your yearly fruites, or your ordinarie daylie gaines. Decimus uis? decimus eximo: Will you make choyce to pay tithes? then let that be the portion. And yet this is no great matter: for the Pharisees, whose righteousness you ought to exceede, payed their tithes: Tu vix mille finium das: Thou scarce payest the thousand part: Tamen non reprehendo, vel hoc fac, sic fuis, ut ad ista mecum gaudeam: Yet I finde not fault: doe so still: for I so thirst after your welldoing, that I refuse not your very crummes. We see then, that then the payment of tithes was voluntarie: Augustine refuseth not the ten hundred, that is millesimum partem, the thousand part, which he calleth their crummes.

Concil. Aurelianense can. 17. Sicut in arbitrio dantis est, ut tribuere, quod uolueris, debeat, ita finitudo entia vel contumacia, in aliquo accipientis extiterit, in arbitrio sit presentis, utrum debeat recipere: As it is in the will of the giuer, to giue what pleaseth him, so if he finde him stubborne and forward, which receiueth it, it is in his power to reuoke the gift. Wee see then that the word of God hath layd no such necessitie vpon tithes, for then this Councell would not haue permitted such libertie.

Let vs adde the scale, The professed Bohemians thus deliuer their opinion, who endured much for Gods cause: They preach and say, that men are bound to giue them tithes, wherein they say falsely, they cannot proue by the new Testament, that our Lord did command it, and his Disciples warned none to doe so, neither did they themselves receive them: exhortas. Bohemian. articul. 15. Therefore tithes are not necessarily due by the word of God.

THE SECOND PART, BY WHAT RIGHT tithes are due to the Ministers of the Gospell.

The Papists.

Tithes or their equiualent are due to Christ and the priesthood of the newe Testament, 1. Cor. 9. 14. 1. Tim. 5. 17. 1. Pet. 5. 4. This then is their opinion, that the priesthood of the Gospell being more excellent then the priesthood of the Lawe; and their sacrifice, which they offer vp in the Masse, being of greater worthines, they may with better right challenge tithes, then the Priests of the lawe did for their seruice at the Altar: So that tithes are due to the Church onely because of the priesthood, not for any other dutie appertaining to that office, as preaching the word, ministring the Sacraments, or any such.

Abraham payed tithes, they say, to Melchisedech, which was the priest of the most high God in offering the formes of bread and wine, wherein Melchisedech did sacrifice: Ergo, tithes are now due to the priests of the Gospell and new lawe, which are all after the order of Melchisedech, Rhemist. Heb. 7. 17. 2. & 8.

Rhemist. Heb.
7. 17. 2.

Ans. First, Melchisedechs priesthood consisted not in offering bread and wine to God, but brought them forth to refresh Abraham: neither were they sonnes of bread and wine onely, as you imagine, but very materiall bread and wine: for if Melchisedechs priesthood had consisted therein, the Apostle would not haue omitted the chiefe thing, wherein Christs priesthood was shewed forth, as he doth, making no mention at all of it, Heb. 7. Again it is great blasphemy to say, that euery popish priest is after the order of Melchisedech, nay that the proper act of Christs priesthood priesthood consisted in the perpetuall offering of his body and blood in the Masse: for by this reason every impure priest doth more properly offer the body of Christ in the Masse, then he was offered by himselfe vpon the Crosse: then they which, what greater blasphemy can be uttered?

And yet they are not ashamed to speake it: yea the sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse, (say they) was after the order of Aaron; and not after the order of Melchisedech; and so they preferre every pollish priest offering in the Masse, before Iesus Christ sacrificing himselfe vpon the Crosse: contrary to the Scripture, which maketh this difference betweene the priesthood of Aaron and the priesthood of Melchisedech; that the priests of the law were many, because they were taken away by death: but Christs priesthood is eternall, because he dyeth not, Heb. 7. 23. But if there should be many priests after Melchisedech order, there should herein be no difference at all. Wherefore seeing *Melchisedech*s priesthood onely resteth in Christ, and is not translated to any other; and that there is now no sacrifice left but spiritual, of praise and thankgiuing, Heb. 13. 15. it followeth that by *Melchisedech*s right no tithes are now due vnto the Church, neither in any such regard ought to be challenged.

Fulk. Heb. 7.
scd. 9. 12.

Tithes, or their equivalent are not due to the Church in respect of any (existing) priesthood, of which sort there is none in the new Testament ordained to continue: but for other pastoral duties, and principally the preaching and dispensing of the word, and instructing of the people.

2. If there were any such priesthood, and tithes in that right, did appertain to the Church; it is most likethat our Saviour Christ and his Apostles would have challenged them: for there is no one precept in the new testament concerning paying of tithes, but onely for a full maintenance for the Ministers of the Gospell; 1. Cor. 9. 14. Gal. 3. 10. Phil. Heb. 8. 4. &c.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul every where, so oft as he sheweth the dutie of Christians in relieving and maintayning their pastors, maketh onely mention of sowing of spirituall things, 1. Cor. 9. 11. and of teaching and instructing, Gal. 6. 6. Eng. tithes are due vnto Pastors and ministers onely especially for their feeding and instructing, and sowing I spiritual feede; which is the word of God.

Argument 3. There is no such sacrificing priesthood now. In the Church we have partly devoted bodies, and shall of purpose more fully declare it afterward: for every where in the new Testament spiritual sacrifices are commanded; and all Christians are made Kings and Priests unto God, Apocal. 1. 6. Other priesthoods were made of none: Wherefore in this respect rather can we be said to imitate another priesthood, than to establish a new one.

2. Lastly, despise no faith: Si in modicum numerus sit seniorum, quanto magis venerit; per quos maior gloria dei: If thou despisest not a beggar, how much more oughtest thou to have regard of the one that treadeth out the corn on the miller? That is, the Minister that preaches the Gospel, for so S. Paul expoundeth it, 1st Tim. c. 5. 17. The Elders, faith he, that labour in the word and doctrine are worthy double honour: and then it followeth, ver. 28. for the Scripture faith, Thou shalt not increase the mouth of the ox, that treadeth out the corn. Sufficient maintenance therefore to the Ministers is due for their labour and travail in the word.

Concil. Lateranens. sub Leonide Pio: Prædicti Ecclesiæ tributum duntaxat ubi Baptismus, prædicationem, & alia Christi sacramenta percipiunt: Tithe tunc debentur That tithes should be payed to the Church, where men receive baptisme, preaching of the word, and other Sacraments. Concil. Lateranens. sub Alexand. 3. pont. 18. cap. 1. Hæc scilicet de iure ab his percipiuntur, qui ab eis spiritualium percipiunt sacramenta That Church men must pay their tithes, where they receive the sacraments of the Church. So likewise their Canon law giueth two reasons for the payment of tithes, one in respect of God himselfe; In signum vniuersæ dominationis & iurisdictionis, quæ ab eis habetur Which God hath decreed. Gregorius. lib. 12. c. 33. Innocent. 2. Numerus The reason is in regard of the Ministers themselves as ecclesiasticall persons. Leo 3. tithes and other rights are due vnto that Church, in qua celestis populus refectus conuenit Where a man hath vied to bee refreshed with the heavenly foode. Tithes therefore are due not in respect of any sacrifice due for the Sacraments and the word preached.

Argum. 2. John Baptist a perfect patterne of Eremiticall life, for liuing in the desert and wilderness, for his rough apparell, for abstaining from all delicate meate; Rhemist. annot. Matth. 3. 1.

Ans. First, John Baptist calling was singular and extraordinary, and therefore cannot bee made an author of any ordinary profession. Secondly, wee denie not but his life was austere, and that he made his abode in a solitarie place, yet there were houses and villages not farre off; his apparell also was coarse cloath, made of the hard haire of Camels: his fooode was of locusts and wild honey, the vsuall and common meate of that countrey: he was an extraordinarie preacher of repentance, and shewed in himself an example of austere life, as it became the forerunner of Christ; but being no minister of the Gospell, but the last prophet of the law, he cannot bee a patterne of an ordinary profession vnder the Gospell, Fulk. annot. Matth. 3. sect. 1.

Argum. 3. Nay, Bellarmine fetcheth his Monkish order from a more ancient beginning, then from Elias and John Baptist; yea from before the flood: for Enos (saith he) seemeth to haue brought in some stricter kinde of life, and peculiar manner of worshipping God: whereas the text saith, that he began to call vpon the name of God: that is, after another manner: for Adam, Seth, Abel, before this time called vpon the name of God, cap. 1.

Ans. First, who would haue thought, that there had bin Monks and Eremites before the flood; if the Scripture had not said it, or that this text, which he alleageth, could haue proued it? The argument followeth not: Enos brought in a peculiar worship of God, therefore was founder of the Eremiticall life: for he brought in the true worship of God: but the other is superstitious and erroneous. Secondly, Tyrnellius readeth more agreeably to the Hebrue, Tam nomina Dei captiuum esse inuoluntate profanari: Then the name of God began to bee profaned in calling vpon, that is, his worship began to bee corrupted: for the Hebrue word signifieth, both to inuocate and call vpon God, as to corrupt, pollute, or prophane. Thirdly, if we reade as they do, The name of God began to be called vpon: it only sheweth a restoring and renewing of the true worship of God, which was polluted by the posteritie of Cain, whose stocke and familie is set downe in that chapter, Gen. 4.

Argum. 4. Bellarmino also saith, that the institution of Monkes proceeded from the Apostles, who appointed all things to be common, as it may appeare, Act. 4. and the Apostles were the first Christian Monks: So that his argument concludeth thus, All things were common in the Apostles time: Ergo, there were Monkes then, lib. 2. de monach. c. 1.

Ans. 1. If the Apostles were the first Monkes, how then is John Baptist, princeps monachorum, prince of the Monkes, as Bellarmino hath affirmed a little before? he cannot bee the first, and the Apostles the first too. 2. If the communitie in vse amongst the beleeuers in those daies, made them Monkes, then the whole congregation was of Monkes: for as many as beleeued had all things common, Act. 2. 44. which were reckoned to the number of three thousand soules, vers. 41. Solen by this reason all Christians must bee Monkes. 3. There was a communitie amongst them, but not like the Monkish communitie: for first their communitie was voluntarie, not imposed vpon them; but the other is enforced by vow: Secondly, their communitie was not, in relinquishing their goods, and not to meddle with them themselves, as men were perswaded in Monks, but an equall distribution of them to as many as needed: thirdly, that communitie was in respect of that present necessitie in the time of persecution; but Monkish communitie is not vpon necessitie, but vpon superstitious curiositie, whereby they thinke to merit heauen. 4. We grant there was such a communitie, as wee say, amongst them, but they cannot shew a profession of single life amongst the beleeuers in those daies, of whom many were married, as Ananias and Sapphira, Act. 5. and therefore they could not be Monkes. 5. I oppose against them the iudgement of their owne Thomas, who affirmeth, that there were no Monkes in S. Pauls time: ex citat. Episcopi. lib. 1. de monach. c. 189.

The Preliminary.

WE see then that this Monasticall and solitarie kinde of life hath no prooff nor ground out of the Scriptures, either by precept or example: Nay, this kinde of profession was not knowne in the Church, for diuers hundred yeeres after Christ; how could then the Apostles bee the founders of this order? And though the name of Monks be of some antiquitie in the Church, yet they were farre unlike vnto Popish Monkes, that for these many yeeres haue pestered the Church.

It is certaine, as Barome witnesseth, that Antony, and his disciples Ammonius and Macarius, were the first beginners of Monkish profession almost three hundred yeere after Christ, Fulk. annot. Matth. 3. c. 1.

Ann. 280. when Sixtus the 2. was Bishop of Rome, Paulus began the profession of Heremites, in Mediterranea which Paulus was the first of the Pauline order, and Macarius the first of the Macarian order.

About this time Paul was the first, I gesse, who began to dwell in wilderness. Who here to Nilus dwelt in wilderness. Hierome also reporting diuers opinions of the originall of Monkes, as how some should reach their beginning from Elias and Iohn Baptist, which conceit he misliketh, at the last allegeth the common opinion, Antonium huius propositi fuisse caput, that Antonie was the head or beginning of this profession: to the which he subscribeth, in vita Pauli. And he saith of Hilarion: Nec quisquam p̄uinciam ante sanctum Hilarionem in Syria uenerat: There was no Monke knownt in Syria before Hilarion. But the Apostles were not vnknowne in those countries.

Fulk. Math. 3.

2 The beginning of Monkes, was not for the more merite, and to doe penance for their sinnes and the sinnes of the world; for Antonius the first Monke confessed, that Christ onely suffered for the sinnes of the world: But the first occasion was given in the time of persecution, when men were not suffered to worship God aright publicly: and therefore they fled into the wilderness, Rhemish. Math. 3. sect. 3. As Hierome reporteth of Paulus the Heremite, who being persecuted of his sisters husband vnder Decius and Valerian, fled to the mountaines, & sic necessitas uoluntatem erexit, and so made a vertue of necessitie, vita Pauli. But now seeing the Christian faith is openly professed, they haue no such causes to seeke solitarie and secrete places.

3 The popish Monkes are altogether vnlke theirs: First, they liued in solitarie places, far from resort of people: but the popish Mock-monkes liue in cities and the frequencie of the people, Fulk. annot. Math. 3. sect. 3. Secondly, the Monkes in times past laboured with their hands: but the popish fat-bellies pampered themselves in idleness. Thirdly, they are altogether vaine in life and doctrine, as we shall see more at large afterward, Fulk. ibid.

Council. Colonien. part. 10. cap. 1. Vita monasterii non multis post Apostolorum tempora capit, quoniam multis persuasum sit, aliam inuē fuisse, quam nunc est, monachismi rationem. The Monkish life began not long after the Apostles time, although many thinke, that the profession of Monkes was then otherwise in those times, then now.

This Councell maketh Monkerie not to bee so ancient as the Apostles, and besides saith, that the Monkish life now, is farre vnlke the life of the ancient Monkes: as it followeth, cap. 4. Tabernacula monasteria mulierum in plerisque locis, in suspectas de incontinentia demerit, ne quid grauius, esse commutatus: We see the monasteries of women, to be turned into wanton houses suspected of incontinencie, to say no more. But such were not the ancient Colledges and assemblies of Monkes.

Their owne Extrangant also saith, that the rule of S. Francis is not grounded vpon the example of Christ or his Apostles: Qua ratione nec Christus, nec Apostoli, &c. Which neither Christ, nor his Apostles did either teach by word, or confirme by example, scilicet. 2. Extr. 11. 1. 2. 2.

I will adiuyn the testimony of Sir Iohn Burthwicke Knight, who endured much trouble for the faith of Christ: What shall I call the cloysters of Monkes in these our daies otherwise then the helthouses, swine-styes, and denues of discord, &c. Wherefore I conclude, that this their kind of life is wicked and naught, which is not grounded nor established of any certaine calling of God, For pag. 126. In this holy mans iudgement therefore, the profession of Monkerie tooke not beginning neither from Christ, nor his Apostles.

THE SECOND PART, CONCERNING the diuers sects of Monkes and Friars

83. Error.

They say that imitation of diuers holy men, as of S. Francis, S. Benet, S. Dominicke, which hath brought in diuers sects and orders of Religious men, doe tend all to the imitation of Christ, Rhemish. annot. Philip. cap. 3. sect. 2. 1. Theff. 1. 2.

This their assertion they would ground vpon the Apostles words, Philip. 3. 17. Be ye followers of me brethren Rhemish. 1. 1. 2. 2.

But first, Saint Paul would haue them no otherwise to follow him, then he did Christ: Corinth. 1. 11. Neither gave any other rules to his followers, then he had learned of Christ, the patrones of the Monkish sects haue done. Secondly, neither did S. Paul erect a new order of Monkes, as Francis did of Franciscaues, Dominick of Dominicans. Thirdly, S. Paul was a persecutor of vnicie, none a maker of diuisions among Christians as the Monkes and Friars haue done, of sort persecuting another for their opinions euen to death. Fulk. annot. 1. Theff. 1. sect. 2. For pag. 126. Fourthly, if the rule of S. Francis, the best approved yet amongst you, haue no other then the witnesse of one of your Popes; Domini nostri sanctum Euangelium, &c. to oblerue the holy Gospel of our Lord, scilicet. de. lib. 3. tit. 17. c. 2. Nihil, then is the rule of S. Francis superfluous, being euery man is bound, that is called a Christian, to follow the Gospel of Christ.

Contrariwise wee affirme, that it is a great derogation to Christ when the people shall say, I follow the religion of Augustine, the religion of Francis, another faith, I hold of Dominick, another, I hold of Iesus, as the Idolaters doe, Fals. Philp. 3. conf. 17.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul reproveth the Corinthians, because they made the like sects amongst themselves: one said, I am Pauls, another, I am Apollos; and concludeth, that therefore they were carnall, 1. Cor. 3. 4. And further, he saith, they should not reioyce in men for all things were theirs, whether Paul, Apollos, or Cephas, vet. 11. 22. That is, they were not masters of their faith, to institute new religions and sects, but the ministers and seruants of the Lords inheritance. If therefore it was not lawfull to say, I hold of Paul, I hold of Cephas: neither is it lawfull to say, I hold of Dominick, I hold of Francis, I hold of Iesus: for seeing they make their sects, and Iesus maketh his, it is evident that they are not all referred to the imitation of Iesus: for then they might all as well be called Iesuites: So then in the Apostles time there was not any such following of sects, or calling of them by the names of their patrones and authors, as it is now in Poperie; but all that belongeth in Christ, were called of his name Christians, Act. 11. 26.

Argum. 2. The number of Monkes and Friers was almost infinite, sects vpon sects, and new orders daily were deuised, as Augustinians, Bernardines, Carmelites, Celestines, Dominicans, Franciscans, and a great sort more, to the number of an hundred sects, as they are reckoned by Master Paspar, 160. And Thomas à Kempis seeth downe 65. severall sects on rather schismes of Monkes, loc. 1. 10. This yrelesse rabble therefore of Monkes is fitly shadowed forth by the swarme of Locusts, which came vs out of the bottomlesse pit, Apoc. 9. 4. And verily as the Locusts and Grashoppers consume and deuoure the frutes of the earth, so the begging Friers, and idle Monks deuoured the goods of the people, and corrupted the doctrine of the Church. And lastly, this diuision of Monkerie into sects and surdrie orders, is of no great antiquitie: they were not knowne in Augustines time, who knew no other name of them, then Monkes; for he writ a booke of purpose, De opere Monachorum; Of the labour of Monkes: But other names of Carmelites, Corinthians, Franciscans, or such like, were not heard of in the Church in those daies; but came in long after in the time of Innocentius the 3. about anno 1212. many yeres after Augustine, Par. pag. 259.

The time by perusing the ancient inonuments and records, may easily be assigned, when most of these Friery and Monkish sects began. Anno 1100. Vrbani the 2. confirmed the sects of the Carthusians and Cisterciens. Anno 1113. vnder Paschal the 1. began the sect of the Templars: Anno 1119. Calixtus the 2. confirmed the order of the Præmonstratenses: Anno 1170. Eugenius the 3. confirmed the order of the Gilbertines in England: Anno 1213. Honorius the 3. received vnder his protection the Augustinians, Carmelites, Franciscans, Dominicans. Anno 1295. vnder Celestinus the 5. the order of the Celestines began. John the 23. confirmed the sect of the Grandmontians. Anno 1371. Vrbani the 5. confirmed S. Bridgets order. Gregorius the 12. did approue the sect of the Mercantines and Alenolabenses, anno 1410. John the 24. ratified the order of the Frismarians, anno 1478. Anno 1555. Paulus the 3. or thereabout, confirmed the sect of the Iesuites: ex Alanus, Calo 2. Fergurio, Balen & alijs.

This inuention of Sects and new Professions, hath bin by the Emperiall lawes prohibited, as Calixtus 12. 11. Honor. Theodos. Calicularum nomen inauditum, &c. The strange and vknown name of Caliculites, that is, Inhabitants of heauen, hath found out a new superstition: and so the law proceedeth, Nisi ad fidem Christianam conuersi fuerint, &c. Vnlesse they be conuerted to the Christian faith, shall be punished as heretikes: this law approueth no name of faith to be vied, but of Christians; the name of Caliculites was a goodly title, as the name of Iesuites is; but as that name was made a cloake for superstition and hypocrisie, so is this: and howsoeuer they are called, if they swarue from the name and faith of Christians, by this law they are accounted heretikes.

This innumerable rabble of Monks hath misliked also their owne patrones the Popes of Rome: Council. Lateranens. sub Innocent. 3. cap. 3. Firmiter prohibemus, &c. We do streightly forbid, that no man from henceforth inuent a new Religion, least the too great diuersitie of religious persons do bring great offence into the Church of God; but he that will enter into religion, let him choose some one of them which is already approued: and he that is disposed to erect an house of religion, let him follow some rule already in vse. But yet for all this decree, many sects of religions were afterward inuented. Likewise Gregorius 10. doth not onely forbid new religions to be inuented, but condemneth, Ordines mendicantes, all the orders of begging Friers, begun since that generall Councell of Laterane, sext. decret. lib. 3. tit. 17. c. 1. Ioann. 12. doth also reuerse and dissolue the order of the Fraticelles, who were after the order of Francis, extran. Iam. tit. 7. c. 1. Clement 5. destroyed the sect of the Beguines, which is reuined notwithstanding by Sobus 25. extran. cum. unum. lib. 3. tit. 9. c. 1. Thus we see what good opinion the Popes themselues haue of their owne Sects.

THE SECOND QVEſTION, CONCERNING the Counſels of perfection.

The Popiſts.

THis they ſay is the very foundation of the Monaſticall life, which is the moſt perfect eſtate and calling of Chriſtians: for they performe more then Chriſt hath commanded, not onely his precepts, but euen his Counſels alſo; which, they ſay, do much differ: for the precepts are ioyned to all Chriſtians, and to leaue a precept vndone, is ſinne: but the Euangelicall Counſels are giuen onely to thoſe that are perfect, which they are not bound to keepe, neither do they ſinne in leauiing them vndone; yet if they obſerue them, they do merite more and ſhall haue a greater reward: Such Counſels of perfection are theſe; To giue all we haue to the poore; to abſtaine from eating of fleſh; to vow chaſtity and ſuch like, Bellarm. cap. 7. Rhemiſt. annot. Matth. 19. ſol. 9. Argum. 1. Matth. 19. verſ. 11. Chriſt ſaith, Go and ſell all thou haſt, if thou wilt be perfect. This was a Counſell of perfection, not a precept giuen to all Chriſtians.

Anſw. Firſt, this was both a Counſell and precept, though not to all, yet to this one man, to diſcouer his hypocriſie and wayne confidence which he had in himſelfe, as though he had kept the law, when he was farre from it, Fulke Matth. 19. 9. Mark. 10. 3. Secondly, it is a generall precept vnto all, to loue the Lord with all the heart, and to be content, when the Lord requireth, for Chriſts ſake, to leaue all we haue, Caluin. Inſtitut. 4. cap. 13. ſect. 13.

Bellarmino replieth; Firſt, it is not like, that this yong man was an hypocrite, or a vaine boſter of himſelfe, becauſe it is ſaid Chriſt loued him; but he loueth no hypocrites or proud men.

Anſw. Firſt, it was prophecied of our Sauour, as it is alledged, Matth. 12. 20. that he ſhould not quench the ſmoaking flaxe; that is, that Chriſt ſhould accept and approoue the leaſt good things, that he found in men, increaſing, and not extinguishing them: as it is alſo ſaid, Zach. 4. 10. Who hath deſpiſed the day of ſmall thinges? ſo Chriſt is ſaid to haue loued this yong man, becauſe he ſaw ſome beginning and likelyhood of goodneſſe in him, though in the reſt he approoued him not. Secondly, the like example we haue, Mark. 13. 34. where our Sauour ſaith to a certain expoſtander of the Law, that had answered him diſcreetly, Thou art not farre from the Kingdom of heauen; which was a great commendation of him: and yet the other Euangelist Saint Matth. reporting the ſame ſtorie, cap. 22. 35. ſaith he came to tempt Chriſt: he was not then void of ſinne diſſimulation, yet Chriſt commendeth him.

Secondly, Bellarmino ſaith, that a man may loue God with all his heart, and yet is not bound to do all, which God counſelleth; but, which he commandeth, Bellarmino. lib. 2. de Monach. 5. in argum. 5.

Contra. This is a moſt groſſe anſwere, and contrary to the Scripture: for he that loueth God with all his heart, is bound to keepe the Counſels of God, and it is damnation to tranſgreſſe them: as Prou. 1. 25. 26. You haue deſpiſed all my counſell, and therefore I will laugh at your deſtruction: and Daniell ſaith to Nabuchadnezzar, 4. 24. Let my counſell be acceptable vnto thee, break off thy ſinfully righteousneſſe, &c. Will they ſay now, that the King was not bound to obey this counſell?

Argum. 2. Act. 2. 44. They had all things common. This is not a rule or precept to all Chriſtian men to liue in common, but a life of perfection and counſell followed of the religious, Rhemiſt.

Anſw. This liuing in common among the brethren in the Apoſtles time, is the ſame that ought alwayes to be among all Chriſtians, that no man account that to be his owne, which the neceſſitie of his brother requireth to be beſtowed vpon him: this the rule of charitie requireth, which is one of the great commandements. Fulke in hunc locum.

Argum. 3. 1. Corinth. 7. 25. Concerning Virgins I haue no commandement of the Lord, but I giue mine aduice. A precept therefore is one thing, a Counſell of perfection another, Bellarmino. cap. 9.

Anſw. Firſt, Paul hath no generall commandement from God to impoſe the yoke of continencie vpon any, becauſe God had left mariage free, and therefore no man is to be barred and kept from it: But the Apoſtles particular aduice and ſentence (being moued by the ſpirit of God, verſ. 40.) is not onely a Counſell, but a commandement, that both they which haue the gift of continencie, ſhould gloriſie God by that gift, verſ. 7. and they which haue it not, ſhould marry rather then burne, and ſo diſhonour God, verſ. 9. Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, Let every man wherein he is called therein abide with God, verse 24. If a man be called to liue single, he ought to obey his calling, hauing receiued the gift: if a man be called to the married estate, he must not presume beyond his strength, to liue vnmarried. Wherefore it is both a Counsell and a precept, to those that haue receiued the gift of single life: for otherwise they disobey Gods calling, which is sinne. And our Sauour saith, he that is able to receiue it, let him receiue it, Matth. 19. 12. He that hath the gift is commanded to vse it, for in leeing it he sinneth. And lastly, euery man by commandement is bound to the vttermost of his power to set forth Gods glorie: But God is most glorified by the single life of those, which are able to containe, and therefore they ought in dutie so to doe.

Againe, in that the Apostle saith he had no commaundement of the Lord, his meaning is, that he was not directed in this case of virginity by any generall precept out of Scripture, otherwise then by the counsell of the spirit speaking in him: but that the aduice of the Apostle is of the same nature and authoritie with a precept, it may appeare, for that he speaketh not of himselfe, but by the spirit of God, vers. 40. and he had receiued mercie to be faithfull, vers. 25. Wherefore if it bee faithfullnes in the Apostle to giue this aduice, it was faithfullnes in them to follow it. Vnlesse any man will entertaine Origenes light conceit, that thinketh S. Paul to haue spoken of himselfe, without warrant from God: as he vntruly saith of the Prophets, that they spake some things of themselves, as namely, when that came not to passe which they prophesied: as that of Ionas 3: that within three daies Niniue should be destroyed: and that of God, that spake of three daies pestilence to Dauid, 2. Sam. 24. whereas it ceased the same day: So he saith S. Paul speaketh of himselfe in this place. But he is both there and here deceived: for the Prophets spake as God bid them, who notwithstanding vpon their repentance seemed to chaunge the decree, as when he sent the Prophet to tell Hzekiah he should die: but this by the way of Origenes error.

Hom. 16. in 3.
cap. Iona.

Thirdly, as Saint Paul saith here concerning Virgins he had no commaundement, but gaue aduice; so he saith of marriage, vers. 6. I speake this by concession, or as giuing aduice, not by commaundement: that is, that to auoide fornication a man might marrie: but this is a commaundement, as vers. 9. to marrie rather then burne; and yet the Apostle calleth it an indulgence, or concession.

Fourthly, vers. 12. the Apostle saith in the same sense, to the remnant I speake, and not the Lord, that is, I giue counsell, hauing no prescript commaundement in the word; that is, that a faithfull man should not leaue his vnbeleeuing wife, if she be content to dwell with him. But this is a commaundement, and not to be transgressed; as it may thus appeare: first, by the manner of speech, being imperative, let him not forsake her, vers. 12. Secondly, vers. 15. if she will depart, the man is not in subiection: therefore if she will not depart, but abide, the man is in subiection, that is, bound to keepe her. Thirdly, vers. 16. The beleeuing man may bee an instrument to saue his vnbeleeuing wife: but wee are bound to doe all that may further anothers saluation; Ergo, euen this counsell also of the Apostle is a commaundement. And thus hath Beilarmine gained nothing by this place.

The Protestants.

WE doe truly affirme and according to the Scriptures, that it is impossible for any man to performe the lawe and commaundments of God, much lesse to fulfill more then is commanded: And therefore it is false, that beside the precepts of Christ there are Counsels of perfection, which are at a mans choyce to doe or not to do: for whatsoever is to the glorie of God, we are bound to doe. We acknowledge then no such euangelicall Counsels, as they imagine, Caluin.

Argum. 1. Matth. 5. 48. Our Sauour saith: Yee shall be perfect, as your heavenly father is perfect. Therefore all Counsels tending to perfection, are commaundments. If there be any thing whereby we may more neerely attaine vnto perfection, that we are bound and commanded to doe: As if a man can better obaine this perfection of godlinesse, by liuing single, if he haue the gift, he ought to doe it: for hauing not the gift, and yet presuming, he burneth in lust, and so is set further backe in the course of godlinesse, Caluin. argumens.

Beilarmine distinguisheth, there are (saith he) two kindes of perfection; a lesse which consisteth in the full keeping of the law, which is necessarie to saluation: such a perfection is commanded, Matth. 5. There is a greater perfection, not simply necessarie to saluation, but to obtaine a more excellent degree of glorie, in obseruing the counsels: and this our Sauour meaneth, when he biddeth the young man to sell all he had, to be perfect, Mark. 10. 21. Beilarm. cap. 9. argum. 5.

Contra. First, there can bee no greater perfection, then in the absolute fulfilling of the law: for the best perfection in this life is in loue, 1. Iohn. 4. 12. 16, 17. But loue is the fulfilling of the law, Rom. 13. 10. Wherefore, that which he calleth the lesse perfection is the best, seeing it fulfilleth the law. Secondly, the perfection spoken of, Matth. 5. 48. is the best perfection, to be perfect as God is perfect: for what greater perfection can there be, then to bee perfect according to the example of

of God? Thirdly, that thing, to the which Christ exhorteth the young man, to sell all he had to giue to the poore, is not so great point of perfection, as this, whereof Christ speaketh, that we should loue our enemies, and so be perfect as God is perfect: for a man may giue all his goods to the poore, and yet bee without loue, 1. Cor. 13. 3. but he cannot loue his enemies, vnlesse he haue loue: wherefore this point of perfection seemeth to bee greater then the other, and so Bellarmine hath lost a good distinction. Wherefore, this remaineth a strong place, notwithstanding all his cauils, that exhortation to perfection containeth not onely a counsell, but a precept also and commaundement.

Argum. 2. We are bound to loue God with al our heart, with al our soule, with al our strength: Therefore whatsoever thing there is, whereby we may expresse the loue of God, we are bound by commaundement to doe it; it is not left to our owne will: for not to loue God more then thou doest, if it be in thy power, it is a grieuous sinne, Martyris argument.

Bellarmino answereth thus: Qui deum diligit super omnia, etiam si eum non tam ardentius amat, quam forte posset, vel non faciat pro eo omnia, quae posset, ille habet Deum pro summo bono, cap. 12. He that loueth God aboute all things, although he loue him not so entirely, as perhaps he may, neither doth al things for his sake that lie in his power: yet for all this, he esteemeth of God as his chiefe good. I pray you see what contradictorie speeches these be: The Iesuite saith, a man may loue God perfectly and aboute all, and yet not loue him so much as he is able, that is, imperfectly: so a man may his Monkish diuinitie, may loue God aboute all, and yet not loue him aboute all: for if he did, he would refuse to doe nothing for Gods loue that is in his power.

Argum. 3. Luk. 17. 10. When you haue done all those things which are commanded you, We are vnprofitable seruants, and did nothing but that which was our dutie to doe: Ergo, we are bound to doe all things that are to be done, and we cannot doe that which we ought, much lesse more then we ought to doe, Martyris argument.

Bellarmino answereth: First, Christ saith, when you haue done all which I commanded you, which I counsell'd you.

Answ. As though the argument followeth not strongly: you cannot doe the lesse, that is, keep my commaundements, therefore you cannot do the more, that is, speaking now (as the Iesuite doth) the Counsels of perfection, which are more then the precepts. It is a precept of necessity to dispense our goods to the vse of the poore; it is a counsell of perfection, as they say, to giue all away to the poore: But if a man cannot performe the first, that is, keeping his goods to vse them aright, much lesse is he able with a resolute minde to giue them all away.

Secondly, he answereth: Christ biddeth them to say so, as shewing their humilitie, not that they were indeede vnprofitable seruants. A poore shift, as though Christ enuied the good of his seruants, or would obscure their wel-doing, and doth not rather aduance it to the vttermost, and make the most of the seruicible workes of his children, as wee see, Matth. 25. 34. And Christ being a faithfull Prophet, would not surely deceiue his Disciples, and tell them one thing, and himselfe know and thinke another. Some answered in Bernards time to this place, as the Iesuite now doth: Hoc (inquies) propter humilitatem Christi monuit dicendum esse: Christ onely would haue v thus to speake, namely, that wee are vnprofitable seruants, to shew our humilitie. He answered, Placet propter humilitatem, sed nunquid contra veritatem: You say true, for humilitie, but not against the veritie, de triplici castro serm. So likewise was it decreed, Council. Milenitan. can. 6. Placet, quod ait S. Iohannes, si dixerimus, quod peccatum non habemus, nos ipsos seducimus, &c. quisquis se iniquum putat, ut dicat propter humanitatem non oportere dici nos non habere peccatum, non quia verum est, anathema sit: Whereas S. Iohn saith, If we say we haue no sinne, wee deceiue our selues, &c. Who soeuer thinketh it is so to be vnderstood, that for humanitie sake it becommeth vs not to say that we haue no sinne, not because the truth is so indeede, let him be accursed. But these Frierlike words and smoake of Locusts, are not able to dimme the cleere light of this Scripture, which sheweth, that when we haue done all we can doe, we come farre short of our dutie.

Argum. 4. Bellarmino the better to perswade that there are certaine Euangelicall counsells beside precepts, setteth downe certaine differences betweene them, cap. 7. which differences if they shall appeare to be none, then precepts and counsells shall be all one.

1 His first difference is, in respect of the matter, precepts (saith he) are more easily kept; but counsells more hardly and with greater difficultie.

Contra. It is an harder matter to loue our enemies, then for a man to giue all his goods to the poore: and therefore the loue of Christ is set forth to be the most excellent kinde of loue, because he died for his enemies, Rom. 5. 8. But the first is a precept of perfection, as Bellarmino confesseth, Matth. 5. 48. the other a counsell of perfection, Matth. 19. 21. confessed also by Bellarmino: Ergo, a precept is more difficult then a counsell.

2 The second difference in respect of the subject: a precept is general, prescribed to all; a counsell is particular, belonging onely to some, Bellarmino, ibid.

Contra.

THE THIRD QUESTION, CONCERNING

vowes in generall.

This question hath three parts: first, whether it be lawfull for Christians to make vowes. Secondly, in what things lawfull vowes consist. Thirdly, whether voluntarie vowes be any part of the worship and service of God.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER VOWES PER-

tained onely to the old law, and are not now permitted vnto Christians.

The Papists.

85. Error.

They hold it as lawfull, and as free a thing for Christians to binde themselves by vowes vnto God, as it was vsed and practised of the Iewes in the time of the law.

Argum. 1. Isai. 19. 21. They shall know the Lord in that day, and doe sacrifices and oblations; and vowes vnto God and performe them. This propheticke is concerning Christians, which should in the time of the Gospell make vowes vnto God, Bellarm. cap. 17.

Ans. The Prophet doth, by the externall service of God vsed in the Church at that time, set forth the spiritual worship of God in the Church of Christ: for Iewish vowes shall be no more then in force, then their sacrifices and oblations. Also vers. 19. the Prophet saith, that an Altar shall be set vp in Egypt: and vers. 18. They shall speake the language of Canaan: But these things were not literally, but mystically performed, neither is it necessarie the other should be so.

Argum. 2. Psalme 76. 11. For vnto God and performe: Ergo, vowes now are lawfull, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. It appeareth by the text, that it was a commandement vnto the Iewes, and for that time for it followeth, All ye that are round about him: that is, the Levites and Priests that dwelt round about the temple. And bring presents to him that ought to be feared. But now Christians bring no such externall presents and gifts, therefore it cannot be properly vnderstood of them. This appeareth also by the beginning of the Psalme, that this charge appertained to the Iewes: in vna God is knowne in Iuda, and vers. 2. in Salem is his tabernacle &c. Therefore while the tabernacle continued in Salem, and God was worshipped onely in Iuda, so long vowes were in force.

Argum. 3. Vowes did not take beginning from Moses; for Isaac vowed, Genes. 28. therefore neither are they to cease with Moses, Bellarm. cap. 17.

Contra. First, the Argument followeth not, for there were altars and sacrifices before the law; yet they wil not say, that they must remaine still after the law of ceremonies determined. Secondly, such a vow, as Isaac made, is lawfull for Christians to make still; for he voweth, that the Lord shall be his God: the yow then of obedience, and of more strict serving of God is commendable in Christians. And as for the yow of tubes, Isaac maketh it; not as it were in it selfe a principall service of God, but as a signe of the worship of God and obedience, which he vowed.

The Protestants.

We doe not condemne all vowes, neither denie, but that a Christian in some cases may vow, as presently it followeth to be shewed: but Iewish vowes are vtterly unlawfull, such as the vowes of the Nazarites were, Numb. 6. as to abstaine from wine and strong drinke, not to shauie their haire, and such like: if we place religion in such vowes.

Argum. 1. Their vowes were ceremonious, and consisted in externall rites, which were shadowes and significations of spirituall things: as not to cut their haire, not to touch any dead thing, to abstaine from wine and strong drinke. But all shadowes are now gone and abolished: and such externall vsages are vnprofitable, as were those precepts of the false Apostles, Touch not, taste not, handle not: which all perish with the vsing, and are the commandements of men, as S. Paul saith Coloss. 2. 21, 22. Such precepts notwithstanding, Monkes and Friars at this day doe binde themselves vnto: for it is not lawfull for them to touch siluer, nor to taste flesh; according to the strict and superstitious rules of their patrones. The Apostles reason standeth thus, religion consisteth not in any thing, that perisheth with the vse: but vowes not to taste, not to touch, not to handle, perish in the vse; Ergo, there is no religion in such vowes.

Argum. 2. It was ordained in Moses law, Leuit. 27. 26 that no man should vow vnto the Lord the first-borne, for it was the Lords already: From whence this argument may bee drawne, that which is the Lords already, cannot be vowed vnto him: but wee see Christ, 1. Cor. 3. 11 and all that we haue, vers. 21. Wherefore it is a superfluous thing to vow any thing, which wee haue, in therein placing the service of God; seeing already we are deuoted to Gods service. If it beheret obiection, that by the same reason neither was it lawfull for the Iewes to offer any thing at all, because the earth is the Lords; and all things therein, Psalm. 24; they should offer vnto God of his owne. I answer, that it is true all the earth was the Lords in right of the creation; but the first-borne were due in a second right of their deliuerance and redemption from Egypt; and so wee in respect of our spirituall deliuerance are bound to serue God all the daies of our life, Luk. 1. 74. And therefore it is no more in our power to vow or be vowed vnto God, then it was lawfull for the Iewes to dedicate their first-borne.

Argum. Saint Paul saith, He that is circumcised is bound to keepe the whole law, Galat. 3. 10. He that keepeth any one ceremonie of the law; doth make himselfe a seruant to the whole law; for if after the profession of the Nazarites, they will vow not to drinke wine, not to shau their heads, hereby the better to please God; why are they not also purified; and bring an offering according to the law, as Paul did; who because of the infirmities of the Iewes, was agreed with foure other men which had a vow, to be purified according to the law. But this Saint Paul did being amongst the Iewes, who cried out against him as a breaker of the law, least he should bee scandalous vnto them. Hence also we reason thus; that which S. Paul did for that time to auoid offence; namely, to be purified with them that had a vow, is not now lawfull for the people of God to doe, as Act. 21. 23. Wee haue determined concerning the Gentiles, that they obserue no such thing. Ergo, it is not lawfull now after the manner of the Iewes to make a vow.

Augustine thus notably writeth concerning this matter: Sicut defuncta corpora necessarium est sepeli deducenda erant quodammodo ad sepulchrum, non deferenda continuo, vel sicut canibus prostranda. The ceremonies of the law (saith he) were not presently to be cast off, but as dead bodies must be brought to the graue with some seemely pompe of their friends, and not to bee cast vnto dogges. Thus he saith, that in the Apostles time all Iewish ceremonies were not in act abolished, though they were alreadie as dead carcases, that is, by right deprived of life: yet they required some space to be honourably laid downe, and as it were buried. But whosoever would now goe about to renew the Iewish ceremonies againe (saith he) Tanquam sepulchri cineres eruent, non prius deducuntur vel huius corporis, sed impium sepulchra violator. He should as it were rake in dead menis ashes; and not bee a seemely bringer of the bodie to the ground; but a wicked violator of Christian buriall: Euen so Augustine maketh it as wicked a part, to bring in vfe any Iewish rites, as to pull one; honestly buried, out of his graue.

There is a rule in the Ciuill law, Cod. lib. 7. tit. 6. leg. 1. Iustinian. Absurdum est, ipsa origine vel sublata, eiu imaginem relinqui. It is absurd, the originall being remoued; the image or resemblance to remaine still. According to this rule, seeing that the Iewish ceremonies are ceased, it is not fit that Iudaicall vowes should haue any place in the Church.

The Canon law also saith, Vmbra legis euauuit, illuxit veritas Euangelij. The shadow of the law is vanished, and the light of the Gospel hath shined; decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 47. c. 1. Vpon which ground Innocentius 3. decreeth, the law of Moses, concerning the purifying of women, not to be in force; of the which nature also is the law of vowes.

To this agreeth the ordinarie glosse, de 4. Concil. Primitiua Ecclesia. Modus colendi Deū per externos ritus & ceremonias legis, quia hec fuerunt vmbra Christi tum venturi & mysteriorum eius, tales adiunctione veritate Euangelica illicita facta sunt, & euauerunt. The manner of worshipping God by external rites and ceremonies of the law, because these were a shadow of Christ to come and of his mysteries, the truth of the Gospell being come are made vnlawfull, and are vanished away. But vowes are a part of the external and ceremonious worship of God. Ergo.

Master Tindall holy Martyr, hath sealed this truth: Vowes are against the ordinance of God: let them shew where these vowes in all the new Testament be ordained of God, especially such vowes of single life and wilfull pouertie, &c. Fox pag. 1250. col. 1. articul. 3.

THE SECOND PART, WHAT THINGS MAY

lawfully bee vowed by Christians, and whether baptisme be properly a vow.

The Papists.

They hold that the proper vowes of Christians are voluntarie, not of such things which Christians are bound in dutie to doe, but of such as they may leaue vndone, if they will; such as are their popish vowes of continencie and voluntarie, or rather wilfull pouertie. Argum. 1. Deuteron. 23. When thou shalt vow a vow vnto God, thou shalt not be slacke to pay it: it should be sine vnto thee: but when thou abstainest from vowing, it shall bee no sine vnto thee. By this the Iesuite proneth, that the vowes of Christians are voluntarie, and not of necessarie duties, for if were sine to leaue any thing vndone, that we are in dutie bound vnto, cap. 19. And hereupon he inferreth, that the promise made in baptisme is no vow, because it is necessarie.

Ans. First, we denie not but that the Iewes had voluntarie vowes, and might binde themselves by vow to performe many things, which being not vowed, it was no sinne to leaue vndone: As the Nazarites-vowes concerning abstinence from wine and strong drinke; which things other might lawfully vse without sinne, if they were not professed Nazarites. But these ceremonial lawes do nothing appertaine to Christians.

Secondly, it may also be vnderstood of necessarie vowes, which we are bound vnto of dutie, and then the sense is this: If you abstayne from vowing ye sinne not, that is, not so hainously as after the vow made; as Pagans and infidels do sinne in transgressing Gods Law: but a Christian sinneth more after publike profession and promise made of obedience vnto Gods commandements.

Thus our Saviour Christ saith of the Iewes If I had not come, and spoken vnto them, they should haue had no sinne, Iohn 15. v. 22. that is, in comparison their sinne of ignorance should haue been none in respect of their sinne, which they haue now: so his sinne, that bindeth not himselfe to the obedience of Gods commandements, is not like to his sinne, that hath bound himselfe, and yet transgressed.

Argum. 2. The Iesuite would thus also proue the promise made in Baptisme to be no vow. The vowes of children vttered by their parents, are not ratified but by them, in whose name they were made, when they come to yeeres of discretion: but the promise made in Baptisme doth bind children, whether they will or not: Ergo, it is no vow.

Ans. First, if this reason proue any thing, it concerneth onely the baptisme of infants, so that the promise made in the Baptisme of those, which are adulti, already come to yeeres of discretion, shall be a vow, whatsoever Billermine saith to the contrary; for they euen when they are baptized are able to giue consent vnto the vow and promise then and there made. Secondly, it is vnttrue, that the vowes of the parents made in the name of their children, do not absolutely binde for vnder the law euen in ceremonial vowes vttered by the parents, the children were bound: as 1. Sam. 1. 11. Amay oweth to God, that a rasor shal not come vpon her sonnes head; which vow was accordingly kept in her sonne: Ierem. 35. 6. Iouadab iniointed his sonnes, that neither they nor their seede for euer, should drinke any wine, or strong drinke; and they obeyed without any gainsay- ing or resistance. Thirdly, but concerning necessarie dutie, the children are bound to keepe their parents vowes and covenant made with God: as Iesus made a promise for himselfe and his, I and my house will serue the Lord, Iosua 24. 15. And if in ciuil matters the parents may bind their children absolutely to the covenant, which they make, as Ionathan and Dauid made a covenant for them and their seed, 1. Sam. 20. 42. much more this spirituall covenant bindeth, being grounded vpon the ordinance and commandement of God: notwithstanding all that hath been said, the promise made in Baptisme shall be a vow still.

Argum. 3. It is both vnprofitable and superfluous for a man to vow to do that, to the which he is bound already; but in Baptisme we promise obedience vnto God, which we are bound to do by the law: Ergo, it is superfluous to seeke to tie our selues with new bonds, and consequently it should be a superfluous vow. Bellarm. cap. 19. argum. 5.

Ans. First, if this reason proue any thing, it seemeth to conclude, that it is superfluous for any promise to be made in Baptisme, as well as a vow, seeing we are already bound to serue God by the law of Creation. Secondly, neither is it superfluous to vow, more strictly to do that, which we are bound to do; for a double bond bindeth more strongly then one, and as the wise man saith, a threefold cord cannot be broken, Ecclesiast. 4. So Iacob vowed that the Lord should be his God, Gen. 28. which notwithstanding was couenanted before in his circumcision. Thirdly, there is a common bond, which bindeth all men, namely the law of Creation; but as God hath his peculiar people, so is there a peculiar bond to tie them vnto God, namely, their deliue- rance by Christ, which is professed in Baptisme: as before the commandements, God doth moue his people to obedience, not because he created them, but for that he brought them out of the house of bondage. Fourthly, if two bonds are superfluous, wherefore then doth the Lord by two immutable things, his word and his oath confirme his promises to vs, Hebr. 6. 18? let him say also that one of them is superfluous.

The Protestants.

WE hold that to vow is not a thing simply forbidden Christians: but our vowes are limited and restrained: for they are either such, as directly or immediatly are referred to the worship of God, whereby we binde our selues more streightly to serue him: and such vowes are onely of such things as are commanded, and necessarily to be done: and in this sense there is but one common vow of all Christians, and that is our solemn promise made in Baptisme, which the Papists deny properly to be a vow, Bellarm. cap. 19. There is another kinde of vowes, that directly concerneth not the worship of God, which may be of things not commanded, of the which we will intreat in the next section. Now wee are to proue, that Baptisme is the onely proper vow of Christians, which directly toucheth the seruice and worship of God.

Argument 1. Circumcision was a generall vow of the Jewes, for thereby they bound themselves to keepe the whole law, Galath. 3. 12. Ergo, Baptisme is the vow of Christians, which cometh in the place of circumcision. And againe, it appeareth by this, that because Christians transgressing, do deserve greater punishment, then Jewes or Gentiles, that they are more streightly obliged and bound by their covenant vnto God then the others and not onely, as the Iesuits saith, because they haue tasted more of the goodnesse of God, and so are more enthusiasticall; for there are two parts of the covenant betwixt God and vs: The Lord saith, Thou art my people; and so inioyneth them with knowledge, and every good thing; The people say, Thou art my God, Hos. 1. 2. 3. And thus as the Lord doth covenant with them, so they do binde themselves vnto God: The breach of which covenant, is that which stirreth vp principally the anger of God against vs. Item 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.

Argument 2. A vow is that, whereby any thing is giuen vnto God: as Psalm 119. 106. I haue sworn vnto God, which the Scripture calleth a vow: but in Baptisme we are giuen vnto God: Rom 6. 13. Give your selves vnto God, seeing you are alive from the dead: namely by the power of Christs resurrection represented in Baptisme: as the Apostle sheweth vers 4. Ergo, in Baptisme we doe vow ourselves vnto God. Item 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.

Argument 3. An oath bindeth as well as a vow, if not more, before God; Psalm 119. 106. I haue sworn vnto God, which the Scripture calleth a vow: but in Baptisme we are giuen vnto God: Rom 6. 13. Give your selves vnto God, seeing you are alive from the dead: namely by the power of Christs resurrection represented in Baptisme: as the Apostle sheweth vers 4. Ergo, in Baptisme we doe vow ourselves vnto God. Item 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.

Argument 4. The Master also of the sentences confesseth, that the common vow of Christians is made in Baptisme, namely to renounce the diuell, and in the same place, he thus expoundeth that place 1 Tim 5. They haue broken their first faith; which Beletapine expoundeth of vowes cap 17. Argument 3. this is, sayth he, votum, vel fides, quam in Baptismo professa sunt. Their vow or faith, which they profess in Baptisme. Item 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.

THE THIRD PART, CONCERNING VOLUNTARIE VOWES, whether they be any part of the worship of God.

The Papists. Item 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.

Dd 3

XUM

Secondly, David did vow that, which he was bound to doe being King of Israel, namely, to have a care of the temple of God: for thus he saith to Nathan the Prophet, I dwell in an house of Cedar trees; but the Ark of God remaineth within the curtaines, 2 Sam. 7:2. This belonged to the King of duties, as it was generally commanded all Israel; Hagg. 1:4. but that David was discharged of this care, by the especiall warrant of God by the Prophet.

Argum. 2. Heb. 13:16. To doe good and to distribute forget not, for with such sacrifices God is pleased. Intelligitur (saith Beellarminus) de elemosina non preceptum: which is vnderstood of almes not commanded: And if God be pleased with every vertuous act, yea done without a vow, in things not commanded; much more where a vow is.

Ans. First, it is a most grosse and absurd saying, that there can be any vertuous act not commanded in Scripture: the Apostle speaketh contrarie, 2 Timoth. 3:17. that the man of God by the Scriptures is made perfect to all good workes. Ergo, all good workes are prescribed in Scripture. Secondly, it is also untrue, that there are almes deedes not commanded, seeing that in every place, it is an expresse charge and commandement of the Apostle, To do good and to distribute.

Argum. 3. To keepe promise or faith giuen vnto God, is properly to serue God; a vow is promise made vnto God: Ergo, Beellar. ibid.

Ans. By a vow or promise made vnto God of that which is not lawfull, is no worshipping of God, but rather a dishonouring of him, as may appear in the vow of Iephtha, of the which Ambrosius thus writeth: Adhuc fuit nihil tale promittere, quam promissum patricidis solvere: he had bin better neuer to haue vowed or promised any such thing, then with parricide to perform his promise. ib. 1. de offic. 10.

Argum. 4. An oath euen in a thing not commanded, is the worship of God; as to sweare not to drinke wine; and so consequently a vow also. Beellar. ibid. 2. 16. argum. 3.

Ans. The consequence or dependance of this argument I willingly yeeld vnto, hauing agreed before against the Suite himselfe (I would say Iesuites) for an oath and a vow may be well compared together: but an oath, such as the Iesuite speaketh of, is not acceptable to God: First, because an oath is appointed to make an end of strife betweene men, Hebr. 6:16. not to determine matters betweene God and vs; men sweare by God; not so properly to God. Secondly, neither is it pleasing to God to bind those things with an oath absolutely, which are not in our owne power; as not to drinke wine, seeing his infirmitie may cause him to drinke it, as S. Paul counselleth Timoth. 1:3. Thirdly, yet an oath in these externall matters, doth not verily or properly belong to the worship of God, though in some sort may be referred vnto it, as now followeth to be shewed.

The Protestants.

Warrant that there are other kinds of vowes then before wee spake of, which doe not directly concerne the worship of God; neither are of thinges commanded vs, nor yet God thereby the better pleased: but they serue onely as helpees, to make vs more fit vnto Christian duties: As a man that feeth he is by nature giuen to drunkenness, doth vow that he will take no strong drinke, lest he should offend that way: Another purposeth to fast, thereby to tame his flesh, and the more seruently to pray; as Iob made a covenant with his eyes not to look vpon a maide, 31:1. But these thinges of themselves, by the outward act, are not the more acceptable vnto God, neither is God by eating or not eating, or looking or not looking, the better worshipped, as these thinges are considered in themselves. Wherefore by the word of God we condemne all voluntarie and superstitious vowes of men, inuented to serue God by, as vowes of chastitie, of going in pilgrimage, offering to Images, and such like.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul condemneth all voluntarie worship of God which is inuented by man, as vnprofitable, though it haue a shew of wisdom in humblenes of minde, and not sparing the bodie, Coloss. 2:23. As such are the ordinances of the world in worshipping of Angels, and in abstinence, Tachmat, fasti, abstinentie: But such are all popish vowes, a voluntarie seruice of God, euen in the same thinges which the Apostle taketh exception against; for they make vowes to Angels, to Saints, vowes to keep dayes holy, and to fast in them: Ergo, they are vnlawful.

Argum. 2. Rom. 14:23. Whatsoeuer is not of faith, is sin, that is, grounded vpon knowledge out of the word: Ergo, all voluntarie vowes made to serue God by, are to be abandoned, because they haue no warrant out of Gods word. Beellar. answereth, that this place is not so to be vnderstood, but rather, by faith, is meant the conscience of man, and so whatsoeuer is done against the conscience is sinne.

Ans. By faith, is not vnderstood any conscience, but the assurance of a right conscience, which must needs be builded vpon the word: for ver. 22. S. Paul saith, If thou hast faith, haue it with God: This cannot be spoken of a corrupt conscience which is not able to abide Gods triall, but a right conscience established out of the word.

Thus

Thus Bernard expoundeth this place: De fide verum non falsa puto dicisse Apostolum: fides non in fide perorationem, quia fides falsa, fides non est. I thinke the Apostle spake of a true, not a false faith; saying, what is not of faith is sinne; for a false faith, is no faith: lib. de dispensatione.

Argum. 3. To mortifie the bodie, and to be renewed in the minde, is the reasonable that is, the true and proper service of God: but the mortifying of the flesh, and change of the minde consisteth not in meate or drinke or any such externall thing. Ergo, therein standeth not the true service of God: And so the Apostle also euidentlie saith, Ad ea que sunt mundi non acceptabile vultu Dei, for as much as we eate haue we the more; or if we eate not haue we the lesse, &c. 1. Cor. 8. 8. The Apostle reasoneth thus: that, which being vsed bringeth no rewarde, not vsed procureth no losse, doeth not make vs acceptable to God: for the neglecting or not vsing of those things, wherein Gods seruice standeth is damnable: but the not vsing of meates and drinckes and such like is not damnable. Ergo, therein standeth not Gods seruice.

Argum. 4. Let vs heare Augustines iudgement: Sunt multi qui veniunt, &c. There are many that come, one a cloake, another oyle, another a wake, candle, another that he will drinke no wine, another that he will fast, another that he will eate no flesh. This is not the best kind of coming: God neither careth for thy comely apparell; nor for thy oyle, nor for thy fasting: but offer that vnto him which he hath redeemed, that is, thy soule; De tempor. ser. 7. We see by this what account Augustine maketh of superstitious voluntarie vowes, made with an intent to please God thereby. Concl. Arastiane. 2. can. 11. Nemo quicquam Deo vouerit, nisi ab ipso acceptis, sicut legitur quia de tunc tu accepimus damus tibi. 1. Paralipom. 29. 14. Let no man vow vnto God any thing, vntill he haue receiued it, as wee reade, those things which we haue receiued at thy hand; we give thee. Therefore no man can make a vowe of chastitie vnto God, nor of any other gift not in his owne power.

See also the rules of your owne lawes: Decret. Grigor. lib. 1. tit. 7. c. 13. Innocent. Q. ad mon. est sancti romani patris decreto: sanctum non, superstitiosis non est adiunctionibus presumendum: That which is not established by the decree of the holy Fathers, must not by superstitious inuentions be presumed: If that be superstition, which is not decreed by the Fathers, how much more that, which is not warranted by Scripture: And as it followeth in the same place: Nomineque inrelligatur prohibendum, quod non inuenerit concessum: That we vnderstand to be prohibited, which is found not to be granted. Wherefore by this rule all voluntarie vowes of things not commaunded or granted in Scripture, are held to be prohibited.

Iames Bainham holy Martyr: The vowes of chastitie, and all goodnes are giuen of God, by his angelicall graces, which no man of himselfe can keepe, but it must be giuen him of God. Pax. pag. 102. B. col. 1.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, CONCERNING Monasticall vowes in particular.

There are three kinds of vowes which belong vnto Monkerie: the first is the vowe of voluntarie pouertie: the second the vowe of obedience vnto the Monasticall presidents and gouernours: the third is the vowe of continencie: of these three in order.

THE FIRST PART, CONCERNING THE vowe of voluntarie pouertie.

The Papists.

They say it is an acceptable seruice vnto God; for a man to giue all he hath to the poore, and by vowe to consecrate and addiect himselfe to voluntarie pouertie. 87. Error.

Argum. 1. Matth. 18. 21. Christ saith, If thou wilt be perfect, goe and sell all thou hast, and giue it to the poore, and come and follow me: This is properly to follow Christ, to lacke proprietie and liue in common; and thus the Apostles followed Christ, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. First, this is a precept not general to all, but giuen to this one man to discouer his hypocrisie, and vaine confidence that he had in himselfe; as though he had kept the law, which he carrie farre short of. Secondly, the Apostles themselves had proprietie: Peter had a house: Iohn had to prouide for the Virgin Maria, whom Christ commended vnto him: Matthew made a feast of his owne goods, Pax. ibid.

Argum. 2. Act. 2. 44. They had all things common: and Act. 5. Ananias and Sapphira, after their profession of common life, detaining some part proper to themselves, were reproued and iudged of the Apostles: Ergo, it is acceptable to God to liue in common, Rhemist. ibid. Bellarm. cap. 20.

Ans. First, that communitie vsed then amongst the brethren, ought alwaies to be among Christians, no man to count that his owne, which the necessitie of his brother requirerh to be bestowed flowed vpon him. Thus also witnesseth Klement in his Decretal, canon. 12. qu. 1. c. 9. Scilicet uoluntate generare. etc. We know you are not ignorant that hitherto a common life hath flourished amongst all Christians, and yet by Gods grace doth flourish. Neither was euery man then bound to giue vp the proprietie of their goods: for they distributed to euery man as they had neede, Act. 4. 37. But if they had giue vp all the proprietie of their goods, then all should haue needed alike: And Peter saith not the contrarie, but that Ananias might haue kept the proprietie of his goods, if he had not made publicke profession to the contrary, Act. 5. 4.

2. Your owne law giuech another reason of that communie among the Apostles, childe. 19.
Enturnam ecclesiam. etc. The Apostles did foresee that the Church should bee amongst the Gentiles and therefore they would not haue any possessions in Iudea, but tooke the price onely for the reliefe of the poore.

3. Concerning Ananias, wee doe not reade that he made any vow to giue his goods to the Church: nay the contrarie appeareth, in that Saint Peter saith, While it remained with thee, appertained it not to thee? But if his vow were past before, the goods, though yet not sold, could not appertaine vnto him. Again, the principall and chiefe cause, why Peter proceeded against him, was his lying and hypocrisie, not for breaking his vow: for it cannot be proved that he promised all, but that he affirmed that he brought all, whereas he withdrew part.

Argum. 3. Our Saviour Christ saith, Blessed are the poore in spirit, Math. 5. 3. that in such as willingly make themselves poore: for so did our Saviour Christ, who both in action and affection was poore, and did as he taught. And Luke 6. 24. There is a wee denounced to the rich in this world. So that by the contrarie the blessing is vpon the poore, Bellarmin. cap. 20.

Ans. First it is euident, that Christ speaketh not of outward pouertie, but of the humilitie of the mind: first, because it is so expresse, blessed are the poore in spirit. Secondly, the Prophet Dauid in the same sense saith, I am poore, Psalm. 26. 16. yet was he King, and abounded in riches. Thirdly,
Math. 11. 11. the poore receive the Gospel; yet were they not all poore in substance: that receiue Christ, as Nicodemus, Ioseph of Arimathea, Zachary. Now to answer likewise to his proofes:
 First, where Christ saith, was vnto the rich, he meaneth not all rich men, but such as trusted in their riches: for such onely are excluded the kingdome of heauen, Mark. 10. 24. Secondly, it is euident that Christ did professe voluntarie pouertie, as your owne Extrauagant hath decreed, that it is an heresie so to affirme: for Christ had both money, and a bagge for the almes of the poore, Luca. 12.
tit. 14. c. 5.

The Protestants.

Voluntarie, or rather wilfull pouertie, for a man hauing no vrgent cause, to leave all he hath and bequeath himselfe to a poore and needie life, onely for opinion of greater merite, and hope thereby better to please God, is neither a thing acceptable nor commendable before God, nor any where commaunded in the Scriptures.

Argum. 1. 1. Timoth. 6. 17. Saint Paul giuing counsell to richmen, biddeth them not to cast away their riches: but charge them (saith he) that they be not high minded, nor put their trust in uncer- taine riches. Surely it had been a more compendious way to wish them at once to leave their riches, so they should not be in daunger, either of pride, or vaine confidence: but the Apostle saith no such thing. Again, God giuech vs abundantly all things to enjoy: riches are the gift of God, wee ought not to be wearie of Gods blessing. And as Iob saith, The Lord giuech, the Lord taketh: therefore a man ought not to make himselfe poore, because he made not himselfe rich, but to waite vpon God.

Further it followeth, vers. 18. that they doe good, and be rich in good workes: he that can vs riches well, may bee rich in good workes: but he that is poore, wanteth occasion and means to doe good, as the rich man indued with grace may: wherefore he is an enemy to the glorie of God, that changeth his rich estate, wherein he may more glorifie God, for a poore.

Again, if it were so acceptable a thing to God, and so meritorious to liue in pouertie, what made the Prophet to pray against it? Giue me not pouertie nor riches, but feede me with fode commu- nium. Prou. 30. vers. 8.

Argum. 2. What better argument can wee haue against them, then their owne practise? for, though in words they much commend voluntarie pouertie, yet it is a rare thing to finde it amongst them: for not one among a thousand of them, if they haue lands, doe giue them to the poore, but to their owne kinsfolkes, or else to the Abbeyes, where they know they shall be wealthily maintained. The Pope also is good to many, and granteth them capacities to possesse tem-porall goods, contrary to their former vow.

Argum. 3. The Wiseman praeth vnto God, Giue me not pouertie, least I bee poore, and studie and take the name of God in vaine. Prouerbs 31. 8. 9. From this place two arguments may bee drawne: That which may lawfully be praied against, is not willingly to bee desired: pouertie may bee prayed against; therefore it is not to bee purposely sought. Again, no man is willingly

lingly to runne into temptation; but pouertie is a temptation to steale, and to take Gods name in vaine: Ergo, &c.

Augustine saith, Dimittis seculares si desist, non per opera mala quarantur in mundo: Si autem adfuerit, per opera bona firmantur in caelo: Epist. 1. posterius. If secular riches be wanting, let not a man seeke to get them by euill doing in the world: but if he haue them, labour, by well doing, to store them vp in heauen. He counselleth not men to cast away their riches: It was the heresie of the Pelagians to perswade rich men to cast away their goods, August. epist. 106. and of the Manichees likewise, August. cont. Faustum. lib. 5. cap. 10.

Concil. Cabilonis. sub. Carol. cap. 6. Imputatur quibusdam fratribus, &c. Certaine brethren are charged, that for conetousnes they perswade men, that renouncing the world, they should giue their substance to the Church, which practise should be rooted out of all mindes: for the pastor should seeke the saluation of mens soules, not earthly comenoditie: because Christians must not be compelled to giue their substance, &c. But I pray you, if it were a thing so meritorious and healthfull for the soule to giue all away, why should not men be perswaded and allured thereunto?

Let vs see the Imperiall constitutions: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. leg. 11. Valentinian. By this law it is made lawfull for women professed (who are now called Nunnes) to make their willes and testaments, and to leaue to what vses they thought good. Likewise, tit. 6. leg. 42. the sonne, though a professed Monke, may succede his father in his inheritance, Iustinian. It should seeme then, that in those daies the vow of voluntarie pouertie was not practised amongst those ancient Monkes.

Their owne Canons also doe helpe vs in this matter: Decret. p. 1. dist. 30. c. 16. Divites, &c. We doe not reiect rich men hauing good workes. Again, Caus. 12. qu. 1. c. 25. Sine peccato possideant sua, &c. They that are professed, may without sinne possesse their owne. Caus. 16. qu. 1. c. 68. In pauperibus, &c. We must not in the poore so much consider their pouertie, as their religion: Ergo, pouertie of it selfe by your owne law is not meritorious.

And yet more evidently, whereas the order of S. Francis was bound to voluntarie pouertie, it being not lawfull for them to touch any money, nor yet to haue propertie or dominion in any thing, but in the simple vse onely, as may appeare by the constitution of Pope Nicholas, sect. decret. lib. 5. tit. 12. c. 3. after ward cometh Iohn 22. who determineth the contrarie, shewing that, in rebus consumptilibus, in things which consume in the vse, as meate, drinke, apparell, the vse could not be seuered from the propertie: for then the vse may be seuered from the propertie, when there ariseth some profit by the vse, (salua rei substantia) the substance being preserued, but in vsing of meate and drinke, the substance also is consumed: And so he concludeth, that the said order had not only the vse, but the propertie also in the said things; and so consequently it may be inferred, that where a property remained, there could be no resolute pouertie, Extr. tit. 1. c. 5.

The said Iohn 22. condemned them for heretikes, who affirmed that Christ and his Apostles had nothing proper, Extr. tit. 1. c. 5. If neither Christ nor his Apostles entered into this rule of perfection, nor did betake themselves to voluntarie pouertie, shall any man now strine to bee more perfect then they?

Iohn Lambert (holy Martyr) sheweth what voluntarie pouertie is required of Christians, and how that precept of our Sauour, goe and sell all that thou hast, &c. may be fulfilled, for he hath sold (saith he) all that euer he had, that can finde in his heart to depart from it, when God shall please, or charitie so requireth: Voluntas reputatur pro facto, the will is accepted for the deede, &c. Ex pag. 1110.

THE SECOND PART, CONCERNING the vowe of obedience.

The Papists.

They that doe enter into the Monkish profession, doe vow in all things to become obedient to their gouernour, and to follow his rules and iniunctions: as the Franciscans follow Saint Francis rule, who in stead of a girdle, put a corde about him, went bare-foote, in winter season couered his flesh with yce and snow. It is acceptable, and gratefull seruice, say they, vnto God, to be thus obedient to their fathers and gouernours. 88. Error. Fox. pag. 359.

1 Ierem. 35. The sonnes of Ioudab are commended, for being obedient to their father, who iniointed them to drinke no wine, nor to sow their fields, nor builde houses but dwell in tents: Thus they obeyed their father in things not commanded of God: Ergo, so ought religious Monkes to doe, Bel. rom. cap. 21.

Answe. First, you cannot shew that your monkish Abbots haue such authoritie ouer their Monkes, as the father hath ouer his children: for Coloss. 3. and in many other places, children are commaunded to bee obedient to their parents: but the other haue neither authoritie nor calling out of the word. Also S. Paul saith, Coloss. 3. Sentes obey your parents in all things: Wherefore Ioudabs

dab children did no more, then was commanded. Bellarmino answereth, that children are bound onely to obey their parents while they are little ones, and not afterward: as the Apostle saith, that the heire, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a seruant, Galath. 4. 1.

Contra. First, a childe while he is yong is more in subiection, then afterward: for he is then kept in awe as a seruant; but when he cometh to yeeres of discretion, he is still held as a sonne: and this to bee the meaning of the Apostle appeareth by the application of this comparison; that enen so we seruants, were kept vnder the bondage of the rudiments of the world, and ceremonies of the law, but by the redemption of Christ haue received the adoption of sonnes. Secondly, and that sonnes, euen when they come to mens estate, must be obedient to their parents, appeareth by the sonnes of Eli, 1. Sam. 2. who is both punished for not chastising his sonnes, and they likewise for not hearing their father. We see then what goodly stuffe this popish doctrine is, that teacheth children to cast off the yoke of obedience to their parents.

Secondly, Sonadab inioyned nothing contrarie to the law of the Nazarites, Numb. 6. And if you say, that it was not the custome of the Nazarites to dwell in tents; you shall finde that the Rechabites did not so streightly obserue this, as the other, namely not to drinke wine: for Ierem. 35. ver. 11. they came vp for feare of the Chaldeans that were in the land, and dwelt at Ierusalem; they dispensed with the voluntarie inunction of their father, for dwelling in their tents, but kept the other vow of abstaining from wine still, because it was after the law. Wherefore this example maketh not for Monkish obedience, seeing they are inioyned things not commaunded by God, nay contrarie to his commaundements.

Argum. 1. Our Saviour saith, He that will follow me, must denie himselfe, Matth. 16. but this small consisteth in the vow of obedience made to another: for then a man doth denie himselfe, when he is bound by vow to obey; and not sometime to obey, sometime not to obey at his pleasure, Bellarmino ibid.

Ans. First, then by this reason, none can be followers of Christ, vnlesse they will be Monks: for the words of our Saviour are generall of all, that will follow him. Secondly, to bee a follower of Christ; and a follower of men, are contrarie: for the Apostle saith, If I should please men, I woude more be seruant of Christ, Galat. 1. 10. Wherefore they which addict themselves by their superstitious obedience to please men, are not the seruants of Christ, but of men.

The Protestants.

NO obedience to any ruler either spirituall or temporall is to bee yeilded vnto, but for the Lords sake, & in such matters, wherein we haue the warrant of Gods word for our obedience.

1. Coloff. 3. 23. Seruants bee obedient to your masters, and what soeuer you doe, doe it heartily as to the Lord. But if any thing be inioyned vs which is not warranted by the word of God, we cannot with a good conscience obey as before the Lord. Againe, S. Paul saith, Coloff. 2. 18. Let no man take pleasure to beare rule ouer you, or bequile you: or as the Rhemists translate, seduce you wilfully: Ergo, no man must impose rules of life beside the Gospell, for this were to rule ouer men at their pleasure.

2. Augustine saith, Cum homo consistat anima & corpore, &c. Seeing a man doth consist both of bodie and soule; in regard of that part, which the affayres of this life concerne, we ought to be subiect to the higher powers: but in respect of that part whereby wee beleeue, and are called to the kingdome of God, wee must bee obedient to none, August. in 1. 3. ad Rom. Therefore no man may impose any new religion vpon vs, which altogether toucheth the conscience.

Argum. 3. Saint Paul commandeth obedience to the Ciuill authoritie, that beareth the sword, Rom. 13. but obedience cannot be yeilded to the Prince, if another thing be commaunded by the Monkish gouernour, to whom they are tied by the vow of obedience: as there is a Canon of a superstitious Councell, Triburiens. c. 9. Si Episcopus placuit, &c. If the Bishop doe canonically decree a Synode, and the Ciuill Iudge at the same time enioyne also a law day, his law day must giue place to the other: Ergo, to vow obedience to any which may hinder obedience to the Ciuill Magistrate, is contrarie to S. Pauls rule.

Argum. 4. Saint Paul also saith, 1. Cor. 7. 23. Ye are bought with a price, be not the seruants of men: but they which vow Monkish obedience in things not prescribed in the word, make themselves seruants of men. Ergo.

Bellarmino answereth, that the Apostle forbiddeth vs to be seruants vnto men for mens cause, but it is lawfull to serue men for Gods cause.

Contra. First, to serue men for Gods cause, or in the name of God, is not to be seruants vnto men, but vnto God: and therefore in this case they are not the seruants of men, but of Christ; as Saint Paul exhorteth seruants to bee obedient to their masters, as the seruants of Christ, Ephes. 6. 6. Secondly, they doe not serue men for Gods cause, which are obedient vnto them in things not commaunded by God, nor warranted by his word: as Monkes that doe vow obedience euen in superstitious fancies, and meeere humane inquisitions: So that this place of the Apostle is very strong against them.

Ans. First, the Apostles words are generall: Let every man have his wife. I say the Rhemists, he speaketh of those that were married before their conversion, that they might still vie and keepe their wives. Yea but S. Paul speaketh of all vnmarried, in the verse next before, It is good not to touch a woman: I trow he meaneth not, it is good for a man that is married not to touch his wife. Secondly, it is a generall libertie, which he granteth to all, vers. 9. If they cannot containe, let them marrie: but many votaries cannot containe, as it may appeare by the vnchaste liues of your Monks: therefore hauing the disease, they may vie the remedie, that is, marrie.

The testimony of antiquitie in this case is most plentifull, to shew that rash vovves and othes, such as the vowe of chastitie is in him, that hath not power to keepe it, may safely bee broken, Concil. Tolosan. cap. 2. Tolerabilius est stulta promissionis vota rescere, quam per inuitum promissionum custodiam, exhorrendam criminum implere mensuram: It is more tolerable, to reiect rash and foolish vovves and promises, then by keeping vnprofitable promises, to fall into horrible sinnes: As the monkish votaries did, who for that they wanted lawfull matrimonie, gaue themselves to vnnatural lusts. Concil. Triburiens. cap. 21. ex Beda: Si forte nos incautus iurare contigeris, quod scilicet obseruatum peiores vergeat in exitum, libere illud mutandum non erimus salubriori consilio: If it chanceth that we sweare rashly, which oth being obserued, will haue a worse end, vpon more hole some aduise we may freely change it. If an oth may be changed, much more a vowe, for an oth is greater.

The Ciuill law thus saith, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 23. authentic. Illicita rei iuramentum &c. An oath of an vnlawfull thing is not to be kept, as if one sweare to continue in the profession of stage plaies, &c. By the same reason also, whether it be a vow or an oath, that one taketh not to marrie, if he liue incontinently, it ought not to bind him.

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 35. leg. 2. Valentinian. Theodos. A mother could not be admitted to the tuition of her child, vnlesse she would sweare not to marrie againe: notwithstanding such oath, she is permitted by this law to marrie againe: In optione nulla cogatur: No woman ought to be enforced to her choise. So then after an oath made to continue a widow, which is as much as a vow, yet by the Ciuill law marriage is lawfull.

Cod. lib. 6. tit. 40. leg. 2. Iustinian. Whereas the law was, that a man dying and leauing a legacie to his wife vpon condition, she should remaine a widow, the woman could not haue the legacie, vnlesse she would sweare not to marrie, but for procreation of children: By this constitution it was lawfull for the woman to enioy her husbands gift, and without any such oath to marrie againe. So this constitution alloweth not any oath to be taken against marriage: but a vow and an oath are of the same nature.

Cod. lib. 9. tit. 8. leg. 2. A man swearing that he would neuer forgiue his seruant, but keepe him in continuall bonds, is not tyed by this oath; Alexander: no more is a man bound, that voweth to keepe his body in the perpetuall bonds of lust and burning without marriage.

Let vs take a view of their owne Canons: Lateranen. sub. Alexandro 3. part. 5. cap. 5. cap. 10. this case is put: A certaine woman promised marriage to a man being absent, but afterward hearing more of his inhumane nature: Votum continentie promissit: Shee vowed and made promise of continencie: it is thus determined: Tunius esse ducimus, ut prefata mulier, post solemnem & votum simplex oblatum matrimonium contrahat, quam fornicationis reatum incurrat: Wee iudge it more safe, that the said woman, after her simple vowe and faith thus giuen and made, to marrie rather, then to fall into fornication. But it will bee here answered, that this woman made but a simple or single vowe; nee vestem, nec locum mutauit, shee changed neither place nor garment: Marke then what followeth, Lateranen. part. 47. cap. 8. Pope Adriano decreeth thus: Si quis timore mortis habitum religionis assumpserit & claustrum intrauerit, licite poterit ad seculum redire: If any man for feare of death doth take the habite of religion, and goe into a claustr, he may lawfully returne to his secular estate. Here is both a change of place and habite, and yet libertie giuen to dissolue the vowe. If it be againe answered, that it was done of feare: so I say, that as this is one infirmitie, so there be many beside; and if this infirmitie may breake a vow, why may not also other infirmities, as of incontinencie, and such other? Now where as they thinke a simple vowe may be broken, which consisteth onely in the purpose or promise of the votarie, but a vowe ratified, by changing of place, habite, and profession, cannot be broken, this also is but an idle shift: for a vowe vttered onely before God, though there be no such outward testification, doth binde in conscience, as if it were done in the presence of many: Iacobi vowe, Genes. 28. was but a single vowe, vttered onely in the hearing of God: and of such vovves speaketh the preacher, Eccles. 5. 3. when thou hast vowed a vowe to God, &c. And herein their owne law helpeth vs; decret. Greg. lib. 4. tit. 7. c. 8. Celestin. 3. Votum simplex &c. A simple vow doth no lesse bind before God, then a solemne: And againe, sext. decret. lib. 3. tit. 15. c. 1. Bonif. 8. Voti solemnitas &c. A solemne vow was found out onely by the constitution of the Church. Wherefore if marriage be lawfull after a simple vow, why not as well after a solemne?

We haue yet also more euident testimonie out of their law : decret. Greg. lib. 2. tit. 24. c. 3. Greg. Propositum non infringit, &c. He doth not breake his vow or promise, that changeth it into a better : wherefore he that changeth vncaste single life, with chaste mariage, doth not breake his vow.

Bonif. 8. regu. iuris. 6. Nemo potest ad impossibile ligari : No man can be bound to that is impossible : but for him to liue single, that hath not the gift, is impossible; therefore he can not be bound vnto it with vow or without. Againe, regu. 8. Iuramentum contra bonos mores non ligat : An oath against good manners bindeth not : and so consequently a vow; wherefore a vow to liue without marriage in sinfull lust, bindeth not, being against good manners.

Other vowes may be altered and changed, as the vow of going in pilgrimage to Ierusalem may be redeemed with almes, decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 34. c. 1. It may be altered for the benefite of the Commonwealth, c. 5. for the necessitie of the Church, c. 7. because of sicknesse or pouertie, &c. Why then may not the vow of Continencie vpon the like considerations be dispensed with Secr. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 12. c. 1. A vow to be buried in a certaine place, may be altered. Bonif. 8. Why may not the like alteration in other vowes be admitted?

Here wanteth now nothing, but the seale of the Martyrs, D. Taylor holy Martyr sheweth the vnlawfulness of such othes and vowes, whereby Priests and others are constrainned to vowe chastitie, and forswear mariage by the like case : In Iustinian titulo de indicta viduitate, where it is thus written: That if one would bequeath to his wife in his testament a legacie vnder a condition, she should neuer marrie againe, and take an oth of her for the accomplishment of the same, yet she may marrie againe if he die, notwithstanding the aforesaid condition, and oth taken and made against mariage : and an othe is an other manner of obligation made to God, then a papistall vowe made to man, Fax. pag. 1522.

William Flower, who was first a professed Monke, and afterward married, protesteth, that therein he beleueth he did well, and according to Gods lawes, Fax. pag. 1575. Rash vowes then are inconsiderate, as of chastitie, single life and such like, may lawfully be dissolued : but let vs now proceede.

Argum. 2. Virginitie, and continent life is onely to be required of those which haue the gift of continencie : But all haue not that gift : Ergo, the vowe of Virginitie is not indifferently to be made by any. That the gift of continencie cannot be had or obtained of all, neither resteth in our free will, it is plaine by Scripture.

1. Math. 19. 12. He that is able to receiue this gift, let him receiue it : Ergo, all are not able to receiue it.

Bellarmin. First, though they are not able to receiue it yet, yet they may if they will, and aske it by prayer : for the texte is, Some haue made themselues chaste for the kingdome of God : whereby it appeareth that it is in the will of man, cap. 31. Ans. He speaketh cleane contrary to the texte : for Christ saith, None receiue it but to whom it is giuen ; and the words are, qui uult potest, not, qui uelit, he that can receiue, not he that will receiue. And they are said to make themselues chaste, not because it is in their owne choyce, but being enabled of God, and hauing receiued power ouer their will, they are said to make themselues chaste, hauing receiued power by the spirit of God : So our Sauour saith, Come vnto me all ye that are laden, Matth. 11. and yet no man cometh to Christ, but his father first draweth him, Ioh. 6. 44. Wherefore it being a peculiar gift of God, all cannot haue it, neither are sure to obtaine it, though they aske it by prayer, because we haue no promise to be heard.

Rhemist. When a man is bound to abstayne by vowe, or other necessarie occasion, as imprisonment, banishment, sickenes, no doubt, if he labour for the gift of continencie, he may haue it. Ans. They that binde themselues to a rash vowe, haue no promise to be heard praying for continencie. Secondly, they that are driuen vnto any such necessitie as you speake of, which they are not a cause of themselues, neither can auoyde, as in long and perpetuall sicknes, it is certaine that God will giue the gift being sought by lawfull meanes : But as for banishment and imprisonment, they are not of such necessitie, but that the husband is bound to follow the wife, and the wife her husband, Fulk. 1. Cor. 7. 6.

Neither are many of those meanes commendable, which were vsed in Monkerie : for some of them were superstitious and vnlawfull, as they vsed Phisicke and medicine to correct or slacke, and extinguish nature in them : Francis was wont to couer his bodie with yce and snowe ; others did whip themselues : This was not to subdue and tame the bodie, but to destroy and kill the bodie, and make it vnfit for other duties. The Scripture prescribeth no other meanes but prayer and fasting, and labour in our vocation. Some of them againe vsed externall exercise of their bodie, as by fasting, by lying hard, by watching, which in themselues were not amisse : but they leaue the chiefe and principall, which is the spirituall meanes : for the outward exercise of their flesh without this, is little worth, Coloss. 2. 23.

Bellarmin. To beleeue is no lesse the gift of God, then to liue chaste, yet we exhorte all men to beleeue, beleue, and they doe vowe and promise it in baptisme: why may they not as well vowe continencie, although it be a peculiar gifte? cap. 31.

Ans. They are both indeede the gifts of God, but one is necessarie to saluation, namely, to beleue, and is promised to all that will seeke for it: But the other gift is not necessarie, neither hath any such promise.

Secondly, S. Paul calleth this a proper gift: But if all men were capable of it, how could it be called a proper gift? One after this manner, another after that, saith the Apostle. But if euery man might attaine to that one gifte of continencie, they should not all haue their proper gifte, but all one gifte, and after the same manner. And though S. Paul should meane, that to liue chastly in wedlocke be also a proper gifte of God, as Bellarmine vrgeth, and we deny not: yet it remaineth still, that the other is a more singular and proper gift; and is not therefore commonly, and indifferently bestowed vpon all.

Thirdly, S. Paul saith, that a man may marrie his Virgin if neede so require, 1. Cor. 7. 37. But if euery one labouring for the gift of continencie, might obtaine it, there should then be no necessitie of marrie: which the Apostle here affirmeth. Capitul. Gracur. Synod. 21. collect. à Martin. Bracarenf. Episcop. and it is alleaged, decret. part. 1. dist. 33. cap. 9. Si quis sanus non per disciplinam religionis, & abstinentia, sed per abscissionem à Deo plasmatis corporis existimans posse à se carnales concupiscentias amputari, castrauerit se, Clericus ne fiat: If any man being sound and in health, doth castrate or geld himselfe not by the discipline of religion, and abstinence, but by mangling his bodie framed of God, thinking that it lieth in him to cut off carnall concupiscence, let him not be a Clergie man. Here their opinion is reproued that thinke euery man hath power to be continent.

Further, the decree of Martin. Caus. 27. quest. 1. c. 8. witnesseth in these words, speaking of a certaine widow, Si se continere non poterat, &c. If she could not containe, she was not forbid to marrie. And againe, Caus. 32. c. 11. Si post nuditatem, &c. If S. Paul after nakednesse, hunger, fasting, prison, stripes, crieth out, O vnhappie man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this bodie of sinne; do you thinke your selfe secure? reatus fuerat hominem subisse contagium, &c. it had been better to haue entred into marrieage with other men, then struiuing to climbe higher, to fall downe to hell. Wee see by this decree of theirs, what an hard thing it is to attaine vnto virginity, and that euery one cannot haue it.

Master Tindall holy Martyr hath put to his seale: If we haue infirmities, that draw vs from the lawes of God, let vs cure them with the remedies that God hath made; if thou burne, marrie: for God hath promised thee no chastitie, as long as thou maist vse the remedie that he hath ordained: no more then he hath promised to slake thine hunger without meate: now to aske of God more then he hath promised, commeth of a false faith, &c. Fox pag. 1231. col. 1.

Lastly, the Rhemists say, that the marrieage of those that haue vowed, is the worst sort of incontinencie and fornication, 1. Corinth. 7. sect. 8.

Augustine saith cleane contrarie: Non ipsa nuptia talium damnanda indicantur, &c. The mariages of such are not condemned, but the violating of their vow is condemned, not because they afterward entred into the league of marrieage, but because they did breake the first faith of continencie. Augustine saith not, that such mariages are no mariages, but plaine adulterie and fornication: but maketh the marrieage lawfull, and reprooueth their rashnes before in making, and their vnstedfastnes now in breaking their vöves.

THE FIFT QUESTION, CONCERNING MONASTICALL persons which doe enter into that profession.

There are foure sorts of people which the Papists doe offer great wrong vnto, in drawing them to the profession of Monkerie: First, vnto the yonger sort, which haue libertie to marrie. Secondly, to the children and sonnes whom they make Monkes without consent of their parents. Thirdly, they say, married persons, by mutuall consent, may betake themselues to a Monkes habite. Fourthly, if marrieage be contracted, not consummate or finished, they may one leaue another without consent first had.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE YOVNGER sort are to be admitted to professe Monkerie.

The Papists.

If they be come to the yeeres of discretion, they may, men or women at any age, take vpon them the vow of Monkerie, Bellarmin. cap. 35.

1. Matth. 19. 14. Suffer little children to come vnto me: Ergo, young men and maides may become Monkes, Bellarmin.

Ans.

Ans. First, the text speaketh of little children: but by your confession, they must be of yeeres of discretion that should enter into your profession: so are not little children. Secondly, though none could come to Christ, but through a Monkes cowle: nay, I would they of all men did not goe furthest off from Christ. It followeth also in the text, Of such is the kingdom of heauen: so by this reason, heauen gates should bee open onely to Monkes and Friers: and this is the right heresie of the Pelagians, and Manichees, that promised the kingdom of God not to any, but those that cast away their riches.

2 John Baptist liued from a childe in the wildernesse: Ergo, lawfull for young ones to professe Monkerie.

Ans. First, Johns example is extraordinarie, as his office and calling was singular, and therefore is no more to bee imitated and followed in his solitarie life, then in his diet of Locusts and wilde honie: He sprang also in his mothers wombe; so I thinke all Monkes and Eremites doe not. Secondly, it is not certaine at what yeeres John entred into the wildernesse: for hee was thirtie yeere old when he came and preached in the wildernesse, as Matthew writeth, 3. 1.

The Protestants.

THough we should graunt, that a Monasticall life were in some persons, and at sometimes tolerable among Christians; yet of all other the younger sort, in whom lust doth raigne, were most vnfit, and not to be admitted vnto that kinde of life.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul would haue no widow to be chosen vnder 60. yeeres, 1. Timoth. 5. 9. and I will the younger to marrie, ver. 16. Ergo, it is contrarie to Saint Pauls rule, to suffer any such to make vovs of continencie.

Rhemist. answer. First, it was but a rule for that time, when as yet there were no Monasteries nor discipline, but young widowes wandred vp and downe idly.

Ans. First, the same cause that young women had to marrie then, they haue now; and therefore the rule is generall. Secondly, as though the walles of Monasteries were able to keepe in virginie: no, it is notoriously knowne, that vnchaste life hath scaled the walles of Nunneries, crept in at windowes, and found muses in the ground.

2 Saint Paul (say they) counselleth young widowes to marrie, not young virgins, which haue not experience of lust, are not so greatly tempted.

Ans. How chaste your cloyster women haue been, and free from these tentations, the stories of former times make mention; and the examples of so many vnchaste milch-Nunnes, and sicke Monkes and Friers, are a sufficient prooffe, Fulk. 1. Timoth. 5. sect. 11. But all these shifts notwithstanding Saint Pauls rule must stand, that no widowes must be admitted vnder 60. yeere old.

Bellarmine also answereth, that the Apostles meaning is, that the younger women should be refused, not from the vow of continencie, but not to bee of the number of the widowes, which were maintained of the Church.

Contra. First, this is flat opposite to the Apostle, who would haue the younger women to marrie, ver. 14. how then is it like they were votaries? therefore it is euident, that they are excluded from vow making, seeing they are counsell'd by the Apostle to marrie.

To this he againe replieth, that where the Apostle saith, I would haue the younger marrie, that it is not a precept, but a counsell.

Contra. First, it is a charge and commaundement which the Apostle giueth, that they should marrie, in respect of their frailtie, because diuers were turned alreadie after Sathan by their incontinencie, and gaue occasion to the aduersarie to speake euill. Wherefore to auoide these things he not onely aduise, but willeth and chargeth, they should marrie. Secondly, though it bee but a counsell, yet it will follow, that the Apostle gaue counsell to them to marrie, which had vowed single life, as Bellarmino confesseth, that the younger women were not barred from vowing continencie.

Secondly, if the younger women are not admitted to bee of the number of the almes widowes for feare of incontinencie, they were as vnfit to enter into any vow or profession of single life. And be it graunted, that it might be a greater offence for publike widowes, then priuate votaries, to breake their vow; yet in the other the offence were great enough: and therefore the Apostles rule of their age ought to be obserued in both.

Argum. 3. The Manichees tooke occasion hereby to insult against the Catholikes, because they admitted so many virgins to the profession of single life: Certatim ad hanc professionem eas incitatis suasionibus vestris, ut iam pene maior in ecclesijs omnibus virginum apud vos, quam mulierum numerus habeatur. August. cont. Faustum. 30. 4. Ye labour (say the Manichees) to draw women of euerie hand to this profession by your perswasions, that now in your Churches, the number of professed virgins exceedeth the number of women. And hereby the Manichees that extolled virginie, and condemned mariage, were induced to thinke that the Catholike Bishops also were of their opinion.

ditus non cogitur, &c. The father against his will cannot bee constrained, no not by the Princes letters to set free or manumit his sonne: but he is manumitted by entering into Monkerie against his fathers will. This then is contrarie to the law: and thus euery Abbot and Monke shall presume to doe more then the Emperour himselfe challengeth.

Children ought not by the law of God to make any vow of single and continent life without the consent and liking of their parents, Luther. Pet. Martyr lib. de calibat. & uotis.

Argum. 1. By the law of Moses the father had power to disallow the vowes which the daughter made being in his house, Numb. 30. 6. which law was not ceremonious: for it was grounded vpon the Morall law, which commaunded all obedience and dutie of the children to the parents. And that it is not abrogate, it appeareth, because the same law is renewed by S. Paul, 1. Corinch. 7. vers. 36. 37. where the Apostle referreth the whole matter of keeping a virgin, or placing of her in marriage to the will of the father; yet so, that he must haue regard vnto the necessitie, the estate and condition of his virgin. Both these places doe aptly prooue, that neither the childe can bee bestowed in marriage, nor vowed to virginitic, without the consent and determination of the parents.

Argum. 2. The father hath as great power ouer his sonne, as the master ouer his seruant: but the seruant cannot take vpon him the profession of Monkerie without the consent of his master. Ergo, &c.

The second part of the reason is proued both by the Ciuill and Canon law: first, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 16. Honor. Theodos. Rusticus, &c. A rurall seruant being made a Clerke, is bound to serue his master by a sufficient substitute. But more euidently it appeareth by the constitution of Ambrosius, leg. 3. 4. subemus ascriptis iurum, &c. We wil that no seruant make choise of a solitarie life without the consent of his master: if he doe, his master shall haue the same power ouer him, which he hath ouer other seruants.

See also for their owne law the decree of Gelasius, That seruants entering into Monasteries without consent of their masters or patrones, should be restored vnto them, decret. part. 1. dist. 54. c. 11.

Likewise, Council Chalcedon. 4. Decretimus, &c. Wee haue decreed that no seruant bee retained into a Monasterie, without the knowledge and leaue of his master.

The first part of the argument is denied by Bellarmino, that sonnes to their parents are not a like subiection, as seruants to their masters; and therefore haue more power of themselves, then seruants haue.

Contra. Though children are not in such seruile subiection, for there is one feare of children, as other of seruants; yet the father hath as great power ouer the persons of their children being without age, as ouer seruants: because the law of nature, which bindeth sonnes, is stronger then the law of men, which maketh seruants: and parents haue greater power ouer their owne flesh, then ouer strangers.

Let vs heare what authoritie Augustine yeeldeth to the father ouer his children: Agrius in nostram in domibus vestris: Episcopus inde appellatus est quia superintendit: unusquisque ergo in domo sua, si caput est domus sue, debet ad eum pertinere episcopatus officium, de Sanct. Ser. 51. You (saith Augustine their Bishop) must supplie our stead in your houses: a Bishop or Superintendent, is so called because he ouerseeth: therefore euery householder, being the head of his house, ought to play the Bishop in his house. The father then is a Bishop ouer his children: shall any man then dare to take any out of his house, that is his Bishopricke, or any sheepe out of his fold, without the Bishop and shepherds consent.

The testimonie also of their owne law in this case is very cleere: Si puella in puerili aetate, &c. If a maiden in her childhood, or vnder yeres, doth binde her selfe with an oth in her fathers house, without the knowledge of her father, if her father, so soone as he heareth of it, doth gainsay, her vow and oth is voyd, caus. 3. 2. qu. 2. c. 14.

Likewise, Bonif. 8. sext. de cler. lib. 3. tit. 12. c. 4. Filius pro anima, &c. The sonne can make choise of nothing concerning his soule, without consent of his father, though he may choise sepulture for his bodie.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER MARRIED PERSONS may with mutuall consent become votaries.

The Papists.

92. Error.

With mutuall consent the man and the wife may separate themselves, and vow and promise single life for euer, so long as they both shall liue, Bellar. cap. 37.

Argum. 1. Marie and Ioseph were perfectly man and wife, yet by mutuall consent they liued continently tinently all their dayes : Ergo, it is lawfull for married couples to separate themselves for ever, both agreeing thereunto, Bellarmin. cap. 37.

Answ. 1. It appeareth by the text, that there was no such thing purposed by Ioseph, before he was admonished by the Angell in a dreame, but that, as she was already betrothed, so there was an intent on Ioseph's part, that they should come together, Math. 1. 18. but that in the meane time Mari was found with childe by the holy Ghost : and so from that time Ioseph being a iust man neuer knew his wife : there was no such purpose or vow before.

2. That this was an extraordinarie example, who seeth it not ? When any man shall be admonished by an Angell as Ioseph was, and shall haue the like cause as Ioseph had to abstaine, which shall neuer be, he may be bold to doe as Ioseph did.

Argum. 2. I will not here conceale a certaine law of Iustinian. Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 42. whereby it is prouided, that if the husband or wife, Religionis causa à coniugio recesserit, &c. Do for religion sake depart from marriage, and choose solitarie life, the other shall haue such dower, or gift, as if the partie so departed were dead.

Answ. This law seemeth to allow of the departure of the married parties, euen without consent each of other, for it speaketh of the departure of one of the parties onely : and thus Bellarmin. interpreteth this law, and refuteth it also, holding it to be a great error, that either partie should depart without mutuall consent : wherefore since that this law is refused by them, I shall not need to refute it.

The Protestants.

They that are once ioyned together in marriage, and haue made a covenant each to other before God, cannot separate themselves though they both consent, there being no other cause, but a purpose of single life for more holynes sake.

Argum. 1. It is flat contrarie to S. Paul's rule, 1. Cor. 7. 5. Defraud not your selues, except it be with consen for a time, that you may give your selues to fasting and prayer, and againe come together, least Satan tempt you for your incontinencie. First, the Apostle saith directly they should but separate themselves for a time. Secondly, we doe thus reason out of his words : There is no cause of separation, but to be given to fasting and prayer ; but this may be done by a separation for a time ; neither is it necessarie we should alwayes be giuen to fasting and prayer, but vpon speciall occasion : therefore perpetuall separation is not needfull. Thirdly, they that are long separated, are subiect to fall into temptation : the same cause therefore that moued them first to marrie, for auoyding of incontinencie, ought to moue them to come together againe : Therefore it is not good nor lawfull they should separate themselves for euer.

Bellarmin. answereth, that the Apostle saying, This I speake by way of indulgence or permission, vers. 6. sheweth that he would rather, they should abstaine altogether, yet in respect of their frailtie he permitteth, that they come together againe : so then, they that do separate themselves at once for all, do that which is best agreeable to the Apostles meaning, cap. 30.

Contra. First, it is vntrue, that S. Paul. had rather the married should be separated altogether ; for where he wisheth that all men were as himselfe, he speaketh directly to the widowes, and vnmarried, vers. 8. and not to them, which were married : and againe, he should be contrary to himselfe, vers. 24. Let euery man, wherein he was called, abide : and it followeth vers. 27. Are they bound to a wife, seeke not to be loosed : wherefore they that are married, ought to remaine in that estate which they are called vnto. Secondly, this then, which the Apostle speaketh by way of indulgence, is not to be referred to their coming together againe, for the Apostle hath for that a direct commandement, vers. 10. I command, not I, but the Lord, let not the wife depart from her husband : and againe, vers. 5. Defraud not one another : which is a precept, as Bellarmin. confesseth ; but if they should be separated altogether, they should one defraud another : wherefore this permission belongeth to the second verse, where the Apostle to auoid fornication, granteth the remedie of marriage to euery one, that hath not the other gift.

Argum. 2. That which God hath coupled, no man ought to put asunder : but they that are married haue made a covenant to God, Pro. 2. 17. as well as to themselves, and are ioyned by Gods law together : Ergo, they cannot dissolue their marriage by their owne power and will, the Lord hauing an interest therein.

Bellarmin. saith, that by this separation marriage is not dissolued. Answ. It is as much dissolued, as by your law in cases of diuorce : for these are their words : For aduoutrie one may dismiss another, but neyther partie can marrie againe for any cause during life, Rhemist. Math. 19. felt. 4. So ye allow onely a kind of dismissal in the case of adulterie, and so you do in the vow of continencie : and thus you make this cause as forcible as the other, to breake off matrimoniall dutie, which is contrary to the Gospell.

Augustine thus writeth, Non licet excepta causa fornicationis coniugem à coniuge dirimi, nec sterilem coniugem sui esse relinquere, ut sacunda ducatur, de nupt. & concupiscem. Lib. 1. cap. 10. It is not lawfull for married married couples, one to be separate from another, vnlesse it be for fornication: nor to leaue a barren wife to marrie a fruitfull. Therefore if fornication onely be a iust cause of finall separation; there can be no other: If there were any other, it is most like it should be for procreation of children: But neither for that cause is a man to leaue his wife: Ergo, for no other.

Nicholaus 1. de matrimon. can. 7. Hi, qui matrimonium sibi contraxerunt, &c. They, which were found when they married; if afterward one of them chance to be mad or frantick, or such any other infirmities: as if hee bee made blinde by his enemies, maymed in his bodie, or cut in his priuie members, for none of these causes is their marriage to bee dissolued. But those are greater lets and impediments to marriage, then marriage is or can bee to the exercise of religion: therefore not for any vowe of continencie is marriage to bee dissolued, or any separation to bee admitted.

And yet we haue cleaer euidence out of their owne law, decret. p. 2. c. 33. q. 5. c. 11. P. 2. abstinencia, qua mulier &c. The vowes of abstinence, which the wife made by her husbands leaue, if he afterward forbid, she is not bound to keepe. By this Canon it is not lawfull for the wife, no not with the husbands consent to become a Votarie. Decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 24. c. 14. This case is put, a certaine man and his wife do sweare each to other, that they would neuer desire one the others company againe: afterward the man would haue receiued his wife, she refused, saying, she would be a Saracene first &c: Innocentius 3. thus resolueth the case; that if the man could not be perswaded to liue single, the woman should be enforced by excommunication to retaine him. If an oath then do not hold as touching separation of the husband and the wife by consent, no more shall a vow bind.

Likewise decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 32. c. 1. Alexander 3. this case is propounded: the husband in the presence of diuers Priestes and Monkes, by the licence of his wife professeth Monastuall life: if his wife afterward suspected not to liue continently desire her husband, Ubi potest & debet monasterio renouari: The man may and ought to be fetched out of his Monasterie. Ergo, there can be no finall separation in marriage, no not by consent, by their owne Canon law.

contracted not consummate, may without consent be broken for the vow of continencie.

The Papists.

93. Error.

Their opinion is, that if the marriage be contracted only and ratified, but not yet consummate, by the parties coming together, it is lawfull for either of them without the others consent to vowe chastitie, cap. 38. Bellarm.

His reason is, because it is lawfull for a man to passe from a lesse perfect state of life to a more perfect, if it may be done without detriment, as this may be: for yet they haue no children, and the partie may as wel be married to another, Bellarmin.

Ans. First, a single life is not alwayes the perfecter state, nor to all, as it is not to them that haue not the gift to containe, as it is most like he hath not, that is contracted, and hath made promise of marriage: for then all this needed not. Secondly, though there be none of those impediments named, yet there is a greater: namely, their faith and promise made each to other before God, which they ought not to violate. Thirdly, S. Paul saith, If thou be bound to a wife, seeke not to be loosed, 1. Cor. 7. 27. But they that are espoused one to the other, are bound; vnlesse you will say, that the covenant made by them vnto God, Pro. 2. 17. bindeth not.

Argum. 2. There is a double bond in Matrimonie, a carnall and spirituall, as the carnall is dissolved by the temporall death, so the spirituall is by the spirituall death; such is the Monastuall profession, whereby a man dieth to the whole world, in renouncing his goods, Bellarmin. cap. 38. ration. 2.

Ans. First, if to renounce the goods of the world, be to die to the world, then your Clergie should thus die vnto the world, as well as your Monkes; as your owne decree testifieth, cap. 1. q. 2. c. 6. Qui opibus suis, &c. They that can be maintained by their owne goods, if they liue of the stipends of the Church, commit saciledge: wherefore your Orders are as able to dissolve a contract of marriage, as Monkerie, which notwithstanding you denie. Secondly, if to be a Monke, is to die to the world, then euery Monke shall be saved: for they that die with Christ, shall also liue with him, Rom. 6. 8. But I thinke they dare not say so of all Monkes, seeing they denie not but that the Pope may be a reprobate: and yet S. Peters chaire will as soone bring them to heauen, as a Monkes coule. Thirdly, the spirituall death may be euery in marriage, vnlesse Bellarmin. will say, that in marriage is no saluation (for where there is not dying with Christ, there is no liuing with him:) If a man then that is married, may die vnto sinne, then it is false, that the spirituall death doth dissolve the spirituall bond of marriage.

The

The Protestants.

Matrimonie whether ratified onely by lawfull contract or espousals, or consummate, ought not any way to be broken with consent or without, for Monasticall profession.

Argum. 1. Our reason is, because it is perfect mariage already in substance and before God, which is ratified by contract onely and solemne vowe and couenant made each to other: And being thus betrothed, the one giueth power of their bodie to the other, and now they are no more free. That this mariage is perfect before God, and in substance, it appeareth by the law of Moses, by the which a man desiring a maide betrothed, was to suffer death, as well, as if he had committed vncleannes with a woman already married, Deuteron. 22. vers. 22. 23. And Math. 1. 18. Marie that was but betrothed to Ioseph, is by the Angell called his wife, vers. 20.

Bellarmino answereth, that notwithstanding the contract, the wife is not bound to yeeld the due debt of mariage to her husband, if it be a detriment to her spirituall good, as in this case it is, when she entred into Monasticall profession.

Contra. First, this reason maketh as much for the dissolution of mariage consummate, as of the contract only: for the temporal good of mariage also must yeeld to the spirituall good. Secondly, we denie that it tendeth to any spiritual good, for monastical life to violate a contract made before God: first, because the partie is not sure to haue the gift of continencie, hauing so lately contracted and agreed to vse the remedie of mariage, feeling her owne weakenes: and so she is more like to fall into a spirituall euill, to liue in continuall burning and lust of the flesh, as many of their much-Nunnes did. Secondly, because no spirituall good is to bee hoped for contrarie to Gods ordinance, which euen vpon the contract giueth the husband power ouer the wife, and maketh her bound vnto him as long as she liueth; 1. Cor. 7. 39. The wife is bound to the husband, as long as he liueth: but she that is espoused onely is a wife, as was shewed before in the example of Marie. Thirdly, the Apostle saith, vers. 27. Art thou bound to a wife? seeke not to be loosed: but he that is contracted onely, is bound: Ergo, he ought vpon no occasion to seeke to be loosed.

Argum. 2. The vow of continencie made in the taking of orders, non est efficax, is not of force to dissolue matrimonie before contracted, as Iohn. 22. decreeth, Extranag. tit. 6. c. 1. Ergo, neither monasticall profession.

Bellarmino answereth, the reason is not alike, because mariage is repugnant to monasticall life of it selfe simply: but to orders it is repugnant onely by the decree of the Church.

Contra. First, we take it then as graunted, that by the word of God mariage is not repugnant to orders, but only by the constitution of the Church. Secondly, Monasticall life also is an humane invention, as well as the single life of the Clergie: for S. Paul knew no such profession, when he giueth euery man leaue, without exception, to haue his wife, 1. Cor. 7. 2. Thirdly, though wee should graunt, that Monkerie bindeth more from mariage then Orders, yet the vow making bindeth as well in the one as the other: for to marrie contrarie to vow, is simply repugnant in their opinion: wherefore seeing that a vow after contract in Orders dissolueth it not, neither shall a vow made in Monkerie.

Concerning the Ciuill law, it may appeare, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 42. that the law did punish such, as being contracted, betooke themselves to solitarie life: the man lost all his tokens and gifts sent to his spouse, and she was to render double the value of the tokens receiued: although this law is abrogated by Iustinian the last law-maker of the Emperours, whose times sauoured of superstition.

Their own law is also somewhat doubtful: Decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 3. c. 14. Innocen. 3. though he dare not swerue from the practise of his predecessors, yet deliuereth this to be his iudgement: Potest non in consilio videri, &c. It may with good aduisement bee thought, that matrimonie contracted by words of the present, in nullo casu, &c. in no case should be dissolued as long as the parties liue.

Likewise, lib. 4. tit. 1. c. 16. Alexander. 3. thus determineth, That if a man sweare to be contracted to a woman within a certaine space, and in the meane time haue a purpose to liue monastically, he should first, to saue his oth, performe the contract. If then the vow or promise of monastical life be not able to dissolue a promise of a contract, much lesse the contract it selfe, which is more then a promise of mariage.

The Master of Sentences also is of opinion, that a contract made, per verba de presenti, by words vttered of the present, cannot without common consent be broken, lib. 4. dist. 27. l.

Episcopus also a reuerent writer among the Papiests holdeth, that mariage whether consummate or contracted onely, ought not for any profession of monastical life to bee dissolued, lib. 6. cap. 4. de continent.

Concil. Ancyran. can. 11. sic. Desponsatus puellas, &c. We thinke it meete, that if a maide espoused to one, be defiled of another, that she should be restored, to whom she was espoused, although it be certaine, that she hath lost the flower of her Virginitie by the other. But the loosing of her Virginitie is more forcible to dissolue the contract, then the vow of chastitie, for it is able to dissolue solue mariage consummate, and so is not the other without mutuall consent, as the Iesuite affirmeth: therefore by this canon, if the more forceable cause cannot breake the espousals, much lesse can the other not so forceable.

THE SIXTH QUESTION, CONCERNING the rules and discipline of Monasticall life.

This question hath foure parts. First, of the solitarie and seuer kind of life in Monkes and Eremites. Secondly, of their canonicall houres appoynted for prayer. Thirdly, of their habing and apparell. Fourthly, of their maintenance, whether it ought to come by their labour.

THE FIRST PART, CONCERNING THE solitarie and austere life of Monkes, and of Eremites.

The Papists.

94. Error.

TO liue in solitarie places, to weare sack-cloth, to be giuen continually to fasting, to lie hard, to fare meanelly, and by other such wayes to punish and afflict the bodie, they say, are notable meanes to bring the soule to the contemplation of heavenly things.

Argum. 1. Iohn Baptist liued in the desert, fared courselly, and was barely apparelled, hee ate Locust and wilde honie, and wore a garment of Camels haire: he was a right paterne of true Eremites, Bellarmine. cap. 3. lib. 2. de Monach.

Eulke. Mat. 3.
sect. 1.

Ans. First, Iohns life was not so austere, as they make it: for the place where he liued was not so solitarie, but that there were villages and houses not farre off, as it may appeare by the peoples resort vnto him: his apparell was of Camels hayre, and was somewhat course, yet no such thing as sack-cloth, or haire-cloth; for of the finest of the Camels haire Chamblets and Groggrains are made, that are had in price amongst vs: his diet also in eating Locusts and wilde honie was vsuall in that countrey. Secondly, we deny not but Iohn liued an austere life, because he was a preacher of repentance, and had a singular office to prepare men for the coming of Christ: Therefore his calling being extraordinary, he cannot be an author of an ordinary calling among Christians. Thirdly, seeing Christ came eating and drinking, liued amongst men, and was apparelled as others were, why should Christians rather choose to imitate the Baptist, who had no office, or ministerie in the Gospell, Matth. 11. 11. then our Sauour Christ, whose life and doctrine is for our imitation?

Bellarmino replieth, notwithstanding this which hath been alleaged, that Iohn verely liued in the desert and solitarie wilderness, where was no resort, nor frequencie of people at all; which he would proue by these two reasons chiefly: first, because it is said, Luk. 1. 80. That he dwelled in the wilderness, till the time he should shew himselfe to Israel: but if he had been in his fathers house, he could not haue been vnknowne to Israel. Secondly, because they aske if he were Elias; but if he had been conuersant in his fathers house, they would not haue doubted, knowing whose sonne he was, cap. 39.

Ans. To the first reason I answer, that it followeth not, Iohn was not yet knowne to Israel; Ergo, he liued in the wilderness: for our Sauour was not knowne to Israel, till he was 30. yeere old, when he began to preach; yet liued he not in the wilderness, but in his parents house, and was obedient vnto them, Luk. 2. 51. To the second, our answer is, that they knew also whence Iesus was, Ioh. 7. 27. yet they were doubtfull who he shuld be, whether the Prophet, or the Christ, ver. 40. 41: so concerning Iohn, though his parents were knowne, yet might they bee doubtfull of his office: Again, though he had liued in the very wilderness from a childe; yet his birth was so famous, bruted ouer all the countrey of Iudea, Luk. 1. 65. that his parentage could not be hid.

Now our contrarie reasons, that Iohn liued not in such a wilderness, as where no resort of people was, are these: First, it is said, that he was in the wilderness, till he shewed himselfe, &c. Luk. 1. 80. but it is not like, that straight after his birth, being yet an infant, he was put forth into the wilderness, vnlesse they will imagine, that he sucked of some wilde beast: wherefore by the wilderness here must be vnderstood the hillie and lesse inhabited countrey of Iudea, where Zacharie dwelt,

dwelt, verſ. 39. and where Iohn alſo had his education. Secondly, Matth. 3. 1. Iohn is ſaid to have preached in the wildeſſe of Iudea: which addition ſheweth, that it was the leſſe frequented part of Iudea, not ſimply a wildeſſe, as Chriſt is ſaid to have been led into the wildeſſe, Matth. 4. 1. without any other addition. Thirdly, it is not like that Iohn would begin to preach where there was no people at all, but ſavage and wilde beaſts. Fourthly, Iohn preached and baptized in the wildeſſe, and there was Ieſus baptized of him, and from thence was led into the wildeſſe to be tempted: ſo that Chriſt was led from Iohns wildeſſe, to another wildeſſe, which was the very deſart, and not that, where Iohn preached. So then, our ſentence is this, that the wildeſſe, where Iohn lived till he publiſhly ſhewed himſelfe, and where he preached, muſt of neceſſitie be taken for the leſſe peopled countrey of Iudea, which was ſo called in reſpect of the more popular and frequented places of Iudea: yet we denie not, but that Iohn alſo did give himſelfe to a ſtrict and ſolitarie kinde of life, though he kept not in ſuch a deſert, as they imagine, that he ſhould give occaſion to be called an Eremit.

The Proteſtants.

That the ſolitarie life of Eremites, in ſying the comfortable ſocietie of men, and their rigorous manner in the vnnaturall chaſtiſing of their bodies, is contrarie to the rule of the Goſpell, thus we ſhew it.

Argum. 1. Heb. 10. 24. 25. Let vs conſider one another, and promoe one another to good workes, not forſaking the aſſemblies of our ſelves together, as the manner of ſome is, but exhorting one another: Here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly againſt thoſe that ſhun the ſocietie and companie of their brethren, becauſe they muſt needes fayle in the duties of charitie, as in exhorting one another, and promoeing to good workes: theſe duties Eremites cannot performe, therefore their life is vnlawfull: and Matth. 24. it is a note of falſe prophets and falſe Chriſts to live in the deſerts. Againe, they that loue ſolitarie places, doe offer themſelves to temptation, and fall into the ſnares of the diuell; God ſaw it was not good for Adam, no not in Paradiſe, to live alone: but I thinke their deſerts are farre vnlike to Paradiſe: Chriſt to be tempted of the diuell was led into the wildeſſes: Therefore ſuch places are fit for Sathans working. The Preacher ſaith, Two are better then one, for if one overcome him, two ſhall ſtand againſt him, Eccle. 4. 12. Wee are better able being ayded by our brethren to reſiſt Sathan, then being alone: We ought not then to tempt God, and not knowing our owne ſtrength, to go forth into ſolitarie places, and as it were prouoke Sathan to the Combat. See to this purpoſe, Conc. Oxoniens. ſub Stephano: Quia ſerpens antiquus, &c. Becauſe the olde Serpent, when he found holy men ſolitarie, living without any mutuall comfort or conſolation, did ſo much the more eaſily inuade and oppreſſe them, we with good deliberation haue decreed, that Monkes, regular Canons, Nunnes, ſhould ſleepe together in the ſame dorters.

Argum. 2. That cruell and inhumane kind of chaſtiſing their bodies by faſting and other diſcipline vterly is vnlawfull. The Monkes, called Grandimontenſes, did weare ſhirts of maile next their bodies, the Charter Monkes hairecloth: the Monkes Flagellants went bare-foote in linnen ſhirts, leauing an open place in the backe where they did dayly whip themſelves before the people till the blood followed. Moses a certaine Abbot did ſo afflict his body with faſting and watching, that for two or three dayes together many times he had no appetite at all to his meate, neither could ſleepe. Another Eremit (as Cassiannus writeth) did purpoſe with himſelfe not to eate meate, vnleſſe he had ſome gueſt or ſtranger with him, and ſo was conſtrained to abſtaine ſome-time ſixe dayes together: two other Monaſticall brethren, trauailing in the deſart of Thebaide, did vowe not to take any ſuſtenance, but ſuch as God ſhould ſend them; and as they went, a certaine wilde people, contrarie to their cuſtome, offered them meate, the one tooke it as ſent of God; the other reſuſed it, becauſe he thought it to bee ſent rather of man then of God, and ſo died.

Baſilius magnus, and Gregor. Nazianzeno, did ſo plucke downe themſelves by immoderate faſting; that when they were called to bee Biſhops, they were not able to ſuſtaine the labour thereof.

Where in all the Scriptures learned theſe men, thus to puniſh their bodies? This is not with S. Paul to ſubdue and bring vnder the fleſh: but to kill and deſtroy it; contrarie to that ſaying of Saint Paul, No man neuer yet hated his owne fleſh, but loueth and cheriſheth it. See I pray you, how theſe men loued and cheriſhed their bodies?

Argum. 3. That Religion which conſiſteth in the afflicting and not ſparing of the bodie, hath but a ſhew of wiſdome, and is a voluntarie or will worſhip, ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, Coloſſ. 2. 23. but ſuch is the religion of Heremites, which ſay, Touch not, taſte not, handle not, as it is in the ſame place, verſ. 21. Ergo.

Beſarion answereth, that to afflict and humble the bodie is lawfull, ſo that it be not done ſuperſtitiouſlie, and vnprofitable, as S. Paul ſaith, I doe chaſtiſe my bodie, and bring it into ſubiection, 1. Cor. 9. 27. Beſarion. cap. 39.

Contra.

Contra. To humble the bodie by fasting for a time, that our prayer may be more seruent, as S. Paul did, is a thing both commendable and commaunded, and it is neither superstitious nor vnprofitable: but continuall and immoderate abstinence from such things as are lawfull, such as Eremites are deuoted vnto, is not to keepe the bodie vnder, but to kill it; not to vanquish the affection, but to extinguish it; and is both superstitious and vnprofitable: First, it is superstitious, because it is a will worship according to the doctrine of men, Coloss. 2. 22. So the Lord saith, Zach. 7. 5. Did you fast vnto me? Esay. 58. 3. When you fast you will seeke your owne will, and chap. 1. 12. It is required of you hands? wherefore, seeing this strict vfrage is but an humane inuention, I conclude it is meer superstition. Secondly, it is also vnprofitable: for a man to redeeme his sinne with the fruite of his bodie, Micah. 6. 7. and so likewise with the bodie it selfe, is not pleasing vnto God: but this doe Eremites, thinking by the punishment of their bodie to satisfie for their sinnes. Ergo.

Concerning the rigorous and hard vfrage of Monkes, the iudgement of the Imperiall lawes is this, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 8. authentic. It is decreed, that Priests, giuing false witnesse, Monasterij protermentis tradantur: Should be deliuered to the Monasteries to be tormented: So likewise, leg. 14. authentic. a seditious Bishop is condemned to the Monasterie, for his correction. What kind of life then and profession cal you this, which is appointed for a torment and punishment to men?

As touching solitarie life also, the Canon lawe saith, Pa. sol. Woe to him that is alone, Dura. Gregar. lib. 3. tit. 35. cap. 2. The decree also of Clemens 5. in the Councell of Vienna is extant, De Monachis singulis in singulis, &c. That Monkes should not liue singlie or solitarie by themselves. And as for their strict diet, and staruing of the bodie, faring couersly and lying hardly, your owne Canons haue decreed, and described the Semerians to be heretikes, that refused to drinke wine: and they reckon vp other heresies, some that, Nudis pedibus ambulant: Walke barefooted: some refuse to eate in the companie of men: Canf. 24. qm. 3. c. 39. Such heretikes are their Monkes and Heremites.

In Psal. 49.

Let vs heare what Augustine saith, Tu deseris res humanas & segregas te, ut nemo te videat: Cui proderit? in ad hoc peruenisses, si nemo tibi profuisset? An quis veloces pedes tibi videris habuisse ad transiendum, praesurnas es pontem? Thou leauest the care of humane things, and separatest thy selfe that no man should see thee: to whom doest thou good in so doing? Hadst thou come to this perfectly thy selfe if no man had done thee good? because thou hast quickly passed ouer, wilt thou cut off the bridge, that no man else should passe? See then Augustine maketh the heremiticall life altogether vnprofitable to men.

THE SECOND PART, CONCERNING the habite and shauing of Monkes.

The Papiſt.

95. Error.

Both these superstitious customes, for Monkes to bee knowne by their coules and shauen crownes, they receiue and allow as commendable and fit for them to be knowne by. Beside some shew of antiquitie, Scripture they haue none: but their best reason is this: that as Sentons and souldiers, Noble men and rustickes are knowne by their apparell; so it is meete that Monkes should be discerned from others by their habite, Bellarmin. cap. 40. Our Rhemists vse the same reason for shauen crownes, that it is a note of distinction between the Clergie and lay-men, anot. 1. Pet. 3. sect. 2. And for priestlike garments, they alleage out of Apoc. 1. ver. 13. how Christ appeared to Iohn, vested in a priestlike garment.

Ans. First, we deny not, but that it is conuenient for Ministers to be discerned from others euen in their apparell: which may be done by the grauity and modestie thereof in colour, in plainnes, not necessarie to bring in strange and ridiculous fashions of attire, such as Monkes coules are: yet Ministers are better discerned by other things, then their apparell, as they are described by S. Paul, 1. Tim. 3. But as for any such distinction of Monkes we allow not: for the very calling it selfe ought to be abolished. As for shauen crownes and beards, they are but tokens of Baals priests, make the best of them you can.

2. Christ appeared in a long garment downe to the feete, which they translate a priestlike garment, as though Christ were then going to Masse: The word is, poderei, which signifieth a long vesture, downe to the feete, which was one of the high priests garments, and hereby is signified the priesthood of Christ: but what is this to the attire of Monkes or priests? We deny not but long garments for their comelines are fit for Ministers, according to the fashion of the countrey, but not as necessarie, representing more holinesse: for in the East countries, short garments were graue and comely enough: as the prophets had their mantles: and S. Paul maketh mention of his cloke, 2. Tim. 4. 13.

Argum. 2. The speciall habite of Monkes doth bind them to liue well, for being knowne from all

all other men by their habite, if they should doe amisse they should be rebuked of all: Bellarm.
cap. 10. ration. 2.

Ans. First, this is right Pharisaicall to doe well onely to avoide the rebuke of men, and to have their praise: as our Saviour saith, Matth. 23. 5. All their workes they doe to be seene of men, for they make their Phylacteries broad, &c. Wherefore it is plaine hypocrite rather for feare of men then of conscience, not to doe euill. Secondly, their habite serueth not as a straighter bond to doe well, but as a pretended cloake of their euill doing: for by this meanes they practise knowe without suspicion, masking vnder the colours of religion: by their Monkes coules they haue entered into the presence of Princes, and most treacheroullie murdered them, as in our memorie hath been practised in France.

The Protestants.

WE condemne both the habite and shauing of the Monke as superstitious, even as their whole life and profession is.

Argum. 1. There is no one precept in the new testament concerning formes and fashions of apparell to be vsed by Clergie men, but onely in generall termes, that they should be modest and sober, and graue in their behauiour, 1. Tim. 3. The Leuites and priests indeede in the lawe had rules and precepts set them, both for their vestures in the temple, and their ordinary apparell, Num. 15. 39. that it should be made with fringes in remembrance of the commandements. But who seeth not that such significations of apparell were Leuiticall, and meere ceremonyes? such is the habit of Monkes: for their coules, saith the Iesuiste, signifie their innocencie, like vnto children that are couered with wailes like vnto coules. But to place any religion or holines in apparell, as they did, (for it was thought a great priuiledge to be buried in a Monkes coule) is abominable superstition: for such Monkish superstition our Saviour rebuked the Pharisees, Matth. 23. 5. All their workes they doe, to be seene of men: for they make their Phylacteries broad, and make long the fringes of their garments. If the Pharisees did abuse to vaine-glorie and superstition, that kinde of apparell which the lawe commanded: there can be no good vse of Monkish habites, which the Gospell neither commendeth nor commandeth.

As for shauen crownes: they were directly forbidden by the law of Moses, not onely to round the tufts of their beard, as the Gentiles did, Leu. 19. 27. but not to shauie their beard, or make bald their head, Leu. 19. 27. And then it was a signe of holines not to cut the haire, as in the Nazarites it appeared, Num. 6. It was then the custome of the heathen and of their Idolatrous priests to shauie themselves: How then dare the papists make that a signe of holines now, which was a signe of prophanenes, and heathennes then? And is their religion so beggarly, that they must needs borrow their ceremonies of the heathen?

Bellarmine answereth, that Leuitic. 19. 27. The Priests were not simplicie forbidden to shauie their heads, but not to doe it in the death of their friends.

Cons. First, there is no such addition in the text, but the words are generall, They shall not make baldnes upon their heads: Secondly, the prohibition in Ezechiel is generall, chap. 44. 20. They shall not shauie their heads.

Bellarmine replieth againe, that the shauing of their heads was not simplicie forbidden, as euill it is selfe; for the Nazarites according to the lawe did shauie their heads, Num. 6. and 8. 7. Paul also, Act. 18. 24. But it was forbidden onely in respect of the Gentiles, among whom they dwelt, that they should not be like them, Bellarm. cap. 10.

Chrys. First, to shauie the head as the Gentiles did, was simplicie forbidden, sauing where the Lord himselfe made an exception, as in the vowe of the Nazarites: neither were they forbidden to doe so onely, because the Gentiles did the like, but because it was a superstitious vse receiued of the Gentiles, and therefore not becoming Gods people: And therefore this reason is giuen, you are the children of the Lord and an holy people to God, therefore you shall not make any baldnes, &c. Deuter. 14. 1. Secondly, the shauing of the Nazarites, was a speciall exception, as likewise the suffering of their haire to grow long, which is simplicie forbidden, Ezech. 44. 20. yet for a time tolerated in the Nazarites: so also the Prophets shauing of himselfe to be a signe to the people, Ezech. 1. 1. was extraordinarie, and by the Lords direct commandement. So that if Monkes can shew a speciall toleration for their shauing, as the Nazarites had, they may doe as they did: but the profession of the Nazarites is now ceased, as the Apostle sheweth, where he saith, 1. Cor. 7. 26. Eat, &c. which was the vse of Nazarites, not to taste wine, nor to touch any dead thing: that they were but shadows of things to come, Coloss. 2. 17.

Argum. 2. The great varietie of their habites, and foolish significations of their shauings, doe shew what beginning they had. The Monks of Basile order went in white; of Benedict rule in blacke; the Cisterciens had white ratches vpon a blacke coate; the Grandmounks a coate of Fox, pag. 154. maile, with a blacke cloke vpon; some starred Monkes; some Iesuistes with a white girdle, and a russet coule: hence Celestines all in blew, both cloake, coule and cap. The Franciscans did wear ropes for girdles and treen shooes.

They render also diuers reasons of their shauen crownes: some say, it resembleth Christs crowne of thornes: some by shauing the haire, doe signifie the mortifying of the affections, as cutting off of things that are superfluous: some by baring of the head, the simplicitie and plainnes of Beherius saith, it is a signe of repentance and conuersion. Is not here good stuffe, thinke you? Such rites, such ceremonies, such significations, such humane traditions, I thinke, the Pharisees would haue abhorred. For these are worse then their washing of tables, brassen vessels, pots, cups, and such like: and yet our Sauiour saith of them, that they did lay the commandement of God apart, to establish their owne traditions, Mark. 7. 8.

Lastly, let Augustine speake: concerning the habite of ecclesiasticall persons, thus he writeth: Aequi laicis patet celsi palatium Dei mandata seruauitibus quam sanctimoniali habitus praeceptis sacrosanctum. De salute animarum. cap. 8. The heavenly palace is as well open for Lay men, keeping the commandments of God, as for Priests in their holy attire. What profiteth it then, I pray you, to be buried in a Monkes coule? Again, Augustine found fault with certaine dissolute Monkes in that time, that suffered their haire to growe long: Against whom he vrgeth the saying of Saint Paul, 1. Cor. 11. 14. Doth not nature it selfe teach you, that it is a shame for a man to haue long haire? And so he concludeth: Hoc quod pertinet, quaso, tam aperte contra Apostoli praecepta comari? What meaning haue you in this, to suffer your haire to grow, contrary to the precept of the Apostles? this precept did no more belong to Monkes, then all other Christians. Concerning the shauing of Monkes, Augustine hath not one word at all, but of polling, and clipping the haire: he speaketh onely against certaine criminosi fratres, that nourished their haire and suffered it to grow of length.

Nay, our Rhemists loue shauing so well, that they defend the shauing of Nunnies, and would proue it out of Hierome, who indeed speaketh of the cutting off of their haire, not for any religion, but to auoyde certaine little beastes that bred betweene the skinne and the haire, (you know what beastes they are) because they vsed not the bathes, nor oyke, as other women did, Fals. The. 3. sect. 2. But whatsoeuer Hierome saith, it is flat contrarie to S. Pauls rule, who saith, It is a shame for a woman to be shorne or shauen, 1. Cor. 14. 6.

Concerning the habite of Monkes, antiquitie thus speaketh, Si quis virorum putauerit sacro propolis. i. continentia conuenire, ut pallio utatur, tanquam ex eo iustitiam habuerit, & iudices et quosque communiter uiuant, anathema sit. Concil. Gangren. cap. 12. If any man thinke that to weare a cloake doth fit his profession, as though thereby he were more iust, and doth condemne or despise which vse a common vesture, let him be accursed: but the Monkes and Friars doe put holines in their habite, as euen now shall be seene: Ergo.

Celestine Epistol. 2. cap. 1. Discernendi a plebe, vel ceteris sumus doctrina, non ueste; conuersationis habitus; mentis puritate, non cultu. We are discerned from the people, by our doctrine, not our garments; by our conuersation, not by our habite; the puritie of our minde, not by our apparill.

Coloniens. part. 2. cap. 2. 6. Ex ueste apud homines opinionem sanctimoniali praebehuit Christus, &c. Christ forbad, that men should haue opinion of holines in garments: who first biddeth that to be done, which is within, denouncing woe to the Pharisees, who to seeme iust, made broad their phylacteries, but within were full of rauening, &c. But Friars and Monkes did aduance themselves as more holy, by their habite. Likewise in the Canon law. Caus. 33. qu. 5. c. 4. expediret ut patrum conditis moribus &c. It were better for you to obey your husband, with white and faire conditions, then in blacke raiment to resist him.

Doct. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 31. c. 13. Clemen. 3. Monachum facit non habitus, sed professio: not the habite, but the profession maketh a Monke.

Master Bilney holy Martyr, persecuted to death, for this article with others: if to be buried (saith he) in Saint Francis coule should remit foure parts of penance, what is then left for our Sauiour Christ, which taketh away the sinnes of the world? This I will iustifie to be a great blasphemie against the blood of Christ, For. pag. 1001.

Ioban Lamberti holy Martyr condemneth the superstition of those, which say that a man being buried in a gray Fryers frocke, shall haue the remission of the third part of his sinnes, For. p. 1107. ad articol. 13.

Concerning the superstitious shauing of crownes, we haue also the testimonie of antiquitie: Concil. Eliberin. can. 55. Qui tantum sacrificantium coronam portauit, nec sacrificans idoli, plures per biennium communionem acciperet. They which onely beare the crowne of sacrificing priests though they sacrifice not to idols, shall want the communion two yeeres. Behold then it was the custom of heathenish Idolatrous priests, to haue their crownes shauen.

Concil. Gangren. cap. 17. which is alleadged in the Canon law, distin. 30. c. 2. Quicumque uuluit propter diuinum cultum crines attollet quos ad subleuandum uenerunt Deum tribuit, tanquam per caput dissoluat obedientia, anathema sit: If any woman for religion sake doe poll her haire, which God hath

hath given as a signe of subiection, as one transgressing the precept of obedience, let her be accursed. Yet for all this our Rhemists commend the shauing of Nunnes.

Master Bradford holy Martyr, calleth the Popes shauen crowne the beasts marke, epistol. ad monachos p. 163.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE MONKES

Canonicall houres.

The Popists.

The 3. 6. 9. houres, they say, are consecrated and deuoted to prayer, which they call their Canonicall houres: at the 3. houre the holy Ghost descended: at the 6. houre Peter went vp to the top of the house: and at the 9. houre Peter and Iohn went vp to pray in the Temple; Act. 3. 1. And Daniel vsed to pray thrice in the day, Dan. 6. 10. Ergo, those times ought to be consecrate to prayer, Rhemist. All. 16. sect. 6.

Aspo. First, we denie that it can be gathered by any of those places, that these houres onely ought to be set apart for prayer. Peter and Iohn went vp at the ninth houre, which was the time of the euening sacrifice, when the religious lewes went vp to pray. Secondly, Daniel prayed three times a day, but at what houres the text speaketh not: yet by this example, and by the other proofes alledged, we do gather, that at the 3. 6. 9. houre, that is not precisely at any of these times, but in the morning, when men rise vp to their labours, at noone before their repast, and at night when they go to rest, it is meete and conuenient that men should make their prayers vnto God; and at other times also when they finde themselves fit. Thirdly, the popish seruice hath nothing but the names of these houres: for they are all finished in the forenoone, whereas the sixth houre is at high noone, the ninth houre is the third houre before the Sunnes set: And this toleration, to dispatch all in the forenoone, is agreeable to their owne superstitious decrees; decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 1. Presbyter mane, &c. The Priest in the morning must performe his seruice, the first, the third, fixt, ninth houre; and for the euening, &c. and all this may be done in the morning: for after these houres dispatched, he must go forth fasting; ad rurale opus, to his field busines; &c. Thus wee see how well they obserue their houres themselves.

The Protestants.

We denie not, but that set times of publike prayer are commendable, as we haue our forenoone, and afternoone seruice: but at vnreasonable houres, as at midnight, or the rising of the Sonne, to call the people together, when they cannot conueniently be assembled, is but a superstitious custome. Againe, it is profitable for men in the morning, noone, euening, though not precisely at any set houres, to direct their prayers vnto God: but so to stint mens prayers, as that they ought of necessitie to keepe their houres, as though their prayers were then more acceptable, it hath no ground out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. S. Paul saith, Pray continually. 1. Thessal. 5. 17. Ergo, it is lawfull to pray at all times, and one time as fit for prayer as another, if a man be prepared. Againe, the same Apostle saith, I will that the men euery where lift up pure hands without wrath and doubting. 1. Timoth. 2. 8. Out of these words we gather two arguments: First, prayers are no more bound to times, then to places: a man may pray euery where, Ergo, at euery time. Secondly, a man ought not to pray, but when he is void of wrath, and is otherwise prepared: but it may be, that at the stinted houres, of the 3. 6. 9. a man may be in wrath, and otherwise not fit; therefore hee is not necessarily to be tyed to those houres.

2. Augustine thus writeth: Cum quisque orationem querit, collocat membra sicut ei occurrit. Cum autem non queritur, sed insertur appetitus orandi: hoc est, cum repente aliquid venit in mentem, quocumque modo inuenit hominem, non est vtiq; differenda oratio. Lib. 2. ad Simplicianum quæst. 4. When any man desireth to pray, let him dispose his body as he thinketh best: But when as it commeth not of his desire and seeking, but sodainly his affection is stirred vp to pray, howsoeuer prayer findeth him (that is, whether standing or sitting) he must not in any case deferre it and put it off to another time. This then is Augustines mind, that a man should pray so oft as he hath a disposition thereunto, and not deferre his prayer, as they do, which bind themselves to Canonicall houres.

Council. Constantinop. 6. cap. 7. Singulis diebus qui amplius non potest, saltem duobus vicibus orat, mane scilicet & vespere dicens symbolum, sine orationem dominicam: Euery day, he that cannot oftner, let him pray twise, that is, morning and euening, saying the Creede, and the Lordes prayer. It appeareth that in those dayes when this Councell was held, which was about the yeece 670. men were not tyed to their Canonicall houres.

Claudius Mamerius holie Martyr: To houres and times prayers ought not to bee tied, but whensoeuer Gods spirit doth moue vs, or when any necessitie driueth vs, wee ought to pray. See pag. 905.

But who could haue ſaid better of this matter, then Wincheſter doth, if he had been conſtant in the truth? The obſeruing (ſaith he) of daies, houres, number, time, place, if they bee orderly and publiſhly commaunded by the rulers, it is but to ſet the Church in an outward and publiſh order: but if a man inwardly and priuately be addicted to the ſame, thinking his prayer otherwiſe not auailable, but by obſeruing thereof, it is an error, Fox pag. 179. ex depoſition. D. Redman. I thinke no reaſonable man will reſuſe to ſubſcribe to this ſentence.

THE FOVRTH PART, CONCERNING THE maintenance of Monkes.

The Popiſts

97. Error.

They neither denie that it is vnlawfull for Monkes to labour with their hands, where neceſſitie, bodily ſtrength, the order of the Church doth require them; neither doe they confeſſe, that it is neceſſarie for them to worke: And ſo are not aſhamed to maintaine their idle, ſlothfull, and Epicures life, Bellarm. cap. 4. 1. 42. Rhemiſt. 2. Theſſal. 3. ſect. 2. But they may either liue, of the lands giuen to their houſes, or elſe by their religious begging, cap. 44.

Argum. 1. Monkes are not now bound to worke, hauing wherewithall to liue beſide of lands giuen vnto them, becauſe moſt of them are priſts, and doe ſerue at the Altar, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, wee graunt that Miniſters of the Goſpell labouring in the Word and Sacraments, ought to be maintained by the Goſpell: but ſuch are few or none of your Monkes, who being fit for no other ſeruiſe either in the Church or Common-wealth, are thruſt into Monasteries by their friends: they are idolatrous priſts, and ſerue little better then at Baſils Altar. If any of them be fit for the Miniſterie, as we denie not but ſome haue come out of your Cloyſters, as Laſter, Iohn. P. Martyr, by whom the Church of God hath receiued much good: but they muſt come firſt out of your Dennes, and relinquish their Monkiſh life, and labour amongst the people: ſo ſhall they bee no more regular, but ſecular priſts, as you terme them. Secondly, the lands which were beſtowed vpon them, were firſt giuen vpon an euill intent, that by their prayers they ſhould redeeme the ſoules of their founders, who moſt of them had committed ſome notable ſinne, and ſo pro remedio animarum, to helpe their ſoules, they built Monasteries. So King Eiſelbert killing his brother Edwin, built two Monasteries, Middleton and Michelney for his ſoule, Fox pag. 173. King Offa for killing Eiſelbert a good Prince, who came peaceably for the deſpouſage of Adred his daughter, being pricked in conſcience, gaue the firſt Peter pence to Rome, pag. 114. The lands therefore being giuen firſt for vngodly purpoſes, and continued by them for idolatrous vſes, ought cleane to be taken from them, and to be beſtowed vpon better vſes: neither is it lawfull for them in that ſort to enioy them.

Argum. 2. They proue the impudent begging of Friars, which they call religious begging, to bee lawfull and commendable, by the example of Chriſt, who had not a place where to put his head, Luk. 9. and of his Apoſtles, that were charged not to poſſeſſe gold or ſiluer in their purſes, Matt. 10. Bellarm. cap. 45.

Anſ. Firſt, I pray you where euer did you reade that Chriſt went a begging? he liued not of almes, but gaue almes, and Indas was the almeſman, though he played his part but euill. Auguſtine flatly denieth that you auouch: He ſaith that Chriſts bagge was as Fifcus regis, euen as the King Exchequer: and that what was giuen him, was as due as tribute money to the Prince: But the King, I trow, is not a begger: Niſi putetis (ſaith he) quia dominus petebat & indigebat, cui ſeruimus angeli, qui de quinque panibus tot millia panis: Vnleſſe you thinke (ſaith he) that Chriſt begged, and wanted, whom the Angels ſerued, and who fed with ſiue loaves not a few thouſands, in Pſal. 146. Secondly, if the Apoſtles were beggers, then they liued of almes, but that is vntrue: for Chriſt ſaith, The labourer is worthie of his hire: but the labourers wages is earned and deſerued, it is no almes.

Iohn the 23. defined them to be heretikes, that affirmed Chriſt and his Apoſtles to haue had nothing proper of their owne. Then by this determination, Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts are found heretikes, in ſaying that Chriſt and his Apoſtles went a begging: vnleſſe they will reuerſe the ſentence of their holy father, which were alſo no leſſe then hereſie. Thus are they intrapped on both ſides: let them vnfold themſelues as they can.

Notwithſtanding all this, yet Bellarmine taketh vpon him to proue that Chriſt was a begger: firſt, becauſe he had no houſe, nor poſſeſſions of his owne, nor any place where to reſt his head: but was entertained ſometime in one place, ſometime in another, and liued of the almes, that faithfull women miniſtred vnto him, Bellarm. cap. 45.

Anſ. All this we graunt, that Chriſt had no poſſeſſions here in earth, becauſe he ſaith, his kingdom was not of this world: and that he reſuſed not the miniſterie of the faithfull: yet this proueth not, that he begged, or liued of almes. Firſt, the women are ſaid to miniſter to him of their ſubſtance, substance, Luk. 8. 3. which word of ministracion sheweth, that they acknowledged a seruice in their goods vnto Christ, whereas he that giueth almes, hath a dominion in that he giueth, and is a Lord thereof, rather then a seruant. Secondly, almes are giuen to him that needeth: but Christ needed not, that was able of hisse loaues to feede five thousand.

Secondly, he alleageth that saying, Psal. 40. 17. Ego mendicus, But I am poore, and a begger: which words are vnderstood of Christ: As the Apostle applieth those words, verl. 7. in the beginning of the booke it is written of me, &c. to our Sauour Christ, Heb. 9. 7. Bellar. ibid.

Ans. First, though some part of this Psalme bee prophetically applied to Christ, yet the whole Psalme is not, as that, verl. 12. My sinnes are more then the haires of my head; let him shew, if he can, how it may be pronounced of Christ. Secondly, Dauid in saying, I am a begger, had spoken contrarie to himselfe, Psal. 37. 25. where he confesseth, that he neuer saw in all his time, the seede of the righteous to begge their bread. Thirdly, the word here vsed signifieth not a begger, but one that is needie, and so your owne vulgar translation, for mendicus, begger, noteth in the margin, egenus, needie. Fourthly, Dauid speaketh not of any want of substance, but that he needed Gods helpe to deliuer him from his enemies: as it followeth in the same verse, ebon ait mihi, helper and deliverer, &c. So Belarmine answered.

Contra. Now I will insert the reasons of their owne law, as they stand in the Extravagant of Ioh. 12. against those that affirmed Christ to be a begger, and that he had no propertie or dominion in any thing, but the simple vse thereof.

First, Quis simplicium vsuarius: Who can call him a simple vsfer of a thing without any right or propertie, that hath power to giue it, &c. but Christ gaue almes to the poore; for one of them almes carried the bagge: Ergo, he had right and propertie, &c.

Secondly, In rebus consumptilibus, &c. In things that consume and waste, as meate and drinke, there can be no vse without propertie: for then there may be an vse seuered from propertie, when the substance referred, there ariseth some profit to the vsfer: but this cannot bee in meate and drinke, which consume in the vsing, Extravag. Iohann. 12. 14. c. 3.

Thirdly, every vse without a right vnto the thing vsed, is vniust: for that is vniust, where there is no right; and so consequently if Christ had no right in the things he vsed, the vsing should bee vniust, which were blasphemie to affirme.

Fourthly, the contrarie may be proued out of Scripture, that Christ had both the vse and propertie of the things which he vsed: for one alwaies carried the satchell or bagge of prouision for themselves, and of almes for the poore, 12. 14. c. 5. So vpon these and other reasons he concludeth them to be heretikes, that affirme Christ and his Apostles to haue been without any right or propertie in any thing, and so consequently beggers.

First we say, that no idle persons ought to be maintained in a Christian Common-wealth, but they that haue not any other necessarie calling, should labour with their hands, and therefore Monkes that are fit for no other seruice in the Church, ought to labour and worke.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul giueth a generall rule: He that will not worke, let him not eate, 2. Thessal. 3. verl. 10. speaking of those that haue no necessarie calling in the Church: Ergo, Monkes must worke, or else by Saint Pauls rule, not eate. The Rhemists answer, that this is but a naturall admonition or counsell. Nay, it is a precept and commaundement, that all in their seuerall places and callings should labour, none liue idly: for S. Paul saith not, this I counselled you, but this I warned you of, or denounced vnto you, and he calleth those that followed not this rule, inordinate walkers.

Belarmine answereth: first, that S. Paul giueth this precept to labour vnto the secular sort onely, not to Monks, which, saith he, in the opinion of our aduersaries, were not as yet in the Church, Bellarmin. 49. 42.

Contra. First, the Apostle writeth to the whole Church of the Thessalonians, 2. epist. chap. 3. v. 1. wherefore this precept also bindeth Monkes, vnlesse you will say they are no members of the Church, as indeede they are not of the true Church. Secondly, if you will graunt, that there were no monkes in Saint Pauls time, that you may finde out a colourable answer, then haue they not their foundation out of the Scripture, as you beare vs in hand: yet S. Pauls rule shall still binde all that belong to the Church.

Belarmine againe answereth, that Saint Paul doth not absolutely commaund to worke, but onely to auoide offence, and idlenes: so that they are not bound corporally to labour, which can by other meanes, then labouring corporally, auoide these dangers. Bellarmin. ibid.

Contra. First, the Apostle doth giue an absolute charge to all to worke, setting himselfe for an example, who could haue kept himselfe from idlenes, otherwise then by working; yet he laboured, verl. 7. 8. Secondly, if he commaund to worke, onely to auoide idlenes and offences, then is the commaundement absolute, because these inconueniencies must needs ensue vpon not working: as the Apostle saith, verf. 11. Wee haue heard of some that walke inordinately, and worke not at all: where the reason is giuen of their inordinate walking, euen their not working: so that they must needs walke inordinately, that worke not. Thirdly, they which haue a lawfull vocation, beside bodily working, are not bound to corporall labour: but so haue not your loytering lubberly Friers, that neither preach, nor worke: neither can they keepe themselves from idleness and offences, by any other meanes, then by working, which they doe not.

Argum. 2. Neither is it to bee permitted, that Friers should get their liuing by begging: for what are they else but valiant beggers? First, there ought to bee no beggers in the Common-wealth: as Deuter. 15. Though the Lord say, that they should neuer bee without poore or beggers, which should want their helpe, verf. 11. yet, verf. 5. this charge is giuen, that by them, that is, their default, there should not be a begger in Israel: they should so prouide for the poore, that they neede not goe a begging. There are also positiue lawes, to restraine the number of beggers, and therefore there is no reason, that by a number of idle vagrant persons, belly-god Friers, the begging order should be enlarged.

Bellarmine answereth, that Deuter. 15. 4. there is no prohibition of beggers: for our Saviour Christ in all the Gospell findeth not fault with the beggers, that then abounded; but it is a promise onely that they should haue such plentie, if they kept Gods commaundements, that they should haue no beggers, cap. 46. resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. First, to suffer beggers is a thing displeasing vnto God and forbidden: because begging proceedeth either from the hardnes of mens hearts, and therefore wee are commaunded not to turne away our eyes from our owne flesh, that is, from our poore brethren, *Isai. 58. 7. or else from idleness; and therefore men are commaunded to worke, that they be not in want, 1. Thess. 4. 12. and both these, as hardnes of heart, and idleness, are displeasing to God and forbidden. Secondly, it is vntue, that in the Gospell the rich are not rebuked for suffering beggers; as may appeare in the parable of the rich man, Luk. 16. who is punished for suffering Lazarus to lie crying at his gates: and it is Iob's commendation, that he suffered not the eyes of the widow to faile, Iob. 31. 16. that is, suffered not the poore to waite for their almes, or lie begging at his gates; but he euen admitted them vnto his table, as it followeth *verf. 17.

Argum. 3. Seeing it cannot be chosen, but there must needs be some beggers; they ought not to be young sturdie lubbers, that are able to worke, as most of the Friers were; but such as are described, Luk. 14. 21. where the King saith to his seruants, Goe out quickly, and bring hither the poore, the maimed, the hable, the blinde: Ergo, such lustie fellowes ought to liue by the sweate of their browes, not to eate vp the bread of the poore.

Bellarmino answereth, that in this place alleaged, Luk. 14. 21. all the poore are not vnderstood, to be blinde, lame, impotent, &c. but it must bee read with a distinction, Bring in the poore, and the maimed: so the poore are called, whether they are maimed or not: and S. Paul, Act. 24. 17. brought almes to the poore at Ierusalem, yet were they not all blinde and lame, &c.

Contra. First, we say not that almes are not to be giuen to any poore, but such as are impotent; but that no poore ought to bee suffered to liue by asking and begging, but such as are impotent, and vnfit to labour. Secondly, wherefore the example of S. Paul's bringing almes to Ierusalem is impertinent, seeing the question is of beggers, not of all poore: And beside, we speake of a settled state in the Common-wealth, not of the daies of persecution, when the brethren of necessity must be relieved. Thirdly, that in the parable impotent poore onely are vnderstood, it may be gathered by the place from whence they were called, namely from the streetes, high wayes and hedges: where in those daies none were suffered to stand and begge, but onely the impotent, the blinde, lame, and such like.

Lastly, in the Sermons, Ad fratres in eremo, which are ascribed to Augustine, thus we read: Est fratres mei, semper boni aliquid facite; quem tadeo orare, vel psallere non desistat; quem tadeo orare, vel psallere, manibus laborare non desistat: My brethren, alwaies be ye doing of some good; if you bee wearie of praying, sing; if of singing, then labour with your hands. And in the same place, Augustine beweth, that the Monkes in his time did so plie their worke, U'sque adeo, ut etiam manes operaretur in eo loco mittant, qui impes incolumi: That they sent ships laden with necessaries, vnto those places where the poore inhabited, de morib. eccles. cap. 32. Ergo, in Augustines time Monkes liued not by begging, but with labour of their hands.

This also is further proued by the generall consent of antiquitie: that Monkes should not meddle with any part of the Ministrie, and therefore had no right to their maintenance. Chalcedon. Council. can. 4. Ut nullus monachorum tenet ciuilia aut ecclesiastica negotia inquirere: That no Monke vnder paine of excommunication, meddle with ciuill or ecclesiasticall busines. Leo epistol. 60. Nihil prater eos, qui sunt domini sacerdotes ius docendi & pradicandi audeat vendicare, sine sui monachis, sine laicis, &c. Let no man, beside the Ministers of God, take vpon them to teach, or preach, whether he be a Monke, or a lay man, Terracensis. can. 11. Vt nullus monachorum ministerium Ecclesiasticum presumat agere: That no Monke presume to execute the Ecclesiasticall ministerie.

Hereunto agree their owne Canons: Caus. 2. qu. 7. c. 54. Pelag. Nec secularia, nec ecclesiastica negotia monachi, &c. That a Monke should not enterneddle either with matters secular, or ecclesiasticall. Caus. 7. qu. 1. c. 45. Monachorum vita, &c. A Monkes profession is to be subiect, not to teach, or beare rule. Likewise, Sexti. decretal. lib. 5. tit. 2. c. 11. Clement. 4. Predicatores quassuarius & predicationis officio, &c. Begging preachers must be inhibited to preach, for it appertaineth only to them to take charitable reliefe, &c. Thus Monkes in times past, were excluded from the office of the Clergie.

And as Monkes could not become Clerkes, so neither was it lawfull for Clerkes to enter into Monkerie. Concil. Casaraugust. can. 6. Clericus, qui propter luxum, &c. ab officio suo sponte discesserit, ac vult observantiam legis se monachum videri maluerit, de ecclesia repellendus: A Clergie man, which of wantonnes doth leaue his office, and chusefeth rather to bee a Monke, that he may seeme an observer of the law, let him be expelled from the Church.

Secondly, as there is no affinitie betweene Monkes and Clerkes, for their office, so haue they nothing to doe with Clerkes maintenance. Monkes ought to take no tithes, Lateranens. sub Innocent. 3. cap. 61. No religiosi suscipiant decimas de manu laicali: Religious men (meaning Monkes) ought to receive no tithes of the lay sort. Yet Monkes are commaunded to pay tithes: Concil. Lateranens. part. 13. cap. 6. sub Alexandro. 3. Ex praedij rusticis traditis monachi decimas soluant: Monkes must pay their tithes out of their farmes let out to husbandmen. And as for other maintenance by land, it is likewise forbidden, Lateranens. part. 27. cap. 1. Alexander. 3. Monachi non debent villas aut vesulas ad firmam tenere: Monkes must not take villages or Churches to farme.

Monkish idle life is condemned, Concil. Toletan. 7. can. 5. Illos quos in tali proposito ignavia impulsus quousque nulla vita dignitas ornat, sed ignorantia sedat, decernimus a cellulis eici, &c. They which entered into this profession for idleness sake, who are of no commendable life, but foully ignorant, we would haue them cast out of their Cels.

Monkes also and Friers are forbidden by the ancient Canons to liue by begging, Concil. Aquisgranens. cap. 107. Ipsi pauperes, si se possunt suis artificio & laboribus expedire non presumant, quod debet infirmis & debilibus accipere: The poore, that are able to helpe themselues by their labour, must not take that, which is allotted for the weake and impotent. Colonien. part. 11. cap. 3. In hospitalia, nulla aliquid miserabilis persona, qua aut morbo, debilitate, aut aetate impedita sunt manibus laborare: Let none but miserable poore persons be received into hospitals, which are hindered by their sickness, impotencie, or age, from working with their hands. Cap. 5. Sint mendicantibus vobis non solum hospitalia clausa, sed & publice & officium mendicare interdictum sit: Not onely hospitals are to bee shut vp against valiant beggers, but we forbid such to begge from house to house. Therefore lustie, sturdie, lubberly Friers ought not to goe a begging, but to get their liuing with labour.

See also to this purpose their owne Canons: Caus. 16. qu. 1. c. 18. Pseudomonachi, &c. Monkes that wander to and fro, are called false Monkes. Caus. 18. qu. 2. c. 10. Monachi in ciuitate vagantes, &c. Monkes wandring vp and downe in cities, doe but make a shew onely, they are not true Monkes. Extrac. commun. lib. 3. tit. 8. c. 2. Ioann. 22. Monachi ad transmarina, &c. Monkes going beyond the sea, must bee taken for Apostataes. These Canons forbid the wandring and runnagate life of Monkes.

Lastly then, that there is no meanes left to Monkes for their maintenance, but the labour of their hands, it is thus further shewed, Concil. Aquisgranens. cap. 96. ex Hieronym. Facis aliquid operis, ne semper inuenias te diabolus occupatum: Be doing of some worke, that the diuell may alwaies finde you occupied.

Concil. Carthag. 4. can. 51. Clericus quantumlibet verbo Dei eruditus, artificio villum quare: A Clergie man, though very well instructed in the word of God, may get his liuing by some artificiall worke. Can. 53. Omnes Clerici, qui ad operandum validi sunt, artificialia & literas discant: All Clergie men, that are strong to labour, let them together with letters learne some handicraft. If Clerkes in those daies were inured to hand-labour, whose office was to teach; how much more did it become the Monkes, who had nothing to doe with Ecclesiasticall functions?

Lastly, Ioh. Wickliffe condemned for this article with others, for saying, that Friers are bound to get their liuing by labour of their hands, and not by begging: and that whosoever gaue any almes to begging Friers, is accursed, For pag. 435. articl. 22. 23.

Thus by Gods goodnes we haue finished this question, and this whole Controuersie: One other question remaineth; whether the Monasticall life be meritorious or not: which we haue referred to another place, when we shall come to the question of Virginitie in generall and the priviledges thereof.

THE SEVENTH GENERAL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE CIVILL MAGISTRATE.

Any things, which Belarmine in this controuersie laboureth to prooue, are agreed vpon betweene vs and our aduersaries, and therefore wee will spend no time in them.

1 We teach, as well as they, that there ought to be Magistrates, Princes and gouernours amongst Christians, contrarie to that which the Anabaptists hold, that there ought to be equalitie among Christians. The holy Ghost, Iudg. 17.6. and 19.1. maketh this the cause of all disorder: At that time in Israel there was no King amongst them, but every man did that which seemed good in his owne eyes.

2 We doe hold, that euen wicked Kings and Tyrants haue power ouer the goods and liues of men, neither that it is lawfull to disobey them, but in matters onely belonging to our conscience, where it is better to obey God then men: Ierem. 27.6. I haue giuen, saith the Lord, all these lands to Nabuchadnezzar.

3 Concerning the power of Princes, we graunt, that they may make lawes and ordinances to gouerne the people by, Prou. 8.15. that they may punish the offenders of their lawes, Rom. 13. They doe not beare the sword for nought: That it is lawfull for Christian Princes, vpon iust occasion, to wage battaile, Luk. 3.14. Iohn Baptist doth not condemne the calling of souldiers, but teacheth them to vse it aright.

But here by the way we must a little salute the Iesuite, who findeth great fault with Luther, for saying: That to fight against the Turkes, is to repugne against God, visiting our iniquities by them, Articul. 34. condemn. in bulla Leonis. As though Luther should thinke it vnlawfull to wage battell with the Turke. First I will briefly declare, that Luther had no such meaning; and then it shall appeare by whom the Turkish warres haue been most hindered.

As concerning the first, Luther doth not simply speake against such warres, but onely the abuses among Christians, in such warlike enterprises: the first is, their malice and hatred against the Infidels, whom they seeke by no means to conuert or winne vnto the faith, but vse altogether violent and bloodie meanes, whereas the other way ought first to bee attempted, as Master Tindal saith; I am bound to loue the Turke with all my might, &c. after the example that Christ himselfe, neither to spare goods, bodie or life to winne him to Christ, For pag. 1248.

The second abuse is their superstition towards the land of Iudea, which they call the holy land, for the recouering whereof principally all those great warres were taken in hand: whereas they are greater motives, as the propagation of the Gospell, the redeeming of the libertie of Christiane. And therefore it is to be thought, that God in his great wisdom, hath giuen ouer those places to the possession of the Heathen, to let vs know, that before God one place is not more holie than another.

A third fault is, for that Christians seeing the mightie encrease of the Turkish tyrannie, doe not enter into consideration of themselves, and repent them of their sinnes, which are the cause why Christians are scourged with the Turkish yron rods. The sinnes of Christians (so called) are very great, and doe farre exceede the manners of the East: As one thus writeth, Latini licet ad ea, quae sunt fidei, verius adherant: Deo quam Graeci tamen quoad mores multo pluribus a diuitibus & fidelibus implicati sunt: Though the Latines in things concerning faith doe more neerely cleaue to God, then the Grecians, yet are they more polluted in their manners, Oper. tripertit. lib. 1. cap. 2. tom. 2. Concil. But as the truth is, the Latines are more corrupt both in life, in manners: this is that therefore that Luther misliketh in these warres, that men will not consider, that they are chastised for their sinnes, and so learne to amend their liues; and otherwise he thinketh not. Yea Belarmine himselfe alleageth Luther's owne words, whereby he sheweth his great mislike of those preachers, that cry out the Turke ought not to be resisted: Hic sermo seditionis est. &c. This saying is sedition and not to bee suffered. These are Luther's owne words in his booke, De Usurpatione Sacrorum howsoever the Iesuite in other places wresteth his meaning.

Now in the next place I will shew, how that not Luther, or any of his part, but the Pope and popelings popelings haue been the onely hinderers of the Christians couragious enterprises against the Turke, and the greatest cause of his rising.

1 The first aduantage which the Infidels had, was by the diuision of the Christian Empire, when at first Gregorius the 3. anno 742. began, and Leo the 3. finished his device, in erecting a new Emperour in the West, anno 800. and so weakened the power of the Emperour of Constantinople. And afterward they tooke vpon them to excommunicate the Greeke Emperour at their pleasure: as Clement 5. dealt with Andronicus Paleologus, excommunicating him, and all the Greeke Church beside, charging all Princes, Earles, Barons, &c. vnder paine of excommunication, to haue no societie or confederacie with him, Extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 10. c. 3. And by this meanes the Greeke Emperour being forsaken of all helpe, was vnable to resist the cruell Turke.

2 After that the Empire of the East was thus weakened; by little and little the West Empire began to decay: for the Popes vsurped vpon the Emperours, tooke vpon them to depose them, to make them their vassals, to hold their stirrup, to kisse their feete, to receive their Crowne and dignitie at the Popes hands: And at the length Gregorius the 5. anno 1060. or thereabout, made a decree, that the Emperour should bee chosen from thenceforth by seuen Prince-Electors of Germanie: so the maiestie of the Empire, which before descended by certaine inheritance, now began to depend vpon vncertaine and corrupt election. And hereof it came to passe, that anno 1350. Carolus 4. that his sonne might succcede him in the Empire, did lay to pledge vnto the Prince-Electors the free Cities belonging to the Empire; which to this day were neuer redeemed: and thus also was the West Empire weakened, and a way made for the Turke to inuade Christendome.

3 A third practise of the Pope in weakening the state of Christendome was, by his cruell taxes and impositions vpon the Clergy and others, in leuying sometime the tenths, sometime the first frutes, sometime halfe the frutes of all Ecclesiasticall promotions, as Innocentius the seventh, did. And vnder the pretense and colour of the holy warres, gathering great summes of money, as in the Laterane Councel sub Innocent. 3. in fine: the twentieth part of euery spirituall living for the space of three yeeres was allotted towards the expedition intended against the Infidels: and at diuers other times the like exactions were required. And thus by the Popes Annates, Bulls, Indulgences, yeeres of Iubile, first frutes, pall money, dispensations, Peter pence, and such other deuices, all Christendome was robbed and spoyled, and left naked to the Turke.

4 Besides these former practises, the Popes haue dealt vnfaithfully, and entred themselves into league with the Infidels: Alexander the third anno. 1160. perswaded the Emperour Fredericke to goe in battell in his own person against the Souldane, and so betrayed him into his enemies hand, sending vnto the Souldane the Emperours counterfeite taken by a skilfull paynter: Alexander the sixt, tooke 200000. crownes of Baiazetes the great Turke to poyson his brother Gemas, that was fled to him for succour, and so he did: Eugenius the fourth, anno. 1430. perswaded Vladislaus King of Hungarie to breake the truce, and violate his faith giuen vnto Amurat bes the great Turke: whereupon the Turke in great indignation ioyned battell with him, wherein the King himselfe and the most of his Armie were slaine: And by this occasion the Turke entred into Christendome, and to this daye neuer could be driuen out.

5 Lastly, if the Pope were an enimie indeed to the Turke, and would haue battell waged with him, he should do as his predecessour Innocentius the third did, Council. Lateranen. who proclaiming warre against the Turke, Imperauit pacem Christianis ad quadriennium sub poena excommunicationis: Iuioynd peace and truce to all Christians for foure yeere vnder paine of excommunication. So should the Pope cause the King of Spayne to leaue of molesting and troubling his neighbours: but now he is so farre from this, that the Pope is rather become the chiefe author of dissention, and strife, and sower of discord among Christian Princes, exciting and stirring them vp to warre one against another. Did not Marcellus the second say, not long since, Expeditionem magis fieri debere in Lutheranos, quam Turcos? That warre should be made vpon the Lutherans, rather then against the Turkes? But as the saying is, it is well that a curst cow hath short hornes, for this Marcellus was but a Pope of 23. dayes. Alexander Farnesius Cardinall and chiefe Captaine vnder Paulus the third, against the Lutherans, said, he would shed so much Lutheran blood, as that his horse might swim therein: ex actis Paul. 2.

Indge now (Christian Reader) whether by this meanes the Pope hath not greatly decayed the strength of Christendome, in nourishing of domesticall warres: and so comparing this, with the other practises, you shall finde, not Luther nor Lutherans, as they are slaudered; but the Pope and his popelings, to haue been the chiefe hinderers of the Christians warlike enterprises against the Turke: let vs now goe forward.

The severall questions, wherein we differ from our aduersaries, and they from the truth, concerning the office of the ciuill Magistrate, are these.

1 Concerning the authoritie of the Prince in Ecclesiasticall matters, three parts of the question.

on. First, whether he haue power ouer persons Ecclesiasticall. Secondly, whether ouer their goods. Thirdly, whether in Ecclesiasticall causes.

2. Whether the ciuill Magistrate may prosecute heretikes to death: and whether he ought to be the iudge of heretikes, with other like questions.

3. Whether the positive and ciuill lawes of Princes doe binde their subiects and oblige them simply in conscience. This matter we haue discussed before, Controuersie 4. quest. 7. part. 1.

4. Whether the Pope ought or may excommunicate the Prince, or Emperour, or otherwise hath any temporall iurisdiction aboue him: this question also is handled before, Controuersie 4. quest. 8. part. 1.

THE FIRST QUESTION, CONCERNING THE authoritie of the Prince in Ecclesiasticall matters.

THis question hath three parts. First, whether he haue power ouer the persons Ecclesiasticall. Secondly, whether ouer their goods. Thirdly, whether the Prince be chiefe in causes Ecclesiasticall.

THE FIRST PART, CONCERNING THE AUTHORITY of the ciuill Magistrate ouer Ecclesiasticall persons.

The Papists.

3. Error.

THe Clergie is not bound to keepe and obserue the ciuill and positive lawes of Princes, if they be contrarie to the Canons of the Church: neither ought they for any cause to be cited before the ciuill Magistrate, or to be iudged by him, Bellarm. de Clericis. cap. 28.

It is absurd (saith the Iesuite) that the sheepe should iudge the shepheard, Bellarm. And the Apostle willett all men to obey their Bishops and ouerseers, Heb. 13. 17. and to submit themselves vnto them, from which rule neither Kings nor Emperours are exempted: Prelates must be obeyed: Ergo, not obey, Rhemist. ibid.

Answ. First, the obedience here required we acknowledge, that it ought to be yeelded by Kings and Emperours to those that haue the oversight of their soules: for the Prince is bound to receive and beleue all true doctrine which is taught by the Pastors and Bishops of the Church, agreeable to the word of God, vnder paine of damnation: and the Pastors are bound vnder the like paine to obey the Princes lawes, made according to the word of God. Secondly, the spirituall obedience of the ciuill Magistrate to the word of God, taught by the Pastors of the Church, is an exemption of them from their ciuill obedience: for euery soule is subiect to the higher power, Rom. 13. 1. Fulst. annot. 13. Heb. sect. 9.

Argum. 2. Bellarmino in this place much vrgeth the constitutions of certaine Councils, for the priuiledge of the Clergie: as Chalced. can. 9. Agathens. can. 32. concil. Carthag. 3. can. 9. Tolosan. 3. can. 13.

Answ. These Canons do not simply forbid Magistrates to haue the cognisance of Clergie mens causes, or to conuent them before them: but onely, that Clergie men vpon euery occasion, should not draw one another before the ciuill Magistrate, but be contented rather to be ordered by their B. as the words of the Canon of the Chalcedon are these, Si Clericus aduersus Clericum, &c. If a Clergie man haue a matter against a Clergie man, he should referre it to the B. &c. the Agathensian saith, a Clergie man without the licence of his Bishop, should not presume to sue to a secular Iudge: to the Toletane, Vi Clerici Clericos, &c. that Clergie men should not draw Clergie men before the secular Iudge contemning the Bishop. Who seeth not, that here is no limitation of the ciuill authoritie, but a monition onely, that Clergie men in such matters, as belonged to the cognisance of the Bishop, should be ordered by him rather with quietnesse, then to runne to forraigne iudgement vpon euery occasion. And this wee denie not, but it is practised in our Church, which notwithstanding attributeth to the Prince the chiefe Soueraignitie ouer Ecclesiasticall persons.

The Protestants.

That Ecclesiasticall persons are subiect to temporall gouernours, and are to be iudged by their lawes, the Scriptures speake plainly.

Argum. 1. Rom. 13. 1. Let euery soule be subiect to the higher powers: Ergo, Bishops, yea the Pope himselfe, if he haue a soule. The like saith S. Peter 1. 2. 13. Submit your selues to all manner ordinance. Salomon removed Abiathar from the Priesthood, and put in Sadock. Paul appealed, and submitted himselfe to Cesar. Againe, if Priests offend and commit any grievous sinne, as of murder, theft, who shall punish them? The ciuill Magistrate onely beareth the sword. They must either grant, that priests are no euill doers, which were to too grosse; or if they be, that they are vnder the ciuill Magistrates power: for he is the Minister of God to take vengeance vpon euill doers. Rom. 13. 4.

In Augustine time, the controversies betweene the Catholike and Heretike Bishops, were committed to the iudgement of the Emperour: Aug. quidam, saith he, non debent Episcopi per se sed Epistol. 181.
iudicio pasci: Quasi uero ipse sibi hoc comparauerit, ac non Imperatoris iudicio pasci, sed suum de quo reuocari de reddidit est rursus maximus periculum. But, saith one, a Bishop ought not to haue bin purged before the Proconsul, or ciuill Magistrate: As though (saith Augustine) the Proconsul did of himselfe intermeddle in this matter, and was not commanded rather of the Emperour so to doe vnto whose charge that matter principally appertained, and whereof he shal make abedgment vnto
God. Euen by his sentence, the cause of the Bishop principally was to be iudged by the Emperour.
A Bishop of Rome writing to Constantine the Emperour, calleth himselfe, in perijuratum a servant or subiect of his Empire: and againe, Pro obedientia, quam debemus: he seruile obedience obedience to him.

Pope Leo submitted himselfe to Edmonius the Emperour, 2. quest. 7. as it appeareth vnder these words: If we haue done any thing incompetently, or haue not obserued the path of equitie among subiects, we will amend the same, either by your owne iudgement, or els by the iudgement and iudgement of those, whom you shall appoyne. If the Pope therefore then sheweth are not disculped from the secular power, I thinke inferior Clerkes are not.

Epistol. Ludouici. cont. Pascha. 2. Quoniam autem potestas subleuatur subleuatur subleuatur, qui hoc uult autem potestas, quam a subleuatur terrae potestatis excipit. Let every soule (saith S. Paul) be subiect to that higher power: he that inioyneth this to every soule, whom hath he exempted from the subiecti-on of the earthly power?

M. Bradford collecteth out of this place, that al men ought to be subiect to the temporal power.
Quasi quod gladium gestat: so that power which beareth the sword, which is the temporal power.
Ex. 4. 16. 7.

A Clement holy Martyr: By the Scripture the King is chiefe, and no forraigne person in his owne realm shew him: there is no subiect, but to a King, I owe my fidelity to the Crown, &c. Ex. 1. 8. 1.

Now whereas Bellarmine maketh shew both of Imperiall and Pontificall constitutions, as though he could out of them warrant his assertion: I will briefly declare, what plentifull reason monies we haue out of both.

First, for the Ciuill law, whereas Bellarmino affirmeth, that the Magistrate can neither punish Clergie men, nor conuent them before time: I will proue the contrarie, concerning both these points. First, that the Ciuill power hath authoritie to censure and punish the Clergie offending, it is euident. Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 2. Martian. Si Clericus uis &c. If a Clergie man shal seeme to dispute or doubt of the faith, he shall be deprivied. Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 1. 4. Arcadius, a Bishop offending against the Common-wealth, shall be exiled.

For the conuening of Clerkes, the law is as cleare, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 2. 4. Theodosius. Clerici et c. The Clergie men of Constantinople may be conuened before the Patriarke or Presbyter of the Cite. Leg. 3. 1. Anthemius. Clerici extraneis: Forraigne Clerks, and not of the cite of Constan- tinople, must be conuened only before the President of the cite. Idem. In bonis, id est in uicinis et c. In ciuill offences the Ciuill Iudge must beare sway: And there criminal offences are interpreted to be murder, adultery, perjury, &c. Likewise Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 2. 4. Anthemius et c. To the Presidents iurisdiction all of what degree soeuer are subiect Bishops, Clerkes, Monkes, &c.

Now let us take a view of their owne law, Can. 1. 1. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.
and vnder safe custodie vnto the Emperour, Paulinus Bishop Aquilinus and the Bishop of Millaine. This Canon attributeth this power to the Imperiall crowne, so punish ec-clesiasticall persons. Also ap. 45. Si quis cum Clerico &c. If a man haue a fauor with a Clerke concerning a money matter, if the Bishop refuse to heare, Tunc ad ipsius iudicium: Then it may be lawful to bring the matter before a ciuill Iudge. Decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 19. c. 33. Clemens. Clericus et c. A certaine Clerke for making sedition, was commanded by an Exile to be beaten with a club, and thereof dyed. The Pope himselfe determineth this to be lawfully done.
Thus we see, how that in former time, Clerkes were subiect, both by the law of God and man, to the ciuill iurisdiction.

Now then, by the preaching of the Gospel, Princes are restored to their Imperiall dignity, and made Lords of al their subiects both spiriual and temporal, where they were but halfe rulers before: so Princes likewise haue prouided great abundancies and priuiledges for the Preachers of the Gospel, by whom their Princely authoritie is reuiued: as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 1. 2. Constantinus made a law, that Clergie men, their Ministers and seruants should be free from all new exactions and impositions. Likewise Constantinus ibid. leg. 1. exempteth Clergie men, their wives, children, seruants, goods, from all militarie seruices, from cariage, post seruice, and such like. And Paulinus made an excellent constitution in the behalfe of the Clergie, and especially such as were Professors of Scriptures, Ne à vilissimis hominibus, &c. That every vile person should not be ready to offer or do them wrong, or conuent them at their pleasures before any Judge, but only such as are there named: And the reason of this constitution is rendered, Quia illorum scientia, &c. Because the whole world is lightened with their knowledge: Et ad obediendum Deo, &c. And the Subjects are taught by them to obey God, and vs his Ministers. Then it followeth, Et in omni iudicio, in quocumque speciali dilectione eas ab omni iniuria defendamus. We haue therefore thought it good, by our especiall fauour to defend them from all iniurie: Constitutum, Fredericus Godolphus, 14. 1. 1. 1. 1. A worthie consideration, that the Ministers and Preachers of the Gospell, which teach the people obedience, and would haue none exempted from their royal taxation, should themselves be thickely defended and protected by it. Agreeable to this Constitution, are the Imperial lawes of this nature yet in force, which forbid that any hay, corne, beasts, cattell or any goods of Clergie men, should be taken from them, by any colour of Communion, without their consent: For we do take, (as the words of the law are) the said Clergie men with their possessions, goods and cattels, into our especiall protection and defence: Annus 14. Emend. capitulum Fredericus, Rubrica, 23. Thus Christian Princes in token of thankfulness to the Gospell and the Ministers thereof, haue endued them with excellent priuiledges, if through the cruell and pragmatikall attempts of inferior Ministers and officers they might be suffered to enjoy the same: But it is now fallen otherwise, that the Gospell with the Ministers thereof are growne in such bondage, that every vile person is ready to offer them wrong, and to molest them with iniurious suits, and that with many they find small fauour, neyther are respected according to their calling; a small reward for their labours in the Gospell. And thus we are made a scorn to our adversaries, who laugh in their sleeves, to see the Ministers of the Gospell, that haue by the preaching enlarged the Quill authoritie, to receive no more fauour from it, and in enlarging other mens libertie, to abridge their owne: which I speake not, as complaining of the fouls and sacred Princely Maiesie, or the honourable Ministers thereof; vnder whose countenance we live, and haue libertie of conscience; but of some inferior officers, that haue not the regard to the excellent calling and Ministerie of the Gospell, which is fit of all Christians to be acknowledged. But leaving this complaint I will proceed.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THE PRINCE

haue power ouer Ecclesiasticall goods.

Argum. The Popeists say, that the Pope haue power ouer Ecclesiasticall goods, and that the Kings haue power ouer the Clergie both secular and Ecclesiasticall, are and ought to be exempted from paying tribute to Princes: yet they haue not this libertie, say they, by the lawe of God, but by the grace of Princes themselves, Rhemist. annus. Rom. 13. sect. 5. Belarmine de Clero, capitulum 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. The lands of the Priests were exempted from paying tribute Ex quo scilicet that this custome is grounded vpon the law of nature, Belarm. de Clero capitulum 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. First the Hebrew word signifieth rather Presidents, such as were the Kings officers, or priests, as Templarii the Levites who were maintained by the Kings provision, being officers of the house of God Genes. 41. 42. Ioseph is said to marrie the daughter of Putiphar Prince, and priest of Ou. The same word Cohen is there vsed: for it is not like that Ioseph would match himselfe with an idolatrous priests daughter. Secondly, but be it granted, this was but a politicke constitution, that counts in other Princes are not bound to Phar his law. Thirdly, they gaine nothing by this, but that it is an humane constitution: Argum. 1. Some of them doth this reason out of our Sauour Christs words, Matth. 17. when he said thus to Peter, Whan thinkest thou Simon? of whom do the Kings of the Nations receive tribute, of their yoke, or of strangers? Simon answered, of strangers: the Lord said, thou art their child: for thou art the children of the kingdome: Ergo, they ought to be free: thus reasoneth Morilus de Madia, and the Rhemist. Matth. 17. sect. 8. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. To this argument Belarmine answereth: first, by this reason all Christians, as well as Clerks should be exempted from tribute, because they are all the Sons of God, being borne new in Baptisme. Secondly, Christ speaketh onely of himselfe: that as Kings children are freed from tribute; so much more he, being the Sonne and Heir apparent of the King of kings, should be exempted from all temporall tribute: thus one of them answereth another. Thirdly, so this may be added, that Christ standeth not vpon any such priuiledge, as hee might iustly challenge; but notwithstanding lest he should offend, yeeldeth to pay tribute: therefore by the words of our Sauour, it is scandalous and offensive for any to pleade priuiledge in denying of tribute to Princes.

The Protestants.

The Princes haue authoritie to punish Ecclesiasticall persons offending in their goods; either by displacing them, or by conuerting the Church possessions by them abused; to better wies, we haue shewed before, Contr. 5. quest. 6. part. 1. And that their goods ought to pay tribute, subsidie, tax, vnto the prince, thus now it is proued.

Argument. Our Saviour Christ payed poll money, Matth. 17. 25. Rom. 13. Euery soule ought to be subiect to the higher powers, and there vers. 5. paying of tribute is made a part of subiection: the argument therefore thus followeth: Clergie men are subiect to Princes, therefore they ought to pay tribute.

Argument. Ex concessu, wee reason thus from their owne confession: That which Princes gaue to the Church; vpon good cause they may take away: but this immunitie, not to pay tribute, was first granted, as they confesse, to the Church, by kings and Princes: first, they haue the same right, hauing iust occasion, to take it from them againe. What Augustines iudgement is, wee haue seene in the place before alleaged.

Council Lateranens. sub Leon. 10. sess. 11. there the ancient custome and priuiledge of Parliaments is approved: Quod habeant iurisdictionem in personis Ecclesiasticis: That they haue power and iurisdiction ouer Ecclesiasticall persons. And the whole Councell ratified it, sauing onely Iohannes Dominici Episcopus Terdonens. But Parliaments haue authoritie to leuie taxes and subsidies vpon Clergie men: so that consequently herein also this Councell doth authorize Parliaments.

Frederick the Emperour writeth well to Pope Adrian the 4th Ab is, qui regalia vestra tenent, et hominum & regalia sacramenta non exigimus, cum ille noster & vester iustitias ad homines regis vobis imponit, tamen pro & Petro censum Casari persoluit, & exemplum vobis dedit, ut vos haec faciatis. Why should we not require fealtie and other regall rightes of those, which doe hold and enioy our regall dignities, he meaneth Bishops, seeing that Christ the founder both of the Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall state, whereas he receiued nothing of any humane King; yet for himselfe and Peter payed tribute to Casar, and gaue you an example so to doe.

This is agreeable to the Ciuil law, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 3. Constantinus: Clerici pro his pradijs, &c. Clergie men for such possessions as they hold, must be vrged to pay tribute.

Their owne Canons consent: Decret. par. 1. distict. 8. c. 1. Noli dicere quid mihi & regi, &c. Say not, what hath the King to doe with me? for what hast thou to doe with thy possessions, which thou enioyest by the lawes of the King? Decret. par. 2. caus. 11. qu. 1. cap. 27. Si tributum patris imperatoris, pontificis: If the Emperour require tribute, wee denie it not: for euen the lands of the Church pay tribute. But because these Canons are but compiled by Gratius out of the fathers, as the first out of S. Augustine, the second from S. Ambrose; let vs heare the decree and sentence of their owne Bishops of Rome: as Vrbanius thus determineth; Caus. 2. qu. 8. c. 2. Tributum in eis possumus immunitum est, &c. Tribute was found in the fishes mouth, for the Church of her externall things payeth tribute: but he was not bidden to giue the whole fish, but onely the peece in the fishes mouth: So the Church and the office of a Bishop must not be yeilded to the Emperour; but that which is found in the mouth of the fish must be paid for the defence of peace, &c. Basil. fac. 8. indeed decreed al such lay officers to be excommunicate that laid any taxes or impositions vpon the Church, & al Clergie men paying any such, to bee subiect to the same censure, fact. decr. lib. 3. tit. 13. cap. 3. But this constitution is reuerfed by Clement 5. Clementin. lib. 3. tit. 17. and by Benedict. 11. extrinsec. commun. lib. 3. tit. 1. c. 1. where two cases are excepted, namely, of necessitie, and common vtilitie, when it shall be lawfull for Clergie men to pay tax and subsidie to the Ciuill state.

Doddr Taylor holie Martyr, alleageth out of Chrysostome, how that the Apostles and Euangelists, and all men in euery realme were euer, and ought to bee euer, both touching bodie and goods, in subiection to the kingly authoritie, who hath the sword in his hand, as Gods principall officer and gouernour in euery realme, For. pag. 1523.

THE THIRD PART, CONCERNING THE PRIN-

ces authoritie in causes Ecclesiasticall.

The Papists.

The Prince, they say, hath no authoritie to giue voyce deliberatiue or definitiue in Councells concerning matters of religion, nor to make lawes ecclesiasticall concerning the same: Only they giue them authoritie to execute the Ecclesiasticall lawes made by the Church, Rhemist. 1. Co. vnt. 1. 4. 16. Belarm. de Pontif. lib. 11. cap. 7.

Argument. Kings and Princes may in their owne persons execute if they will, whatsoever their inferior officers doe; as to heare and determine causes, as the Iudges and other Magistrates doe: but the Prince cannot execute any Ecclesiasticall function, as to preach, baptize: Argo, he hath no authoritie in causes Ecclesiasticall: for how can the Prince impart that to others, whereof he is himselfe incapable, as to giue Bishops and Pastors power to ordaine, to preach, and such like.

Ans. First, the authoritie of ciuill Magistrates doth not giue any thing to Ecclesiasticall Ministers, which appertaineth to their office, as to ordaine, preach, baptize; neither is the Prince to deale in these offices; yet may the ciuill Magistrates commaund them to execute their charge and duties according to the word of God: Wherefore it followeth not, Princes cannot execute their spirituall duties themselves: Ergo, they ought not to see them executed. David, Salomon, Iehoshaphat, Ezecbias commaunded the Priests to execute their office according to the law of God; though it was not lawfull for them, neither did they execute any thing proper to the Priests office in their owne persons; neither doth any Christian Prince challenge any such right in Ecclesiasticall Offices: wherefore let it be an impudent flander of Bellarmine, which he giueth forth of our Quæstion. Iam vixit Caluistus in Anglia under quodam summus pontifex: And now (saith he) in England the Caluinists haue a certaine woman for their chiefe Bishop, De notis Eccles. lib. 4. cap. 9.

2. It doth not followe, that the Prince might as well execute Ecclesiasticall offices, as he may ciuill in his owne person, if he haue authoritie ouer both: no more then it followeth, that because Ecclesiasticall persons doe teach both ciuill Magistrates and Church officers their duties, and in their owne persons execute the one, that is, spirituall duties, that they may as well intermeddle in the other: But these two offices of Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall government are distinguished, and must not be confounded. The Prince, though he haue authoritie to command Ecclesiasticall persons; yet being a ciuill Magistrate, is not to deale with the execution of spirituall duties. Bishops and pastors likewise haue a spirituall charge ouer Kings and Princes, to shew them the duties out of Gods word, yet because they are persons Ecclesiasticall, they ought not to meddle with ciuill duties. The Prince hath the soueraigntie of externall government in all cases and ouer all persons; yet not alike: for ciuill offices he may both command and execute; Ecclesiasticall duties he commandeth onely: Bishops and pastors haue also a spirituall charge on all, prescribing out of Gods word as well the dutie of Magistrates, as of Ministers, but not alike for the one they may fully execute, so may they not the other. The head in the naturall bodie resembleth the Prince in the commonwealth, in some sense: the head giueth mouing to the whole bodie and all the parts thereof; but to the principall parts in the head the eyes, tongue, eares, giueth beside the facultie of mouing, the sense also of seeing, talking, hearing: So in the commonwealth, by the Princes authoritie all persons are kept in order, and vrged to looke to their duty, both ciuill officers and spirituall, at all the parts of the body receiue mouing from the head: But ciuill officers receiue power & authority beside, & their very offices of the King, as the parts of the head receiue sense from their fountaine: but Ecclesiasticall Ministers receiue not their offices from the prince, or any mortal man, but they haue their calling according to the order of y<sup>e</sup> Church of God.

Argum. For the space of 300. yeeres the Church after Christ had no Christian government, but all Heathen and Idoll worshippers, yet then the Church was established, and preuailed: Ans. Ciuill Magistrates ought not to deale in Ecclesiasticall affaires, Bellarm. de laicis. cap. 17.

Ans. 1. Even then also, the Heathen Emperours had authoritie in Church matters, till they had commanded any thing agreeable to true religion, they should haue been obeyed: Cyrus in the law which he made for building the temple, Ezra. 1. Darius the Median, for worshiping the true God. The Heathen Emperours then had the same power, but they knewe not how to vse it: Christian Princes doe force them in the same office, but are better taught by the word of God how to exercise the sword. Secondly, we deny not but that in the time of persecution things necessary for the spirituall building thereof may be had, without the Magistrate, as a Vineyard may bring forth fruite without an hedge, but it cannot enioy peace, nor be in a perfect state, in respect of the externall government, but vnder good Magistrates; as the Vineyard may soone be spoiled, the wild bore and the beasts of the field may breake in vpon it hauing no help. The child being in the wombe, though it haue as yet small vse of the head, but is fed by the mother, which is in stead of the mouth, hath in it selfe the lineaments and proportion of a humane bodie, yet it wanteth the perfect beautie, till it be borne and come forth, and the head receiue his office: So may the Church haue a being in persecution, and the want of the ciuill head may be otherwise supplied, but it is not beautifull till the head be set vp, and the sword put into the Christian Magistrates hand.

Argum. 3. Princes haue no care nor charge of soules: Ergo, they are not to meddle with Ecclesiasticall lawes, Rhemist. annot. 1. Carinth. 1. sect. 16.

Ans. Parents haue charge ouer the soules of their children, for they are charged to bring them vp in the instruction and information of the Lord, Eph. 6. 4. Therefore Princes also haue directly charge of the soules of their subiects according to their place and calling, by providing and making good Ecclesiasticall lawes, and compelling them to the true seruice of God: as the Ecclesiasticall Ministers in another kind, and more properly are said to haue the cure of soules, in feeding and instructing the people.

Council Manifestum in fine. Quatuor the King being present, saith thus to the Bishops: Liets sine supra aduersionem ad vos specialiter predicandi causa pertinet, &c. Although without our admonition or charge, the dutie of preaching doth especially belong to you: neuertheless, we, to whom the King hath giuen authoritie to raigne, shall not escape his wrath, if we haue no care of our subjects, that is, concerning their religion. This godly King taketh himselfe to be charged with the soules of his people. Bishop Ridley holy Martyr also hath sealed the same truth: Both the false teacher, and the corrupt gouernour, shall be punished for the death of their subiect, whom they haue falsely taught, and corruptly led, yea and his blood shall bee required at his hands. Far. pag. 1774.

The Protestants.

The ciuill Magistrate, by the word of God, hath power to make and constitute Ecclesiasticall lawes, and to establish true religion, and see that all persons vnder their government doe lawfully execute their charge: To say therefore that the Church officers are to deuise lawes concerning religion, and the Prince onely to execute them, is to make the Prince their seruant, and both derogate too much from the princely authoritie. Neither doe we giue vnto the Prince absolute power to make Ecclesiasticall lawes: for first, the Prince is not to prescribe what lawes he thinketh to the Church, but such as onely may require the true worship of God. Secondly, that it is expedient and meete, according to the commendable custome of this land, that the godly learned of the Clergie should be consulted withall, in establishing of Ecclesiasticall ordinances, which it be in such a corrupt time, when the Church gouernours are enemies to religion: for then the Prince, not staying vpon their iudgement, ought to reforme religion according to the word of God, as we see it was lawfully and godly practised by King Henry the eight. Thirdly, we doe make exception of all such Ecclesiasticall canons and ordinances; the making whereof doth properly belong to the office of Bishops and gouernours of the Church: for our meaning is not, that it is lawfull for Ecclesiasticall Ministers, to make Ecclesiasticall decrees, which doe properly concern their office, as concerning the censures of the Church, excommunication, suspension, absolving, binding, loosing, and such like, which things are incident to their pastorall office: and yet we grant, that the Prince hath euen in these cases an ouerruling hand, to see that none abuse their pastorall office: But that any lawes ought to be made without the authoritie of the prince, which the prince is bound to execute, we vterly deny. And so we conclude, that the ciuill Magistrate hath power ouer all persons and in all causes, both temporall and Ecclesiasticall, in such manner as we haue said.

Fulk. Heb. 13. 9.

Argum. 1. S. Paul willeth, that prayers should be made for Kings and Princes, that vnder them we may leade a peaceable life, in all godlines and honestie, 1. Tim. 2. 2. Ergo, it is their dutie as well to procure religion by their authoritie, as ciuill honestie. Again, He beareth not the sword for nought, Rom. 13. 4. He hath power to punish all euill doers: therefore also to correct euill ministers, and to make Ecclesiasticall lawes: for otherwise he should haue no full power to correct the transgressors thereof.

Argum. 2. We reade that Iosias, David, Salomon, Iosias, did deale in Ecclesiasticall matters, which concerned religion and the worship of God. Bellarm. They did it by an extraordinarie authoritie, not as Kings, but as Prophets. Nay, it was an ordinarie power: for all the good Kings of Iudah besides Iehosaphat, Hezekiah, and others, did take care of religion: and this was so properly annexed to the kingly office, that idolatrous Kings also tooke vpon them to command false religion, as Ieroboam set vp two golden calves, and Ahab King of Iudah commaunded Priests the high Priest to make an Altar according to the patterne which he sent from Damascus, 2. King. 16. 11. This power also was afterward exercised by Christian Kings and Emperours: as Constantinus, Theodosius, Marianus, made lawes for the Church. Iustinianus the Emperour decreed many things concerning Church affayres: as how excommunication should be vied, how Bishops and Priests should be ordained, concerning the order and manner of funerals: that the holy mysteries should not be done in priuate houses. Carolus magnus decreed, that onely the Canonickall bookes of Scripture should be read in the Church: he chargeth all Bishops and priests to preach the word. Lotharius Primus his sonne, and Emperour after him, ordained that no entrie should be made into the Church by Symonie: that Bishops should be chosen by the free election of the Clergie and the people. All these Emperours did lawfully exercise their princely authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters: Ergo, other Princes may doe the same still.

Folk. pag. 7.

Argum. 3. Augustinus saith, Epistol. 50. Quis mouet sobrios, &c. Who in his right wits would say to the King, It pertained not to you, who in your kingdome is religious or sacrilegious; to whom it cannot be said, let it not pertaine vnto you, who in your kingdome will be chaste or vnchaste? And in another place, Ad fratres in eorum serm. 14. Tunc iussit illis deus, gladius ex utraque parte dentis: quia hominis defendit corpus ab exterioribus iniurijs, & animam à spiritualibus molestijs: Then iustice is rightly called a sword with a double edge, because it doth both defend the bodie from externall and corporall wrongs, and the soule from spirituall vexation: That is, the sword of the Magistrate serueth as well to prune the Church, and to cut off all errors and heresies in religion, as to destroy the vices and corruptions in manners.

The consent of antiquitie is on our side: Bonifacius ad Honorium imperatorem: Angeretur placidissimus princeps, mater ecclesia nisi apud se suorum esset securus canonum: The Church your mother, most Christian prince, would bee greatly grieved, if she were not secure and confident in all her causes and matters, which rest in your hand.

Leo epistol. 7. ad Theodosium: Vobis non solum regium, sed sacerdotalem animam inesse gendum, secundum prater imperiales & publicas curas, piissimam sollicitudinem Christiana religionis habetis: We haue reioyce to see in you not onely a kingly, but a priestly minde, in that beside your imperiall cares, you are most godly carefull of religion.

Concil. 6. Constantinop. Quid est praesertim imperatori decibilem, &c. quam pra omnibus pietate aduersus subiectos, actio. 18. What can bee more comely, especially for the Emperour, then to adorne his subiects with pietie?

Arelatenf. sub Carolo. can. 26. Hac imperatori praesentanda decernimus, poscentes eius clementiam, si quid hic minus est, eius prudentia suppleatur; si quid secus, quam se ratio habet, eius iudicio emendetur; si quid rationabiliter taxatum est, eius adiutorio perficiatur: These things which wee haue decreed, we purpose to present to the Emperour, that if any thing be wanting, it may bee by his prudence supplied; if any thing amisse, it may be by him amended; if any thing reasonably inioyned, it may be by his helpe perfected and confirmed. Do not they now go against all antiquitie, that say the Prince ought to haue no voyce in Councell, nor to make Ecclesiasticall lawes: whereas these ancient Canons doe shew, that these things did principally belong to the ciuill Magistrate?

We haue also most euident testimonies out of the Ciuill and Canon law. First, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 1. leg. 1. A law is made by the Emperours Gratianus, Valentinianus, Theodosius, as touching the Catholike faith, and the right beleeuing in the Trinitie. Leg. 3. Martianus ordaineth, that no man publickly should dispute of the faith receiued. Tit. 6. leg. 26. Leo maketh a constitution against the placing, and carying about of relicks. It is euident then that these Christian Emperours had to doe in the matters of faith.

Likewise for their owne Canons: Decret. par. 1. dist. 96. Nicholaus thus writeth to Michael the Emperour: Vbi legis, &c. Where haue you read, that any of your predecessors were present in Synodes, but onely where faith was entreated of, which is vniuersall, and common to all, as well the Laitie as the Clergie? This Canon excludeth not the imperiall presence and authoritie in matters of faith.

Caus. 16. qu. 7. 31. regis auctoritas, &c. If the Metropolitane take away any thing dedicated to the Church, intimate it into the eares of the King.

Caus. 23. quest. 5. cap. 20. Cognoscimus reges seculi, &c. Let the Princes of the world know that they must render an account vnto God for the Church, which they receiued to defend: Portus regnum sapie caeleste regnum proficit: Oftentimes the heauenly kingdome is encreased by the wisedome and earthly kingdome. But more euidently, Caus. 21. Leo: Res humana, &c. Humane state cannot stand, vnlesse such things, as belong to the diuine faith, both the priestly and kingly authoritie defend. c. 34. Iniuria sacramentorum, &c. The iniurie done to the Sacraments of Christ, must be reuenged of Kings. c. 40. Rex debet adulteria punire: The King must punish adulterie. These shew how that by the sentence of their owne lawe, Princes ought to beare sway euen in causes Ecclesiasticall.

AN APPENDIX OR FOVRTH PART OF THE QUESTION, whether the Prince in any good sense may be called the head of his kingdome, and consequently of the Church in his kingdome.

The Papists.

THEY doe appropriate this title, to bee called head of the vniuersall Church, to the Pope of Rome, most blasphemously: for there can be no head of the vniuersall bodie but Christ: But for Princes to bee called the head, that is, chiefe gouernours of the Churches in their kingdomes, they doe abhorre it. Whereupon Bellarmino is so saucie as to checke and controule King Henry the 8. because he was called the head of the English Church.

Argum. 1. The Heathen Emperours were not heads of the Church, being not so much as members thereof: therefore neither Christian Magistrates, which doe succcede them in that authoritie, Rhemist. annot. 1. Pet. 2. sol. 6.

Ans. The argument followeth not: they were no true members of the Church, therefore could not not bee heads, that is, haue the soueraigntie of the externall gouernment: for wicked Kings and Princes doe keepe their magistracie and gouernment still; who though they be not true members of the Catholike Church, yet ought to be obeyed as Princes. 2. Though the metaphoricall name of head agreed not vnto them, yet were they by Gods ordinance appointed to bee heads and gouernours of his people and protectors of his Church, and should haue beene, if they had not abused their authoritie. 3. Christian Princes, though they haue the same authoritie which they had, yet now exercising the sword according to Gods law, and being Nurseries of the Church, may vse and retaine those princely titles indeede, to bee called Patrones and defenders of the faith, and head, that is, chiefe gouernours and protectors of the Church: which by right had been due vnto the other, if they had vsed their authoritie as they should.

Bishop Cromwell holy Martyr: Euen Nero was Peters head, and the head of the Church, that is, in worldly respect of the temporall bodies of men, of whom the Church consisteth; for so he beheaded Peter. And the Apostles: And so the Turke to is head of the Church in Turkey, Fox p. 1877.

Argum. Christian Princes are members of the Church: Ergo, not heads; for if they were heads, how could the Church stand without them, as it did in the time of persecution?

Ans. First, as though the head is not a member and part of the bodie, though a principall one: so the Prince is a member of the Church, but a principall and chiefe member, not of the inuisible Church, for so Christ is onely head; but of a particular visible Church. Secondly, we deny not but that the inuisible and spirituall Church may consist without the Magistrate: but a visible, flourishing, and wel-gouerned Church cannot want a head or chiefe gouernour, that is as a wall or hedge vnto it.

The Protestants.

To bee head of the vniuersall Church is proper onely to Christ, and in that sense is not communicable to any creature: for he is to his Church, as the head to the naturall bodie, giuing vnto it influence of grace, spirit and life: he is therefore the onely mysticall head of the vniuersall Church: But in another sense the Prince may be said to bee the head and chiefe gouernour of his kingdome, and of that particular visible Church, where he is King: We make him neither the mysticall head, which is onely Christ, (farre bee that blasphemie from vs) nor a ministeriall head, as they make the Pope to bee as Christs Vicegerent in the Church; but a politicall head, to keepe and preserve the peace of the Church, and to see that euery member doe his office and dutie. But this name we confesse is vnproperly giuen to the Prince, neither were we the first inuentors of it: for the Popes first gaue it to Henry the 8. And there are other titles which do sufficiently expresse the office of the Prince, and may bee more safely vsed. If any man thinke it too high a name for any mortall man, and so not to bee giuen to any, we will not greatly contend about it: But if any denie it to the Prince, as thereby to abridge her of her power in Ecclesiasticall matters, wee doe stand stiffly for it; and are bold to affirme, that with much better right is this title attributed to the ciuill Magistrate then it was to the Pope: yea, and that it hath beene of old giuen in a modest and sober sense to Kings and Princes, and may with a fauourable exposition be still: and Princes almay receive this honour and title at their subiects hands, with protestation of their Christian meaning herein.

Argum. This phrase, for the King to bee called the head, is not vnusall in Scripture, 1. Samuel 1. 17. Saul is said to bee the head of the tribes. Psalm 18. 43. Dauid the head of the nations: May 9. 11. The Prince or honourable man the head of the people: yea Princes are called Gods; Psalm 82. 1. which is a name of greater soueraigntie, then to be called heads.

Bellarmin answereth: Princes doe rule ouer their subiects as men, not as Christians; and Kings set ouer the people, not as they are Christians, but politike persons: so the Prince is head of the kingdome, not of the Church, De pontif. Rom. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Ans. Stephen Gardiner taketh away this cauill very sufficiently, wee will set one Papist against another: It is all one (saith he) to call the Prince head of the Church of England, and head of the Realme of England; for if all Englishmen bee his subiects, why are they not his subiects, as they are Christians? If the wife or seruant bee subiect to the master or husband being infidels, doth their conuersion, or name of Christians take them desle subiect, then they were before? How ill. Again, how farre is this, I pray you, from Anabaptistrie, to say, that subiects, onely as men, not as Christians, are in subiection to Princes? for doth it not follow hereupon, that as Christians they ought to haue an superiour or Magistrate?

Argum. It is sufficient for vs, that this title more fitly and properly belongeth to euery Prince in his owne kingdome, then to the Pope: For the Pope can in no wise bee head of the Church; he is not the mysticall head, neither dare they say so, for Christ onely is the head in that manner: neither can he bee the Ministeriall head of the vniuersall Church; for the Catholike Church is a bodie mysticall, and must needs haue a mysticall head: neither is he the politicall head of any particular Church: for no Bishop can bee a politicall head; because he that is the head and chiefe must haue a coactive power, to binde his subiects to obedience: so hath not any Bishop. The Prince onely beareth the sword, and enforceth obedience. Againe, in a farre diuers sense is the Prince called the head, then the Pope was: for first the Pope challenged to bee head of the vniuersall Church; but the Prince is chiefe onely in his owne kingdome. Secondly, the Pope would be an absolute head, to doe all vpon earth that Christ did, yea and more too, to binde and loose at his pleasure, to depose Kings, to dispense with the word of God, to constitute and make lawes at his pleasure: inso much that one of his clawbacke flatterers is not ashamed to say of him, Christus & Papa unum faciunt consistorium, & excepto peccato potest Papa, quasi omnia facere, quia pater Deus: Christ and the Pope make but one Consistorie, and keepe but one court; and sinne onely excepted, the Pope in a manner can doe all things that God can doe. But wee doe limit the power of the Prince; who is not to impose any lawes vpon the Church, but such as are agreeable to the word of God; neither doe we make him a spirituall officer, as the Pope would be, but a ciuill gouernour, who by positive lawes is to prouide for the peace and welfare of the Church.

Panormitane.

1. Pet. 2. 13.

Lastly, Saint Peter saith, Submit your selues to the King as the chiefe, as vniuersall, or most excellent: what is this else, but as to the head? what is it to bee chiefe but to bee head? But we will not much contend for the name, so they will graunt vs the thing: namely, that the Prince is a commander enen in Ecclesiasticall matters, as Augustine saith: In hoc reges Deo seruiunt, si mala prohibeant, non solum qua pertinent ad humanam societatem, verumetiam qua ad diuinam religionem. Cons. Crescens. lib. 3. cap. 3. In this Kings doe good seruice to God, if they forbid euill to be done, not onely in matters pertaining to humane societie, but in things concerning religion. As for the title, to bee called head, let them cease to call their chiefe Bishop so who hath no right vnto it, and wee will promise also to lay it downe, though in good sense we might vse it, though the Pope had neuer laid claime thereto.

Concil. Toletan. 8. Roccus sinneth the King thus saith in his preface to the Councell: Regendum membrorum causa, salus est capitis; & felicitas populorum, non nisi mansuetudo est principum: The health of the head must be sought, for the better regiment of the members; and the happines of the people, is the lenitie of their Prince. Here the Prince is called the head, the people the members.

Bishop Cranmer holy Martyr: The King is the supreme head of all the people of England both Ecclesiasticall and temporall, which are the visible Church: But Christ onely is head of the Church, that is, of the faith and religion thereof, both of the whole vniuersall Church, and of euerie member thereof; Fox pag. 1881. And otherwise we hold not.

THE SECOND QUESTION, CONCERNING THE authoritie of the Prince in punishing Heretikes.

WE doe willingly graunt, that obstinate heretikes and peruerterers of the faith, if they persist in their damnable opinions, and remaine incorrigible, may and ought to bee cut off and punished by death, to make others to feare: So Servetus at Geneva, and one Valentinus Berne, both monstrous heretikes, not amongst the Papiests, but by the Protestants were worthily put to death. In this therefore wee and our aduerfaries agree, that heretikes may bee punished by death by the ciuill Magistrate. If Luther, or any other haue held any priuate opinion to the contrary, let them answer for themselves: but although we varie not in the principall, yet there are certaine circumstances and accessaries greatly materiaill, wherein they both dissent from the truth.

pontif. lib. 1.
cap. 7.

2102. pag. 201

1. They would haue the Magistrate onely to be their executioner, the iudgement of heretikes they say, belougeth to the Church: for they cited, examined, iudged, degraded, condemned heretikes; and then gaue them ouer to the secular power: this was the common practise of the Church. But we hold, that the hearing, iudgement, sentence, and condemnation of heretikes belougeth to the ciuill Magistrate, as well as the execution: because these actions are proper to the ciuill sword, which the Magistrate beareth; Rom. 13. and Dent. 17. 7. The false Prophets and Idolaters were brought to the gates of the Citie where the ciuill Magistrate was wont to sit. Agrippa is of the same mind; Cur non venisset in eorum legum inuenerit iussu faceretur, in hereticos non potest conuolunt faceri? cont. epist. Parmen. 1. 7. Why do they graunt, that the vigour of the law may fully be executed vpon witches, and not as well vpon heretikes and schismatices? But the cause of witches are heard, iudged and handled before the ciuill Magistrate. Ergo, also the cause of heretikes. Augustinus reason is out of they. Galath. 3. 12. The workes of the flesh are manifest, which are adulterie, fornication, idolatrie, witchcraft; and heresies are also reckoned vpon amongst them. All these are workes of the flesh: Ergo, the Magistrate being appointed to punish euill doers, hath a full right to deale against them all, as some Concil.

Council Chalcedon. act. 16. Quoties sacerdotum sententia quidam indignis sacerdotibus de sacris sedibus deposuit, toties imperium eiusdem sententia & ordinationis eum sacerdotum authoritate fuit: As often as any vnworthie persons by the sentence of Ministers were thrust from their seates, so often the imperiall power did concur with the authoritie of the Priests in the same sentence: the Emperour was ioyned with Clergie men in the iudgement of heresie.

Then I testifie M. Philpot holy Martyr, I seeke not to be mine owne Iudge, but am content to be iudged by other, so that the order of iudgement in matters of religion be kept, that was in the primitive Church; which is, first, that Gods will by his word was sought, and thereunto both the spirituall and temporallie was gathered together and gaue their consent and iudgements, &c. Fox. pag. 1807.

That the iudgement of heresie belongeth to the Ciuill power; it is euident by the Imperiall lawes: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 8. leg. 2. Gratian Valentinian. Hæreticorum vocabulo continentur, &c. They are to be accounted heretikes, that do erre neuer so little from the Catholike faith. Tit. 12. leg. 11. Theod. Certum est &c. It is certaine, that whatsoever doth differ from the Christian faith, is contrary to the Christian law, therefore Christian lawes do take knowledge of things varying from the faith. Decret. p. 2. caus. 23. qu. 8. c. 30. Ne Clerici, quod morte plectendum est, propria sententia indicare presument: That Clergie men should not giue sentence, where the punishment is by death. But heresie is to be punished by death; Ergo, Clergie men are not to giue sentence against heretikes.

But if it shall be answered, that they put none to death, but deliuer them ouer to the secular power: this cannot excuse them, but is flat contrary to their owne Canon, Caus. 33. dist. 1. c. 23. Peruicaci se discipunt, &c. They do perniciously deceiue themselves, that thinke them onely to be manlayers, that kill with their hands, and not they by whose counsell and encouragement men are killed, &c. The Iewes did not kill our Lord with their owne hands; for say they, it is not lawfull for vs to put any to death: yet our Lords death is imputed vnto them, because with their tongue and voyce they killed him, crying out, that he should be crucified: Qui ergo hominem tradiderit, &c. He therefore that deliuereth a man ouer, killeth him. Wherefore the popish Phari-sees, or pharisaicall Papists, in that they deliuer innocents ouer to be killed, are the killers themselves.

2. We differ about the way and meane to trie an heretike by: They affirme that he is an heretike onely that is so iudged by a generall Councell, or the sentence of the chiefe Pastors of the Church: they would haue an heretike tryed by the constitutions and Canons of their Church, Ambr. lib. 1. sect. 2. Rhenusf.

Whereby that an heretike is to be conuicted by the Scriptures, and that he that holdeth any opinion obstinately against the manifest authoritie of Scripture, may be iudged an heretike without a generall Councell: So Augustine writeth, answering the Pelagians, who objected that they were condempned without a Synod. Ac si congregatione Synodi opus erat, ut aperta perniciēs damnetur, quasi uidebatur aliquando, nisi synodus congregatione damnata sit. As though a Synod need to be congregated or called, to condemne such open wickednes, as if neuer any heresie had bin condemned but in a Synode or Councell: Cont. 2. epistol. Pelag. lib. 4. cap. 12. This is that heretical opinion, as they call it, which the Councell of Constance condemned in Joh. Huss, and him together with it, because he said, That an heretike; whatsoever he be, ought first to be instructed; and taught with Christian love, and gentleness by the holy Scriptures; and by reasons drawne out of the same, before hee suffer corporall or bodily punishment: Fox. p. 61 c. artic. 18. Which his saying is grounded vpon that rule of the Gospell, Matth. 18. 17. That if we see one offend, we should first tell him priuately; then before two or three: lastly, declare it to the Church: and if he will not heare the Church, that is, by Scripture conuincing him; then continuing obstinate, let him be as a publicane. This rule the Papists kept not in their bloudie persecutions here in England: They put many hundreds to death, and were not able to conuince any one of heresie; but in disputation were themselves put to silence and made ashamed: Their onely arguments were the fire and fagor.

That heresie must be tryed out by Scripture, wee haue the iudgement and practise of ancient times: Council. Aquileienf. contra Palladium Arrianum: Proposita diuina in medio scriptura, p̄sens est Apostolus, omnes scriptura p̄sentes sunt, unde vis, astrue, si putas non esse filium Dei sempiternum: The diuine Scriptures are set forth in the midst; the Apostle is present, the Scriptures are at hand: fetch thy proofes, where thou wilt, if thou thinkest that Christ is not the Sonne of God.

Leo. epistol. 44. Quia Evangelica, & apostolica fides omnes expugnat errores, hanc regulam memorare iudicamus: because the faith or truth of the Gospell and Apostles doth expugne all error; remember to keepe this rule.

Matter Philpot putteth his seale to this truth: shewing how in the primitive Church after the iudgement of Gods word declared, with the assent of the Bishops and the people, heretikes were condemned, or abolished: Fox. p. 1808. artic. 6.

Concerning the other point, that heresie is to be condemned without sufficient triall and examination, and euident conuincing of them, thus it is shewed.

The Councell of Basile for promising to the Bohemians free audience, and libertie to dispute, was therefore reprooued by some of the Popes accomplices: The Councell answereth thus, in one of their Epistles Synodals: Omnis schola Theologorum & canonistarum, affirmat eam disputacionem, &c. The whole schoole of Diuines and Canonists denieth not, but such disputation of faith to be lawfull, which is not the cause of tumult, of distrust, or doubting in faith, but for instruction and to open the truth, to conuince heretikes, and confirme the Catholikes: for as Gregory saith, as vniuersally speech bringeth into error, so vniuersally silence leaueth them in error, which might be instructed. To this also agreeth the extravagant, lib. 5. tit. 8. c. 1. Ioann. 22. Nolentes autem credere, quam probare: We not willing to beleue, before we proue, haue appointed inquisition and search to be made &c. It is lawfull therefore to dispute with heretikes: which Winchleser denyeth to Master Rogers holy Martyr, who complaineth; that it was not permitted him to trie out the truth by conference, and writing, Fox. pag. 1485.

Error. 104.

3 Again, they vsed vnlawful wayes and vniust, in sifting and examining, by cruel torment the poore innocents brought before them, neither shewing accusers nor witnesses: Iohn Brown Martyr appearing before Warham and Fisher, two bloodsuckers, was burned with hot coales, his bare feet being set vpon them: Fox. pag. 1292. Cuthbert Symfons fingers were grated with an arrow, and he himselfe piteously racked, to be made betray his innocent brethren, Fox. p. 2032. Tomkins was burned by Banner, till the sinewes sparkled againe, Fox. p. 1533. And these were the witnesses and accusers that were brought against them.

Which practise of theirs is flat contrarie to the auncient Canons: Calixtus the second, Per scripturam nullus accusare, vel accusari potest. sed propria voce, & presente eo, quem accusare volueris, sum quisque agat accusacionem: Let no man accuse or be accused by writing, but by his owne voyce, and in the presence of him, who is accused, let the accusation be made.

Fabianus epistol. 2. Nullus presumat accusator simul esse & iudex, vel testis, quoniam in omni iudicio quatuor personas necesse est semper adesse: Indices electos, accusatores, defensores, & testes: Let no man presume to be an accuser, and iudge at the same time, or witness: because in euery iudgement there must be foure persons, the Iudges, accusers, defenders, witnesses.

Council. Lateranens. sub Innocentio. 3. cap. 8. Debet presens esse is, contra quem facienda est inquisitio, &c. He ought to be present, against whome enquire is to be made, and the severall points and articles, which are sought into, must be declared, that he may haue power to defend himselfe: And not onely the words of the accusation, but the persons also must be published, that it may appeare, what, and by whom euery thing is reported. It shall also be lawfull for the partie accused, to take exceptions, and make replication: And all this would be done, lest by suppressing names men should take occasion to defame others; and by cutting off of exceptions, they should not be afraid to sweare falsely.

What clearer testimonie can we haue, against this popish course and manner of proceeding a iudgement, when as without witnesses a man is condemned, whereas the lawe, as we see, alloweth the accused, to vnderstand the articles whereof he is accused, that he may haue time to answer, and to his accuser, that if there be cause, he may take exception against him.

This was cleane contrarie to the lawe of Moses: At the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall he that is worthy of death die, Deuter. 17. 6. Augustine saith, Quis iudex accusantis sumus perperam? &c. What Iudge would take vpon him to be an accuser? Our Lord Christ knewe Inda to be a theefe (saith he:) yet because he was not accused, he did not cast him off. He counted it a very vnnaturall thing, for the Iudge to be an accuser, and to proceede without witnesses: which although in some criminall cases is more tolerable, yet in the cases of life and death ought in no wise to be vsed. The same Iudgement also Augustine giueth of that cruell custome of tormenting men, to conuince them by their owne mouth, which was inuented by the heathen, but never more cruelly practised then among the papists: Hoc intolerabile est (saith he) & rigidum sanctum in crymaturum, cum propterea torquent iudex accusatum, ne occidat nesciens innocentem; & sit per se innocens, ut & iustum & innocentem occidat, quem ne innocentem occideret, torquet: How intolerable a thing is it, and to be much lamented, that while the Iudge tormenteth the partie accused, least vniuersally he should put an innocent man to death; it falleth out that he adiudgeth to death a man both innocent, and beside tormented; whom, least he should slay as an innocent, he before put to torment. His meaning is, that when a man is put to the racke, or otherwise tortured, that he might confesse the truth, and cleere himselfe; it cometh to passe, that through extremity of the paine, he maketh himselfe guiltie, and so the innocent is both wrongfully tormented, and vniuersally put to death. Which kind of forcing men by torture, though in some dangerous cases, as of high treason, and such like, where there is great perill in the concealing of the truth, and no other way to lift it out, may be admitted: yet to vse it as an ordinarie course as the papists did, and in causes of religion, it is too shamefull, and of all Christians to be abhorred.

Now

Now, touching these three points, to proceede without an accuser, without witness by the parties oth, and by torments, in matters and causes concerning the life of him that is accused, I will in order shew, how it agreeth, or disagreeeth both with the Ciuill and Canon law.

Concerning the necessitie of an accuser in matters of iudgement, the Ciuill law hath thus determined: Cod. lib. 9. tit. 2. leg. 16. Libellus in criminali, &c. The libell in criminal causes must containe the name of the accuser, the Iudge, &c. of the partie accused. Arcadius, leg. 7. Honor. Quisquis crimen intulit in iudicium veniat, &c. Whosoever doth object any crime, let him come himselfe into open iudgement, and declare the matter, and let him bee vnder safe keeping, as well as the partie accused, till the matter be examined. Again, ibid. leg. 14. Arcad. Index in publicis criminibus non debet in iudicatis suffragis deceptorum, &c. The Iudge in publike crimes, must not bee ruled by the reports of the acts or decrees, but seeke out the truth of the matter. This law chargeth Iudges not to be carried, no not by the complaints or informations of the Notaries and officers of the court, without due prooffe.

Hereto their owne decrees giue consent: Caus. 2. qu. 1. c. 10. Nicholau: Restitucio, qui non confitetur, nec mittitur: He must bee restored, that is neither confessed, nor detected: Cap. 7. Gregor. Strenue iustit. ab accusatore, &c. iudicium non ordinabiliter factum: If that there bee not some witnesses, nor accusers, the iudgement is not orderly. Likewise, Caus. 30. qu. 5. c. 11. Eleuther. prescrib. de iure iudic. tit. 1. That the Iudge should giue licence to each partie, the one to object, the other to answer, ut alio amborum partium illuminata sit pleniter, that both parties action may bee fully cleared, and inlightened: But this cannot bee, whereas there is but one partie: Whence both the lawes agree in this, that an accuser must bee in euery lawfull iudgement produced: Yet there is a certaine case excepted, wherein an accuser is not needfull: as Cod. lib. 9. tit. 2. leg. 7. Gordian. Nisi in notorio iudex procedat per viam accusationis: Vnlesse the matter be notorious, the Iudge must proceede by way of accusation. So also saith the Canon law: Dicret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 2. c. 1. Innocent. 3. In notorio nec testis, &c. In a notorious matter, neither witnesse, or accuser is necessarie. And what is to bee counted notorious, or manifest, is further shewed, ibid. lib. 5. tit. 40. c. 3. Innocent. 3. That is a manifest crime, which is knowne, per confessionem, probationem, rei evidentiam, by confession, or due prooffe, or the euidence of the thing it selfe. If then in cases onely notoriously knowne an accuser is not necessarie, but in all other cases, he must be produced: then haue the Popes been most iniurious to many conuicted before them for heresie (as they call it) and other crimes, who were not suspected, much lesse detected thereof, and so far from being notorious heretics, & yet they proceeded against them, as they called it ex officio, shewing no accuser at all.

I cannot here omit that notable place of S. Ambrose to this purpose, epist. d. 66. where he repro- ueth one Sygrius the Bishop of Verona: Quod virginem, quasi nullas argueret, &c. For that he drew a certaine Virgin into great hazard and danger of guiltines, without any accuser: where did he learne any such forme of iudgement? if he aske the lawes, they require an accuser: if he referre it to the Church, there in the mouth of two or three witnesses euery word is established. If Sygrius for proceeding against a Virgin for incontinencie without an accuser, were much blamed by S. Ambrose, what would he haue said, if he had seene this practise vsuall in the popish prelacie euen in the cases of heresie, to which belonged the sentence of death?

Now concerning the second point, whether a man may bee vrged to accuse himselfe vpon his oth, especially in capitall causes, the iudgement of the law is, that, except in certaine cases, none should be enforced to testifie against themselves. First, Cod. lib. 4. tit. 30. leg. 6. Diocletian. Nemo contra se cogitur testes producere: No man is compelled to produce witnesses against himselfe: but he that by his oth maketh himselfe guiltie, witnesseth against himselfe. So likewise in the Canon law, Caus. 31. qu. 6. c. 4. Urbanus: Si negauerint, sibi se relinquiendi: If incest cannot be proued neither by oth of witnesses, nor by confession, the partie must bee charged by their baptisme, their faith, &c. to confesse the truth: but if they denie, they must bee left to themselves. This Canon prescribeth no oth, but an earnest obtestation to be ministred vnto the suspected partie.

But yet certaine cases there are assigned in the law, wherein the partie accused may be brought to his oth: as first, Propter inopiam probationum: If the prooffe doe otherwise faile: Cod. lib. 4. tit. 1. leg. 3. Dioclet. So that all other proues must be vsed before the partie be driuen to his oth: that as the law is, for torments, and tortures, that they must not bee ministred in the first place, but other arguments must first bee vsed: Cod. lib. 9. tit. 1. leg. 8. Dioclet. so likewise the oth of the partie must not be enforced, but other euidences and presumptions first are to be produced.

Secondly, there must by the law a partie bee giuen, and an accuser set forth, where the other partie is vrged to his oth: the reason is this, because the guiltie partie hath 3. things put to his choise by the law: Reus debet iurare solutus, vel referre iuramentum: He may either sweare, or be content to be condemned, or refer the oth to his accuser: that is, vrge him first to sweare, Cod. lib. 4. tit. 1. leg. 9. Diocletian. The reason is giuen, ibid. leg. 12. Iustinian: Non debet respondere in persona sua, quod placuit in persona aduersarij: He must not refuse to doe that in his owne person, which he was pleased with in his aduersarie. So then where the guiltie partie was vrged to sweare, the accuser also was by his oth oth to juſtifie his accuſation. And this referring or rebounding of an oth is allowed by their law, decret. Greg. lib. 2. tit. 24. cap. 36. Greg. 9. Quid in iudicio a parte parti deſertur, &c. An oth in judgement betwene partie and partie may be referred.

Thirdly, where it is agreed by the parties themſelves, that the matter ſhall be decided by the oth of a partie, in that caſe ſuch oth by the law is allowed: as when there ariſeth a queſtion, whether one bee right heire; if they, whom it concerneth, be content to put it to his oth, it ſhall ſtand, Cod. lib. 4. tit. 3. leg. 6.

Fourthly, the parties oth by the Ciuill law was vſed for the moſt part in ciuill cauſes, as in queſtions of debt, in matters of truſt, and ſuch like; where an apparant iniurie did ſeeme to be offered, or intended by the partie ſworne, to the other partie by whom he is impleaded: as Cod. lib. 4. tit. 2. leg. 1. The pupill or ward might put his tutor or guardian to his oth, concerning ſuch things as were committed to his truſt. Ibid. leg. 9. In an action of debt, the debtor might bee put to his oth: he muſt either ſweare or pay. Ibid. leg. 10. In actione depoſiti, &c. In an action of a thing committed to ones truſt, the partie might be required to take his oth. In theſe and the like caſes ciuill, where the truth is concealed to another mans loſſe and hinderance, the oth of the partie ſued or impleaded, might be demanded: but in caſes criminall, where the offence redoundeth to the harm and damage of the partie, rather then to the reliefe of another, it is thought hard to preſſe him vnto an oth againſt himſelfe; yet in ſome criminall caſes it is allowed, as now followeth to be ſhewed.

Fiftly, then in ſuch criminall caſes, as where the offence is publike, and the puniſhment extendeth not to death, where other prooffe faileth, the partie may be charged with an oth: as by a new law it is conſtituted in the Code, that if a Iudge, do receiue a bribe in a cauſe criminall, if he cannot be proued againſt him, he ſhall be put to his oth, which if he reſuſe, he is held as guiltie, & ſhall forfeir all his goods and bee ſent into exile, Cod. lib. 7. tit. 49. leg. 3. authentic. So then in theſe caſes, where a partie is giuen, and all other prooves beſide firſt vſed, and in Ciuill matters to relieue others from a wrong, and ſometime in Criminall, where the offence is publike, and not vnto death, it is lawfull to preſſe the defendant with an oth: But in the iudgement of hereſie, and other crimes obiected, the popiſh tyranny proceeded without any regard had of the premiſſes, putting the poore innocents with their owne oth in cauſes criminall vnto the execution of death, giuing no partie, nor ſtanding much vpon other euidence: Wherefore their proceedings were contrarie to law herein.

The third point followeth to be diſcuſſed, of inquiſition to be made by torments; where I will out of the law briefly declare theſe three points: firſt, in what caſes tortures are to bee vſed ſecondly, in what manner: thirdly, what perſons are priuiledged and exempted from torture. For the firſt, though that bondſlaues might bee put to torture, vpon diuers occaſions, as if they were fugitiues, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 1. leg. 4. to know the right heire to their maſter, Cod. lib. 9. tit. 41. leg. 9. and whether it be a forged will or not, Ibid. leg. 10. Yea, Servus poſſet de ſuo ſalvo torqueri. A ſlaue may be examined by torture of his owne act in embeaſſelling of his maſters goods, Ibid. leg. 15. Diſtinctio. Though I ſay bondſlaues were vpon ſundry occaſions ſubiect to tortures: yet others but only in graue and waightie matters, were put to torture, as in caſe of treaſon againſt the Prince, Cod. lib. 9. tit. 8. leg. 3. Falſifiers of coyne might be examined by torment, lib. 9. tit. 24. leg. 1. A woman ſuſpected for poiſoning her husband may be tortured, lib. 9. tit. 41. leg. 3. They that are accuſed of witchcraft alſo may be put to the racke, tit. 1. leg. 7. Where the woman is ſuſpected of adulterie, the ſervants may bee enforced by torture, tit. 9. leg. 3. Likewise in the murder of the husband or the wife, the ſervants may likewise bee vrged, tit. 16. leg. 9. In theſe and the like waightie and great cauſes, the queſtion by torments hath been allowed: But the praſtiſe of Popiſts, in tormenting of men and women, to wreſt from them their faith and conſcience, being perſons of honeſt and innocent life, not guiltie of treaſon, murder, witchcraft, or ſuch like, was neuer heard of in times paſt, but is moſt cruell, and contrarie to law.

Secondly, as touching the manner to bee vſed in inſlicting of torments, there are certaine rules ſet downe in the law. Firſt, Cod. lib. 9. tit. 2. leg. 13. Accuſatus non debet torqueri, &c. The guiltie partie muſt not be tortured, vnleſſe the accuſer doe binde himſelfe to endure the like, if he prometh his accuſation. So then by this law, where torments are miniſtred, an accuſer ſhould be produced. Secondly, Cod. lib. 9. tit. 22. leg. 17. Non incipiendum a tormentis, &c. The Iudge muſt not begin with torments, but be induced by other arguments to doe it. Thirdly, lib. 9. tit. 2. leg. 17. Honor. Qui torquetur non debet interrogari de ſocijs: He that is tortured, muſt not be vrged to bewray his fellowes. And in their owne law it is thus decreed: Caus. 5. qu. 5. c. 4. Nec illi credendum, &c. They muſt not be beleueed that of themſelves do appeach others, but let the religious tormentor fetch out the truth by putting him to paine, &c. Thus we ſee what moderation the law would haue obſerved in tormenting. But the popiſh tormentors contrarie to theſe rules haue applied torments, without any accuſer, hauing no other euidence to induce them; and onely to this end, to cauſe them one to betray another. See the ſtorie of Aune Aiken, apud Foxum.

In the third place, let vs ſee what perſons are exempted from torments by the law. Firſt, lib. 9. tit. 41. leg. 1.

not. 41. by 7. Dioclet. The servant must not be tormented against his master; not yet fouldiers; ibid; by 8. Dioclet. nor Noblemen, leg. 11. nor innocents, leg. 17. Honor. Clergie men must confesse the truth, et in iniquis questionibus, without torture, Con. lib. 1. tit. 8. Theodos. But the Romish tormentors in their crueltie haue violated all good lawes; tormenting not onely servants but selfe against their masters, but children against their parents, as Wyrtell burned Refovd his hand with a candle till y sinewes burst, Fox p. 1206. They haue not spared most cruelly to handle noble men, much more fouldiers: see the storie of Sir John Oldecastle Lord Cobham, and Essex. They haue vexed with their torments iust and innocent men; as Thomas Tomkins a godly and devout man, well reported of all his neighbours; had his hand so scorched with a candle by Romish, that the water sparkled out of the sinewes; Fox pag. 1534. Lastly, they haue exercised with torments Ministers and Deacons of the Church; as Adam Damlip at Calice, Fox pag. 1229. And Cuthbert Smith for a Deacon of the congregation, was thrice racked in one day, stood three houres in an yron engine, had his fingers grated with an arrow, and all to betray the congregation: See the storie, pag. 1031. Thus it is euident how cruelly, contrarie to the ancient imperiall lawes, those cruell persecutors haue tormented the poore professors of the Gospell: yea and contrarie to their owne lawes; Conf. 23. qu. 5. c. 1. Scelerum confessionem non extendens equales, non solummodo singulos, non omnium summus: The confession of faults must not bee wrested out, by stretching out vpon the racke, or sitting or grating with engines, scorching with flames, &c. And thus in euery of these points in proceeding against Christians without witness or accusing, in tyrannizing against them vnto death euen by their owne oth, in vexing of them with vspeakable torments, they haue transgressed and violated both diuine & humane lawes: But now I will proceed to the rest.

In the fourth place; Where haue they learned so hoely and fiercely to pursue simple men and women to death, for none or very small offences, which they notwithstanding fully called heresie? Was it heresie for Iames Breuster to heare one Smecting to reade many good things out of a certaine booke? or for the same Smecting, when as the said Iames should say, Now the sonne of the liuing God helpe vs, to answere: Now almightie God so doe? yet for these heresies were they both condemned and burnt in Smithfield, anno 1511. Fox pag. 812. Thomas had like to haue been burned, for asking a priest that carried the Host to a sick man with Taper-light, what he meant to goe with a light at noone day, if Mary the Emperours sister had not made lute for her, anno 1550. Fox pag. 894.

Adam 1515, a Monke burned in France; because he had forsaken his abominable order and married wife, pag. 896.

John de Calaneo being at a feast, where it was agreed that euery one should bring forth his poeie or sentence, because he brought forth this; Christ reigns in our hearts, and persecuted it out of the Scriptures, was burned, anno 1533. pag. 897.

A Taylor burned at Paris anno 1549 for working vpon an holy day, ex Iohau. Crispin. Fox. p. 903.

Ralph Hart constrained to abiure for saying before the Bishop of Winchester, The Lord is my Lord; it is Symbolum Hereticorum, saith Winchester, a marke to know heretikes by; to say the Lord, the Lord, pag. 1225.

One Thomas Sampsonius Martyr, because he rebuked a man for swearing, was thereupon suspected to be a Lutheran, examined, condemned and burned at Paris, anno 1551. pag. 904. Many such like examples might be produced of holie Martyrs, which for these and such other great heresies were put to death. And as the offences were very small, as wee see, so their manner of proceeding was most cruell, voyd of all humanitie. They spared not women with child: We haue not forgotten that famous example of their crueltie, which shall be remembered to their perpetuall shame and infamie: How they burned three simple women in the Ile of Garnsey, anno 1556, which had submitted themselves to their mercie; one of the three was great with child, which brast out of her wombe in the midst of the fire, and was throwne in againe, pag. 1944. They had no compassion of the tender age of children: In the towne of Byrbroke, while Richard Chapman did penance in the Church, being inioyned to kneele barefoote, and bare legged all the sermon while vpon the cold steps of the Church; a little boy for giuing him his hat to kneele vpon, was had into the Vestrie and piteously scourged, pag. 1047. Cruell Banner burned Richard Miskins a child of 14 yeeres, for speaking against the sacrament of the Altar, who notwithstanding at the stake was taught to speake much good of the Bishop of London, and so did, pag. 1202. John Ferry his child being of eight yeeres old, for saying to one of the Bishops Chapleins, that he had Balaams marke, was scourged so cruelly, that within 14 daies he died. Nay, such was their crueltie, they condemned to death men that were bestraight of their wits: as Collins and Combridge were burned being both frantick: see their storie, pag. 1131.

Where is now that lenitie and compassion, which ought to be in the Ministers of the Gospell? Such crueltie was not heard of, no not amongst the Heathen. Yea they breake their owne law; which suffereth a man once to abiure his heresie, but if after ward he be detected, he dieth without mercie, Fox anno 1511. William Corder and Agnes Gribil were condemned, though they submitted ted themſelves, and promiſed to be conformable to their religion. p. 1277. Yet this law of theirs is moſt vniuſſ, and contrary to the Goſpell, which ſaith, that if thy brother ſin againſt thee ſeuē times in a day, & ſeuē times in a day torne again, and ſay, ſe repenteth me, thou ſhalt forgive him, Luk. 17. 4. Yet theſe men wil forgive but once, and not that neither. But S. Paul ſaith, An heretike after once twice admonition reiect, Bellarmine his beſt answer is by denying the text, ſaying, that it was not ſo read in former times: but thus, after once admonition. De laici cap. 22.

This popiſh rigor is much contrary to the ancient lenity, that was vſed in former times: African. Conc. 66. 33. it was decreed, ſi cum Donatiſtis leniter & paciſice ageretur. Ne forte ſicut dicit Apoſtolus, nobis in inſanſuitudine corripie uſibus diuerſa ſentientia dei. Deuſ. 1. 1. penitentiam, &c. 2. Tim. 2. That the Donatiſts ſhould be gently and peaceably handled, if perhaps, as the Apoſtle ſaith, while we were all gentlenes correct thoſe that are otherwiſe minded, God may giue them repentance.

Leo Epist. 13. Sedis Apoſtolice moderatio hanc temperantiam obſeruat, ut ſenectus agat cum obdurato, & ueniam cupiat praſtare correctis: This Apoſtolike See hath alwaies kept this moderation, to deale more ſeuertly with the obdurate and obſtinate, and to ſhew mercie to the corrigible: This moderation is now quite baniſhed from this See, as in theſe former examples is to be ſcene. There was more clemencie vſed in Auguſtine's time: for then Biſhops did not prouoke the Magiſtrate to execute whom they had condemned, but did entreate the Magiſtrate to ſhew compaſſion vnto heretikes; not ſtraightwaies to puniſh them with death: Ne ſic uitam ſtam finiant (ſaith Auguſtine) ſupplicium, ut in ſuina non poſſint ſuare ſupplicium. Lealt they ſhould ſo end this life by puniſhment, that the life being ended, they ſhould neuer end their puniſhment. Epist. 54. And in another place: Sic corumpuntur paenitentes, ut ſint, quos poenitentia peccaffe, Epist. 159. So reſtraine their finnes, that they may yet remaine to repent them of their finnes. In thoſe daies therefore, men were not by and by puniſhed with death to preuent their repentance, as in time of poperie, but their repentance was expected, to deliuer them from the ſentence of death.

NOW in the laſt place I will briefly ſhew how their cruell proceeding againſt the profeſſors of the Goſpell, and chiefly in their Spaniſh Inquiſition, as it is called, is contrarie to their own Canons. Firſt, to extort faith by ſtripes and torments, is termed in their law, Nuda & inuoluntaria. A new and ſtrange learning, diſt. 45. Greg. c. 1. yet vſed altogether by them in their Inquiſition. Secondly, their vie hath been to intreate for offenders to the ſecular power, ſi citius periculum ſententia moderetur, That the ſentence might be moderated without the perill or punishment of death, decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 40. c. 27. Innocent. 3. And againe, Sext. de iur. lib. 5. tit. 13. c. 1. Innocent. 4. Medicinalis ſit excommunicationis non mortalis: Excommunication ſhould be medicinal, not mortall. But their excommunications were vnto death: for whom they did for hereſie (as they falſely called it) excommunicate, the ſecular power did execute to death. Thirdly, their Inquiſition is made in ſecret, the Martyrs were priuily condemned, and neuer publicly produced, all they were brought forth to execution: contrarie to the decree of Innocent. 3. decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 24. c. 24. Ne eccleſiaſticum iudicium fiat in tenebris, quia iuxta teſtimonium veritatis, Qui male agit, plus luce. That eccleſiaſticall iudgement ſhould not bee done in the darke, or in corners: for according to the teſtimonie of the truth it ſelfe, He that doth euill, hateth the light. So then it is manifeſt, that their doings were euill, ſeeing they ſought into corners. Fourthly, they in their phariſaical proceedings ſuppreſſe the names of the accuſers and witneſſes, though there bee no danger at all feared in the publiſhing of them: contrarie to the decree of Boniſ. 8. ſeſſ. 1. decret. lib. 5. tit. 2. c. 10. Cofum periculo, publici audi. &c. Where there is no danger, the names both of the accuſer and the witneſſes muſt be publiſhed. Fifthly, diuers conſtitutions haue been made concerning the perſon, qualitie, and condition of accuſers: as Conſ. lib. 9. tit. 3. leg. 12. A woman is not admitted to be an accuſer. Likewise in their decrees: Caſ. 2. qu. 1. c. 14. One brother is not to accuſe another. Conſ. lib. 9. tit. 1. leg. 13. not he that is nourished his patron or nourisher. Ibid. leg. 17. nor the ſervant his maſter, leg. 20. No infamous perſon can be receiued to bee an accuſer, Ibid. leg. 15. And in their owne law, Caſ. 2. qu. 7. c. 23. Yet notwithstanding they contrarie to theſe ancient prouiſions, haue admitted women to accuſe their husbands, children their parents, ſervants their maſters; yea infamous, adulterous & periured perſons haue not bin reſuſed. I need not giue an inſtance here in particular, their cruell practiſes are full euery where of ſuch examples. Sixthly, concerning the viſage of ſuch, as were impriſoned for religion, the Popes owne decree is this: Clemen. lib. 5. tit. 3. c. 1. ſi ſoluerit & obſq; diminutione, &c. That ſuch things as are offered to y prisoners by their friends, ſhould ſuſtainably and without diminution be miniſtered vnto them. But their practiſe was contrary: ſee the ſtorie of Rob. Samuel, who was allowed but 3. mouthfuls of bread, & 3. ſpoonfuls of water by the day, till his body was ſo dried vp, y he could make no vrine at al, which he offered to drink. For p. 704.

Thus much of this queſtion, as likewiſe of the whole controverſie: and thus far alſo concerning ſuch controverſies, as are moued about the church militant here vpon earth; which we haue hitherto profecuted by the Lords gracious aſſiſtance: In the next place wee are to deale in theſe controverſies, which concerne the other part of the Church triumphant in heauen.

ILLVSTRISSIMO ET INCLYTISSIMO DOMINO COMITI ESSEXIO, NON TAM GENERIS CLARITATE, QUAM

virtute sua nobili de re literaria, studioisque omnibus semper optimè merito, Dominoque mihi multis nominibus colendissimo.

E res mira vel insolens cuiuspiam videatur (illustrissime Domine) quod cum opusculum hoc sacra reginea maiestati totum consecratum voluerim, tuo nomine hanc paginam inscripserim: ut suspicione hac graui liberem me, & exonerem accusatione tam molesta: hoc primò exemplo non caret, nec sine ratione à me factum est; ut quod aliorum exemplo fecerim, me insolenter non fecisse putem, & quod rationem habet, mirum videri non debeat. Sicut enim regia maiestatis alis tecti, auctoritate freti, auxilio adiuti, veram religionem profitemur, atque ideo vniversam religionis nostra defensionem libri huius comprehensam, illius nomini primò deuotam oportuit: pari ratione cum tua cum inuentute conuincta prudentia regia voluntati ad religionis conseruationem ut vigiles administras percommo- di substant, tibi etiam partem istius operis, ut propriam dicari, equum fuit: Quemadmodum domus columnas habet, quibus tota moles incumbat, & innitatur; sic trabes & paxilli in edificio sunt, quibus Fabrica compaginetur: Regia maiestas columna est, qua omnes sustinemur; vestri honores paxilli sunt, à quibus pars pendet salutis nostra.

Sic iam prefatus breuiter id, quod reliquum est, paucis expediam: Ita me monuit qui dicit, Nego. tiolissimum in republica virum, nec deferere debemus alloquio, nec occupare procemio: Patere igitur (nobilissime Domine) dum consilij mei propositum non multis exposuero. Tibi igitur, (Domine mi colendissime) pars aliqua laboris mei ritè debetur, & iure cedit: tum, quia nobilis es, ut auctoritate defendas, literatus, & iudicio polleas, humanus & benignus, qui nec huiusmodi paupe- rum mansueta soles spernere, nec dactorem negligis. Nam primò, cum me ipsum, dum in hoc opere de- sudarim, hostium telis exposuerim, atque conatus hos nostros linguarum morfu quidam iam corro- dere ceperint, vestro mihi patrocinio opus est, quod tanquam clypeum telorum icibus obijciam. Non ea nunc rerum facies est, nec tam aqua conditio, qua Phocionis tempora claruerunt, qui cum à suis re- prehenderetur, quod hominem improbum in iudicio defendisset, factum sic respondens excusat, Ne- mo bonus (inquit) patrocinio indiget: Mos nunc planè contrarius inualuit, & vix totus in- uersus est. Eo enim insania temporū iniquitas iam prouecta est, ut malis fauceat, bonis inuideat mun- dus, & quò quisque melior, eò magis amicis & patronis opus habeat. Sed nihil moror, quid de me homines leues senserint, quidue loquantur, dum in tutelam vestra dignitas nostra hac suscipere dig- netur: Rectè ille, Satiùs est minus quemque habere, quod à Deo petat, quàm plus habere, quod sibi tribuat: Sic omnibus si probarentur labores nostri, tumorem metuo, nunc si qui secus de nobis iudicauerint, timorem sentio: timere, quam timere malle. Bene iterum ille, Si terecè facien- tem non laudauerint, illi in errore sunt; sin autem laudauerint, tu in periculo es: leuiter alios errare malim, quam me grauius periclitari.

Secundo, sicut te illustrem nobilem, ut patronum & vindicem inuoco sic literatum te nobilem, ut iudicem appello. Id tibi iam serè hac atate proprium est (nobilissime Comes) quod cum plerunq, nobiles ex gentis sua insignibus & stirpis generositate asstimentur, atque ita aliena atauorum, non sua vir- tute commendentur; tibi non tam gloria est, illustri familia natum esse, quam insita & ingenua vir- tutis laude clarere. Alios virtus illustres dedit bellica, alios pietas sublimes fecit religiosa, alios erudi- tionis nobilis euexit fama: Te speramus, atq, etiam nū scimus ex omni parte verè nobilis. Pacis primò amans es, non ut bellū promoneas, sed bello das operā, ut in pace viuatur, ut optimè Augustin. Pacem habere debet voluntas, bellum necessitas, ut liberet Deus à necessitate, & conferuet in pace, Sacram militiam tuam secundet Deus, quā cum suscipias non tam hostes vlciscēdi animo, quā reli- gionis propugnāda studio, de bono successu securus esse potes, nec est, quod de felici exitu dubites. Bene ille: Miles Christi securus interimit, interit securior; sibi præstat, cū interit, Christo, cum in- terimit: Cum occidit malefactorem Christi vindex est, cum occiditur ipse, non periisse, sed praueniisse cognoscitur: Mors ergo, quam irrogat, Christi est lucrum, quam excipit suum.

Reuocans in memoriam fidem illam non simulatam, quæ prius habitauit in auiâ & matre, & mihi persuasum est, quod in te etiam habitat: Ita auiâ & paternæ virtutis & pietatis, te imitatore verum, & iustum heredem optamus omnes, atque etiam agnoscimus. Nobilis Cromwellus, antecessor tuus, & inclutissimus Dominus Denorosus pater tuus, Essexij comes, tale pietatis & virtutis suæ posteris reliquerunt exemplar, quod nulla unquam ætas obliuisci possit, aut vetustas abolere: Eiusdem nunc virtutis & pietatis te premere vestigia, & memoriam renouare gratulamur omnes: Illi maiores tui fide præditi sunt, * Martyrio quidem non interrogata, (ut ait Bernardus) sed Martyrio idonea. Quos ego, siue fidei puritate siue pietatis zelo, siue animi constantia facile antiquis illis Nobilib. Apollonio, Iulio, Zenoni, Azadi, Hormildæ, comparauerim, qui Martyrio pro Christi fide coronati sunt: Ista statuæ, imagines & insignia sunt vestra familia (opime Comes) quæ tibi ob oculos semper proponas, ad quorum te componas exemplum, quorum iam vera in te reuincit & repullulat imago.

Ad hanc naturæ bonitatem & virtutis studium, accedit literarum iucundus amor quæ nobilem te omnibus numeris absolutum reddent. Bruta illa & inhumana Licinij vox est, qui ut ipse omniartium cultura rudis & imperitus fuit, & principatu, quem gerebat indignus: ita de alijs iudicauit:
Nihil, dixit, minus decere principem, quam artium scientiam. Istam non hominis, sed bellæ vocem ut dignitas vestra fastidit & auersatur, ita Aristippi magis eruditi Philosophi, tibi (sc-cio) placet sententia, qui interrogatus viri rei plus se debere fateretur, libris an armis? Ex libris inquit & arma & armorum iura didici. Quod iam Philosophus iste mentis contemplatione itaquam ex arcis specula ipse arma nunquam expertus, verum sensit, id tu (Comes) cui non intentata castra, nec acies formidabilis est, reipsa compertum habes, quanta ex veterum monumentis admi-tia peritiæ exornandam adiumenta comportaueris: Te igitur quem pro autoritate patrum mihi elegi, pro scientia & cognitione iudicem constituo: Tua (Domine) sicut pluuia in vellus expectatur vel sera sententia, in meo ministerio dixit Deus, (ut Augustini verba mutauit) En & factum est, in tua approbatione vidit Deus, quod bonum est: Tibi scilicet (Domine Comes) si nostra hac non multum displicebunt, quid ceteri senserint, nihil est, quod multum simus solliciti.

Nec tacite humanitatem tuam præterire possum (clementissime Domine) qui benigno & hilari vultu studiosos omnes excipere soleas, nec eorum munuscula, (quæ vulgus nullo loco habet) seraticludi sinis. Iusta hac ætate literatorum omnium querela est, libros & lucubrationes suas passim catemni, easque oblatas plerumque fastidire & respuere. Multis lucrum sapiens multo gratius est damus, magisque acceptum quod commodi aliquid apportet, quam succum & sanguinem spirans cum vana si-lutijs, dispendio elucubratur opusculum. Perijt iam antiquus ille honos, qui candidato studioforum gregi famulari solebat: Vetus illud verbum iam obsoletum est: Honos alit artes, omnesque incenduntur ad studia gloria. Socrates olim videns quendam facile omnibus gratificantiem verbis eum corripuit, quod gratias virgines, ut scorta omnibus prostitueret: qui si nunc vi-ret, hominumque ingratos animos persentisceret, exulari magis gratias, quam prostitui quereret.
Non temere à Romanis Honoris templo, Virtutis templum olim coniunctum fuit: ad quod nix per Virtutis templum non patebat aditus: quo facto innuebant, per virtutis viam solum ad honorifi-cium stigium conueniendum esse. Templorum iam superstitiosus cultus abolitus est, res ipsa tamen sicut in vsum reuocata esset, quam prosperè res literaria succederet. Theophrastus interrogatus, quantum communis hominum societas conseruari possit, respondit, Si poena mali coercerentur, & boni inuitarentur præmijs. Id sentiens prudentia tua, communi huic malo mederi cupiens, facis ingendum, quod nobilem decet, dum non perire sinis studioforum spem, quin languescantibus animis nostris uore & benignitate succurris & opitularis.

Te ergo nobis Mæcenatem facimus, ad te undique confluunt studiosi, in tuum sinum querelæ nostræ exponuntur, tibi studiorum nostrorum fructus feruntur, tibi Musarum mæsis caditur. Pro in-genti bonitate vestra nos vicissim amorem rependimus: Et ego vestro honori, pro singulari humanitate, omni officio me deuoueo deuincioque: Et doleo, quod plenum affectum, ut bene ille, exilicogor designare stylo, & breui chartula latam comprehendere charitatem. Veniam iam precatus prius, si sermone præceptis alicubi lapsus fuerim: Festine enim ista dicta, ut iterum ille, & ob hoc minus festiue; tibi vicissim, omne virtutis cum Honore incrementum precor in Christo

Iesu: Et ipse sit epistolæ finis, qui finis est ad iustitiam omni credenti.

Tuo Honori in perpetuum deditissimus,
AND. WILLET.

HERE FOLLOW THE CONTROVERSIES CON- CERNING THE CHVRCH TRIVMPHANT.

They are two in number: The first is as touching the condition, office, and ministerie of Angels: The second of and concerning the Saints departed.

THE EIGHT CONTROVERSIE concerning Angels.

This Controverſie containeth three questions. Firſt, of the Hierarchie and degrees of Angels. Secondly, of their miniſterie and office. Thirdly, of the worſhip and inuocation of Angels.

THE FIRST QUESTION, CONCERNING THE celeſtiall Hierarchie, or degrees of Angels.

This question hath likewiſe two parts: Firſt, how many degrees there be of Angels. Secondly, whether Michael be the prince of the Angels.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE DIVERS orders and degrees of Angels.

The Papiſts.

They doe boldly affirme, that there are nine orders of Angels: and thoſe that doe doubt of it, they charge with infidelitie and blaſphemie. There are firſt Principalities; then Poſteſtates: thirdly, Powers: fourthly, Dominations, Eph. 1. 21. fifthly, there are Thrones, Coloff. 1. 16. vnto theſe adde Cherubim, Seraphim, Angels, Archangels: ſo haue we 9. in al, Rhem. annot. Eph. 1. ſect. 4.

The Proteſtants.

As of the diuerſitie of names we gather, that there are diuers orders, as Hierome ſaith, Singe can- ſeder ſia: eſt nomen, ubi non eſt diuerſitas meritorum: There is no reaſon to haue diuerſitie of names, where there is no diuerſitie of merit: that is, vertue: So to enquire of them more ſubtilly, to define their number, and appoint their degrees: it is a point not onely of fooliſh curioſitie, but alſo of vngodly and dangerous raſhnes, ex Caluino. Fulk. ibid.

Argum. 1. That the Scripture alloweth no ſuch difference or diſtinction of orders, or degrees amongſt the Angels it may thus appeare: firſt, Ephes. 6. 12. the Apoſtle giueth two of the names of theſe orders to euill angels, namely, Principalities, and Poſteſtates: from which place I reaſon thus: If theſe be names of orders and degrees, then they may be found amongſt the euill angels as well as amongſt the good: and if ſome of theſe degrees are amongſt the euill angels, then why not the reſt alſo? and ſo wee ſhall haue Seraphim and Cherubim amongſt the euill and reprobate angels, which were blaſphemie to affirme.

Againe, they that hold thoſe nine orders of Angels, doe make Cherubim, Seraphim, and Thrones, the three higheſt: ſaying further, that, Superiora agmina ab intimis nunquam recedunt: The ſuperiour orders doe neuer depart from the preſence of God, and that the angels of the inferiour orders, are ſent in embaiſſage from God: Mag. lib. 2. diſtinct. 10. 4. But contrarie to this aſſertion, Eſay. 6. we reade, that the Seraphims alſo are ſent vpon Gods meſſage: and ſo wee conclude, that Seraphims are not of the higheſt and ſuperiour order.

Further, Michael and Gabriel are ſpirits of the higheſt nature and office, as appeareth by their names: the firſt, ſignifying one that is equall to God; the other, the ſtrength of God: and yet they are called Angels. Wherefore thoſe orders are confounded in Scripture, and no ſuch precise difference amongſt the Angels can there be found: and the Apoſtle ſaith, they are all miniſtring ſpirits, Heb. 1. adminiſtratorij ſpiritus: therefore not commaunding ſpirits one ouer another.

Likewiſe Oriegen taketh the two Seraphims mentioned Eſay. 6. for Chriſt and the ſpirit, ſaying, That none are able to comprehend the beginning and end of things, which he would haue ſignified in that place, by covering their face and ſeate with their wings, but onely Chriſt and the holy ſpirit. Wherefore in his iudgement the Seraphim are not a diſtinct order of Angels.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quid inter ſe diſſent quatuor illa vocabula, throni, dominationes, principatus, poſteſtates, dicunt qui poſſunt ſi ſamen poſſunt probare quod dicunt, ego me iſta ignorare confeſor: What difference rence there is betweene these foure words, Thrones, Dominations, Principalities, Powers, let them tell vs, that be able, so they can proue that they tell vs: for my part, I confesse I know it not, August. Enchirid. cap. 58. With Augustine therefore wee confesse, that as it appeareth by these seuerall names, there are distinct orders of Angels, so how many there be, and how they are distinguished, the Scripture hath not reuealed vnto vs: and it were curiositie for vs to enquire: wee shall then know, when we shall be like vnto the Angels.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER MICHAEL be the prince of Angels.

The Papists.

a. Error.

They say, that in heauen beside God himselfe, there is another commaunder and captaine of the Angels, euen Michael the prince of the Angels: which place the diuell had in the beginning before his fall. For as the Scripture saith, the diuell and his angels, meaning, that all euill angels are subiect vnto him: so by Michael and his angels, we vnderstand all good angels, that are likewise subiect to him, Apocal. 12. 7. Rhemist. Bellarm de pontif lib. 1. cap. 9.

The Protestants.

First, Michael in that place signifieth Christ, who is Lord of the Angels: for the Angels cannot be said to be any other Michaels Angels, but onely the Angels of God and Christ, Fals. del. This is also proued by the text, verf. 10. Now is come saluation, the kingdome of our God, and the power of his Christ, for the accuser of the brethren is cast out. Here hee is called Christ, which before was named Michael. Augustine also so expoundeth it, Michaëlem intellige Christum: By Michael vnderstand Christ: Homil. 9. in Apocalyps.

Secondly, it followeth not, that as there is a chiefe and captaine of the euill Angels, so amongst the good there should bee a chiefe Angell about the rest, beside Christ: for it is sufficient that there is one Lord and prince of the Angels, euen Christ. Againe, neither is it proued out of scripture, that amongst the diuels there is one captaine and great diuell to whom the rest were subiects: for whereas the Pharisees objected, that Christ cast out diuels through Beelzebub the prince of the diuels, Mark. 3. if either the Pharisees did then so meane, or any shall now gather vpon their words, that there is a great master diuell that ruleth and commaundeth the rest, it was in them but a pharisaicall dreame, and in the other a popish collection. We deny not, but that there may be degrees in power and angelicall gifts, both among the good and bad angels, as there shall be degrees in glorie among the Saints: yet the Saints shall not be princes one ouer the others: more are the Angels now. Thirdly, marke the answer of our Sauour in that place, If Sathan is cast out Sathan, Mark. 3. Here Sathan is made a common name to all euill spirits. But Apocal. 12. when mention is made of the diuell and his angels, the text saith, The great dragon, the old serpent called the diuell and Sathanas, verf. 9. Here the name Sathanas, is giuen to the prince of the diuels: so there is not one Sathanas, but many. And where our Sauour calleth the diuell the prince of the world, Ioh. 14. Saint Paul calleth them all principalities and powers, worldly gouernours, and princes of the darknesse of this world, Ephes. 6. 12. so there is not one prince of the diuels, but they are all princes. Thus Augustine expoundeth that place: Draco pugnat & angeli eius: id est, diaboli & homines voluntati eius obtemperantes: The dragon fought and his angels, that is, wicked men obeying his will, Apocalyps. Hom. 9. So by Augustines sentence the diuels are not subiects to the great diuell, but they are all princes and commaunders of wicked men.

Argum. If Michael be the prince of the Angels, then it must needes be graunted, that he is of the highest order of Angels, which are Seraphim, and Cherubim: for so these Angel-makers do place them: These three, Seraphim, Cherubim, Thrones, make the highest ranke: Dominations, Principalities, Potentates the middle order: Powers, Archangels, Angels the lowest region, Mag. lib. 2. distinct. 9. a. But Michael being an Archangell is in the lowest order, and therefore cannot be the chiefe and commaunder of the rest.

Further, the Apostle saith, They are all ministering spirits, Hebr. 1. 14. Ergo not commaunding spirits one ouer another.

Origene thinketh, that there is no other prince of the Angels, but Christ: Omnis cali militia &c. All the host of heauen, whether Angels, Archangels, Powers, Dominions, &c. were made by him, and serue vnder him their prince.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE ministerie and function of Angels.

This question hath two parts: first, of the externall ministerie of Angels, in the protection and defence of the Church. Secondly, of their spirituall office about the prayers of Gods seruants.

Homil. 6,
in Ioh.

THE FIRST PART, CONCERNING THE defence and protection of Angels.

The Papists.

Michael (say they) is the protector and keeper of the whole Church of Christ, Dan. 10. 21. <sup>3. Error.</sup> And as earthly kingdoms haue their speciall Angels for their protectors; so also haue particular Churches, Dan. 10. Rhem. annot. 1. Apoc. sel. 9.

The Protestants.

The whole Church hath Christ himself, who is the true Michael, for her protector & defender: And so is that place in Daniel to be vnderstood. Augustine also by Michael vnderstandeth Christ: the name also signifieth as much: Michael, that is, one like vnto God: see more of this before: Comron. 4. quest. 1. The Scripture saith, All power is giuen to Christ, and he is with his Church to the ende of the world, Matth. 28. 18. 20. He therefore is the chiefe patrone and protector of his Church.

Secondly, it cannot be proued out of Scripture, that kingdomes haue their speciall Angels protectors, for Dan. 10. The Princes of the Persians and Grecians, were not Angels but earthly Princes: for Angels doe not resist Christ and his Angels defenders of the Church, as the Prince of Persia did, ver. 13. Falk. ibid. but all the Angels of heauen are readie to serue the Lord at his pleasure, for the defence of his Church, without any limitation of place, Zachar. 1. 10. These are they whom the Lord hath sent, to go through the world. The Angels execute their message, not in severall countries, but in the whole world.

The Papists.

Every one hath from his Natiuitie an Angel for his custodie and patronage against the wicked, <sup>4. Error.</sup> before the face of God, Gen. 48. 16. Jacob saith, The Angell that hath kept me from my youth up: Act. 12. 15. It is his angell, Rhemist. ibid. Matth. 18. 10. Their Angels behold the face of my Father: Ergo, euery man hath his proper Angell.

Asa. 1. Jacob by the Angell vnderstandeth Christ, to whom it is proper to blesse Gods children: the Angell blesse thy children, saith he, Gen. 48. 16. This Angell appeared vnto him in Bethel, and is called the God of Bethel, Gen. 31. 13. with this Angell Jacob wrestled, 32. which was God, as it appeareth by the name of Jacob, he is called Israel, because hee had preuailed with God, and the place is called Peniel, I haue seene God face to face: Other proper Angell Jacob had none, for all the Angels of God were appointed for his defence, Gen. 32. 1. He met an hoste of Gods Angels, and accordingly called the place Mahanaim.

2. Neither of the other places proue that men haue proper Angels, Matth. 18. The children of God are said to haue their Angels: not theirs, as euery man his proper Angell, but theirs in common, because they were deputed for their defence: Act. 12. Peter at that time was deliuered by one Angell, but it followeth not, that therefore he was his proper Angell.

The Protestants.

We nothing doubt of the protection of Gods Angels: but that euery one hath a proper Angell appointed for his protection from his Natiuitie, out of Scripture it is not proued.

1. Sometime one Angell hath the charge of a multitude, Exod. 23. 20. The Lord saith to all the people of Israel, I send mine Angell before thee, to keepe thee in thy way.

2. Sometime many Angels are readie for the defence of one man: Gen. 32. 1. an hoste of Angels met Jacob, Psalm. 91. 11. He shall giue his Angels charge ouer thee, to keepe thee in all thy waies: Ergo, euery man hath not his particular proper Angell.

3. Luke. 16. 22. The poore man is said, being dead, to be caried not by one Angell, but by the Angels, into the bosome of Abraham. But if he had one Angell appointed to be the president of his life from his Natiuitie, it had been also part of that Angels charge, to haue conueyed his soule into heauen. So Augustine writeth: Sibene vixerimus, ubi à carnis vinculo anima liberata fuerit, max in occursum nostrum Angelorum chorus occurrit. De salutaribus documentis. cap. 39. If we liued well here, when as the soule is gone from the bodie, the holy company of the Angels are readie to meet vs: he saith not one Angell, but the whole chore or company.

Lastly, they that hold, that euery man hath a good Angell appointed for his custodie at his Natiuitie, doe also affirme, that euery wicked man hath also an euill Angell waiting vpon him. But this cannot be, for seeing it is confessed that the good Angels are more in number then the bad, Maci. lib. 2. dist. 11. b. but wicked men doe contrariwise exceede the good in number, it must needs follow, that there is not for euery euill man an euill Angell, or else that there are more good Angels, than for euery man one: the Master of the sentences answereth, that one Angel may serue diuers men successiuelly, for men die, but Angels die not, and so notwithstanding euery man shall haue his Angell.

Answ. 1. Yet the obiection is not answered, for in euery age the good men are fewest, and the cuill men most, and not onely in respect of the whole age of the world, and yet the good Angels are more then the bad: 2. To admire this distinction, yet seeing the number of good men is sometime more, sometime lesse, as toward the end of the world, when faith shall faile, but the number of the Angels is alwaies the same, it cannot be that euery man should haue his Angell, and euery Angell his particular charge of some one man.

THE SECOND PART, WHAT OFFICE the Angels haue about our prayers.

The Papists.

Harcl. 5.

THeir opinion is, that the Angels doe offer vp our prayers vnto God. And they would proue it by that place, Apoc. 8. 2. An Angell stood by the Altar, with a golden censer, and much incense was giuen vnto him to offer with the praier of the Saints, Rhemist. in hunc locum.

Answ. Augustine vpon this place saith, that this Angell is Christ: Thuribulum aureum est corpus eius sanctum, the golden censer is his body; ex quo Deus odorem suauitatis accepit, out of the which God smelt a sweet fauour. Homil. in Apocalyp. 6. And in another place he saith, Vi altare sanctificat dona, sic Christus preces nostras, as the altar sanctifieth the gift, so Christ doth our praier, quæst. in Euangel. 34. First, therefore this place is vnderstood of Christ, not of any Angell.

2. If this place might be vnderstood of Angels, that they haue some ministry about our praier, it maketh nothing notwithstanding for popish inuocation of Angels: for the Angell here commendeth not the praier of the Saints by his merit, but by the much incense giuen vnto him, to adde to the praier of the Saints to make them acceptable, which is the sweet smell and fauour of the precious death and merits of Christ. Fulk. in hunc locum: Augustine indeed sometime ascribed such an office vnto the Angels to carry vp our praier to heauen, as their charge is to carry vp our soules: not as mediators or intercessors, but as the Lords messengers and agents here vpon earth, to report vnto him our affaires: dicuntur Angeli preces nostras, & vota Deo offerre, non ut Deum deprecant, qui omnia antequam fiant, vultis, sed ut super his Dei voluntatem consulant. The Angels are made to offer vp our praier and vowes vnto God, not to informe or instruct the Lord, but only to consult and know his pleasure: rom. 9. de dilection. cap. 3. & in Psal. 74. for the Angels haue two offices, the one, to execute the commandment of God in the world, and to attend vpon him to receive their charge, Matth. 18. 10. the other, to returne vnto God as faithfull messengers the successe of their busines in the world, Zach. 1. 10. Now whether the Angels be appointed of God to report vnto him our sayings and doings, as other affaires of our life, the Scripture no where evidently sheweth. Neither, if it were granted, would it any thing helpe their popish inuocation of Angels.

Fulk. Apoc. 8.

Rhemist. alleage Tob. 12. 12. to proue the offering of our praier by Angels.

Answ. It is neither Canonically Scripture, nor agreeable vnto it: Fulk. annot. Coloss. 2. sect. 3.

The Protestants.

THe Scripture alwaies maketh Christ our only Mediator, neither Angels nor Saints, by whom our prayers and all other spirituall sacrifices are offered vnto God.

1. Hebr. 13. 15. Let vs by him offer the sacrifice of praise alwaies to God, 1. Pet. 2. 5. You an holy Priesthood, to offer vp spirituall sacrifices acceptable to God, by Iesus Christ: Ergo, Christ Iesus is our onely Mediator.

2. Galath. 3. 19. The law was ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediator: Ergo, the Angels are one office, and the Mediator another. Augustine saith: Quod non aliquem ex Angelis dicit Mediatorem, sed ipsum Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum habes alio loco: Vnus (inquit) Deus, & vnus Mediator Dei & hominum, homo Christus Iesus. That the Apostle calleth not any of the Angels, but onely Iesus Christ our Lord, Mediator, we haue in another place: There is one God, saith he, and one Mediator of God and man, the Man Iesus Christ.

1. Tim. 2.

AN APPENDIX OR THIRD PART OF THIS Question, whether Angels or Saints know our hearts.

The Papists.

Harcl. 6.

THe Angels and other Celestiall spirits doe know our hearts and inward repentance: And betwene the Angels and the blessed soules of Saints, there is no difference in this case, the one being as highly exalted, and neere God, as the other, in whom and by whom onely they see and know our affaires, Luk. 15. 10. There is ioy in heauen, in the presence of the Angels ouer one sinner that repenteth: Ergo, they know our repentance: Rhemist. Luk. 15. sect. 2.

Answ. 1. Our hearts and inward repentance are not knownen to the Angels, but by the fruits, and the true effects thereof.

2. Although

2. Although the elect, after the resurrection shall be like in glorie to the Angels, yet it followeth not, that they shall be like in all things, much lesse that their soules now in heauen, be in all things like vnto the Angels, whose presence and ministerie God vseth in the preseruacion of his choicen.

3. That all things done in the world may be seene in God, as in a glasse, is but a prophane speculation, and the deuice of an idle braine, Fulk. ibid.

Argum. 2. Abraham had knowledge of things in earth, which were not in his time, as that they had Moses and the Prophets bookes, which he neuer saw, Luk. 16. vers. 29. Rhemist.

Ans. First, in this narration many things are spoken parabolically, out of the which we must not ground any doctrine not taught elsewhere in Scripture: for you may as well say, that soules haue fingers and tongues, and that elementall water will quench hell fire, as that Abraham knew what bookes were written after his death.

Secondly, albeit that the doctrine of the Church comprehended in the Scriptures, might be reuealed to Abraham after his death, yet it followeth not, that he knew all things, as you affirme the the Saints doe, by beholding the maiestie of God.

The Saints therfore in heauen know so much as the Lord thinketh good to reueale vnto them, they know not all things.

The Protestants.

WE deny not, but that as Prophets and holy men in this life, may know many secret things reuealed vnto them by the spirit of God, as Peter found out the secret fraude of Ananias and Sapphira: Elisus being absent found out Gebezi his corruption; yea, hee could tell what was done in the King of Syria his chamber: so the Lord may reueale vnto the Saints in heauen at his pleasure, some things done vpon earth. But that they receiued any such gift of God, to know all things done vpon earth, it is a great vntruth, and cleane contrarie to the Scriptures.

First, Salomon saith in his prayer vnto God: Hear thou in heauen in thy dwelling place, and giue vnto euery man according to his wayes, as thou knowest his heart: for thou onely knowest the hearts of all the children of men. 1. King. 8. 29. Out of this place we thus reason: he onely knoweth the heart, that is the iudge of all men, and a rewarder of them according to their wayes: But the Lorde onely is iudge: Ergo. Againe, the words themselues be plaine, that God onely knoweth the heart: so that what knowledge of secrets the Saints haue, it is by reuelation, not by searching the heart.

Againe, S. Paul saith, No man knoweth the things of man saue the spirit of man which is in him: so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God, 1. Cor. 1. 11. The Rhemists answer, that no man knoweth the secrets of the heart naturally, but by extraordinarie gift he may, as the Prophets did. Ans. No man euer had or can haue a generall gift to know the heart, but when God seeth it good to reueale it: for otherwise the comparison holdeth not. The spirit of God onely knoweth the things of God: which also is giuen to men to know, but not by receiuing any gift, to search and looke into the nature and heart as it were of God (for then should they know all the secrets of God, which neuer any did:) but onely by reuelation of the spirit, which openeth Gods secrets vnto them, so farre as it is conuenient and needfull.

Even after the same manner the spirit of God may reueale the secrets of the heart of man, not by giuing them a generall gift themselues to looke into the heart, as into a glasse, but by reuealing such things, when the Lord seeth it expedient.

Neither had the Prophets an inherent gift and dwelling in them, to know secrets, but the word of God was inspired into them at times, as they had neede, as we see in Naiban, 2. Sam. 7. 3. 4. in Elisba, 1. King. 2. 15. in Israh, 2. King. 10. 4. And though Paul was taken vp into heauen, and saw many secrets, yet he knew not all: for thus he saith of himselfe, If I knew all secrets, 1. Cor. 13. 2. Ergo, no man euer receiued this gift, to search the heart: but it is proper vnto God, who will not giue his honour to another.

2. Augustine saith, Nescire mortuos quid hic agatur dum hic agitur: That the dead know not what is done here, while it is in doing. But they vnderstand either by relation of those that depart this world, or else by the Angels; Non quidem omnia, sed qua sinuntur indicare: sicut Prophetia, nec hic omnia cognoscebant, sed qua illis esse reuelanda dei prouidentia indicaretur. de cura pro mort. cap. 15. Neither doe they know all things, but what God iuffereth to be knowne; as neither did the Prophets know all things while they liued, but what God in his diuine prouidence thought good to reueale vnto them. I note out of this saying of Augustine three things.

First, what great vncertaintie of opinion here is: How the dead should come by the knowledge of humane affaires, the Papists thinke they haue it by Gods gift: otherwhile they say, they see all things in God, as in a cleere glasse. Augustine saith, they know them by the Angels, or by men newly departed this life: so that it appeareth to be but a meere conceit and imagination, that they haue any such knowledge, whereof there is no surer ground. Secondly, Augustine saith, they know not things presently done, but afterward, contrary to the Papists. Thirdly, they know not all things, as the the Prophets also did not, but what the Lord reuealeth vnto them: wherein also he is contrarie to our aduersaries.

The holy Martyrs haue sealed this truth: that God onely is the knower of the hearts, and that he hath not giuen this honour to any other.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: God knew all things before the beginning of the world, and is euery where to see, not onely our outward dealing, but also all the secrets of all mens hearts, so that he needeth no mediator, to informe him of our desires, pag. 1109. But Angels and Saints were not from the beginning, neither are they euery where: Ergo, they know not our thoughts.

Paul Luther confessor: Saints in heauen cannot helpe vs, neither know no more what men doe in the world, then a man in the North countrie knoweth what is done in the South countrey. p. 1040. col. 2.

THE THIRD QUESTION CONCERNING THE worship of Angels, first in generall, then in particular, of inuocation.

The Papists.

Hazref. 7.

They say that the diuine honour and adoration due vnto God alone, is not to be giuen to Angels: But there is a religious reuerence, honour and adoration, which is not to be denied to Angels and Saints, Rhem. annot. 2. Apocalyp. 19. sect. 4.

Argum. 1. Iosua fell downe before the Angell and worshipped, Ios. 5. Rhemist.

Ans. He worshipped not an Angell, but the Lord Christ himselfe the captaine of the Lords armie: for it was a diuine worship: He is bid to put off his shooes, as Moses was, when God appeared out of the fierie bush, Exod. 3. But a diuine worship (by your owne confession) is due onely to God, Fulk. annot. Coloss. 2. 3. And thus Origen expoundeth this vision: homil. 6. in Ios. Iosua non adorasset, nisi agnouisset Deum, &c. Iosua would not haue adored him, if he had not known him to be God, for who else is the Prince of the armie of the power of God, but our Lord Iesus Christ?

Argum. 2. 1. Timoth. 2. 21. I charge thee before God and the Lord Iesus Christ, and his elect Angels, that thou obserue these things: Ergo, Angels may be adored and reuerenced, Rhemist.

Ans. Saint Paul maketh heere the Angels witnesses of his waightie charge: so Moses called heauen and earth to witnesse, Deut. 30. 19. may we therefore conclude, that he yelded any religious worship to heauen and earth?

The Protestants.

AS for due reuerence, which is of loue, not of any seruice, there is no question, but we ought to yeeld it vnto the Angels. But all religious seruice or worship is due onely to God, and whose fouer man or Angell, requireth, or receiueth any religious worship or seruice, vsurpeth that which is due vnto God. Fulk. Apocal. 19. sect. 4.

Argum. 1. Apocal. 19. 10. and 22. 9. Iohn fell downe to worship the Angell: but the Angell suffered him not: Seethou doe it not, (saith hee:) for I am thy fellowe seruant, and of thy brethren, worshippe God: Ergo, Angels are not to be adored with any religious worship.

Rhemist. First, he forbiddeth him onely to worship him with diuine adoration.

Ans. The words are generall: he saith not, worship God, with this kinde of seruice; but worship God: and the word here vsed, prostratus, properly signifieth in falling downe to worship: by which word also Act. 10. 25. Cornelius manner of worshipping Peter is expressed: vpon which place the Rhemists doe note, that euery falling downe to worship, is not diuine, or proper onely to God, and that Peter did refuse it for humilitie sake: the Angell then in this place refuseth that falling downe, or worshipping, which they say was giuen to Peter, and is not onely due to God; and so doth Peter in the other place, not for humilitie, but alleaging hee was a man, and therefore of pietie, becaue hee woulde not haue God robbed of his honour.

Rhemist. Secondly, you say, that Iohn so worthie an Apostle was not ignorant of that point, that Angels were not to be worshipped as God: we may reply also, that if Iohn had knowne that this other kind of seruice was vnlawfull, he would not haue done it.

Ans. Iohn sinned not of ignorance, but of forgetfulness, in this ecstasie of his mind, while he beheld the glory of the Angell, as likewise through his frailenes and forgetfulness he committeth the like againe, cap. 22. which Iohn would not haue done, being once before admonished, had he not presently forgotten himselfe. But the other error of worshipping the creature for the Creator, was too grosse an error for the Apostle.

Rhemist. Thirdly, he was deceiued in the person, taking the Angell for Christ, and therefore was not culpable at all in this fact, in giuing diuine honour to the Angell, for he sinned onely materially not formally.

Anſw. First, Iohn was not ignorant, that he was an Angell, and not Christ; for he saith, he was one of the seven Angels that had the seven vials. Secondly, though he sinned of ignorance, yet was it a sinne: for the Prophet, which beleued the old Prophet, sinned grievously, as it appeared by his punishment, though he did it ignorantly, 1. King. 13. Wherefore it is a grosse error of your Schoolemen, that say, a man sinneth not, if he worship the Diuell in the shape of an Angell ignorantly.

Rhemist. Fourthly, the Angell would not receiue this worship at Iohns hand, whom he knew to be in great fauour with God, and greater then some Angell.

Anſw. First, though hereafter the children of God shall be made equall to the Angels in glory, yet in this mortall life they must needs be inferiour, seeing Christ himselfe, in respect of his passion, was inferiour to the Angels, Hebr. 2. 9. Secondly, the Angell would not haue taken this homage at any other mans hands, beside Iohns: for he giueth a reason, that he is not onely his fellow seruant, but also of his brethren. So for all their shifts and cauils, we strongly conclude by this example, that no religious honour ought to be giuen to Angels.

Hieronymus Angeli, charitate non seruitur (saith Augustine) nec eis templa construimus: Wee honour Angels with the dutie of loue, not of seruice, neither doe we build temples vnto them. Quodammodo summus Angelus, ad colendum etiam est ab homine vltimus. That therefore which is worshipped of the highest Angell, the man of lowest degree ought also to worship, De vera religion. cap. 55. Ergo, no worship due vnto Angels, but all vnto God.

Adrian. 1. Epist. ad Constantin. Imperator. Qualis est iste adorationis honor (profecto non alius quam is, qui spectatores quosque inuicem prosequimur, salutantes nos inter nos per honorationem & dilectionem: What manner of worship is this (he meaneth the reuerence to be giuen to Angels and Saints) surely no other, then that, which we sinners amongst our feluts doe giue to one another, by a mutual salutation of honour and loue. The argument out of these words may be framed thus: No other worship is due to Angels & Saints, but that which we giue one to another: but that is no religious worship: Ergo, Your owne decrees also do reckon the heretikes called Angelos in the number, because they worship Angels: decret. p. 2. caus. 24. qu. 3. 139. wherefore it is heresie euen by your owne law to worship Angels.

Iohn Lambert holy martyr, sheweth out of Augustine, that we should worship no men departed, be they neuer so good, or holy, no nor yet no Angell, we honour the same, but onely the imitation of them, following their good acts in our liuing: the Angels refuse all honour, sauing that which is called honor caritatis, that is, to be loued, &c. Ex p. 108. respons. ad artic. 14.

THE SECOND PART OF THE INVO- cation of Angels.

The Papists.

They hold, that it is lawfull to direct our praier vnto Angels, Rhemist. Coloss. 2. sect. 3. Yea, and Herz. 8. because they for vs, and deale with God to procure mercy for vs, they may iustly be called our aduocates.

Angels are deputed for our protection (which is nothing, but aduocation.) Dan. 10. 13. Matth. 18. 10. Rhemist. annot. 1. Iohn. 2. sect. 5.

Anſw. First, the argument followeth not: for the Angels at the appointment of God, may serue for our protection and defence, though they be not aduocates for vs, to obtaine remission of our finnes. Secondly, the places alleaged proue no such aduocation of Angels, but onely defence and protection. Dan. 10. 13. The Angell was readie at the first praier of Daniel, but he was letted a while. This proueth, that Angels may know our praier when it pleaseth God, and be ministers of his helpe vnto vs, which we denie not: not that they are our aduocates. And concerning the other place in Matthew our Sauour only saith, that their Angels doe behold the face of his father; that is to know his pleasure, and what seruice God wil command them for the good of his Church: this text maketh nothing for the aduocation of Angels. So then these two Scriptures doe set forth two offices of the Angels: the one their descending from heauen, Dan. 10. 13. the other their ascending to heauen: Matth. 18. 10. Like as Iacob saw the Angels descending and ascending vpon the ladder, Gen. 28. which signifieth their ministeriall protection of vs, not an imperiall aduocation: vnlesse they will say, that the Angels also are Christes aduocates, for vpon him they are said to ascend and descend, Iohn. 1. 51. And further what is signified by the ascending and descending of the Angels, Bernard hath very well expressed in this sentence: ascensio & descensio via angelorum, &c. ascending and descending is the way of the Angels: they ascend for them-selues, and descend for vs; they ascend for contemplation, they descend vnto vs for compassion; they ascend to behold his face, descend at his becke: in Psal. 90. serm. 11. Wherefore they ascend to know Gods pleasure, they descend to doe Gods pleasure, this sheweth their seruice and ministrie, not their aduocation

cation or maiestie : the argument then followeth not at all, they are our protectors, Ergo, our aduocates.

And whereas the Rhemists in the same place would proue the aduocation of Angels by the Col- lect vsed in our Church vpon S. Michaels day, which is this : That they which doe thee aluacis seruare in heauen, may by thy appointment succour and defend vs in earth : who seeth not, what beggerly thinke they are driuen to vs, seeing that this praier maketh nothing at all for the aduocation or inuocation of Angels, but onely their protection and preservation.

Argum. 2. Apoc. 8. vers. 3. I saw another Angell, that came and stood before the altar having a golden censur, and much odors were giuen vnto him, so offer with the praier of the Saints vpon the golden altar &c. From this place the Rhemists conclude that angels do offer our praier to God, Rhemist. in hunc locum.

Ans. First, though the Angels should report vnto God our praier, as the rest of our affairs, which they see done (which ministerie of theirs notwithstanding in presenting of our praier, hath no direct warrant out of Scripture) yet it followeth not that we should inuocate them for the Saints in earth do inuocate God for vs, yet are not to be inuocated by vs. Secondly, if in this place we should vnderstand any of the Angels to be the prefferer of our praier, yet they doe it not by their owne merite, but by the merite and sweet sauour of the death of Christ, which are the sweet odors added to the praier of the Saints : Thirdly this place is better expounded of Christ himselfe, who is the Angell, that offereth vp our praier, as Saint Augustine in his commentary vpon this text.

The Protestants.

That Angels are not be worshipped, nor inuocated, as mediators, intercessors, or aduocates, the Scripture speaketh evidently,

Argum. 1. Coloss. 2. 18. Let no man beguile you in the humblenes and worshipping of Angels. Ergo, it is not lawfull to pray vnto them, or to worship them.

Rhemist. The Apostle speaketh here against the wicked doctrine of Simon Magus, that affirmed that the Angels both ill and good, were mediators for vs vnto God; and against the superstition of the Iewes, that worshipped the Angels by whom the law was giuen.

Ans. The Apostle condemneth both these superstitions, as likewise the popish inuocation of Angels: because all will-worshippe is forbidden, which is not after the prescript of God, Coloss. 2. 23. Out of which place we reason thus, all will-worship is forbidden: but all worship of Angels is a will-worship, Ergo, all worship of Angels is forbidden: that which the Apostle calleth, vers. 18. seruicio, the worship of Angels, vers. 23. he termeth idolopatriam, will-worship, which is inuented by man, and not warranted by the word.

Argum. 2. If any man sinne, (saith the Apostle) we haue an aduocate with the Father Iesus Christ the iust, he is the propitiation for our sinnes, Iohn. 2. 2. Ergo, Christ onely is our aduocate.

Rhemist. Christ is our aduocate in the highest degree, because by himselfe, and his owne merits, without the assistance of any other, he obtaineth pardon for vs. The other, as Angels & Saints, are as secondary intercessors, that obtain not any thing by their own merits, but only through Christ.

Ans. First, he onely and properly is an aduocate that can pleade the iustice of his clients cause, which euery one that prayeth for vs cannot do: for though the Angels and Saints departed should pray for vs (which we know not by the Scriptures) as our brethren vpon earth doe, yet should they not be mediators and aduocates, but petitioners and intreators for vs.

Secondly, we gather many strong arguments out of this place, for the sole sufficient aduocation of Christ. First, the sonne is the best and onely sufficient aduocate with the father; therefore where we may haue free & bold access to the Sonne, Heb. 4. 16. what need haue we of the tenants helpe? Secondly, he is the onely aduocate that is iust and righteous before God: so only is Christ, the Angels are impet in his sight, Iob. 4. 18. Ergo. Thirdly, he must be our aduocate that is able the propitiation for our sinnes: Ergo, onely Christ.

Augustine saith, Dicitis, Angelos nos colimus: utinam illos coleretis, facile ab illis disceretis, du nos colere: But yee will say yee worship not images but Angels: I would you did truly worship and reuerence them: for you should soone learne of the Angels, not to worship the Angels, In Psal. 98. And Bernard also thus writeth vpon these words of the Apostle, Hebr. 1. are they not all ministering spirits? Plures ministri nostri non Domini nostri: They are our ministers, not our Masters or Lords: In Psal. 90. serm. 11. if not our Lords, then not to be worshipped.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 45. Sancti, &c. Velut corporis Christi nobilissima membra, eo societatis & dilectionis cultu a nobis honorari debent; quo in hac vita a nobis sancti homines colipossunt: Saintes, which haue happily ended this life, as the most noble members of Christs body, must be honoured with the worship of loue and brotherly fellowship, as holy men in this life may be honoured. But we do not make our prayers vnto men, though neuer so holy vpon earth: Ergo, neither ought we to pray to Angels or Saints in heauen.

We will adde the scale of the holy confessors and Martyrs: Certaine godly Christians were persecuted in the diocesse of Lincolne, for denying to pray to Saints, saying; What neede wee goe to the feete, when we may goe to the head? anno 1521. Fox pag. 826. col. 2.

Claudio Monerius, who suffered for the truth at Lyons, anno 1551. being asked whether Saints were not to be inuocated: answered, They cannot pray without faith, and therefore it is in vaine to call vnto them, pag. 905. col. 1. The reason standeth thus, It is in vaine to pray to them, that cannot pray for vs (seeing by our aduersaries confession, Saints onely helpe vs by their prayer, and mediation to God, not by any helpfull power in themselues) but neither the Angels nor Saints can pray for vs, because they haue no faith (which gift is now with them ceased) and without faith no prayer is acceptable: Ergo, it is needlesse to pray to them.

Francis Reberzies martyred at Paris, anno 1558, thus reasoneth against inuocation of Angels and Saints: Saint Iohn saith, 1. Epist. 5. vers. 14. This is the trust wee haue in him, that if we demand any thing after his will, he will heare vs: We must doe and pray therefore according to Gods will, not after our own: But it is not Gods will that wee should pray vnto any such, either Angell or Saint: for no such commandement is giuen in his word, where his will onely is to be seene. Ergo.

THE NINTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING SAINTS DEPARTED.

His Controuersie hath two parts: first, of those that being departed suffer some punishment after this life. Secondly, of those that are straight receiued to ioy in heauen. The first part hath two questions: first, of the place of darknesse, where the faithfull remained till the comming of Christ, as the Papiists imagine. Secondly, of Purgatorie.

THE FIRST QUESTION OF LIMBUS PATRVM, where the Patriarkes were imagined to be.

The Papiists.

They haue deuised and imagined in their foolish conceit foure infernall and subterrestriall Hæreses. places; Hell, Purgatorie, Limbus infantium, where children remaine dying without Baptisme, and Limbus Patrum, where the Fathers were before Christs comming. These places they distinguish three waies: First, by the situation: Hell is lowest, Purgatorie is next, Limbus infantium in the third place, Limbus Patrum vppermost. Secondly, they differ in measure of punishment, some of them haue pœnam damni, and pœnam sensus, a double punishment, both of losse, in that they are excluded heauen, and of paine also, as Hell, and Purgatorie: the other two Limbi, are but dungeons of darknes onely, where they suffer no other smart or paine, but are only absent from God. Thirdly, they differ in time and continuance, say they, Hell and the dungeon of children shall abide for ever: but Purgatorie and the dungeon of the Fathers are temporall: the one, that is, Limbus Patrum, is many yeeres agoe dissolved: and Purgatorie also shall cease, say they, at the comming of Christ, Bellarm. de Purgat. lib. 2. cap. 6.

This then is their opinion, that the Patriarkes and Prophets before Christs comming were not in heauen, but were kept in an infernall place of darknesse, yet without paine, and were deliuered by Christs descending into hell, Bellarmino de Christi anima, lib. 4. cap. 11. Rhemist. Heb. 9. 8.

Argum. 1. Heb. 11. 40. God providing a better thing for vs, that they without vs should not be perfected: That is, (say the Rhemists) the Fathers of the law could not be admitted to the ioyes of heauen, till the Apostles and other of the new law, were associate with them, and a way made into heauen by the death and ascension of Christ, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. First, by this reason the Patriarkes could not enter into heauen before the death of the Apostles, if there were no entrance found, vnlesse they were associate with them. Secondly, if the way were not opened before Christs ascension, then the Patriarkes could not ascend before: where were they then all those 40. daies? for they were deliuered out of Limbus Patrum before Christs resurrection. Thirdly, there is therefore no such meaning of this place: but it is to bee vnderstood of the resurrection, when as all the elect shall be consummate together, and enter body and soule into heaven. Falk.

Thus doth Bernard expound this place, Acceperunt iam singuli stolas, sed non vestiantur duplicibus donec vestiamur & nos, Deo melius aliquid providente pro nobis, ut non sine nobis consummarentur: All of them, that are departed, (he meaneth the Saints) haue receiued their stoles or single garments, but they shall not be clothed with double, vntill we also be apparelled, God prouiding better things for vs: that is, in the resurrection we shall all receiue this double rayment, we shall be perfited in body and soule.

After the same manner doth this Father expound that place, Apocal. 6.9. how the soules cryed vnder the Altar: A labore requiescent, qui in Domino moriuntur; sed non requiescent interim a labore, sub throno Dei clamant anima occisorum, quia nihil est habens, quod molester, nondum habent tamen, quod deleat: In die Palmar. serm. 3. They rest from labour, that die in the Lord: but they rest not from crying: The soules of the flaine cry vnder the throne of God, because though they haue nothing that doth molest them; yet they haue not all, that may delight them. Neither of these places then can bee vnderstood of the Patriarkes in Limbo: for they could not bee without some molestation in that dugeon of darknes.

Bishop Ridley agreeth with Bernard in the exposition of the former place: God did prouide better for vs, that they without vs, &c. They tarrie now for vs vndoubtedly, longing for the day; but they are commanded yet to haue patience, vntill the number of their fellowe seruants be fulfilled: Fax. pag. 1784. He vnderstandeth the glorious consummation of the Saints in the resurrection.

Argum. 2. Zachar. 9. 11. I haue loosed thy prisoners out of the pit, where there is no water: That is out of Limbus Patrum, Bellarm. de Christi anima. lib. 4. cap. 11.

De ciuitat. Dei lib. 18. cap. 15. Ans. Augustine giueth a cleane contrarie sense of the place, by the pit without water be vnderstandeth, Humana miseria siccam profunditatem & sterilem, ubi non sunt fluentia iustitia, sed imitatis lutum: The drie and barren dungeon of humane miserie, where there are no springs of water, but the puddle and mire of iniquity: That is, the Prophet speaketh of the deliuerance of the people from their cruell and vniust bondage and captiuitie.

Argum. 3. 1. Pet. 3. 19. In the which spirit he also went and preached vnto the spirits that were in prison, which sometimes had been disobedient in the dayes of Noe. This place proueth evidently (saith Bellarmine) that Christ descended in soule into hell, and deliuered the fathers from thence, De Christi anima. lib. 4. 13.

Ans. The place can haue no such meaning: First, by the spirit here the humane soule of Christ cannot be vnderstood, but his diuine power: for Christ went and preached in that spirit, by the which he was quickened, as the text is: but he was not quickened or restored to life by his humane soule, but by his diuine power his soule was ioyned againe to his body. Augustine also giueth another reason, why he cannot be said to be quickned or made aliue in spirit, that is, in his soule: for then he must haue dyed before in soule. But, Mors anima peccatum est, a quo ille immunis fuit: But the death of the soule is sinne, from the which Christ was free.

Bellarmino saith, that by the spirit not Christs diuinity but his soule must be vnderstood, because it cannot be said properly of his diuine nature, that it went or came to a place, as it may be said of his soule: Bellarmino. ibid.

Contra. 1. If the Iesuite will stand so much vpon proper speaking, neither can the soule be said properly to goe, or come, which betoken an action and gesture of the bodie. 2. But to speake according to the phrase of Scripture, he cannot be ignorant, how that the Scripture speaketh of our capacitie, doth ascribe such humane actions vnto God: as the spirit is said to moue vpon the waters, Genes. 1. 1. God is said to walke in paradise, Genes. 3. Yet more vsually in the Gospel the actions of the humanitie are sometimes attributed to the Godhead of Christ, because of the neere vniting and coniunction of them in one person: as Iohn. 3. 13. Christ is said to descend from heauen, which was his Godhead onely, for his flesh as yet had not ascended. 4. This phrase is neither strange nor vnusuall, to say that Christ went in spirite, or the spirite of Christ went, seeing Noah went in the spirite of Christ: that is attributed to the worker, which was done by the instrument: as whatsoeuer the Prophets did in times past, the Lord is said to doe it, &c.

Again Bellarmino answereth, that it is not vnusuall in Scripture, to say that is quickened, which dyed not, as 2. Sam. 8. 2. Dauid is said to measure Moab with 2. coards, one to kill them by, another to quicken them: and Aet. 7. 19. Pharao is said to cast out their infants, ne viuificarentur, that they should not be quickened; that is, remaine aliue: so in this place the spirite, that is, the soule of Christ is said to be quickened, because it remained aliue and could not be killed.

Contra. First, the same word is not read in the places alleadged, which S. Peter vseth here: in the first place, the word is ἐγείρω, as the Septuagint translate, which signifieth, to raise or restore to life: in the other place the word is ἐκτρέφω, which betokeneth to grow vp or prosper, as plants doe, doe; but the word vsed by Saint Peter is deriued from the word resurrexerunt, which is to make aliue, and the right Latine thereof is uiuifico, I do reuiue, and I am reuiued, which is more then to restore one to the hope of life, as Dauid did the Moabites, which otherwise were as dead men, or to re-maine aliue, which Pharao would not suffer the infants to do. Secondly, the examples are not alike, for they are said to be reuiued, because they might die, though they died not; but the soule cannot die: wherefore vnlesse he can shew out of Scripture, that some thing is said to be reuiued or quickened, that neither doth nor can die, he sayeth nothing; but neither hath he, nor yet can produce any such example out of Scripture.

2 The Apostle speaketh onely of those which were incredulous and disobedient, not of the faithfull, such as the Patriarkes were and Prophets. Yea (saith Belarmine) they might be vnbeleeuers at the first, but after repented before they dyed.

Ans. Then the Apostles comparison could not hold, if any were saued without the Arke: for as then eight persons onely were saued, all without the Arke perished: so now without Baptisme and faith of the Church, (for by Baptisme he vnderstandeth not onely the washing of water, but the inward cleansing by the grace of the spirit) none can bee saued. If then any were saued out of the Arke, there may now also be saluation out of the Church. Augustine also saith, si modo, qui non crediderunt Euangelio illis intelligantur esse similes, qui tunc non crediderunt; cum fabricaretur arca: They which now beleue not the Gospell, are like to them which beleued not then while the Arke was in making. And they which doe now beleue and are baptized, are like to those which then were saued in the Arke. Augustine thinketh therefore, that they were incredulous persons, and vtterly perished both bodie and soule. And so is our opinion.

3 The text saith not, he went and deliuered, but went and preached: for Augustine calleth it an absurd thing to thinke, that the Gospell was preached to them that were dead, which in their life time were incredulous: for if the Gospell be preached in hell (saith he) it would follow that it is not needfull it should be preached here in the world, if men when they are dead, may heare it, and be conuerted. And againe, it would ensue (saith he) that there should be a Church in hell: for where the word is preached, there is a Church. Wherefore he concludeth, that it must needes be vnderstood of Noah his preaching in the spirit and power of Christ: Arca fabricatio, predicatio quondam fuit: The building of the Arke was a kind of preaching, Epistol. 99. So also he expoundeth that 1. Pet. 4. 6. The Gospell was preached to the dead: Ex circumstantia loci apparet, cum intelligeretur, qui uiuunt mortui sunt, sed olim in uita Euangelium audierunt. Commentar. in epistol. ad Roman.

Belarmine answereth, that Christ in soule preached vnto them, Non ut conuerterentur impij, sed ut condemnerentur anima piorum: Not to conuert the wicked, but to reioyce the soules of the godly.

Contra. But S. Peter saith otherwise, That the Gospell was preached to the dead, that they might be con-demned according to men in the flesh, but might liue according to God in the spirit, chap. 4. 6. What is this else, but to conuert the dead? of the which conuersion there are two parts, the mortification of the flesh, and the reuiuing or quickening of the spirit, both set downe by the Apostle.

4 The text is not, that were in prison, but doth better beare this sense, that are: The words in the original are these: ut in quibus uiuunt spiritibus in carcere, to the spirits in prison: the participle herd to be supplied in the Greeke ἐν, in Latine existentibus, is properly of the present tence, and signifieth being: and common vse of speech will giue it rather to bee vnderstood of the present time, then of the time past: as if I should say, the man in the house, or in the prison, who would not thinke that I meane one now being in the house, rather then one that was in the house and now is not? So the Apostles meaning is this, that they which were incredulous and disobedient in time past, when Noah in the spirit of Christ, or Christ by his spirit in Noah preached to the world, were then destroyed in the flood, and now for their incredulitie are punished in the prison of hell. And thus Augustine in euery point vnderstandeth this text, of Noah his preaching to the old world in the spirit of Christ, sauing that by the prison he vnderstandeth their mortall bodies, while they liued. Belarmine taketh paines at large to confute Augustines exposition, because it cometh neere vnto ours: so well these fellowes agree with antiquitie, whereof notwithstanding they make great boast.

The Protestants.

That the holie Patriarkes, Fathers and Prophets dyed in the same faith before the coming of Christ, which all true Christians doe now hold, and were presently receiued into the ioyes of heauen, and not kept in any infernall place or dungeon of darknes: thus it is proued.

Argum. 1. They had all faith, and beleued in Christ: yea, the same faith that is now preached, as it is defined by the Apostle, Heb. 11. 1. They also by this faith obtained remission of sinnes, Rom. 4. 7. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven; as it is alleaged out of the Psalm: Ergo, they were blessed: but out of the kingdome of God there was no blessednesse to be found: therefore they also went to heauen.

Your owne master of sentences also here witnesseth with vs: Eadem fides saluatur, quae uersal- mat. salui iussus faciebat antiquos, &c. The same faith, which saueth vs, did also saue the ancient righteous, the great with the small. For as we beleue that Christ is come in the flesh, so they that he was to come: as wee beleue that he dyed and rose againe, so they, that hee should die and rise againe. And Gregorius compareth both, to those that went before, and followed Christ riding to Ierusalem, crying, Osanna, &c. lib. 3. distin. 25. a. From this place we may further reason thus: The same faith hath the same effects and fruits; the Patriarkes had the same faith with vs. Ergo, they were saued and went to heauen, as all beleeuers now do. Agayne, they that went before Christ entred into Ierusalem, as well as they that followed: wherefore the forerunners of Christ, that beleued in him, by the same faith entred into heauen.

Argum. 2. If the heauens were not opened before Christs ascension, as the Rhemists affirme, then none went to heauen before Christ ascended. But that is false: Henoeh and Elias by their owne confession were taken vp into Paradise: so was the soule of the theefe vpon the Crosse. But Paradise is in heauen, yea the third and highest heauen, as S. Paul calleth it, 2. Corinth. 12. 4. And so Augustine expoundeth that place, Voluit Deus Apostolo demonstrare vitam in qua post hanc vitam viuendum est in aeternum. The Lord would shew vnto the Apostle that life, wherein, after this life, we shall liue and remaine for euer: De Gen. lib. 12. 28. These three therefore went to Paradise, which is no infernall or place of darkenesse, but a celestially habitation of ioy, light and felicity. They were not then in Limbo Patrum, in the dungeon of the Fathers. Wherefore we conclude, there was access to heauen before the ascension of Christ.

Argum. 3. Beside out of Scripture many strong arguments may be gathered, to proue that the Fathers and Patriarkes were in heauen, a place of ioy, not in the imagined Limbo, a dungeon of darkenesse, before the comming of Christ.

First, Every one that beleueth, hath euerlasting life, Iohn 5. 24. Abraham beleued, Rom. 4. 3. Ergo, Abraham had and was in euerlasting life: Ergo, not in Limbo, which is a place of payne, as they confesse; but in euerlasting life is no payne.

Secondly, the soules of the faithfull before Christ were in celestially Ierusalem, for they are the Congregation of the first borne, whose names are written in heauen, Heb. 12. 23. they were the first borne vnto Christ in the world: Ergo, their names were written in heauen.

Thirdly, where the holy Angels were, there also were the soules of the ancient faithfull, Heb. 12. 22. The companie of the Angels and the congregation of the first borne belong all in one place; so also Lazarus soule was caried by the Angels: but the Angels are in no other place but heauen: Ergo.

Further, as out of these words, I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, our Saviour proueth the resurrection, because he is not God of the dead but of the liuing; so by the same reason may conclude they were in heauen: for if it be inglorious for God to be named of the dead, so also it is to call himselfe by them, that are in payne, in darkenesse, absent from God, and they are which are imagined to be in Limbo: Ergo.

Argum. 4. The Fathers and Patriarkes, before Christs comming, were in Abrahams bosome: but that was no infernall place or prison, such as they imagine Limbo Patrum to be. Augustine proueth, that it could not be membrum, or pars infernorum, a member or part of Hell, or any infernall place, as the Iesuites hold: First, the text saith, there is magnum chaos, a great gulf, a great distance betwene, Luk. 16. 26. and verse 23. The rich man saw Abraham a farre off: wherefore it is not like, that both those places should be infernall. Secondly, Abrahams bosome, ut quies habitatio, & felicitatis sinus, a place of rest and blisse: but so is not any infernall place, where there is horror, and darkenesse. Thirdly, the place where the rich man was, is called Hell, or infernall: there is no such thing said of Lazarus, that he was in any lower place; but about in some high and farre distant place: for the rich man is said to lift vp his eyes. Augustine then concludeth, Ne ipsos quidem inferos vestram scripturarum locis in bono appellatos reperire possit. Epistol. 99. I do not find that this word Infernal, is taken any where in the Scriptures in the good part. And therefore the bosome of Abraham, being a place of rest, saith he, cannot be any infernall place. One of your owne writers maketh Abrahams bosome to be the same place, where the saints now are in happinesse and ioy, and Iesus Christ himselfe: Intrepidi pergamus ad redemptorem nostrum, &c. Let vs therefore go without feare to our Redeemer Iesus, to the assemblie of the Saints, &c. and to the bosome of Abraham with Lazarus. Espece. in 2. Timoth. cap. 4. p. 167. d.

Concil. Aquisgranens. lib. 3. cap. 3. Confusiones duas esse legimus, unam temporalem, per quam unus peccator poenitendo peccasse confunditur; alteram aeternalem, & sine fine mansuram, quam hi, qui a suis sunt, audituri sunt; quibus dicitur, ipe maledictus, &c. We reade of two confusions, one temporall, by the which a sinner in repenting for his sinne is confounded or ashamed: another eternall, to endure without ende; which they that are on the left hand shall heare, to whom it shall be said, Go ye cursed, &c. If then according to the sentence of this Council there be two confusions or punishments, one temporall in this life, another eternal afterward: then was there neuer any such Limbo.

but Paradise, a dungeon of darkenesse, for the fathers: vnlesse they will say, that when the fathers were thrust into such a darke dungeon or prison, it was no confusion or abasement vnto them.

And because our aduersaries do here accumulate and heape vp many testimonies of the Fathers, whom we confesse for the most part of them, especially the later sort of them, to haue bin in this error; yet that it may appeare, that the truth is yet more ancient, I will alleadge the sentence of a most ancient father, namely Origen, vpon these words of Iob, Naked shal I returne &c. Nudus ibi ille &c. I shall returne naked thither; whither? euen where Adam and the rest of my Elders are gone, where the tabernacles of the righteous are, the rest of the faithfull, the consolation of the godly: where is Abrahams bosome, the company of Angels, the kingdome of Christ, life and light, and glorie, and sight of God. Orig. in 1. cap. Iob. But where else are all these to be found, but in heauen, for in Limbus is neither light, nor comfort, nor Angell, nor Christ, nor the glorie of God to be seene? What clearer euidence of antiquitie can be required?

See this truth sealed by the blood of Martyrs: Richardus Fournus who suffered for the truth at Lyons anno 1354. being asked where the old Fathers were before the death of Christ, answered: They were in life eternall, which they looked for, being promised before to Adam, Abraham, and the Patriarkes in the seeds to come: Fax. pag. 913.

The sincere iudgement of Bishop Ridley holy Martyr we haue seene before.

AN APPENDIX OR APPERTINANCE OF THIS question, concerning the apparition of Samuel.

The Papists.

They hold opinion, that it was the very soule of Samuel that appeared at the witches house at 10. Error.
Endor vnto Saul: and vse it as an argument, to proue that the soules of the Patriarkes were not in heauen, but in some infernall place, before Christs comming, because Samuel ascended out of the earth, Bellarmin. de Christ. anim. lib. 4. 11.

Argum. 1. Because he that appeared to Saul, is called Samuel in the text. Augustine answereth: that the images of things, are called by the names of the things themselves: as Genes. 41. Pharaoh said he saw eares of corne, and fat and leane kine in his dreame, when they were but the images of such things: So the diuell because he appeared in the shape of Samuel, Samuel himselfe is said to be seene: Ad Simplicianum lib. 2. quasi. 3.

Argum. 2. Ecclesiastic. 46. It is set downe as a commendation of Samuel, that he prophesied being dead: Ergo, it was Samuel indeed, Bellarmin. De Purgat. lib. 2. cap. 6.

Augustine answereth, that this booke was not receiued into the Canon of the Scriptures: It is not Canonically. De cura pro mortuis. cap. 15.

Argum. 3. He telleth Saul things to come, as how the next day he should be ouercome, and slaine. But the diuell knoweth not things to come, Bellarmin. ibid.

Augustine answereth, Facile est & non incongruum: It is an easie matter with God, and not vnlikely, that some things should be reuealed to euill spirits, for the greater punishment of the wicked: for otherwise we might meruaile; Quomodo demones agnouerint Christum, quem Iudaei non agnouerunt: How the diuels knew Christ, whom the Iewes did not acknowledge: Ad Simplicianum. lib. 2. quasi. 3.

The Protestants.

That it was not the soule of Samuel which appeared, who was now at rest; but the diuell in the likeness of Samuel, who also can transforme himselfe into an Angel of light: Augustine proueth by these foure arguments.

Argum. 1. Because the Witch or Pythonist vsed enchantments, vnto the which the soule of so holy a Prophet was not subiect, Demoniacis incantationibus vti videtur. De mirabilibus Scripturae. cap. 11. Bellarmin. answereth; that Samuel preuented her enchantment, and came vp voluntarily.

The text is contrarie, vers. 11. for the woman first asked Saul, whom she should bring vp, charin, by her charmes and incantations: and he said, bring me vp Samuel.

Argum. 2. Quomodo Saul, &c. How could Saul obtaine to heare a Prophet speake from the dead, whom God vouchsafed not to answer by Prophets aliue? The text is, that God gaue him no answer neither by Prophets, nor by dreames: therefore I haue called for thee, vers. 11. Ergo, it was not Samuel for then God should haue giuen him answer by Prophets.

Argum. 3. If it had been Samuel, he would not haue told a lye vnto Saul, saying, to morowe thou shalt be with me: Magna quippe interuallo separant bonos a malis legimus: For we reade that the good are separated from the bad by a great distance after this life, as it appeareth in the storie of Dani and Lucifer. August. ad Simplicianum lib. 2.

Bellarmin. He saith as much, as you shall be dead: noting the generall condition, not the particular ticular state of the dead : and he saith further, Thou and thy sonnes shall be with me to morrow, but Ionathan being a righteous man, went not to the same place that Saul did : wherefore, ye shall be with me, is as much to say, Ye shall be dead.

Answ. This phrase in Scripture importeth, and implieth also the particular state of those that are departed, as 2. Sam. 12. 23. David saith of his child, I shall goe to him, he shall not come to me : And Luk. 23. 43. Christ saith, This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise : In both places it signifieth to be in rest and ioy, in the same place, where they are, with whom they are said, they shall be : Ergo, it should be so taken here. Neither is it necessarie to vnderstand Ionathan in this speech, seeing that he saith not all his sonnes : and there were two other of his sonnes beside Ionathan slaine, namely, Abinadab, and Malchishuab. 1. Sam. 31. 2, 6. So that the speech is true, thou and thy sonnes, though Ionathan be excluded.

Argum. 4. If it had been Samuel : Vtique vir iustus non permisisset se adorari : The iust man would not haue suffered himselfe to be adored and worshipped : as the diuell doth take it at Saules hands, to be worshipped of him. For the text saith, he enclined his face toward the ground, and bowed himselfe, or worshipped : August. quasi. ex. veteri. testam. 27.

Bellarmino saith, that he did giue no other worship vnto him, then was due vnto the soule of Samuel so great a Prophet.

Answ. Cornelius did no otherwise worship Peter, then by falling downe as Saul here doth, nor Iohn the Angell, Apocal. 22. yet neither of them are permitted to do it : Wherefore, if this had bin true Samuel, he would not haue arrogated more to himselfe, then either Peter, or the Angell. Wherefore as S. Augustine saith, Hoc nititur, ut adoretur, quasi Deus, he goeth about to be worshipped as God, and therefore it was surely Sathan, not Samuel : Those foure effectually reasons of S. Augustine are confirmed by their owne decrees, Caus. 26. qu. 5. c. 14. howsoever Bellarmino in his pleasure reiecteth both the one and the other.

THE SECOND QUESTION, CONCERNING Purgatorie.

The question hath three parts : first, whether there be any Purgatorie for soules to be purged and cleansed in after this life. Secondly, of other circumstances and matters that doe belong thereunto. Thirdly, of prayer for the dead.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THERE BE any Purgatorie after this life.

The Papists.

Heref. 11.

There is (they say) a certaine infernall place in the earth, called Purgatorie, in the which is a prison house, the soules which were not fully purged in this life, are there cleansed and purged by fire, before they can be receiued into heauen : Bellarmino de Purgat. lib. 1. c. 1. lib. 2. c. 6. Rhod. Math. 12. scilicet. 6.

Argum. 1. Zachar. 9. 11. Thou hast loosed thy prisoners out of the pit where was no man, Psal. 66. 12. We went through fire and water. These and such like places the Iesuite vnderstandeth of Purgatorie, Lib. 1. de Purgat. cap. 3.

Answ. First, the Iesuite brought this place before, to proue that there was Limbus Patrum, and now he maketh it serue for Purgatorie : thus they can make the Scripture to speake what they list themselves. But Purgatorie and Limbus Patrum, are two diuers, yea and contrary things : for the Limbus was onely for those that liued before Christ ; Purgatorie began since : the Limbus was voyde of paine and punishment ; so is not Purgatorie ; wherefore if the Lake or pit in Zacharias signifie Purgatorie, it maketh nothing for Limbus : and if it serue for Limbus, then they misse of a place for Purgatorie. But indeede it signifieth no such thing : but is taken onely in that place for affliction and miserie of this life, as we shewed out of Augustine. And so doth he also expound such and the like places out of the Psalmes, as Psal. 86. 13. Thou hast deliuered my soule from the lowest graue. Quid (saith he) est lacus infernus, nisi profundissima miseria, quia non sit profundus (What els (saith he) is the lowest pit or grane, but the lowest degree of miserie, then the which there can be no greater ?

Argum. 2. Matth. 12. 32. Blasphemiae contra spiritum sanctum non sunt remissae in saecula : Ergo, some sinnes shall be forgiven in the next world ; and therefore there is a purgatorie, for in hell there is no forgiveness : Bellarmino. loc. 1. ex. vno. testamento.

Answ. First, by the world to come, is vnderstood the world succeeding this, and so is answered to the world present : as Marke 10. 30. Thy shall at this present receive an hundred fold, and shall receive the world to come with life everlasting. Wherefore purgatorie being imagined to be now present, it can not betaken to belong to the world to come: so also must we vnderstand that place, Ephes. 1. 21. that Christ is exalted aboue every name, that is named in this worlde, or the world to come: that is, in the world which shall be after this: I thinke they will not by the world to come, in this place, inferre Purgatorie; nor yet, where the Apostle saith, The powers of the world to come, Heb. 6. 5.

Secondly, it followeth not, sinne against the holy Ghost shall not be remitted in the next worlde, Ergo, other sinnes shall: no more, then it followeth, that where Christ saith, I will not drinke henceforth of the fruite of this vine, vntill I drinke it with you in my fathers kingdome, Math. 26. 29. that therefore he did drinke of other things; because he did not drinke of the Vine, &c. And whereas Belarmine would iustifie this argument, by that example John 19. where Christ saith, My kingdome is not of this world, and Pilate inferreth thereupon, Art thou a king then? where an affirmatiue is concluded out of the negatiue; the reason is not alike, vnlesse he will reason as Pilate did: Thy kingdome is not of this world: Ergo, thou hast a kingdome: so blasphemie shall not be forgiven in the next world: Ergo, there shall be blasphemie then. Thus he might conclude truly, for in hell there shall be blasphemie.

Thirdly, S. Marke doth best expound S. Matthew, 3. 29. He that blasphemeth, shall neuer be forgiven: so that to be forgiven neither in this worlde, nor the next, is neuer to be forgiven. Belar. But Marke is rather to be expounded by Matthew. Ans. Yea, let Matthew expound himselfe: for vers. 31. he saith, Blasphemie shall not be forgiven, that is, at all: and then he addeth in the verse following, neither in this world, nor the world to come: so that not to be forgiven in this world, or the next, is not to be forgiven at all.

Fourthly, that there is no remission of sinne after this life, the Scripture is euiden, John 3. 18. He that belieueth is not condemned, but he that beleeueth not, is condemned already. Vpon which place the Rhemists giue this note, That he that beleeueth, shall not be condemned eyther at the houre of death, or day of iudgement: from which place I reason thus, Euery man eyther dyeth in faith, or without faith: if he die in incredulitie, he is condemned, and there is afterward no hope; if in faith, he is freed from condemnation, and entred into life, and so consequently deliuered from his sinnes: therefore in this life we onely obtaine remission of sinnes, because faith is onely of this life, whereby our sinnes are remitted. Ambrose also saith, Qui hic non accipit remissionem peccatorum, illic non erit: He that receiueth not here remission of sinnes, shall not be there, that is, in heauen. de bono mort. cap. 2.

Argum. 3. Luke 8. 55. Her spirit came againe and she rose. Christ rayfed the Rulers daughter to life. This evidently sheweth that there is a third place beside Heauen and Hell: for the soules that are there cannot returne againe, Rhemist.

Ans. Surely, a goodly argument, the spirits of Lazarus and of the Maid returned: Ergo, there is a third place: and why may you not thinke, that their soules were, whereas the soules of other righteous are? And why may not the Lord bring at his pleasure, if it please him, the soules at rest, into their bodies againe? And this further may be thus shewed: after the resurrection of Christ, the bodies of many that were dead, appeared out of their graues, Math. 27. 53. If Christ then by his power be able to call the bodie out of his place, which is the graue, euen so the soule also. Againe, S. Paul saith, He was taken vp into the third heauen, whether in his bodie or not, he knoweth not, but in his spirit and soule, he was sure he was there: therefore it is possible with God, to call the soules from heauen into the bodie, the more to manifest his glorie. Further I aske, where the soule of Dorcas was after her departure: I thinke they will not say in Purgatorie, she being a woman full of good works and almes while she liued: if shee were then in heauen, and Peter called her soule into her bodie againe; shall the Master be able to do lesse, then the disciple? S. Gregorie also reporteth lib. 1. dialog. 5. 9. how S. Fortunatus rayfed againe one Marcellin an holy man, which was caried by the Angels into a blessed place: this storie is receiued by Belarmine; who also granteth that holy men may returne from other places then Purgatorie, lib. 2. de purg. 28. Wherefore this example of Lazarus concludeth not.

Argum. 4. Of all other they most insult, and beare themselves bolde vpon that place of S. Paul, 1. Cor. 3. which being rightly vnderstood, doth not helpe them any thing at all; vers. 13. The fire shall trie euery mans worke, vers. 13. if any mans worke, burne, he shall suffer losse, but he shall be safe himselfe, yet as it were through the fire. Belar. & Rhemist. by fire here vnderstand the flames of Purgatorie: by wood, stubble, strawe; veniall sinnes, which must be purged by that fire, Rhemist.

1. Cor. 3. vers. 13. Argum. 5. But, by the predicator matter here, as of gold, siluer, are not the workes of charitie vnderstood, but the preaching of sound doctrine: by straw, and stubble, and wood, and other combustible matter, the affectation of eloquence, and corrupt teaching of the truth, yet holding the foundation; nor veniall sinnes, as the Rhemists affirme: and this Belarmine also granteth. And so S. Ambrose expoundeth, Opus quod ardere dicitur, mala doctrina est &c. The worke that shall burne is euill doctrine &c. in 3. 1. ad Corinth. Doth then their purgatorie fire discern betweene sound and corrupt doctrine? but that they imagine to be a punishing and purging fire, not a trying and discerning fire, as this is, whereof the Apostle speaketh.

Secondly, fire is here taken allegorically, as the rest of the words are, of gold, siluer, stubble: neither can it be taken for their Purgatorie fire; because it trieth the workes onely, not the persons, and all must be tried by this fire, as well those that build gold and siluer, as the other: but all shall not passe through Purgatorie, by their owne confession. They are driuen to his shift, to graunt, that verse 13. the fire is taken in one sense, namely, for the sentence and iudgement of God, and verse 15. in another, that is, for the flames of Purgatorie. But who seeth not howe absurd a thing this is, that in an allegorie the same word, and in the same place, should be so diuersly taken? It is apparant then that this is the meaning, that the day, that is, the time, shall declare: for God hath appointed a time to examine euery mans doctrine by fire: which is nothing else but the iudgement of God by the fire of his word, whereby euery man, in the day of his calling and conuersion, shall know whether he hath preached aright or not.

First I will proue this exposition to be sound, and then shew how it is impugned. First, this fire must needs be either a materiall fire, or a spirituall: if materiall, then either euerlasting fire, or purgatorie fire, or the fire of the iudgement day: not the first, because it is onely for the wicked; not the second, nor the third, because they doe not trie workes, but the persons; but this fire trieth euery mans worke: Ergo, it is not a materiall, but a spirituall fire.

Secondly, this fire is a triall of euery mans doctrine, how he hath preached and taught; but no materiall fire can make triall of doctrine: Ergo, a spirituall fire.

Thirdly, as is the gold and siluer, stubble, wood, &c. so is the fire; but they must be vnderstood spirituallly: Ergo, so must the fire.

And thus much Bellarmine granteth, that in the two first places the fire of Gods iudgement must be vnderstood, but not in the third, in the 15. verse.

Contra. First, that fire, whereby a man suffereth losse in his worke, is the fire he shall be found through, vers. 15. but the first fire is spirituall, because it examineth the worke it selfe: Ergo, the other is the same spirituall fire.

Againe, by the same fire is as well the saluation of the worker, as the probation of the worke: for the probation of the worke tendeth to the sauing of the worker: but the worke is proued tried by a spirituall fire. Ergo, &c.

Further, Bellarmines owne application of the similitude sheweth as much: for hee thus exposeth it, as if two workmen should make two houses, one of hewed stone, the other of timber and straw: fire is set to both houses; the workman in the stone house is vntouched of the fire, and his house safe: but the other house burneth, and the builder within is in daunger, and cannot escape, but by passing thorough the fire, cap. 4. loc. 2. Doth he not evidently graunt, that it is one and the selfe same fire, wherewith the house is burned, and thorough the which the builder escapeth? So then these foure properties named by the Apostle, of reuealing, trying, burning, sauing, must be referred to one and the selfe same fire, which is a spirituall fire, and not a materiall: therefore is purgatorie fire.

Now Bellarmines goeth about to infringe this our exposition of the spirituall fire of truth, whereby euery mans worke is tried in this life, by these reasons:

First, the Apostle saith, The day of the Lord shall declare it, vers. 13. which is in Scripture taken for the day of iudgement: and therefore it shall not declare it in this life.

Ans. In the Originall Greeke wee reade onely the day, and not the day of the Lord: so the word seemeth to be added in the vulgar Latin. And againe, there shall be no purgatorie fire after the day of iudgement: wherefore herein they doe contradict themselves.

Secondly, The day which shall be reuealed by fire, saith the Apostle; what day is this else but the day of iudgement, which the precise signifying of fire declareth? Rhemist.

Ans. I will oppose against them the iudgement of Bellarmines, who saith, that the fire of the day of iudgement cannot here be vnderstood: first, because that fire shall worke onely vpon the wicked, but S. Pauls fire shall trie all. Secondly, that fire maketh not triall of workes, as S. Paul doth. Thirdly, it would follow that they which build hay, stubble, &c. should not enter into heauen before the day of iudgement: so are they answered with their owne.

Thirdly, this fire shall trie euery mans worke what it is: but this difference of mens working is not alwaies scene in this life. Ergo, sic Rhemist. Bellarmines.

Ans. First, the Apostle meaneth not euery worke whatsoeuer shall be made manifest here, but he speaketh onely of the worke of the Ministerie, which is publike, and to be discerned of all. Secondly, neither is it necessarie to vnderstand the manifestation of these workes to the sight of others, but the reuealing thereof to their owne conscience, which alwaies falleth out in this life to those that shall be saued.

Fourthly, they, whose errors are reuealed by the word of God, and their mindes lightened, doe suffer no losse; but rather haue gaine by it: but the Apostle saith, that they whose worke burneth doe suffer losse by it, Bellarmin.

Ans. They whose erroneous preaching is reuealed by the spirit in the word, suffer no losse, in respect that they themselves vpon their repentance are saued: but yet they haue losse in regard of their labour, which is lost, and of the greatnes of reward, which they shall haue, that preach sincerely: and so is S. Paul to be vnderstood, saying, they suffer losse, &c. yet are saued.

So then, notwithstanding these obiections to the contrarie, our exposition of the Reuelation & trial to be had in this life by the spiritual fire of truth in euery mans conscience, as touching the worke of the Ministerie, remaineth sound, and agreeable to Scripture. To this consenteth Origen: Habuit Petrus aliquod plumbi, &c. Peter had a little lead, for our Saviour saith vnto him, O thou of little faith. He therefore that is safe, is safe, as it were through fire: as the furnace trieth the gold, so temptation the righteous: Veniendū est ergo omnibus, &c. Wherefore euery one must come to the fire, must come to the conflatorie or refining pot, Hom. 6. in Exod. Likewise Saint Hierome: Cum videret Satanā vsq; super fundamentum Christi, &c. When Satan seeth vs vpon the foundation of Christ to build hay, or stubble; supponit incendium, he setteth to the fire: wherefore let vs build gold, &c. and he shall not dare to tempt vs, Iob. 2. aduers. Iouinian. Both these fathers by this fire vnderstand, the temptation in this life, whereby a man is tried, and brought to acknowledge his infirmities: which is a preparation to the more excellent worke of the spirit, whereby they are further lightened.

I will also produce Bernard for the exposition of this place, though I denie not, but that he somewhat shrouded of this purgatorie inuention: these words, be shall bee safe, yet as through fire, he thus interpreteth: Ignis tria habet, fumum, lucem, ardorem, &c. Fire hath three things, smoake, light, heat: the smoake, that is the bitterness of soule: the light, is the confession of the mouth: the heat is in the bodie the tribulation or punishment of repentance. The bitterness then of the soule, the confession of the mouth, the punishment of the bodie, are that fire, whereby the loose and negligent builder shall bee saued, Serm. de lig. seu stipul. But all these are in this life. Ergo, &c.

Argum. 5. Matth. 5. 25. Agree with thine aduersarie while thou art in the way with him, lest he deliver thee to the Iudge, the Iudge to the Minister, and thou bee cast into prison: Verely I say vnto thee, thou shalt not come out thence, till thou hast paid the vtmost farthing. This prison, saith Bellarmin, is Purgatorie, out of which, after the debt is paid, the debtor shall goe forth.

Ans. First, this saying of our Saviour may safely be expounded according to the letter of the affairs of this life, as Saint Chrysostome doth expound it, that men to preuent their further daunger, should be readie to compound their controuersies betime. And such counsell also the Wiseman giueth Pro. 9. 3. That if a man haue giuen his word, and is become a suretie for another, he should not sleepe before he haue deliuered himselfe. And this exposition is most agreeable to the text: for the word is aduersarie at the law. And Luke. 12. 58. where the same sentence of our Saviour is repeated, there is mention made of the Magistrate, and of the Iaylor, which are termes and offices properly fitting the busines of this life. Bellarmin hath not any thing worth the answering, contrarie to this sense.

Secondly, if we draw these words to a spirituall vnderstanding, by the prison hell must bee signified, a place of euerlasting torment, and not Purgatorie.

First, because the word prison, is so taken, 1. Pet. 3. 19. for the place of the disobedient, which is hell: for I thinke, they will not send obstinate sinners to purgatorie.

Secondly, he shall not come forth, till he hath paid the vtmost farthing, or as S. Luke saith, vtmost mite; that is neuer: vnlesse he dare say, that a sinner is able by his punishment to satisfie the vtmost mite of his debt, that is, his sinne vnto God, which is great blasphemie to affirme, and contrarie to the Scriptures: for we cannot answer God one thing of a thousand, Iob. 9. 3.

Thirdly, this place may bee expounded by that parable, Matth. 18. where the vnkinde seruant is cast into prison, till he should pay all that was due, vers. 34. that is, he should lie there for euer; for the debt was ten thousand talents, too much for a Prince, much lesse for a seruant, to pay: and vers. 25. he had nothing to pay: and therefore his master forgave him the debt, vers. 32. Wherefore we see our debt is not paid vnto God by vs, but forgiven; and where it is not pardoned, it can neuer be paid. Again, it followeth, vers. 35. So shall my heauenly father doe vnto you, if you forgive one from your hearts one another your trespasses: What is this, so shall my father doe vnto you? send them to purgatorie? No, but vnto hell: for vncharitable and malicious men, which will not forgive others, I trust they will not ordaine vnto a place of temporall punishment: for as S. Iohn saith, he that hateth his brother, and so is a manslayer, cannot haue eternall life, 1. Ioh. 3. 15.

Fourthly, John S. Ambrose expoundeth this place, lib. 9. in Luc. 5. 19. Redde promissum, dum in hoc corpore es, &c. Render thy vowe or promise, while thou art in the bodie, before the exactor cometh, and casteth thee into prison. Hence it followeth, that being in prison, the promise, or debt, cannot be paid, vers. 21. 22. and being out of this, he hath no more to pay.

But

But S. Augustine more plainly: Consenti cum adversario, &c. Consent with thy aduersarie in the way, &c. for afterward, when we are passed out of this world, nulla compunctio, vel satisfactio remanet, there remaineth no compunction or satisfaction for sinne, tom. 1. Joh. 5. super illa. Consenti cum adversario, &c.

Argum. 6. Matth. 5. vers. 22. He that is angrie with his brother vnadvisedly, is culpable of iudgement: he that saith, Racha, shall be punished by a counsell: but he that saith, thou foole, is guiltie of hell fire. Ergo, all finnes are not punished with hell fire, but some haue onely temporall chastisement after this life: therefore in purgatorie, Bellarmin.

Ans. These three degrees of punishment doe not shew diuers and differing places of punishment after this life, but a difference of punishment in hell; as it may be thus shewed:

First, euery transgression of the law is sinne, 1. Joh. 3. 4. and the wages of euery sinne is death, Rom. 6. 23. but to be angrie rashly, and to raile, are transgressions, and consequently finnes, and so in themselves worthe of euerlasting death.

Againe, He that loueth nor his brother, abideth in death, that is, hath not eternall life, 1. Joh. 4. ver. 14. 15. but he that is angrie vniustly with his brother, loueth him not. Ergo.

Further, no railers shall inherite Gods kingdome, 1. Cor. 6. 10. that is, without repentance: but he that saith to his brother racha, that is, idlebraine, or lightbraine, raileth: Ergo, this sinne excludeth from heauen; and consequently in it selfe is worthe of hell. Wherefore it is great bolnes in the Iesuite to exempt those finnes from hell fire, which the Scripture iudgeth worthe thereof.

And that these be three degrees of the same euerlasting punishment, wherein Christ alludeth to the formes of iudgement amongst men, Saint Augustine sheweth: Indictum dicitur, &c. That is called iudgement where the sentence is not pronounced; that is a counsell, where the punishment is yet consulted of: but Gehenna or Hell is that, which hath certaine damnation, ecc. 1. de serm. in monte. cap. 19. Like as then, the pronouncing, consulting, execution of sentence, are all tending to the same punishment, yet in diuers degrees: so is it here, &c.

Argum. 7. 1. Cor. 15. 29. Why are they then baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not againe? The Apostle speaketh of the baptisme of teares, fasting, and prayer, which they did in behalf of the dead, to ease them in the paines of purgatorie: And that baptisme is taken for affliction, our Sauour Christ sheweth, saying, I haue a baptisme to bee baptized with, Luk. 12. sic Bellarm. sup. loc. 3.

Ans. First, this is a forced and vnreasonable exposition of this Scripture: first, because this Scripture we reade of no such baptisme by teares and fasting: the Scripture maketh mention of three baptismes, fluminis, fluminis, sanguinis: of the spirit, Mat. 3. Christ is said to baptize with the spirit: of water, as Iohn is said to baptize with water: of blood, or of death, of which Baptisme our Sauour speaketh: but to applie baptisme vnto teares, is improper; & they rather are said to baptize themselves, then to be baptized. Secondly, if the Apostles meaning were such, why saith he not, Why are we baptized, rather then they, seeing that he himselfe vsed, as they say, to pray for the dead? And whereas he saith, the Apostle doth vrge rather the ancient custome of the Iews, that praied for the dead, then the vse of the Church, and therefore, saith, they, not we: it is false that the Iews had any such custome, but rather the contrary, for Danid praied for his child, which he liued; but ceased to pray for him being dead. Thirdly, it is more agreeable to the text, to vnderstand Baptisme properly, for the baptisme of water, then coactely for the baptisme of teares: and so Saint Ambrose saith, that the Apostle alludeth to the erroneous vse of some, that did either baptize the dead, or were baptized for the dead, in hope of the resurrection. And whereas Bellarmin objecteth, that the Apostle then would haue giuen some signification of this error, and not so lightly haue touched it: S. Ambrose answereth, that the Apostle adding further, And why are we in iopardie? but saith not, Why are we baptized? Discreuit personas, ostendens non casum esse, &c. He doth discern the persons, shewing, that they were not catholikes, that were thus baptized for the dead, Ambros. in hunc locum. This exposition is better, and more agreeable, then Bellarmin: First, because in this sense, we are not forced to take Baptisme, for any such new found Baptisme, but properly for Baptisme indeed. Secondly, because in the Baptisme of water there is a signification of the resurrection, and a profession of the hope thereof, which is agreeable to the Apostles purpose: but in the baptisme of teares there is no such signification or representation. Thirdly, because that in the Baptisme of water, the baptisme of teares is included, for prayer is made for the partie baptized: so that if baptisme of water be applied to the dead, they haue also benefite by the baptisme of teares. Fourthly, this exposition is more reasonable, because of S. Ambrose authoritie: yet it is no fit or proper interpretation of this place; as Chrysostome in his commentarie sheweth by these reasons:

First, because that Marcion that wicked heretike, whose followers did vse to put one in the dead mans bedde, after he was departed, and so baptized him for the dead, did alledge this place for or that superstitious vse, which might serue his turne very well; the Apostle giuing approbation thereof, without any word of reprehension at all, if this place were so to be vnderstood.

Secondly, as these words of Christ, Vnlesse you eate my flesh and drinke my blood &c. are spoken to the liuing, and not to the dead: so likewise, where he saith, Except a man be borne of water and the spirit, must be taken as spoken to the liuing.

Thirdly, if this were sufficient for a man to be baptized when he is dead: then there might be hope for Pagans, Infidels, Iewes, when they are dead: vpon these reasons Chrysostome infringeth this interpretation allowed by Ambrose, which comming neerer the Apostles scope then Bellarmines, yet missing the marke, sheweth his exposition to be absurd and vnreasonable.

Secondly, then let vs see how this place is truly expounded: some therefore do vnderstand it of those, who either deferring their Baptisme, or not being before admitted to it of the Church, because they were lately conuerted from Paganisme, did desire baptisme vpon their death-bed, being in a manner dead: and so were baptized for dead, that is, as dead. But this exposition is not sufficient: first, because the Apostle should haue seemed to approue their negligence, that did delaye baptisme to such a streight, as to the point of death. Secondly, the argument of the Apostle being drawne from a particular custome of some, and not from the generall vse of the Church, could not so strongly conclude. Thirdly, because the force of the Apostles reason is drawne from baptisme, and being baptized, the first part of the proposition, and not from the latter, for dead: for it followeth not, they that are deadly sicke desire to be baptized: Ergo, they expect a resurrection; vnlesse that the resurrection were shadowed forth in baptisme.

Wherefore leauing all by-expositions, I take none more fully to expresse the Apostles meaning, then that of Saint Chrysostome; who draweth the Apostles argument from the end and scope of Baptisme, wherein whether we consider the confession vttered in Baptisme, the representation of Baptisme, or the efficacie thereof, whether these all together, or by themselves; we shall finde the argument to conclude: For the confession, he saith, Hoc ad finem cum baptizaturi sumus, &c. In the end, being about to baptize, we bid them say, I beleue the resurrection of the dead: For the representation, Aquam subire & hinc remeare, &c. To goe into the water, and returne out of the water, are symboles, the one of descending, ad inferos, to the dead; the other, of rising againe: and therefore S. Paul calleth Baptisme the graue, ye are buried then by baptisme into his death, Rom. 6. And the Apostle further saith, that by baptisme we are graft into the similitude of his death, and into the similitude of his resurrection, vers. 6. For the third, the efficacie of baptisme, he saith, Spiritus sanctus, &c. The spirit in baptisme consumeth sinne, as in a furnace, &c. and therefore the cause of death, which is sinne, being extinct, death it selfe shall cease, and the resurrection follow. Thus then the Apostle saith, they are baptized for dead, that is, to die vnto sinne, that they also may be partakers of Christs resurrection. This exposition is both sound, and good, and most agreeable to the Apostles purpose: neither are the contrarie obiections of any moment.

First, Bellarmines obiecteth, that if the Apostle had spoken simply of baptisme, he would haue said, why are we baptized, as afterward, why are we also in iopardie? for the Apostle was baptized into the death of Christ as well as the rest.

Ans. First, the Apostle saith, we are in iopardie, as giuing a speciall instance of himselfe: as afterward, vers. 31. he maketh mention of his fighting with beasts at Ephesus, after the fashion of the Gentiles, which was a case peculiar to himselfe. Secondly, the Apostle is not excluded, though he speake sometime in the second person, as vers. 17. If Christ bee not raised, your faith is in vaine; and so should S. Pauls faith be in vaine also: sometime in the third, as they that vse this world must bee as though they used it not, 1. Cor. 7. 31. which saying extendeth also to the Apostle. Thirdly, this obiection maketh as much against Bellarmines exposition, seeing that he thinketh that the Apostle did baptize himselfe with teares for the dead: and yet he saith not, why are we baptized?

Secondly, the sentence is repeated againe, why are they baptized for the dead, and againe, why are they baptized for them? that is the dead, which must bee vnderstood of those that are dead: for otherwise they are baptized not for them, but for themselves, Bellarmines.

Ans. The Latine text so readeth, as the Iesuite alleageth: but the originall Greeke, repeateth the same sentence, why are they baptized for the dead? So then this obiection is nothing.

Wherefore all this notwithstanding, our exposition remaineth sound, and inuolable: first, because it is authorized by collation of Scripture, Rom. 6. 6. as wee haue seene. Secondly, the argument doth conclude more strongly from the generall custome of the Church in baptisme, then from any speciall vse. Thirdly, S. Chrysostome, the best of the fathers, without comparison, for the right interpreting of Scripture, so expoundeth it. Wherefore this sentence of the Apostle, why are they baptized for the dead, doth set forth the fruite and efficacie of baptisme, whereby we are made partakers of Christs death, and are nourished into the hope of his resurrection: and so consequently maketh nothing at all for Purgatorie.

The Proteſtants.

That there is no ſuch place of Purgatorie after this life, but that here onely is the place of penitance, and to be reconciled vnto God; and that the ſoules departed are preſently either receiued vp to heauen, or thruſt downe to hell: thus it is proued out of the Scriptures.

Argum. 1. The Scripture maketh but two kindes of workes, either good or euill, Eccleſiaſtes 12. 14. But two ſorts of men, he that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued, he that beleueth not, ſhall be condemned, Mark. 16. 16. But two places, heauen and hell, Matth. 25; Chriſt hath but two flockes, one of ſheepe, at the right hand; another of goates at the left: and he ſaith to the one, Come ye bleſſed: to the other, Goe ye curſed. There are but two ſorts of men, therefore but two places: Ergo, no Purgatorie.

Bellarmino. There ſhall be indeede at the comming of Chriſt but two places, Heauen and Hell: Purgatorie ſhall haue an end.

Anſ. Firſt, you ſay your ſelues that there ſhall be two infernall places for euer, Hell for the wicked, and a Limbus for infants that die vnbaptized, and Heauen that maketh three; and now you ſay there ſhall be but two. Secondly, there are but two places now, becauſe there are but two ſorts of men: for the beleeuers are alreadie paſſed from death to life, Ioh. 5. 24. The vnbelleuers are alreadie condemned, Ioh. 3. verſ. 18. Thirdly, Auguſtine conſenteth with vs, Non eſt illius medius locus, ut poſſit eſſe niſi cum diabolo, qui non eſt cum Chriſto: There is no middle or third place, but he muſt needs bee with the diuell, that is not with Chriſt, De peccator. remiſſ. & mor. lib. 1. cap. 28. And againe, Tertium locum penitus ignoramus, imo nec eſſe in ſcripturis ſanctis inuenimus. The third place beſide heauen and hell, we are vtterly ignorant of; nay wee finde not in Scripture that there is any.

Argum. 2. Eccleſiaſtes. 11. 3. Whether the tree fall toward the South, or the North, where it falleth there it ſhall be. This place our aduerſaries graunt to bee vnderſtood of the ſtate of the dead, which are diſpoſed of to two places; there is not then a third, and ſo conſequently no purgatorie.

Bellarmino answereth: firſt, by the South the ſtate of ſaluation is vnderſtood, which alſo comprehendeth purgatorie.

Contra. Firſt, if to fall to the South, be to enter into the ſtate of ſaluation, then the Patriarches that died before Chriſt, preſently had poſſeſſion of euerlaſting ſaluation, and ſo they haue loſt their Limbus. Secondly, it is ſtrange, ſeeing they make Purgatorie a part and member of hell, that they will comprehend in one word, heauen and hell together.

Secondly, ſaith he, we may by the South vnderſtand heauen, and by the North hell, but the eury tree falleth not either North or South.

Contra. Firſt, this Scripture maketh mention but of theſe two places of the dead, and ſo you graunt your purgatorie to be deuifed beſide Scripture, as it is indeede. Secondly, the text ſaith, in quocunque loco, in what place ſoeuer it falleth: ſo that to fall to the South or North, is what place ſoeuer, that is, all and eury place toward the which the tree falleth.

Thirdly, if this place ouerthrow Purgatorie, it ouerthroweth as well alſo Limbus Patrum, whether the Fathers went before Chriſt. Bellarmino.

Contra. We graunt all, that this place maketh againſt both the one and the other: for as there is not now a third place of Purgatorie beſide Heauen and Hell, ſo neither was there then a Limbus.

Argum. 3. Rom. 8. There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus: but all ordained to ſaluation are in Chriſt Ieſus; therefore to ſuch there is no condemnation: Ergo, no purgatorie: for to be caſt into priſon, which they ſay is purgatorie, Matth. 5. 25. is a condemnation.

Bellarmino answereth, that S. Paul by condemnation vnderſtandeth the contagion of ſinne, that cometh by the concupiſcence of the fleſh, which they haue not that are in Chriſt Ieſus.

Contra. Firſt, ſinne is one thing, and the wages of ſinne is another, which is death or condemnation, Rom. 6. 25. therefore by condemnation the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth not ſinne. Secondly, if they that are in Chriſt haue no ſinne, much leſſe doth the puniſhment of ſinne, which they ſay is purgatorie, abide them.

Argum. 4. 2. Cor. 5. 1. We know, that if our earthly houſe be diſſolved, we haue an houſe in heauen not made with hands, &c. wherefore it followeth, that the ſeruants of Chriſt preſently after their diſſolution enter into heauen.

Bellarmino: The Apoſtle ſaith not, that all the godly preſently after death goe vnto their heavenly houſe, but onely thoſe that are clothed with righteousneſſe, as it followeth verſ. 3. if ſome be found clothed, not naked.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle meaneth no ſuch clothing: but the clothing, whereof he ſpeaketh, is to be clothed with our houſe from heauen, verſ. 2. and then he addeth, not preſcribing a condition, but rendering a reaſon, why wee deſire to bee clothed with our heavenly houſe, verſ. 2. becauſe being clothed (that is with our heavenly houſe) we ſhall not be found naked. Secondly, that all the godly ſtraight straight after their dissolution are clothed with the heavenly house; it followeth, vers. 4. that we may not be naked, but clothed upon. But if any godly being vnclothed of their flesh by death, should not presently bee clothed with immortalitie, then should they bee vnclothed, which the Apostle denieth.

Argum. 5. S. Paul saith, that every man shall receive the workes of his bodie, according to that which he hath done either good or euill, 2. Cor. 5. 10. Therefore there is no place to cleanse and purge the soules of men after this life; for then they should not receive according to the workes done in their flesh.

Belarmine sayth, that euen they whose sinnes are remitted after death, doe receive nothing but that which was done in the flesh, for they deserued in their life time to be helped after death.

Ans. First, as for desert, we will shew else where, that it hath no place before God neither in this life, nor the life to come: for the Scripture saith, Blessed is he to whom the Lord imputeth no sinne: not who deserueth remission of sinnes, Rom. 4. 6. Secondly, this deuised and frivolous distinction, doth not stand with the Apostles meaning: for he speaketh of things actually done in the flesh, not deserued to be done, and of the workes of the body, not of the soule, and of things perfectly done, not begun onely or inchoate: and he vseth it as a reason to perswade men, euen while they liue, to be accepted of God, vers. 9. 11. But if there might be any such helpe after death, there needeth no such halt presently to be conuerted vnto God. Thirdly, if they deserued any thing in their life, why deserued they not presently to haue forgiveness of sins, as well as afterward?

Argum. 6. Apocal. 14. 13. Blessed are the dead from henceforth that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labours: Ergo, there is no Purgatorie: for all the godly departed are at rest.

Belarm. First, it is not meant of all the godly, but onely of Martyrs, which die for the name of Christ.

Ans. As to liue in Christ Iesus, is a phrase of Scripture, and signifieth to liue godly in Christ, 2. Tim. 2. 11. so to die in the Lord, signifieth to dye in the faith of Christ, 1. Thess. 4. 16. Therefore this place is vnderstood of all the godly.

Belarm. 2. This word (amodo) from henceforth, is not to be vnderstood straight after their death, but straight after the day of iudgement, then they shall be blessed.

Ans. First, by this reason none that are dead in Christ should be happie before that time. And yet by your owne confession, Martyrs are straightway receiued vnto heauen. Secondly, S. Iohn vseth this word elsewhere, to signifie from this time forward, as Ioh. 1. 51. Christ saith to Nathanael, from henceforth you shall see heauen open.

Belarm. 3. Thirdly, it may be also vnderstood of the soules in Purgatorie, that are without danger of sinne and damnation, and are put in vnfallible securitie of their saluation, with vspeakable comfort.

Ans. First, so the Saints liuing are blessed, being as well without feare of damnation, Rom. 8. 1. and are assured of their saluation, Rom. 8. 16. Secondly, I pray you what rest or comfort can they haue, that endure greater paine then any in this life? And how can their consciences be quieted, seeing their soules are so afflicted? for bodies they haue none, whatsoever they suffer is in soule: how then can ioy and paine, comfort and horror be together in the soule?

Let vs see the iudgement of antiquitie: Concil. Aquisgranens. lib. 1. cap. 1. Tribus modis peccata mortaliu puniuntur, &c. The sinnes of mortall men are three wayes punished, two wayes in this life, and one in the next: Of the two wayes the Apostle speaketh, if we would iudge our selues, &c. This is the punishment, wherein every sinner taketh reuenge in himselfe. Afterward hee saith, but when we are iudged of God, we are chastised, &c. This is the punishment, which God in mercy doth lay vpon sinners: The third is most fearefull and terrible, not in this but the next world, when the iust Iudge shall say, depart from me ye cursed, &c. We see then that Purgatorie by the sentence of this Councell is excluded, for it is none of these three kindes of punishments here expressed.

And yet we haue more euident testimonie out of their owne Canons, Gelasius epistol. ad Anastasium; Quasolueris super terram, &c. That which thou bindest vpon earth: vpon the earth, for he that dieth being thus bound, can no where be absolved: Therefore he that is not absolved in this life, cannot be afterwards: Ergo, no Purgatorie.

Again, the same Gelas. decret. 2. de eo, qui in diuina iudicio est constitutus, &c. Concerning him that is committed to the diuine iudgement, it is not lawfull to iudge any other thing, then that, wherein he died.

Decret. part. 2. cap. 3. distinct. 1. c. 39. Non meretur iustificari: He is not worthe to be iustified, which did not confesse his sinnes, while he liued.

ibid. 49. c. 1. Quid manens in corpore non recipit: That which a man in his bodie receiued not, being vnclothed of his flesh, he cannot obtaine. If then there be no remission of sinnes after this life, then consequently no Purgatorie.

And as touching the worde purifying or purging, wherof Purgatorie is deriued; their owne Canons call repentance; Purificatorium ignem penitentie; the purifying fire, domus purgatorie. If Repentance be a purgatorie fire, what neede another purgatorie fire after ward.

Let them heare also the iudgement of one of their owne writers, Animarum post dissolutionem domus suam quasi flammam immutabilem sortiuntur: Every soule after the dissolution of the flesh, enter into their immutable state; Esse in 2. Timoth. p. 144. d. If the state of every soule after death be immutable, then there is no Purgatorie; for that state is mutable and temporall by their owne confession.

Let vs adioyne the testimonie of the holy Martyrs, Richard Fearn, french Martyr, being asked if he beleued any Purgatorie, answered: I beleuee that Christ with his precious blood hath made an end of all Purgatorie, and purgation of our finnes, Fax. pag. 913. col. 1. Franciscus Reber, holy Martyr, I doe acknowledge that Purgatorie, which is the death and passion of Christ. Fax. pag. 912. col. 1.

John Frith holy Martyr, I beleuee there is no such place to purge the spots and filth of the soule after this life: for man consisteth of two parts, that is of bodie and soule, whereof the one is purged here in this world, by affliction, persecution, imprisonment, and last of all by death; and the soule is purged by the word of God, which we receiue through faith, &c. Now, if you can shew me a third part of man beside the bodie and the soule, I will also grant vnto you the third place which is Purgatorie, &c. Fax. pag. 1034.

Master Lutimer Martyr thinketh the deuse of Purgatorie, to be a meere imagination and fable, and faith vpon this ground, that he would rather choose to be in Purgatorie, then in the Loken tower: And of this his speech he rendreth many sufficient reasons: See more, Fax. pag. 741. col. 2.

Lastly, John Spier, William Cokerly, John Maudrel Martyrs put to death, for saying that Purgatorie was the Popes pinfold, pag. 1894. col. 1. Let our aduersaries shew now, if they can, who of their sect haue dyed in the defense of Purgatorie, as we are able to bring forth many Martyrs, who haue witnessed against it, euen by their blood.

THE SECOND PART OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES AND OTHER MATTERS BELONGING TO PURGATORIE.

11. Error.

They say, it is an article of faith, to beleuee that there is a Purgatorie; and that he, who beleueeth it not, is sure to goe to hell, Bellarm. lib. 1. De purgatorio. cap. 11.

The Protestants.

We hold, that it is not onely an article belonging to the faith, but contrarie to it; and that though there were a Purgatorie, yet it should not be necessarie to saluation to beleue it: First, because the Scripture hath not determined it, which containeth all things necessarie to saluation. Secondly, the Greeke Church holdeth it not to this day: they confesse no Purgatorie, though they pray for the dead: as may be seene in the Florentine Councell, sess. 25. it were a bad matter therefore to pronounce them damned. Thirdly, Augustine doubted of it: He saith, that there should be some such place after death, non incredibile est, it is not incredible, & verum in se ignari potest, & non inueniri aut latere fideles potest: whether it be so or not, it may be enquired, and may either be safely found out, or remaine hid and vnknowne to the faithfull: Enchirid. 69. Augustine saith, A faithfull man may safely be ignorant of Purgatorie.

The Papists.

12. Error.

They say they, onely goe to Purgatorie, that die in their veniall and light transgressions, or which haue their finnes remitted, but not satisfied for the punishment, Bellarm. lib. 1. De purgatorio. cap. 11.

The Protestants.

First, we deny that any finnes are of their owne nature veniall, as they affirme, for the way of all sinne, without the mercie of God, is death, Rom. 6. 23. Secondly, what equitie should there be in this, that veniall finnes should be punished with the hellish fire of Purgatorie, that exceedeth all the afflictions of this life, yea and a longer time then any man liueth vpon earth; for the Pope taketh vpon him to pardon for thousands of yeeres: and yet mortall and deadly finnes (as they call them) may be satisfied for here, where neither the penance can be so grievous, nor so long? Thirdly, the sinne once remitted, there remaineth no punishment, Mark. 2. 5. Christ saith to the sick of the palsey, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee: and ver. 16. That ye may knowe that the Son of man hath authority on earth to forgive sinnes, I say vnto thee, arise, take vp thy bed and walke. There-leasing him of the punishment of his bodie, was a signe that his finnes also were forgiven, and the sinne being remitted, the punishment also ceaseth. Wherefore who so leaueth the world without sinne, is no more guiltie of any punishment.

The Papists.

3. The soules in Purgatorie doe neither sinne any more, neither can they merite. Eccles. 9. 5. The dead know nothing at all, vers. 10. there is neither worke, knowledge, nor wisdom in the graue, Bellarm. cap. 2. 13. Error.

The Protestants.

WE say, that if there were any such place as Purgatorie, the soules there tormented, must needes both increase in charitie and righteousness, because the more they are purged the more pure they are, and the lesse drossie is in them: and being in vnspeakable torments, they cannot choote but tremble and feare; yea and also be disquieted in their soules, as the Saints were sometime in their afflictions here vpon earth; and therefore cannot be without sinne: for feare hath painfulness, as the Apostle saith, and he that feareth is not perfect in loue, 1 Joh. 4. 18. Ergo, a ferule or slauish feare is sinne. That place alledged doth not onely take away meriting, or working from the dead, but all knowledge and vnderstanding. And it is spoken in the person of the Epicure and sensuall man, that thinketh that the dead know nothing.

The Papists.

4. They affirme, that the soules in Purgatorie are certaine of their saluation in the midst of their torments: for euery soule departed, straight after death receiveth sentence of life or death, Bellarm. cap. 4. 14. Error.

The Protestants.

First, that euery soule is iudged presently after death, we graunt: and it maketh strongly against your Purgatorie: for the sentence giuen is either of death or life; and the sentence being giuen is accordingly executed: so that they which receiue sentence of life goe presently to heauen, the other to hell. For to what purpose els should the sentence be giuen, if it be not straightwayes in force? So S. Paul saith, that they which looke to be clothed with their house from heauen, shall not be left naked or vnclouthed, 2. Cor. 5. 2. 3. 40. But if some soules ordained to life eternall, should pause a while in Purgatorie, being vnclouthed of their flesh, they should be left altogether naked, hauing not yet receiued their clothing from heauen. Secondly, where there is security of saluation, there is the greatest comfort and ioy that can be: how then can the soules in Purgatorie be so grievously tormented, which cannot be elsewhere then in their consciences for as for the whipping, scalding, freezing of soules in Purgatorie, they are but old waits fables & the ioy then of the soule is in the conscience, so is the sorowe: how then can both these be matched in the soule together, to haue vnspeakable ioy, as also to feele most horrible paine?

In these poynts alreadie set downe, our aduersaries we see are bold to define certainly of Purgatorie: but there are as many poynts, and somewhat more, which they leaue in doubt and vncertaine. First, where Purgatorie should be: Bellarmine gesseeth it is in the bowels of the earth next to hell, cap. 6. so doe the Rhemists, Luke. 16. sect. 8. But they doe not all agree; neither hath their Church defined it. Secondly, they cannot tell how many yeeres Purgatorie endureth, whether an hundred, or two hundred, or a thousand yeeres. Thirdly, they cannot tell certainly whether it be materiall fire which burneth in Purgatorie, but they say it is probable. Fourthly, neither can they shew how corporall fire should worke vpon the soules in Purgatorie, being spirituall and incorporall, Bellarmine cap. 12. Fifthly, they are vncertaine, whether the diuels or Angels be the tormentors in Purgatorie, cap. 13. Sixtly, whether the paine of Purgatorie be at all times alike, or by little and little: slacked toward the end; and whether it doe exceede all the paines and sorowes of this life, they yet remaine vncertaine, and are not able to determine, Bellarm. lib. 2. de purgat. cap. 14. Let vs leaue them therefore with their vncertainities, and brainicke phantasies: for the vaine inuentions and imaginations of men haue no end, but are fliely by the Prophet compared to sparkles, that leape out thicke out of the fire, but are soone extinguished: Walke, saith the Prophet, in the light of your fire, and sparkes that you haue kindled: that is, as the sparkles glie but a dimme light for a man to walke by, he may stumble and grope about still for all that light: such so, no meruaile if the Papists do wander vp and downe in their imaginations, walking by the light and sparkles of their phantastick and mathematicall fire of purgatorie.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER THE PRAYERS OF the liuing, or any other workes of theirs doe profit the dead.

The Papists.

Their opinion is, that the prayers of the liuing are neither available for the Saints in heauen, for they neede them not, nor for the damned in hell; for they cannot be helped; but onely for the soules tormented in Purgatorie, who doe find great ease, say they, by the prayers of the liuing, Haref. 15.

and therefore we ought to pray for them, Bellar. lib. 2. de purg. c. 15. 18. Rheni. annot. 2. Theſ. 2. ſyll. 9.
Argum. 1. Chriſt while he liued, profited the dead, for he raiſed to life the rulers daughter, Matth. 9. the widowes ſonne, Luk. 7. and Lazarus, which were dead: therefore euen ſo the members of Chriſt ought one to helpe another, the liuing the dead, Bellar. cap. 15.

Anſw. Firſt, is not here a ſtrong argument, thinke you, Chriſt raiſed Lazarus, and ſome others from death to life: Ergo, we ought to pray for the dead: for it followeth not that vpon the miraculous workes of Chriſt, we ſhould build the ordinarie duties of Chriſtians: Auguſtine would haue told you that Chriſt is not to be imitated in ſuch workes: Non hoc tibi dicit, non eris diſcipulus meus, niſi ambulaueris ſupra mare, aut niſi ſuſcitaueris quatuordecim annorum mortuum: He ſaith not vnto thee, Thou ſhalt not be my diſciple, vnleſſe thou walke vpon the ſea, and raiſe one that hath been dead foure dayes: But, Learn of me: for I am humble and meeke. Secondly, if prayer for the dead be vnto vs, as the raiſing of the dead was to Chriſt: then, as al the dead are to be prayed for, ſo Chriſt ſhould haue raiſed againe all that went often to Purgatorie; or els, by your conſclusion, he ſhould in charitie, as we doe now, if we pray not for the dead, as you beare vs in hand. Thirdly, though the Saints departed, and the faithfull liuing are members of the ſame bodie, and ſo are bound in loue one to the other, yet it followeth not, that one ſhould pray for the other. They wiſh vs, and we with them doe wiſh and long to ſee the redemption of the ſonnes of God accompliſhed, Reuel.
6. 10. 22. 26. But charitie bindeth vs not one to pray for another, becauſe we know not one the particular needes of another. Nay, to pray for any departed, is againſt the rule of charitie: for loue beleeueth all things, and hopeth all things, 1. Cor. 13. 7. We ought to hope the beſt of the dead, that they are at reſt: but in praying for them, we preſuppoſe they are in miſeric, and ſo need our prayers: therefore we hope not the beſt of them, as charitie willeth vs.

Argum. 2. There is a mutuall communication of all the members of Chriſts bodie; 1. Pet.
 ſaith, if one member ſuffer all ſuffer with it, 1. Cor. 12. 26. but the righteous departed are members of the ſame bodie: Ergo, the liuing ought to be touched with compaſſion toward them, and aſſiſt them with their prayers. Bellar. lib. 2. de purg. c. 15.

Anſw. Firſt, though it can not be denied, but that the Church of God in heauen and earth make but one familie, Ephes. 3. 15. yet it is euident, that in this place the Apoſtle onely ſpeaketh of that part of the Church, which is on earth, wherein Chriſt hath ordained ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, &c. verſ. 2. 8. which diſtinction of offices belongeth to the militant Church on earth. Secondly, and yet we graunt that there is a mutual communication betweene both members, ſuch as is agreeable with their eſtate: namely that the Saintes in heauen do long for a conſummation of our and their happineſſe; and do wiſh vnto the Church militant, the like happy end of their afflictions, as they haue attained vnto, Reuel. 6. 10. and the members yet liuing in giue thanks for the glorious victorie of the Saints in heauen, according as the Apoſtle ſaith, if one member be had in honour, all the members reioyce with it, 1. Cor. 12. 26. but the members liuing ſuffer not with the members departed; for as much as they ſuffer not at all, all teares being wiped from their eyes, Apocal. 7. 17. and therefore they haue no neede of our prayers.

Argum. 3. 1. Ioh. 5. verſ. 16. The Apoſtle ſaith, There is a ſinne vnto death, for the which a man ought not to pray: that is, deadly ſinne, wherein a man dyeth without repentance: but for other ſinnes not vnto death, whereof men repent themſelues, it is lawfull to pray: Ergo, we may pray for thoſe that are departed not in deadly ſinne: for this place is properly to be vnderſtood of praying or not praying for the dead: becauſe ſo long as a man liueth he may be prayed for, becauſe all ſinnes are pardonable in this life, Rheniſt. ſubid.

Anſw. Firſt, a ſinne vnto death is not onely ſmall impenitencie, but ſinne alſo againſt the holy Ghoſt, ſuch as was the ſinne of Sadai, and of the Pharifees. Secondly, though we ſhould vnderſtand it of ſmall impenitencie, yet it is but a ſory argument: Some of the dead ought not to be prayed for: Ergo, the reſt may. Thirdly, the text cannot be vnderſtood of praying for the dead: for the text ſaith not, If any man ſee that his brother hath ſinned not vnto death, but, If he ſee him ſin-ning: but the dead doe neither ſinne, nor are ſcene to ſinne. Fourthly, whereas you ſay, that all ſinnes are pardonable in this life, our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith contrarie, that the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt can neuer be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. See more of theſe arguments in the queſtion before of Purgatorie, Argum. 2. 6. 7.

The Proteſtants.

To pray for the dead, is a worke neither pleaſing before God, becauſe he hath no where commanded it, nor available for them that are departed, becauſe they haue their iudgement already. While we liue, let vs one pray for another, but when we are gone, the prayers of the liuing helpe vs not.

Argum. 1. The ground of this popiſh opinion of prayer for the dead, is their ſuperſtitious de-uiſe of Purgatorie: for none els doe they hold it lawfull to pray for but for the ſoules onely in Purgatorie. But there is no Purgatorie, as we haue ſhewed before after this life: our purgation only in this life: Christ hath by himselfe purged our finnes, Hebr. 1. 3. Christ his blood is the chiefe and onely purgation of our finnes: there are also other inferior and ministerial purgings, whereby this onely soveraigne purging is made beneficiall, and applyed vnto vs: as the inward operation and worke of the spirit is compared to fire, Math. 3. 11. 1. Corinth. 3. 13. There is also a purging by affliction compared by the Prophet to fullers sope, Malachi. 3. 2. There also shall be a consuming fire in the day of the Lord, 1. Pet. 3. 7. when as the corruption and mortalitie of our bodies shall be purged away, and then shall our mortalitie put on immortalitie, 1. Corinth. 15. 53. Other Purgatorie after this life we acknowledge none: Seeing then that there are no soules in Purgatorie, and for none els it is lawfull to pray but for the soules tormented in Purgatorie: it followeth that we like to pray for none at all that are dead.

Argum. 2. No prayer is acceptable to God without faith. We must pray without waivering and doubting, Iacob. 1. 6. But so can we not pray for the dead: for we cannot tell in what case they are for whom we pray, whether they be in heauen, hell, or Purgatorie, and therefore we cannot assure ourselves that our prayers are heard; but must needs pray with great doubting and waivering of the mind: Ergo, such prayers are in vaine, Iames 1. 7.

Answer. I answereth, First, it is better, that they sometime should haue our prayers, that need them not, as the Saints in heauen; then they to want them, that need them, namely the soules in Purgatorie: as wee giue almes many times to the wicked, least wee should be wanting to the righteous.

Concl. First, be very vnskillfully still beggeth the thing in question, that the soules in Purgatorie need our prayers, which we do instantly denie: so that our prayers are not superfluous onely to some of the dead, but to all. Secondly, he would haue men make their prayers, as the blind men shoote at the Crow, that as he shooteth many arrowes, that at the least some may hit; so they to make many prayers, that some may preuaile: but the Scripture forbiddeth vs to pray vnertainly, saying, whatsoever you desire, when you pray, beleue, that you shall haue it, and it shall be done vnto you, Marke 11. 24. So then, if it were lawfull to pray for the dead, then we should be sure to helpe all with our prayers, yea even those, which are in hell; which they themselves denie. This rule then, it is better to be superfluous in necessities, then to be defectiue: to abound rather then to lacke: taketh place in matters arbitrarie, & subiect to our wil: but where Gods pleasure is otherwise, as in this case of praying for the dead, it hath no place at all. Thirdly, the influence of almes is not alike, for we are commanded to do good vnto all, and so to the vniuersall, though chiefly to the household of faith: but there is no comendement to pray for the dead: and againe, almes do profite all the receiuers, so are not prayers profitable to all, that are dead.

Secondly, saith he, a good worke is neuer in vaine, it is meritorious to the doer, though it profite not the receiuer, Beilarm. ibid.

Concl. First, we denie that any good worke is meritorious. Secondly, that is no good worke, which is not of faith, nor commanded by the Lord: and therefore prayer for the dead, being not warranted by the word, is no good worke, but meere superstition.

Argum. 3. Our prayers profite not the dead, because there is no place after this life for repentance or remission of finnes: for this should be the end and intendment of our prayer, that they might be released of their finnes, and eased of their paine. There is no remission of finnes after death, because there is no true repentance: repentance there is none, because there can be no amendment of life, which alwayes followeth repentance: for Iohn Baptist that was a preacher of repentance, bid not onely the people to repent, but to bring forth frutes worthe repentance, Math. 3. 8. So saith the Prophet Ezechiel, If the wicked will returne from his finnes, and doe the thing that is lawfull, he shall liue and not die, 18. 21. There are two parts then of repentance, as Isaiah saith, Cease to doe euill, learne to doe well, 1. Isay. 16. 17. But there is no place of working out of the bodie: Ergo, then no repentance.

To this Augustine agreeth: Non est apud inferos penitentia ad salutem proficiens, nec vnu tempus est salutis, nec tempus remissionis. In hac vita penitentia tantum patet libertas, post mortem nulla correctio est licentia. De tempor. serm. 66. In hell, or among the dead, there is no repentance vnto saluation: behold now is the time of saluation, the time of forgiveness: In this life onely haue men libertie to repent; after death there is no place for amendment. What is become now (I pray you) of your Purgatorie repentance? after this life there is no saluation to be had, because there is no remission of finnes: no remission of finnes, because there is no repentance: there is no repentance, because there is no amendment.

See the consent of antiquitie against prayer to be made for the dead: Gelasius epistol. ad Anastasium Imperator. Qua salueris super terram, &c. super terram (inquit) nam in hac legatione defunctum nescimus dicere absolui: whatsoeuer thou loofest vpon earth (saith our Sauiour Christ:) he saith, vpon earth: for he that dyeth being bound, is no where said to be loosed. If the dead then cannot be loosed from their finnes, in vaine are they prayed for.

Council. Tolcan. 2. can. 22. Qui divina vocatione ab hac vita tranſeunt, cum ſplendore ſanctiſſimo ſolentium portibus deſcunt ad ſepulchra deſerunt: non ſummo carmen, quod vulgo deſunctis cantari ſolent, prohibemus: They which are called by God out of this life, are to be brought to the graue onely with psalmes and the voyce of ſingers: for that funerrall verſe, which they are wont to ſing to the dead, we doe forbid to be uſed. Here ſinging onely and thankſgiving for the departure of the dead is permitted: and all verſes and whatſoever enditings directed to the dead are forbidden: therefore alſo prayers for the dead are vnlawfull by this decree.

Further, prayer for the dead is contrarie to their owne rule, Inuicem facit Martyr pro Martyre. He doth wrong to a Martyr, that prayeth for a Martyr; and therefore where in the old Maſſe bookes they prayed thus, Agnus dei Domine, ut animam ſervuli tui Leonis, &c. Commend Lord, that this oblation may be profitable to the ſoule of thy ſervant Leo; they haue changed the forme thus, Quaſumus domine, ut interceſſum &c. We beſeech thee Lord, that by the interceſſion of bleſſed Leo, this oblation may be profitable to vs, &c. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Wherefore their prayers for the dead muſt needs be iniurious, ſeeing amongſt others, they pray alſo for many Saints in heauen.

Thomas Hawkes holy Martyr, hath ſealed this truth: The prayer of the righteous man is available for the living, but not for the dead: for David ſaith, we men can deliver his brother from death, nor any agreement unto God for him, Pſal. 49. Fax. pag. 1587. col. 2.

AN APPENDIX OR AN APPERTINENCE TO

this part, concerning the burials and funerals of the dead.

There are certaine poynts wherein there is no great variance or diſſenſion betweene vs, and we confeſſe, that it is meete and conuenient, that the bodies of Chriſtians, being departed, ſhould after a ſeemly and comely manner be brought to the graue: as David commendeth the men of Isabell Gilad, for burying the bodie of Saul, 2. Sam. 2. 5. The brethren alſo tooke the bodie of Stephen and buried it, Act. 8. 2. Secondly, it is not to be denied but that lamentation and ſorrow may be made for the dead, obſerving S. Pauls rule, that we mourne not as thoſe that haue no hope, that is, exceſſively, 1. Theſſ. 4. 13. where S. Paul doth not ſimply forbid Chriſtians ſorrow, but not as the Gentiles. The brethren alſo made great lamentation for Stephen, Act. 8. 2. Thirdly, we doe alſo graunt, that according to the diuers cuſtomes of countries, it is not vnlawfull vſe ſome comely rites and ceremonies in the buriall of the dead; not for religion, but for order ſake: as among the Iſraelites, the mourners were wont to goe about in the ſtreets, Ezech. 12. 5. And Chriſt commended the woman in the Goſpell, for anoynting of him againſt his buriall, Mark. 14.

But beſide theſe points by vs confeſſed, and acknowledged, there are other more weighty matters, as touching the order of funerals, wherein wee worthilie and juſtly diſſent from our ſcholaries.

16. Error.

1 They do attribute much to the places where men are buried, as in Churches, and Churchyards, but eſpecially vnder the Altar, R. huius. As the ſoules of the righteous do reſt in Gods place is that altar, vnder the which the Apoſtle ſaw the ſoules of Martyrs: ſo for the correſpondence to the place in heauen, their bodies are commonly laid vnder the Altar, where the ſacrifice of the bodie of Chriſt is daily offered, Amos. Apocal. 6. v. 9.

Anſ. The altar of the Croſſe was the onely place where the bodie of Chriſt was ſacrificed: neither neede it to be often offered in ſacrifice, but it ſufficed once onely to haue been done, Heb. 9. verſ. 25. 27. And in the Communion, wee acknowledge no ſacrifice, but of praife and thankſgiving, Heb. 13. 15. It is kept onely in remembrance of the death of Chriſt, 1. Cor. 11. 26. And how ſhould it be available for the dead, ſeeing it profiteth not all the living, but onely thoſe that are preſent, which doe eate and drinke the holy elements of bread and wine in remembrance of the bodie and blood of Chriſt given and ſhed for them? So ſaith the Scripture, Do this, as oft as ye ſhall it is in remembrance of me, 1. Cor. 11. 25. The doers therefore, agents and receivers, haue the preſent benefit, not they which are abſent: how then can the dead receive any ſolace by it? I propoſeth them nota who to be laid in Churches, or Churchyards, or other hallowed places, as they call them; for all places are alike: neither helpeth it the dead to be buried in one place more then another: for God ſhall command the ſea, and all other places to giue vp their dead, Apocal. 13. 8. The very Heathen did confeſſe as much: one ſaith, It ſkillett not, huius, an ſublimi poſſeſſione, whether I rot vnder, or about the ground. And another thus writeth, Caro tegitur, qui non habet vitam. Heauen is a couering to him that hath no other coffin. It were a ſoule ſhame then for Chriſtians, to exceede the very Gentiles in their ſuperſtitious conceits. Auguſtine ſaith, Sed quid prodeſt impio ſepultura preſioſa, obitu pio vilis, aut nulla? If ſumptuous funerals profit the wicked, then homely or no burials doe hurt the godly. Therefore as it helpeth not a wicked man to be buried in one place more then another; so it doth not hinder or hurt the godlie and righteous man.

Theodor.

Belarmine objecteth the example of the Patriarches, who dying in Egypt, gave charge for their bodies to be buried in the land of promise: from whence he concludeth, that it is allowable to be buried in holie places: And afterward in the times of the Christians, they vsed to burie their bodies in Churches, Belarm. cap. 19.

Contra. First, the Patriarches desired to bee buried in the land of promise, not for the holines of the place, but partly to be ioyned to the sepulchers of their fathers, as Isaiah allegeth, Gen. 49. 30. partly to shew their faith and assurance of Gods promises as touching the deliuerance of the Israelites out of Egypt, as Ioseph confesseth, Gen. 50. 26. for afterwards, when the people were come out of Egypt, they had no such desire for their buriall: for Adriam was buried in Kadesch, and Arum in the mount Hor in the wilderness, Numb. 30.

Secondly, it is vntrue that it was practised of ancient time among the Christians to burie their dead in Churches, but this vse was taken vp afterward, as superstition encreased: for this was forbidden both by the Imperiall, and Ecclesiasticall lawes: as Cod. lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 12. Admirationem corpora non debent in ciuitatibus sepeliri: The bodies of the dead must not bee buried in cities: Exo. much lesse in Churches. And lib. 1. tit. 5. leg. 2. Theodos. Nemo martyrum q̄r. Let no man thinke, that the feast of the Martyrs and Apostles is granted for humane bodies: that is, to be buried in.

Likewise, Decret. part. 2. cap. 13. qu. 2. c. 15. Prohibendum est secundum maiorem statuta: We prohibit, according to the decrees of our elders, that they bee not buried in the Church, but in the porch, or the limits without the Church: but within the Church, & proprio altari, and nere to the altar, where the bodie and blood of Christ is made, let them be buried by no meanes. This Canon ourtheoweth the Rhemists collection for burials vnder the altar.

Concil. Antioch. can. 5. De oportoria altaris non sacerdotis corpus, dum ad tumulum conuehitur, obsequatur, quia sacro uelamine dum honorantur corpora, altaria polluantur: The priests bodie must not be covered with the Altar-cloth, while it is carried to the graue, for while the bodies are honoured with the holy vail, the Altar is defiled. If it bee not lawfull for the Altar-cloth to couer the dead, much lesse for the Altar it selfe, which is greater then the couering?

Concil. Bracar. 1. cap. 36. In defunctuorum corpora nullo modo intra Basilicam sanctorum sepeliuntur, quia & hoc uisus ciuitatum est, et nullius defuncti corpus intra ambulauium uiuorum sit habitaculum: That the bodies of the dead should not in any case bee buried within the Churches of the Saints, because, that it is the custome also of cities, not to burie their dead within the walles. But if it had bin so great a priuledge to the dead to bee buried in the Church, and nere vnto the Altar, I thinke the Councell would not haue forbidden it.

This also hath been the confession of those that haue been persecuted for the truth: Williamus Tine. As touching the burying of my bodie, it auaieth me not whatsoever be done thereto, Fav. pag. 1043. col. 1. Thomas Patmore: That he regarded not the place, whether it were hallowed, or no, where he should be buried, after he was dead, pag. 1044. col. 2.

1 Wee condemne also their superstitious ceremonies which they vse at their funerals; as the 17. Error, burning of Tapers, which signifieth, say they, that the soules of the dead are aliue, Belarm. de Pur. gati. lib. 1. cap. 19.

Ans. First, this superstitious vse of setting vp candles, was directly forbidden in the Eliberine Councell, Canon. 34. 2. Cereæ per diem in cimiterijs placuit non incendi: Wee thinke it good that no waxe candles be burned by day in the Churchyards.

Belarmine answereth, that the Councell doth onely forbid the superstitious vse of the Gentiles in burning of candles: but this notwithstanding candles may bee vied to betoken the life of the soules departed.

Ans. The words of the Councell are generall, as in the 37. Canon likewise it is forbidden, No luminaria publicè accendant: That they should in no wise set vp candles publicly: and so absolutely it condemneth the vse of candle light by day.

Of the like sort also were other superstitious vsages, as the going about of the belman to will the people to pray for their soules, the ringing or iangling of bells to bring their soules to heauen, with queere songs and other melodie to commit the bodies to the ground, and commending their soules to the protection of Saints. We denie not, but comely and decent orders, void of superstition, may be vsed, according to the fashion of the countrie: as Isaiah bodie was embalmed after the manner of the Egyptians, Genes. 50. 2. At the buriall of their Kings, the Israelites vsed to burne odors, Isa. 34. 5. The Iewes manner was to wash the bodies of the dead, to winde it vp in a linnen cloth, and burie it with spices and odors: So our Sauours bodie was buried after the manner of the Iewes, Ioh. 19. 40. We reade also that Ioseph was put into a coffin or chest, Gen. 50. 26. Of these and the like customes, Augustine giueth a rule, writing vpon those words in the Gospell, Ioh. 19. 40. As it was the manner of the Iewes to burie: Nou mihi uidetur Euangelista sic frustra dicere voluisse ita quippe aduocare, in huiusmodi officiis, qua mortuis exhibentur, mortuis cuiusque finis esse seruandum: in Iohann. 21. 120. Me thinketh the Euangelist said not thus without cause: hereby letting vs to vnderstand, that in performinge such duties of buriall to the dead, the manner and custome of euery countrie is to be kept.

The Iewes also had a custome, with some companie or frequencie of people, to bring their dead to the ground, Eccles. 12. 5. And in the while, to vse some admonition to the people concerning death and mortalitie which came in by sinne, and of the wrath and mercie of God, Syrus. Ierem. in Mark. 14. 3. Neither doe wee see, why it is not lawfull now among Christians, at funerals and burials, to haue some godly sermon and exhortation, to put the people in minde of their end, and to comfort them with the hope of the resurrection, as also to giue God thanks, for those his faithfull seruants, that did glorifie him by their life, and by their godly departure. This seemeth also to haue been the commendable custome of the Church in ancient time: as Augustine writeth thus, Ego. fit. in Psal. 103. part. 1. Paucitas cogit dicere temporis angustia, quod & nonit charitas vestra debet esse exequijs fidelis corporis solenne obsequium: The shortnes of the time causeth me to be brieft, and you know, that we are to performe a solemne dutie to the bodie of our faithfull brother. The sermon seemeth to haue been made at some funerall.

Contil. Colonienf. part. 7. cap. 52. In sepulturis & exequijs mortalitatis admonitio diligens fit, & cunctandi inter alia praesentis, ut recognoscant sibi eodem modo hinc excedendum esse: In burials and funerals, the people must carefully be admonished of mortalitie, and they which are present, should be stirred vp to consider, that they also are mortall.

The Iewes also, the buriall being ended, did comfort those that mourned, and ate and drinke with them, and gaue them the cup of consolation, Ierem. 16. 7. Ioh. 11. 31. Both which customs may be kept and retained without any superstition. But other customs and ceremonies, that are fauour of impietie, and doe any way imply prayer or commendation of the soules of the dead, ought to be left and abolished.

12. Error.

3 Another abuse in popish funerals, is their superstitious and often remembrance of the dead: for they haue their weekes minde for the dead the seuenth day, nay their halfe weekes minde the third day, their moneths minde the thirtieth day: and beside, their anniuersarie or yeeres minde. I pray you what neede all this? Where doe they finde, that wee should mourne for the dead many daies, yea moneths, yea a whole yeere, as they vse to doe? Ioseph mourned but seuen daies for his father, Genes. 50. 10. So did the Gileadites for Saul, 1. Sam. 31. 13. The Egyptians indeede mourned threescore and tenne daies, when Ioseph mourned but seuen: that we may see a manifest difference betwene the moderate mourning of the faithfull, and the excessive lamentation of idols. But the popish yeeres mindes doe farre exceed the Egyptians stinted mourning: there being fise times 70. daies in a yeere. Yet yeerely stipends, erected for weekly, monethly, quarterly, or yeerely sermons we mislike not: being ordained for the instruction of the people, without any relation to the soules of the dead, otherwise, then to giue God thanks for them, and thank good things which the Lord wrought by them.

Let vs see their own Canons: Deer. part. 2. caus. 13. qu. 2. c. 24. Et luxit cum Israel, &c. And David mourned for Iacob 7. daies: Hac ergo sequenda solennitas, quam praescribit scriptura: This solemnitie is then to be obserued, which the Scripture prescribeth. And againe, Plauerunt filij Israel Moysen, &c. The children of Israell bewailed Moses thirtie daies. Both these obseruations are grounded vpon authoritie, &c. for Iacob they mourned but seuen, for Moses thirtie, who was such a Prophet, as Israel in all respects had not the like. This was not a yeeres minde: and beside, the Israelites in this mourning made not prayers for the dead, as they vse to doe, but mourned for the losse of such excellent men.

39. Error.

4 They doe greatly erre and are deceiued, in holding it to be a meritorious worke, which is performed in the buriall of the dead: alleaging to this purpose that place, 2. Sam. 2. 5. where David sent messengers to the men of Iabesh Gilead, saying; Blessed are ye of the Lord, that you haue showed such kindness vnto your Lord Saul and haue buried him: therefore now the Lord shew mercie and truth vnto you. Beharmin. cap. 19.

Ans. There can be no such conclusion gathered out of these words: The Lord will shew mercie, according to his truth and promise, to those that are mercifull: Ergo, it is meritorious to be mercifull: for here the reward dependeth of Gods promise and truth, not vpon the worthines of the worke: Indee David saith, as it followeth in that place, I will recompence this benefit, because you haue done this thing. They might deserue kindness at the hands of David, because one good turne requireth another: but before the Lord there is no meritorious desert. Secondly, to burie the dead is a worke of charitie, and therefore commaunded, as all other duties of charitie are. The things then commaunded, we doe of dutie, we are bound to doe them: Ergo, they are not meritorious. So saith our Saviour Christ, Doth the master thanke his seruant for doing that which he was commaunded? I trow not, Luk. 17. 9.

In

In their funerals and suffrages for the dead, they doe make great difference betweene the rich and the poore: for they say, it is possible that so many prayers and suffrages may be made at once for y<sup>e</sup> dead, that their soules may at once be deliuered out of Purgatorie. Et ideo in hoc solo casu multo est curatio diuitis, quam pauperis, quia habet unde suffragia fiant pro ipso. And therefore in this case only the estate of the rich is better then the poore, because he hath wherewithall suffrages should be made: that is, is able to giue great legacies, and bequests to that end: Albert. mag. de officiis mortuorum. 3. Again, they haue greater respect vnto the Pope departed, then any other: for the first day, there must be 200. Masses read for his soule, and for nine daies after 100. Masses euery day, Taleamini de primat. pontif. error. 86.

Ans. Where doe they reade in all the Scriptures, that the rich in matters of the soule should be preferred before the poore? nay, the Scripture saith plainly, that God is no acceptor of persons, Act. 10. 34. And Saint Iames saith, We ought not to regard a rich man that weareth goodly apparell, hauing a gold ring, before a poore man in vile apparell, 2. vers. 21. Where also doe they learne to pray for none but for those, for whom they are hired to pray? And if prayer be a worke of charitie, and if by their prayers they can deliuer mens soules out of Purgatorie, why doe they not extend their charitie to all in praying for them?

What if the rich Glutton, and poore Lazarus were aline now, or these popish Masse-mongers had liued then; would they haue been bought for money to haue praied for the rich mans soule, and let Lazarus alone? It is like they would. But surely all their Masses should neither haue profited the one, nor the want of them haue hindered the other. Marke, I pray you, what Augustine saith: Præclaræ exequias in conspectu hominum præparato illi diuiti; turba exhibitis famularum: sed miserabilioribus in conspectu domini ulceroso illi pauperi ministerium præbuit angelorum. A goodly funerall did the friends and seruants make for the rich man araied in skarlet in the sight of the world: but a more blessed buriall had the poore man in the sight of God, by the ministerie of the Angels. Therefore there is no respect of persons to bee had among the dead: neither haue the rich any greater priuiledge for the multitude of suffrages, then the poore that wanteth them: for no doubt the rich mans executors spared for no cost; Masses, Trentals, Dirges they had enough, if they were then to be had: yet for all this stirre his soule went to hell, and Lazarus soule was by the Angels carried to heauen, that had none of this geare.

De cura pro mortuis cap. 9

6. Lastly, if there were no other thing to bee misliked in their funerals, this were sufficient to condemne them as abominable; that they thinke, their singing, chaunting, ringing, giuing of dole and lynes to the poore, and all other their superstitious customes, doe helpe and profit the dead, Idem. ibid.

11. Error.

Augustine giueth two reasons of this dutie to be shewed in the burying of the dead. First, Corpori humano quicquid impenditur, non est prædium salutis, sed humanitatis officium. What dutie is performed in interring the bodie, is an officious worke of humanitie, not any reliefe for the health of the soule. Secondly, saith he, Corpori mortuo, sed tamen resurrekturo, impensum huiusmodi officium, est qualemmodò eiusdem fidei testimonium. This Christian dutie bestowed in burying the dead bodies, which shall notwithstanding rise againe, is a liuely testimonie in vs of the same faith. That is, wee doe carefully commit the bodies of Christians to the ground, knowing that they are not lost, but shall rise againe: but as for the dead themselues, they receiue no benefit at all. Curatio funeris, prope iniquissimum, videtur, nisi solatia magis, quam subsidia mortuorum. This great prouision for funerals, this great pompe of burials, they are comforts for the liuing, not helps to the dead. Impleant ergo homines, sita erga suos postmortui muneris officia, & sui lenamenta mortuorum. Let men therefore performe this last dutie to their friends, which is also a great lightning of their griefe: Ergo, funerals profit not the dead, but comfort the liuing: yea, it is called the last dutie, which is performed, at burials. If it be the last, then there is no dutie afterward to be done. Therefore prayers also are superfluous: for if it were needfull to pray for the dead, then the last dutie should not be in the buriall, another coming afterward. And thus much also concerning the manner and order of funerals, Idem. ibid.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROVERSY

of the Saints departed that are in ioy and blisse.

This controuersie standeth of these severall questions.

1. Of the blessed estate of the Saints in heauen, and of the canonizing of them vpon earth.
2. Of the adoration of Saints: First, whether they be to bee adored or not, and whether it bee lawfull to sweare by them. Secondly, of the diuers kindes of worship. Thirdly, of the worship of Saints vpon earth.
3. Of the inuocation of Saints; whether they pray for vs and vnderstand our prayers.
4. Of the adoration, translation, keeping of reliques, and of the miracles wrought by them.

5. Of

Of Images, and the signe of the Crosse, and other matters thereto belonging more particularly handled.

6 Of Churches: the forme, vse, ornaments, dedication of them, and such like.

7 Of Pilgrimages and Processions.

8 Of holy and festiuall daies, the Lords day, and Saints daies.

9 Of the Virgin Mary, her conception, vowes, assumption, worship, merits. Of these now in order.

THE FIRST QUESTION, CONCERNING THE blessed and happie estate of the Saints departed.

THis question hath two parts: First, of their blessednes which they haue before God in heauen. Secondly, of the publishing or making knowne their blessednes before men, which they call the canonizing of Saints.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE BLESSED estate of the Saints before God in heauen.

The Papists.

Bellarmino taketh great paines, Lib. 1. de Sanctis, in fixe long chapters together, to prooue, that the Saints departed doe presently enioy the sight of God, and doe enter into blisse; and that their soules forthwith are receiued into heauen, and are not kept in any secret by-place till the day of iudgement. But all this while he fighteth with his owne shadow: for we graunt as much as he proueth, that the righteous are with Christ so soone as they are loosed from their bodies, as Christ said to the theeſe vpon the Crosse, This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise, Luk. 23. 43. See also to this purpose, Philipp. 1. 23. 2. Corint. 5. 1. Heb. 12. 22. All these places doe evidently proue, that presently after their departure, the soules of the faithfull doe enioy the presence of Christ, and the celestiall companie of the Angels in heauen. Yet our aduersaries itay not here, neither are contented with this, that the Saints are blessed: but proceede further, and giue them a full possession of blessednesse, making no difference betweene them and the Angels in glorie, but affirme that they are as highly exalted as the Angels are, Rhemist. annot. Luk. 15. sect. 2. And Bellarmino therefore taketh vp Caluine, because he saith, the Saints are yet in hope and expectation of the perfect fruition of glorie, cap. 1. lib. 1. de Sanctis.

11. Error.

The Protestants.

Apocal. 14. 13.

WE confesse, that the Saints in heauen are already a blessed: yet they looke for the full accomplishment and perfection of their glorie, when as their bodies shall bee glorified in the resurrection: Then it is said, they shall be like the Angels, and yet not in all things; much less are their soules now equal to the Angels in glorie.

Argum. 1. The Saintes shall be as the Angels, but not before the resurrection, Matth. 22. 30. Neither can it be proued out of that text, that they shall then be equal to the Angels in all things: for it is not all one to say, they shall be as the Angels, because they shall then need no marriage, as to say, they shall bee equal to the Angels in all things, Apocalyp. 6. 10. The soules vnder the altar doe cry, Lord, how long! Ergo, they are in expectation of greater glorie. And reason also giueth as much, that the bodie and the soule being ioyned together in the kingdome of God, shall make a fuller weight and measure of ioy.

Argum. 2. The wicked spirits and damned soules, haue not yet their full and perfect torment: Ergo, neither the Saints their perfect ioy. The diuels are now tormented, and kept in chaines of darkenesse, 2. Pet. 2. 4. Iud. 6. But their full damnation is reserved for the day of the Lord, Matth. 25. 41. They are not yet tormented in such measure, as they shall be, and therefore make account for, Matth. 8. 29. Luk. 8. 31.

Argum. 3. 1. Iohn. 3. 2. We know, that when he shall appeare, we shall be like him. This Scripture sheweth, that we shall not haue a perfect consummation of glory before the day of iudgement.

Bellarmino answereth, that the text is not When he shall appeare, but as before the Apostle said, It doth not appeare, what we shall be, so here, when it (not he) shall appeare, what we shall be: so that this place sheweth onely that the glory of the Saints shall not be manifested to the world before that day, not that they shall not haue their glory before. Bellarmino lib. de sanctis. c. 2.

Contra. Who seeth not how he corrupteth this text: for what else can be the sense of this place, Cum apparuerit, similes ei erimus: then this, when he, (not it) shall appeare, we shall be like him: what him, shall we be like, but the same that is understood to appeare? Again, that Christ is here implied to appeare, it is manifest by the like place, Coloss. 3. 4. When Christ, which is our life, shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glorie: So then, the perfection of our glorie is deferred till Christs coming.

Lastly, if now the Saints are equal to the Angels in ioye, their soules onely being in heaven: it then followeth, that in their resurrection, when their bodies shall be restored to their soules, their happines shall farre exceed the Angels: which no where the Scripture teacheth vs, vntlesse they will thus reason, Christ tooke not the Angels, but the seede of Abraham, Hebr. 2. 16. Ergo we are better then the Angels. But to this: Augustine answereth very well: Some perhaps will say, that we are better then the Angels, because Christ died for vs, and not for the Angels. Quale est (saith he) id est si velle agrotum laudari, quia virio suo tam detestabiliter agrotavit, ut non posset aliter, quam medici morte sanari. As if a sicke man deferred commendation, because by his owne fault, he was so dangerously sicke, that he could not be healed, but by the death of the Physician. Quid he dicit, quod de impietate gloriari? Christus enim pro impijs mortuus est: What is this els but for man to boast of his wickednes? Christ died not for Angels, but for men, because they were wicked.

Now, whereas Bellarmino reprehendeth Caluino for thus writing, Animas plurimum militia laboris per, felicitas in hominibus concedere, ubi cum felici laetitia fruitionem promissi gloria expectant: That the soules of the godly having ended their warfare, are gone vnto blessed rest, where most ioyfully they doe expect the full fruition of the promised glorie. And the Iesuite further giueth this vncharitable censure: Nota miram stultitiam hominis: See the great foolishnes of the man. Now it shall easily appeare, that Caluino saith none other thing, then was concluded by the Greeke and Latine Church in the Florentine Councell; in praemio. Animas iustorum perfectam suam felicitatem, quam in hac vita, consensu consensimus, ita tamen ut aliam cum corporibus suis perfectionem expectent, quia perfecti fructum: We doe thinke that the soules of the righteous haue already obtained their perfect felicitie, as they are soules; yet so, that they looke for a more perfect state with their bodies, for want to enjoy. Thus Bellarmino either of malice or ignorance, chargeth a general Councell with foolishnes, seeing he rayleth vpon Caluino for speaking or writing, as it was by this general Councell decreed.

Their owne Canons consent hereunto: Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. ca. 6. It is confessed by Innocentius 3. Solum glorie usque ad iudicium augmentari: That the glorie of the Saints doth encrease till the day of iudgement. And the Master alloweth their opinion as more probable, that hold, that Angeli usque ad diem iudicii scientia & alijs proficiant, Angels doe encrease in knowledge and other things till the day of iudgement, lib. 4. distinct. 11. g. If the glorie of Angels is not yet perfect, much less of the Saints, who yet expect the redemption of their bodies.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE Canonizing of Saints.

The Papists.

The canonizing of Saints, is nothing els but the publike determination and sentence of the Church, whereby men that are dead, are iudged to be Saints, and worthy of honour and worship, as to be prayed vnto, Temples and Altars to be set vp in their names, holy dayes to be appointed for them, and their reliques to be adored. And thus it is lawfull, profitable, and expedient for the Church to canonize Saints, Bellarmino cap. 7.

Argum. 1. The Patriarkes and Prophets were canonized for Saints in the old lawe, Job. 1. 1. So Ad. 7. Stephen and other were canonized: therefore it is credible, that the Lord would haue the same order still continued in his Church, Bellarmino cap. 7. First, neither in the old nor the new lawe, were any set vp to be Saints, with intent to be worshipped, called vpon, Temples to be consecrated in their names; but onely the Scripture giueth testimonie of them, as of holy and faithfull men: and so may we also honour the blessed Martyrs, whom the cruell Emperours of Rome, and since them the Popes of Rome haue seke through fire and other torments to heauen. Secondly, when they haue as good testimonie for their Saints, as we haue for the holy Patriarkes and Prophets, they may be bold to pronounce them to be holy, blessed. Thirdly, your argument followeth not, unless you will say, that the Church may doe all things now, which the Prophets and Apostles did then: They may as well make Scripture, and more Canonickall bookes by the same reason, as make and canonize new Saints.

Argum. 2. The Saints are yeto vs examples of vertue, and to be imitated, as the Apostle saith, Remember your ones, which haue spoken to you the word of God, the end of whose sermon is boldness, imitate their faith. 1. 3. 7. But how can we imitate them, vntlesse we know in particular who are to be imitated? Bellarmino.

Ans. First, the Apostle propoundeth the example of their pastors then liuing, to be imitated of them,

Rhemist. Luk. 20. sect. 3. affirme that some Saints shall be about the Angels. Tractat. in Iohan. 110.

them, whose conversation they did behold: This place maketh nothing for the imitation of canonized Saints, dead many yeeres agoe: whose life and conuersation is not certainly knowne. Secondly, we neede not runne to popish fables, to seeke patternes to follow, we may see better in the example of godly men liuing; or if they faile vs, we haue most perfect examples in Scripture. As S. Paul saith, Be followers of me, as I am of Christ; 1. Cor. 11. 1. and observe them, as you haue vs for an example, Philip 3. 17. Thirdly, if popish Saints should bee imitated, then Thomas Becket must be followed in his rebellion to the King; Bonaventure in his blasphemie against Christ, ascribing the worke of our saluation to the Virgin Mary, as may bee seene in his Ladie Psalter, compiled to the honour of her: and many such goodly examples shall wee finde in the liues and acts of popish Saints.

The Protestants.

That none of the Saints are to be adored or worshipped, their images, or reliques, or prayes to be made vnto them, or any such honour to be giuen them, it shall afterward appeare more at large: and therefore they ought not to bee canonized to any such end or purpose. We will graunt, that the number of Gods Saints and elect is increased daily: and wee are sore in general, as the Scripture testifieth, that the death of his Saints is precious in the sight of God, Psal. 116. 15. And that all are blessed that die in the Lord: But particularly wee are not able certainly to determine of any; the matter is to be left wholly vnto God, and we in the meane time to take the best.

Argum. 1. If the Church haue authoritie to canonize Saints, and determine of the election or saluation of men, then may wee as well iudge of the condemnation of those that are lost: for it is be knowing to the Church who are Saints in heauen, they also may as well define who are damned in hell. But this none can doe: nay, it were great rashnes and want of charitie for any to take vpon them. Saint Paul saith, Why condemnest thou another mans seruant? he standeth or faileth in his owne maister, Rom. 14. 4. No man can iudge whether the seruant stand or fall, but his maister: Ergo, if the Church presume to determine of the election or damnation of those that are departed, she is now a Mistris and Ladie rather of the Saints, then they Lords or patrones to her, while Papists hold they are.

Argum. 2. Iudge not (saith S. Paul 1. Corinth. 4. 5.) before the time until the Lord come. The iudgement then of men, who are saued, and who are condemned, is reserved for the coming of Christ. Therefore it is great presumption for men to preuent the time, and to take vpon them to be iudges in Gods place. Againe, our Saviour Christ saith, that To sit at his right hand or left in his kingdome, was not his to giue (meaning as he was man) but it shall be giuen to them for whom is prepared of my father, Matth. 20. 23. How then is it in the power of any sinfull man, to giue vnto any a seate, either at the right hand, or left hand of Christ, in the kingdome of God? Argum. Gualter. Bruti. Fox. pag. 487.

Augustine also consenteth, Non separatio iam cuiusq; tanta est, &c. It is not safe for men now to make separation (of the good and bad) it belongeth to him, that cannot erre: We in this life doe hardly know our selues, how much lesse ought we to iudge rashly of others? exposit. in Psal. 139. Here are two reasons giuen, why it is not lawfull for men to iudge of the election or reprobation of men: first, their iudgement is subiect to error, and therefore the matter must be referred to God, who erreth not. Secondly, we cannot iudge our selues, much lesse can we iudge of others: Ergo, none liuing ought, or is able to define either who are Saints in heauen, or who are damned in hell.

2. Annus fuit de iudicio: 21. Monemus nos beatissimus Paulus Apostolus, &c. Know ye, that as the Apostle doth admonish vs, wee must observe, and take heede, that there arise no offence in the Church, while we take vpon vs to doe that which we cannot, that is, to iudge those which are gone out of the world: for none of vs liueth or dieth to himselfe, but whether we liue or dye, we are the Lords wherefore, why iudgeth thou another mans seruant, &c. Here wee haue the iudgement of a Pope himselfe, grounded vpon S. Pauls iudgement, that it is not in the power of the liuing to iudge the dead, either in condemning or acquitting them.

AN APPENDIX, OR THIRD PART, OF OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES, which belong to the canonizing of Saints.

34. Error.

They say, that it doth appertaine onely to the Pope, to canonize a Saint for the whole Church: and that none ought to be acknowledged for Saints, but they that are so canonized by him: And that herein the Pope is of so infallible iudgement, that he cannot erre in canonizing of Saints: because that ordinarily none are canonized by the Pope for Saints, which haue not been knowne to worke miracles, Bellarmin. lib. 1. cap. 8. 9. 10.

Argum. 1. That it belongeth to the Pope to canonize Saints, Bellarmin thus proueth: to define and declare who are heretikes, appertaineth to the Pope: Ergo, the contrarie also, to determine who are Saints in heauen.

Ans. First, the argument followeth not, the Pope may iudge of men according to their present state in this life: Ergo, of their state afterward. For an heretike is discerned according to that he presently holdeth and teacheth, who may afterwards be conuerted from his heresie: as Saint Paul saith, he had delivered Hymenæus and Alexander to Satan, that they might learne not to blaspheme. 1. Timoth. 1. 20. Though the Apostle for the present casteth them out as heretikes, yet he despaireth not of their conuersion: wherefore to bee an heretike and a reprobate doe not alwaies concurre, and therefore the argument followeth not: For to bee an heretike and a Saint are not contraries: he that is first an heretike, being conuerted, may become a Saint, as S. Paul of a persecutor was made a preacher.

Secondly, it belongeth not to the Pope to determine, who are heretikes; but every Church hath power to declare by the Scriptures what heresie is, and who are heretikes: the Apostles haue giuen vs rules to know heretikes by; as 1. Cor. 16. 22. If any man loue not the Lord Iesus, let him be anathema according to this rule, all that detract from the humantie of Christ, as y Anabaptists for fro his diuinitie, as the Arrians; or fro his offices, as the Papists, are heretikes. Again, 2. Thess. 3. 6. If any man deny our doctrine, note him. And, 1. Ioh. 4. ver. 3. Every spirit that confesseth not that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. According to these and such like rules in Scripture, it is lawful for every Church to define an heretike, and for every man to auoide him. Tit. 3. 10. As he rebelleth after the first and second admonition, auoide. It is but a ridiculous toy, that wee must send vp to Rome first, to know the Popes pleasure, who should be counted an heretike.

Thirdly, the Popes are no fit men to iudge of heresie, seeing many of them haue been heretikes: as Marcion an Idolater, Liberius an Arrian, Honorius a Monothelite, with many more, as wee haue seene before in the controuersie of the Pope.

Argum. 2. Now that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing of Saints, he would make vs beleefe; because there hath yet been no error detected that way: the Pope hath Sainted none which were not Saints indeede.

Ans. The contrarie is true, that he hath canonized many notorious rebells and other wicked persons, as Thomas Becket of Canturburie, Hugh of Lincolne, both rebels to their Prince, with many more, as further followeth presently to be shewed. Argum. 3. and therefore, because the Pope is and hath been so grollic deceived in canonizing of Saints, he may bee ashamed to iustifie his palpable error.

The Protestants.

First, Saints were to bee registred and canonized, as they say; yet it should not belong to the Pope, but to the whole Church.

Argum. 1. The Pope hath no authoritie ouer the whole Church; no nor yet in any other Bishopricks diocesse, no more then they haue in his: Let him be content with his owne diocesse: (and it were to bee wished, that he could rule that well) the whole world is too large a prouince for him. Secondly, the whole Church hath power to excommunicate and deliuer vs to Satan, 1. Cor. 5. 4. and to cut off the prophane and wicked from the Church of God, as Heathen and Publicanes, Math. 18. 17. Ergo, to iudge who are members of the Church, and Saints of God, is a matter which appertaineth to the whole Church. Thirdly, before anno 800. in the time of Caroline Magnus there was no Saint publicly canonized by the Pope, as Bellarmino confesseth: but the truth is, this custome of canonizing Saints began not til more then 1000. yere after Christ, till Alexander the 3. his time, and Gregorio the 7. I pray you then, were there no Saints before? if there were, who canonized them?

Argum. 2. So much as is to be knowne of Saints and holy men, every Christian is to acknowledge, without any publike decree or determination of the Pope or any other: for the word of God giueth rules, whereby we may discern the righteous from the vnrighteous: Christ speaking of false prophets, saith, By their fruites ye shall know them, Math. 7. 16. And againe, he saith thus to his Apostles, By this shall men know that you are my disciples, if you loue one another, Ioh. 13. 35. By these rules, it is easie for every Christian to iudge who for the present time are the true disciples of Christ, who otherwise.

Argum. 3. It is a most impudent and shamelesse saying, that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing of Saints: First, Miracles are no sufficient prooffe of a Saint: for many, that shall be condemned in the day of iudgement, haue had power to doe strange workes, Math. 7. 22. 23. Secondly, what better argument can wee haue of this, then common experience? For the Popes haue registred in their Calendars notorious wicked men, and traitors to their Princes, as Saints and holie men: Such an one was Thomas Becket, who some hundreth yeeres was worshipped as a Saint, by the name of Saint Thomas of Canturburie; and yet was a plaine traitor to his Prince, Fox pag. 225. And therefore his shrine was iustly put downe in King Henry the 8. daies. Richard Scroope of Yorke was openly in armes against Henry the 4. Thomas Earle of Lancaster a rebell against Edward the 2. yet both are the Popes canonized Saints.

Fox pag. 1014.

Elizabeth Barton was called the holy Mayd of Kent, and fained that she had many revelations: yet was found to be a traitor, and executed: These are the Popes Saints. And on the other side, they haue condemned the true Saints and Martyrs of God, and accursed them to the bottomles pit of hell: as they dealt most wickedly with Iohn Huse that zealous seruant of God, vpon whose head they set a crowne of paper pictured with diuels, as if he were giuen vnto the power of Satan. But wee doe iudge of these holy men, as the Scripture teacheth, which saith, that they are blessed which dye in the Lord, Apocal. 14. 13. Their good life, holy profession, and constant death and martyrdom declared no lesse; and that assurance, which God gaue them of their election: as appeared in that worthie Martyr Doctor Barnes, who being brought to the stake, saith thus vnto the people, If Saints doe pray for vs, I trust to pray for you within this halfe houre: who at the same time vttered his opinion, that notwithstanding to pray vnto Saints was against the word of God, although it should be graunted that they pray for vs.

Let them now be ashamed to say, stil, that the Pope cannot erre in canonizing Saints, who condemneth good men, and iustificeth the wicked, according to the common saying, Many be worshipped for Saints in heauen, whose soules doe burne in hell.

If the Pope herein be of so infallible a iudgement, how came it to passe, that Bonifacius the 14. cause Hermannus Berrationis, who had been canonized for a Saint, after 30. yeeres to bee taken out of his graue, and burned, anno 1300. Either he, by whom he was first canonized, or else Bonifacius, by whom he was vncanonized or vsained, must needs haue grossly erred. And is it not as possible for the Pope to be deceived in iudging who are Saints, as Tertullian and Origen erred in commending of Pelage and his wife for good Christians? Tertull. apologet. cap. 21. by which authorities were moued to canonize them for Saints. And Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 45. cap. 1. mention is made of one, that was flaine in his drunkenness, whom they worshipped for a Saint. But it will be answered, that Alexander the 3. reproveth that abuse in the same decree. But what will they say concerning the Saints of Rome, that are worshipped vnder the Popes nose, and by his allowance, that they all goe for current, and true Saints, indeede? Let them heare what Lindanus an archepiscopus complaineth of this matter: Breniaria etiam Romanum vnum festi quodam habent sancti Hermannus nomen, pfecto auctis suis vindicatus est. The Breuiaries or Masse-bookes, yea the new Roman liuarie hath many festivals of Saints, whose names, I know not whether they are sufficiently true and purged. He affirmeth, that euen in Rome many obscure and vnkowne Saints were worshipped.

Fourthly, Augustine thus writeth of this matter: Per bar humanorum cordium tenebras, penitus miranda & dolenda contingit, ut eum nonnunquam quem iniustum putamus (iniustum tamen est) puniamus, & hominem bonum tanquam malum affligamus, quem nescientes amamus: By reason of the darkness and ignorance of mens hearts, a pitfull and strange thing many times falleth out, that we should punish a good man for a bad, whom wee notwithstanding doe vnwittingly loue for his good. Tract. in Iohann. 99. Ergo, the iudgement of men is vncertaine, and the best may bee deceived iudging of others, who are bad, and wlio good.

If all the Popes canonized Saints are to be worshipped, prayers to bee made vnto them, daies, and Churches to bee consecrate to their memorie, wherein (as the Iesuite telleth vs) consisteth the canonization of Saints: hereby it may appeare what small discretion the Popes haue shewed in their canonizing, in bringing such an idle and superfluous multitude into the Sancti Calendar: that it were impossible for a man to remember all such Saints names, that are to be prayed to: Alexander anno 1180, did canonize Bernard Clarenensis, and Thomas of Canturburie: Innocentius 4. anno 1250, Edmund of Canturburie, Stanislaus Bishop of Cracouia, and Paulinus, a Dominican: Alexander 4. anno 1260, did canonize Clara, Francis his sister, the sister of the Franciscanes: Nicholaus 4. Lodouik, Tolesan, a Minorite: Bonifacius 8. Lodouik the French King: Clement 6. did canonize Ius a Priest anno 1350. Nicholaus 5. did make Bernardine Senens, a Franciscane, a Saint: anno 1455. Calixtus 3. did adde to the Calendar Vincencius Valentinens, a Dominican, Albert, Depranens, a Carmelite, and Pius 2. did magnifie one Angulus, a Carmelite, and Embrine Senens, anno 1464. Sixtus 4. Bonauentura: anno 1484. Innocentius 8. Helipoldus Duke of Austria: And many hundreds more haue been by the Popes aduanced to the dignitie of Saints, some Kings, some Dukes, some Bishops, some Priests, some Friars, some Widowes, some Virgins: so that the dayes of the yeere are not enough for euery Saint to haue his day. Now let it be considered, whether the Pope hath not good skill in fainting of men, thus multiplying without end the number of his house-gods.

THE SECOND QUESTION, CONCERNING the adoration of Saints.

This question hath three parts: First, whether Saints are to bee adored. Secondly, of the diuers kinds of adoration. Thirdly, concerning the worship due vnto holy men liuing, as the kissing of feet, and such like.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER SAINTS are to be adored and worshipped.

The Papists.

They doubt not to affirme, that there is a kinde of religious worship due vnto Saints, not that great religious worship which is proper vnto God, but a kinde somewhat lesse and inferiour to that, yet a religious adoration, which is the meane or middest betwene that highest worship due vnto God, and ciuill honour which is giuen vnto men. So this is their sentence, that religious worship is due both to God and to the Saints: herein onely (say they) the difference is, the more religious worship belongeth onely to God, the lesse vnto the Saints, Bellarmin. cap. 12. lib. 1. de Sacramentis.

Argum. 1. Bellarmine obiecteth certaine examples out of Scripture of the adoration of Angels, as how Abraham adored the Angels, Gen. 18. 2. and Lot, Gen. 19. 1. and Iosua also adored the Angel that appeared vnto him, Iosua. 5. therefore Angels, and so consequently Saints, may safely be adored and worshipped.

Ans. First, it is certaine that the Angel, whom Abraham worshippeth, was God himselfe, euen Christ, that appeared in the shape of an Angel; for vers. 17. he is called Iehonab, which name is neuer in Scripture giuen to any Angell: and vers. 25. Abraham calleth him Iudge of the world, which is Christs office onely; so also the Angell that appeared to Iosua, was Christ himselfe; for Iosua calleth him Lord, and himselfe his seruant: But the Angels doe not presume to take vs as their seruants, but acknowledge themselues to be our fellow seruants vnto the same Lord, theirs and ours, Reuel. 22. 9. And this is the iudgement of diuers of the ancient Fathers, and namely Origen; Iosua non adorasset eum, nisi agnouisset Deum, &c. Iosua would not haue worshipped him, if he had not knowne him to be God, for who else is the Prince of the Lords warfare, but the Lord Iesus Christ? hom. 6. in Iosu.

Secondly, it can not be shewed out of the text, that Lot did worship the two Angels that came to Sodome, but did onely make obeisance, and bow himselfe vnto them, as excellent and heavenly persons: for the word prostratus signifieth an inclination and bowing of the bodie, as Iacob is said to bow himselfe to his brother Esaue, Genes. 33. this therefore was no religious adoration, but a friendly reuerence, which might be giuen to those glorious spirits.

Thirdly, the Angels of the old Testament, and the Angels of the new are all one; but in the new Testament, the Angels refuse to be adored, Reuel. 22. 9. Ergo, the Angels of the old Testament did not receiue it.

Argum. 2. The Psalmist saith, Adore his footestoole, Psalm. 99. 5. and Hebr. 11. 21. Iacob adored the top of his rod: Ergo, it is lawfull to adore creatures, Bellarmin. cap. 13. Rhemist. annot. 11. Heb. sect. 9.

Ans. In the first place by the footestoole is vnderstood the Tabernacle with the Arke: the Prophet saith not, Adore his footestoole, but, At or before his footestoole: for we deny not, but that we may kneele downe, and fall prostrate in adoring of God before such things, but none is to be adored but God. In the same place the Apostle saith, that Iacob worshipped towarde the end of his staffe, that is, leaning vpon his staffe. The vulgar latine readeth corruptly, adorauit fastigium baculi. He worshipped the end of his staffe: for then the Greeke preposition προς were superfluous. And Augustine expoundeth it aright, saying, that Iacob by faith worshipped God vpon the end of his staffe: quasi in Gen. 162. Fulk. annot. Heb. 11. sect. 9.

Argum. 3. Nabuchadnezzar bowed himselfe to Daniel, and caused odours to be offered vnto him, and worshipped him, who for so doing was not reprobued of the Prophet: Ergo, Saints are to be worshipped, Bellar. ibid. Rhemist. annot. Apocal. 19. sect. 3.

Ans. First, your owne vulgar text thus readeth, The king commanded, Vt sacrificarent ei bostiam: To sacrifice an host vnto him: and Arius Montanus tranlateth Sacrificium, to offer a sacrifice vnto him; but to offer sacrifice, is a part of the diuine and godly worship: so that the king commanding sacrifice to be made to Daniel, doth attribute vnto him superstitiously diuine worship. Bellarmin answereth, that the sacrifice of beasts, is that sacrifice, which is peculiar vnto God; but as for odors and other gifts, they may be yeilded vnto men: as 1. Reg. 10. certaine of the Israelites refused to bring gifts vnto Saul, the same word ( incensum ) is there vsed: and we (saith he) do cense vp odours before the images of Saints, though wee graunt that sacrifice is onely due vnto God. Bellar. cap. 13. argum. 3.

Contra. First, that the Hebrue word ( incensum ) here vsed, is sometime taken for a ciuill gift, wee graunt, as in the place alleadged, and Gen. 32.13. where Iacob sent a gift or present to Eſau: but in this place it signifieth a religious oblation, in which sense he cannot finde in all Scripture, that it was giuen to any mortall man; but onely was due vnto God, as Ierem. 41. 5. they had offerings and incense in their hands to offer in the house of God: And this word, when it is vsed in a religious sense, is taken onely for sacrifice due vnto God; as 1. Reg. 18.29. when they had prophesied till the time of the euening Sacrifice; and 2. Reg. 3.20. in the morning, when the Sacrifice was to be offered: in both these places the word incensum is vsed. Secondly, whereas he granteth, Sacrificium non deberi nisi soli Deo: That sacrifice is not due but vnto God, it followeth, that the king committed Idolatrie, in sacrificing to Daniel, as your owne Vulgar readeth. Thirdly, it is great impietie in him to allow the censuring of odours to Saints, or Saints images, whereas in the olde Law it was a part of the worship of God; as may appeare Ierem. 41. 5. they brought odours and incense: And it may be gathered, that the offering of incense was the more principall part of the sacrifice; as it followeth euen now to be shewed.

Secondly, it is vntrue, that Daniel accepted of this worship and reprobued it not: First, though it be not mentioned, it followeth not, that he misliked it not: for neyther is the incest of Lot Gen. 19. nor of Indas, Gen. 38. censured in the storie, doth it follow therefore that they were iudged Secondly, it may be diuersly gathered that Daniel misliked the kings purpose: First, because from the beginning, he giueth the glorie vnto God, and telleth the King, that it was the God in heauen, that was the onely Reuealer of secrets, verſ. 27. and therefore it is not like, that Daniel would take the honor vnto himselfe. Secondly, because the King afterward verſ. 47. being better instructed by Daniel giueth God the honor, saying he was GOD of Gods, and so onely to be worshipped. Thirdly, verſ. 48. he magnifieth Daniel now as Gods instrument, and bestoweth great gifts vpon him, whereas he offered sacrifice before.

The Protestants.

WE can finde in the word of God but two kinde of worship or adoration; a religious worship onely due vnto God: and a ciuill honour vsed amongst men. As for the Angels and Saints, we doe honour them with loue, not with seruice. We doe also reuerence the holy men vpon earth, as the Prophets and Apostles were in times past, with a ciuill adoration or worship of loue, not with a religious seruice. There is also a due reuerence and estimation of such things as are sanctified to holy vses, as of the Tabernacle, Arke, Altar, Sacrifice in the lawe: such now are the Sacraments, which are duely to be reuerenced, yet not to be adored, or kneeled vnto. So we conclude, that all religious seruice and worship belongeth onely vnto God, and it were great idolatrie to giue it to any other, Fulke. annot. Apocal. 19. scilicet. 5.

Argum. 1. The Scripture is plaine: Matth. 4. 10. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue. 1. Tim. 1. 17. To God onely wise, immortall, inuisible, be all honour and glorie: Ergo, all religious worship is onely due vnto God. Bellarmino answereth, that these places are to be vnderstoode of a certaine kinde of religious worship, which is onely proper to God. Ans. All religious worship is forbidden in these places to be giuen to any but vnto God: for Sathan did not tempt Christ, to worship him as God, but onely to fall downe and worship him: he asked onely of him, Matth. 26. 17. a certaine inclination of the body, which Christ denieth, as being onely proper to God, Caluini Argum.

Argum. 2. When Cornelius fell downe at *Peter*s feete and would haue worshipped him, he was forbidden by Peter, Act. 10. 25. So the Angell would not suffer Iohn to worship him, Apocal. 22. Paul and Barnabas stayed the people that would haue offered sacrifice vnto them, Act. 14. 14.

Bellarmino answereth to the first, that Peter of modestie refused the homage of Cornelius.

Ans. Peter giueth this reason, why he would not haue Cornelius so to doe, I also am a man (saith he:) thereby letting him to vnderstand, that such kind of worship ought not to be giuen to any man: The same reason is rendred Acts 14. by Paul and Barnabas, why they refused sacrifice: We also (say they) are men. If Peter did of modesty refuse Cornelius worship, then Paul and Barnabas did for modestie sake onely likewise refuse to be sacrificed vnto, which I am sure they will not grant.

Bellarmino to the second saith, that Iohn did well in worshipping the Angell, and the Angell did well in refusing to be worshipped: for though the Angels of right are to be worshipped, yet they do well to refuse it, for reuerence to the humanitie and manhood of Christ: Before the coming of Christ, Angels suffered themselves to be adored; but since that the Angels after *Christ*s incarnation did worship man in him, they would not be worshipped of men, especially of the Apostles possess: who although they refuse to be worshipped, yet we do well to worship them. Aug. A.

 First, let it be noted, that Bellarminus shapeth a cleane contrary answer to our Reuoluer, as appeareth before, tom. 8. quest. 3. part. 11. For they say, that Ishu was deceived in the person of this Angel, taking him for Christ; and is forbidden by the Angell to worship him as God: but Bellar- minus sheweth freeth Ishu from all error, and commendeth his doing: whereas it is certaine, that Ishu knew well enough that he was an Angell, but being caried away in the extasie of his mindey did for the present time forget himselfe. Secondly, that the Angell did not of modestie refuse to be worshipped, but absolutely and simply, it is made manifest by his answer to Ishu: Worship thou God: he would not haue the Apostle to worship him, but God. And againe the Angell saith; I am thy fellow seruant, &c. but it is vnmeet for one fellow seruant to worship another, they both haue but one Lord to worship: wherefore the Angell meant indeed; that hee ought not to be worshipped, and doth not of modestie refuse it. This also is Augustines iudgement: Augustinus contrauentus ostendit hominibus homines aduersus, non illos seruare ad adorationem, &c. The Angell
